Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

INDIA TODAY

VOL. 12
1987
No. 2 — 12
Pt. 1

G. K. V.
Hardwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

078615

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

078615

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Looking Good

Fashion, always the preserve of the perfumed elite, is suddenly exploding out on the streets. Feeding this rage are a profusion of boutiques selling all kinds of ready-to-wear dreams off their packed racks—and making crores in the bargain.

COVER STORY 76

Contentious Call

The call to Muslims by a section of the community's leadership to boycott Republic Day functions raised a storm. In the forefront of this leadership, was the controversial Janata Party MP Syed Shahabuddin, now isolated and under all-round attack.

CURRENT EVENTS 16

Tragically Widespread

Children, tomorrow's citizens, are subjected to unbelievable torture and cruelty across the country daily. Often the abusers are parents and relatives. Worse, it's not even considered an anomaly. A slice of this hideous reality in Gujarat.

SPECIAL FEATURE 116

Harvest of Hatred

As 1986 drew to a close, killings of Bengalis by tribal extremists escalated, and the toll crossed a hundred in Tripura. As the Centre and state wrangled over possible solutions, the ethnic strife showed indications of getting out of hand.

SPECIAL REPORT 68

Terminal Illness

The prestigious King George's Medical College in Lucknow, Uttar Pradesh, completed 75 years recently. All that it had to show for its platinum jubilee was a strike by its entire staff, steadily deteriorating services and a shocking state of affairs. A report.

INVESTIGATION 134

Fading Out Slowly

The new cinema movement—identified with film makers like Shyam Benegal, Govind Nihalani and Ketan Mehta—is fast losing ground. Rising costs, bored viewers and TV and video threaten to wipe out serious cinema for good. A requiem.

CINEMA 148

CONTENTS

COMMENT 9
CAPITALOOK 11
VOICES 12
INDIANOTES 15
CURRENT EVENTS
Muslims: Contentious Call 16
Punjab: Held to Ransom 25
Tamil Nadu: Grapes of Wrath 28
Tamil Nadu: Language Bomb 31
Bombay: The Money Scramble 37
RSC: Ragtag Band 40
Karnataka: Electoral Surprise 42
BJP: Rural Pitch 44
Bihar: Draconian Ordinances 47
Madhya Pradesh: Unwilling Hosts 48
Madhya Pradesh: Shadow Play 53
Goa: Papering Differences 56
Uttar Pradesh: Death on the Gomti 59
STATENOTES 65

SPECIAL REPORT
Tripura: Harvest of Hatred 68
LONDONEWS 72
COVER STORY
The Fashion Business: Looking Good 76
RELIGION
Madhya Pradesh: The Runaway Nun 89
TRADEWINDS 93
BUSINESS
Indo-French Trade: Impressive Gains 95
Stud-Farms: On Rough Turf 101
ACC-Babcock: In Boiling Water 102
Tourism: Dream Arrivals 104
Duplicator Industry: Tough Times 108
The Markets: Cheery Start 113
The Economy Monitor 115
SPECIAL FEATURE
Child Abuse: Tragically Widespread 116
GUEST COLUMN 122
DEFENCE
China: Changing Strategies 124
HEALTH
AIDS: Campus Jitters 129

INVESTIGATION
KGMC: Terminal Illness 134
SPORTS
Cricket: A New Confidence 141
LAW
Shillong: Disputed Ownership 144
CINEMA
11th Film Festival: Tragedy of Errors 147
Parallel Cinema: Fading Out Slowly 148
SNAPSHOT 152
THE ARTS
Madras: New Melody 155
BOOKS
Rare Air Fare 156
EYE-CATCHERS 160

078615

Cover photograph by RAGHU RAI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

'ETHNIQUE' DESIGNS IN EL

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The WATER-JEL® Promise

Safety from fire
Relief from the trauma of burn injuries

Water-Jel is the world's only all-in-one fire extinguishing, heat protection and primary burn-therapy system. It is an approved life-saving device in India.

What is Water-Jel?

Water-Jel is a scientifically formulated gel-like fluid, with therapeutic properties, soaked into a special material — a combination that withstands temperatures upto 2800°F. The material is 100% new wool in a cellular weave capable of absorbing upto 13 times its own weight of the gel.

Water-Jel, the world's only fire-escape & life-saving system:

Laid across a burning area it:
Extinguishes the fire in seconds.
Creates an escape path.

Draped over an individual it:
Provides a safe escape through fire.

Allows a rescuer to safely enter a fire to evacuate trapped victims.

Wrapped around a burn victim it:
Provides on-the-spot emergency burn-therapy for acid, electrical and chemical burns (even phosphorus).

Wets and cools, eliminates pain and shock.
Stops progression of burns.
Cools and soothes the skin, lowering the risk of hypothermia and edema.
Prevents contamination and dehydration.
Ensures better survival conditions.
Toxicology studies confirm it is completely safe on the human body and is recommended by the International Society for Burn Injuries.

Ideal for industrial, commercial and domestic applications.

Available in various sizes ranging from 8′ × 6′ to 2″ × 2″. All Water-Jel products are packed in sealed air-tight containers/ foil pouches.

It's a TRL (USA) Patented Product (approved by the U.S.FDA as a medical device).

Petrotech International reaches you Water-Jel products through its distribution net-work.

All India Main Dealer:

RVS Marketing Corporation

10/11, Kitab Mahal, 1st Floor, 192, Dr.D.N.Road, BOMBAY-400 001 Tel. 204 3582/204 2806 Telex: 011-6231 JMS IN WATER-JEL®

Sixth Sense: W.J: 5:86

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

INDIA
TODAY
THE COMPLETE NEWSMAGAZINE

VOLUME XII NUMBER 2
FOR THE FORTNIGHT JANUARY 16-31, 1987

EDITOR
AROON PURIE

EXECUTIVE EDITOR T.N. NINAN
PICTURE EDITOR RAGHU RAI
FEATURES EDITOR INDERJIT BADHWAR
DEPUTY EDITOR DILIP BOBB
SENIOR EDITOR PRABHU CHAWLA
ASSISTANT EDITOR AJAY KUMAR

CORRESPONDENTS

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENTS RAMINDAR SINGH
SHEKHAR GUPTA
NEW DELHI PALAKUNNATHU G. MATHAI
RAJ CHENGAPPA
MADHU JAIN
JAGANNATH DUBASHI
SREEKANT KHANDEKAR
TANIA MIDHA
AHMEDABAD RAMESH MENON
BHOPAL N.K. SINGH
BOMBAY M. RAHMAN
PARTHASARATHI SWAMI
CALCUTTA INDRANIL BANERJIE
CHANDIGARH GOBIND THUKRAL
HYDERABAD AMARNATH K. MENON
LUCKNOW DILIP AWASTHI
MADRAS S.H. VENKATRAMANI
PATNA FARZAND AHMED
TRIVANDRUM SREEDHAR PILLAI

LONDON RAMESH CHANDRAN

NEWS COORDINATOR RADHIKA ROY

ART DIRECTOR M.G. MOINUDDIN

CHIEF OF PRODUCTION SHIRLEY JOSHUA
ANURADHA KAPOOR

COPY DESK SIMRAN BHARGAVA
ANN NINAN
SURYA GANGADHARAN
MOHAMMED ASLAM

CHIEF PHOTOGRAPHER BHAWAN SINGH
PHOTOGRAPHERS PRAMOD PUSHKARNA
PRASHANT PANJIAR
HARI OM GULATI

CARTOONIST AJIT NINAN MATHEW
CARTOGRAPHER B.K. SHARMA
LAYOUT ARTIST ANOOP GUPTA

MARKETING DIRECTOR MOHINI BHULLAR

ADVERTISING MANAGERS

BOMBAY ANOOP ZUTSHI
DELHI NAGINDER RISHI
CALCUTTA MEERA PAUL
MADRAS R. ANAND
BANGALORE S.J. NAIDU

GENERAL MANAGER CHANDER RAI

● EDITORIAL OFFICE LIVING MEDIA INDIA PVT LTD, F-14/15, CONNAUGHT PLACE NEW DELHI 110001, PHONE: 3315801-4, TELEX: 31-61245 INTO IN CABLE: LIVMEDIA, NEW DELHI ● SUBSCRIPTIONS: INDIA TODAY SUBSCRIPTION DEPARTMENT, POST BOX 69, FARIDABAD HARYANA ● TRADE CIRCULATION: INDIA TODAY CIRCULATION MANAGER, F-14 CONNAUGHT PLACE, MIDDLE CIRCLE, NEW DELHI, PHONE: 3313076-8, TELEX: 31-62634 INTO IN ● ADVERTISING OFFICES: 28 A&B JOLLY MAKER CHAMBER II, NARIMAN POINT, BOMBAY-400021, PHONE: 2026152, 2029326, 2029435, TELEX: 11-5373 THOM IN, CABLE: LIVMEDIA, BOMBAY ● 3-K CONNAUGHT CIRCUS, NEW DELHI-110001, PHONE: 312070, 312093, 312097, TELEX: 31-66518 THOM IN, CABLES: LIVMEDIA, NEW DELHI ● FAGUN CHAMBERS, 26 COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF ROAD, MADRAS-600105, PHONE: 477188, 477770, 479163, CABLES: LIVMEDIA MADRAS ● 74/1ST. MARKS ROAD, BANGALORE-560001, PHONE: 568448, 579037, 579089, CABLE: LIVMEDIA, BANGALORE ● 12C EVEREST 46C CHOWRINGHEE ROAD, CALCUTTA-700016, PHONE: 445398, 447726, CABLE: LIVINMEDIA, CALCUTTA
● COPYRIGHT 1984 LIVING MEDIA INDIA PVT LTD. ALL RIGHTS RESERVED THROUGHOUT THE WORLD. REPRODUCTION IN ANY MANNER IS PROHIBITED.
PUBLISHED BY CHANDER RAI FOR LIVING MEDIA INDIA PVT LTD, NEW DELHI AND PRINTED AT THOMSON PRESS INDIA LTD, FARIDABAD HARYANA ● INDIA TODAY DOES NOT TAKE RESPONSIBILITY FOR RETURNING UNSOLICITED PUBLICATION MATERIAL ●

LETTERS

CANDID COVERAGE

Thank you for your brilliant, kaleidoscopic coverage of all the facets of the year that was ("Images '86", January 15). Undeniably, the nation rode roughshod over '86 as events in the Punjab, West Bengal as well as in other parts of the country reveal. The frequent cabinet reshuffles and the bristling issues between India and its neighbours have obviously not helped matters either. We should heed the lessons from the harsh experiences of yesteryear and proceed with due caution.

Sagar — SACHIN SAKSENA

■ Your cover story gave an excellent synopsis of the major events of the year. Exquisite photographs, accompanied by a racy and perceptive narrative, make this an issue to remember.

New Delhi — SUSHIL MEHTANI

■ Your article was very informative and well-designed indeed. In my view, it is the solution to the Mizoram problem, the accord with Farooq Abdullah and the visit of Soviet General Secretary Mikhail Gorbachev that is the key to our prime minister's policies.

New Delhi — Major BALBIR SINGH

YOUTH FORUM

Your special feature ("The Mood of the Youth", January 15), has truly represented the feeling of the younger generation. Growing discontent among the nation's youth will not be overcome by superficial demonstrations like Apna Utsav. Unemployment is such a serious problem that they have begun to have an increasingly pessimistic outlook. Unless a definite policy is outlined to provide bread and butter, the cycle of progress is bound to be reversed.

Bhilwara — PRAKASH NAWAL

■ Your feature on youth was authentic, bold and frank. Indian youth is becoming frustrated and demoralised due to lack of adequate employment. Even the engineers, scientists and doctors graduating every year are not getting suitable jobs. The Government should take necessary measures to tackle this problem.

Jamshedpur — B.N. BOSE

■ Congratulations for your article explaining the problems of the youth. But the question remains, what is being done to resolve these issues, and how effectively?

New Delhi — MANISH JAIN

■ The statement attributed to Abha Kundra in the article on youth had actually been made by Sandeep Maheshwari, also of Bhopal. —Editor

BALANCED ANALYSIS

Congratulations for your balanced analysis of the Punjab situation ("What can be Done?", December 31). Your scheme for resolution of the tangle merits serious consideration. But Barnala is sincerely trying to implement the Punjab Accord under extremely difficult conditions. It is a measure of his willpower that he is fighting these challenges. He should not be removed, rather his position should be strengthened.

New Delhi — Brigadier J.S. BAWA

■ The answer to your question, "What can be done?", is very simple: reunite Punjab. Politicians won't like it, so keep them away for three years, by handing over the administration to the army. Formation of linguistic states was a mistake and a very serious one as is evident in the case of Punjab and Haryana. Why don't we go in reverse gear and start the unification work from Punjab? We can then redraw the map of India on the basis of small, manageable administrative units.

Pune — M.N. BHINDE

■ The hurt to the Sikh psyche is real and is older than Operation Bluestar or the Delhi riots. Similarly, the collapse of the Hindu psyche in Punjab is also a reality which remains an untold story. Any long-term solution has to take this hurt into account. What is required is the restoration of a political, economic and social balance between the two communities on a non-sectarian basis.

Manali — SHARADA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

REAL ACTION

With reference to your article on real estate ("The State Steps In", January 15), Union Finance Minister V.P. Singh deserves a pat on the back for his will and determination. He has indeed effectively fought the sources creating black money. Tax authorities and legal experts should now put their heads together to effectively implement this law at the earliest.

New Delhi — PRAMOD GAMBHIR

DISTURBING TREND

The mounting rate of divorce cases in India, ("Divorce: Getting Common", December 31), indicates that marriage being sacred and sublime is a belief that does not hold good any longer. If this is the trend, sooner or later the old saying, marriages are made in heaven, will have to be replaced with a new one: Marriages are made in hell.

Sonepat — K. GOPAKUMAR MENON

■ Unfortunately, due to materialistic values, an excellent institution like marriage is being disrupted. No self-respecting man should demand or accept dowry. It is demeaning.

Madras — T.M. SUNDARARAMAN

■ Your article betrays the lack of a sense of proportion. The rise in the number of divorce cases appears sensational, but in what context? You have to relate these figures to total population statistics to realise their relative insignificance. Indian families have lived in harmony through the ages. A country that produced strong, dominating characters like Draupadi need not look to the West for sustenance. A hair-raising prognosis helps no one.

Varanasi — S.S. KABRA

■ The figures given by you relate to a very thin stream of society who have access to the legal system. The vast majority of couples who have been separated or divorced without the intervention of a court far outweighs the 'modern' sector. The divorce rate has therefore remained more or less static or, at best, has risen only marginally.

New Delhi — SYED SHAHABUDDIN

■ Your article is well-researched and exposes the real stigma of divorce. But I would like to point out that maintenance cases are filed under Section 125 of the Criminal Procedure Code and not the Indian Penal Code as mentioned by you.

Pune — A.G. DESHPANDE

POLITICAL ROOTS

It is becoming increasingly evident that the real culprits in the Goa agitations ("Language of Violence", January 15) are not the people but criminal and communal elements among politicians to whom the people inadvertently gave legitimacy during the last elections.

Ruwi, Oman — F. MATHIAS

DANGEROUS PRECEDENTS

The recent style of fund allocation to the states due to go to the polls ("Political Manna", January 15), makes one question the reality of Rajiv's "clean" politics. If funds were due and justified, why were they not given earlier? And if this was due to a policy change, then why not go through the normal procedure? Rajiv is setting dangerous precedents.

New Delhi — PANNALALL MUNDHRA

SALES GIMMICK

Congratulations for the excellent write-up analysing Kapil Dev's latest fiction-thriller ("Settling Scores", December 31). When it comes to the "great little master", Kapil Dev certainly suffers from an inferiority complex. Clearly, he hopes to create a sensation by writing bitchy remarks about him because Kapil knows it is the surest way to boost the sales of his book.

Sohar, Oman — PRAKASH KOLKER

■ By God's Decree and Cricket My Style, are not Kapil's autobiographies but weapons he has used against Sunil Gavaskar. It is a shame that these two superstars are fighting like political leaders. If they continue in this manner, the Sharjah lessons may never be learnt.

Madras — K. RAMA CHANDRAN

TIMELY REMINDER

Your comment, ("Limits to Law", December 31), is a timely and forceful reminder to the powers-that-be that enacting laws one after the other will not serve to contain extremism, or for that matter, solve any problem facing the country. None of these laws have been able to create a flutter in the fiefdom of terrorists, let alone set them on the run. Political will is the need of the hour.

Ahmedabad — M.V. RAVINDRAN

LENS EYE

The beautiful Taj Mahal ("The Taj Mahal", January 15), was even more beautiful when seen through the lens' eye of Raghu Rai and surpassed all the other images of 1986. A thing of beauty is indeed, a joy forever.

Kairana — NEERAJ KUMAR BANSAL

■ Raghu Rai's pictures on the Taj are unique and fabulous. His photographs are an added attraction to the magazine's lovers.

Belgaum — POONAM JOSHI

SPLIT SOLUTION

Your special report ("Area of Darkness", December 31), presents in a capsule the tragedy of Bihar. It has become a battlefield for landlord mafias, coalfield thugs, lawless policemen and class-cum-caste groups blinded by mutual hatred and driven by greed. The solution to the problem is to split up Bihar into three viable states: only then will it be possible to proceed with radical reforms, else its staggering backwardness will continue to defy all attempts at amelioration.

Hyderabad — K. MANIMALA

■ The trouble in central Bihar has been going on unabated, making a happy hunting ground for petty politicians who exploit this highly explosive situation for their own nefarious gains. There is absolutely no administration worth the name in Bihar. As a result of the infighting between Bindeshwari Dubey and fomer chief minister Jaganath Mishra, the worst sufferers are the people.

Muzzafarpur — HARESHWAR SHARMA

STRONG STAND

With reference to your article on the Sino-Indian border ("Face to Face", December 31), India should take a leaf from the book of history of these nations. India needs to face the Chinese pressures with equal force. Compromise is not the answer. No concessions that we make are going to stop China from asking for more. In fact, as long as the present position of face to face persists between India and China, there will be no peace for India. For, China will readily play the border card whenever there is inclement political weather in India.

New Delhi — TASHI PHUNTSOK
Joint secretary, Tibetan Youth Congress

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

60 years old or 60 years young?

Have you ever wondered why the old man who lives down the road is still full of pep and vigour at 60, while you feel tired and run down at just 30?

The answer is not too far to seek. 2 teaspoons of Zandu Kesari Jivan twice a day. Every day.

Zandu Kesari Jivan is a delicious, nutritive tonic containing several different herbs fried in deshi ghee. Its most important ingredient is saffron. Unlike other similar looking products, Zandu Kesari Jivan contains pure amla – the richest and most natural form of Vitamin C – which helps build body resistance and immunity to disease.

But remember, Zandu Kesari Jivan works best when taken daily, regularly over the years. So if you start young, you'll end up with a unique health insurance in your old age. The gift of enjoying life, a full life.

Saffron – handpicked from the Valleys of Kashmir

Zandu Kesari Jivan contains more than Rs. 25/- worth of pure saffron in each bottle. Saffron – the most expensive ingredient in the world is renowned as a rejuvenator among its several other therapeutic and cosmetic properties. Combined with the other carefully chosen herbs, it has a synergistic effect, strengthening the constitution, hence it keeps body tissues young even at an old age.

Full of life – all your life with Zandu Kesari Jivan.

Zandu Kesari Jivan

ZP/4/254

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

A Modern Venture

A leading manufacturer of synthetic fabrics... now introducing worsted suitings with technical assistance from world renowned SULZER BROS. LTD., SWITZERLAND...

A leading member of the illustrious Modern Group—fastest growing industrial house in the state of Rajasthan — Modern Suitings manufactures a wide range of premium quality synthetic/blended textiles in great demand throughout the country. The Company is now engaged in ambitious expansion/diversification with high growth and profit potential—installing state-of-the-art Swiss made automatic shuttleless Sulzer looms for the manufacture of an exclusive range of sophisticated worsted suitings. Backed by the world's most advanced technology from SULZER BROS LTD. of Switzerland, the new project will help Modern Suitings grow significantly.

Spectacular Growth

In just 6 years of operation, the Company's performance has been truly remarkable. From 1980-81 to 1985-86 : turnover soared from Rs. 340 lakhs to Rs. 1503 lakhs; profit before interest and depreciation shot up from Rs. 22 lakhs to Rs. 104 lakhs; net worth rose from Rs. 58 lakhs to Rs. 224 lakhs*; and the break-up value of shares increased from Rs. 14 to Rs. 25*. The Company has consistently paid dividends from the very second year of operation and declared 15% dividend for 1985-86.

Outstanding Management

Behind this spectacular success is the relentless dynamism of the Modern Group. Launched in 1976, the Group has increased its turnover from Rs. 68 lakhs to Rs. 80 crores, fixed assets from Rs. 20 lakhs to Rs. 67 crores and profit before interest and depreciation from Rs. 6 lakhs to Rs. 7 crores. The Group comprises such established blue chips as Modern Woollens, Modern Syntex, Modern Threads and, most recently, Modern Insulators in collaboration with SIEMENS AG of West Germany.

ASSURED FUTURE

The Company's growing success and profitability are ensured by the expanding market for worsted/blended suitings both in India and abroad. Prospects are further brightened by the assured supply of worsted/blended yarn from Company's associate Modern Woollens, the Modern Group's invaluable experience and expertise in the manufacture/marketing of blended yarn and suitings, and the Government's increasing encouragement to the woollen/blended textile industry. Modern Suitings is all poised for a future of growing profitability.

*exclusive of revaluation reserve

ISSUE HIGHLIGHTS

- Prestigious Modern Group Company.
- Existing, Dividend paying Company.
- Dynamic management of the Modern Group with an excellent track record.
  - Profit before interest and depreciation increased from Rs. 22 lakhs in 1980-81 to Rs. 104 lakhs in 1985-86.
  - Turnover increased from Rs. 340 lakhs in 1980-81 to Rs. 1503 lakhs in 1985-86.
  - Net Worth grew from Rs. 58 lakhs as at 30.4.1981 to Rs. 224 lakhs* as at 30.6.1986.
- Equity Share of Rs. 20.00 (market price as quoted in Delhi Stock Exchange on 10.12.1986) being offered at par.
- Debentures.
  - Fully secured.
  - 5% premium on redemption.
  - Buy-back at par after one year.
  - Interest @ 15% p.a.
  - Simple interest @ 29.58% p.a. in Cumulative Scheme
- Technical assistance from world-renowned SULZER BROS. LTD., SWITZERLAND.
- Easy liquidity — Listing at Ahmedabad, Bombay, Calcutta and Delhi Stock Exchanges.

That's

Modern Suitings Limited

Regd. Office D-22, Moti Dungari Road, Jaipur-302 004

The Future is Modern.

Public Issue of 24,00,000 Equity Shares of Rs. 10/- each linked with 1,20,000 — 15% Non Convertible Secured Redeemable Debentures of Rs. 100/- each, both for cash at par.

Managers to the Issue

The Industrial Credit and Investment Corporation of India Limited Merchant Banking Division

Bank of Baroda Merchant Banking Division

Bank of Credit and Commerce International Merchant Banking Group punjab national bank Merchant Banking Division

State Bank of Bikaner & Jaipur Merchant Banking Division

ISSUE OPENS
Non-Resident Indians : JAN. 21, 1987
Indian Public : JAN. 28, 1987

Sobhagya/648/86

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Urban Apocalypse

CALCUTTA, with half of its 9.1 million people living off the streets, has become perhaps the world's largest 'slumpolis'. In Bombay workers squashed into swift moving suburban trains take as much time to reach office as farmers on bullock-carts take to get to a village market-place. In Madras people sleep beside public water taps to be able to beat others to get their daily bucketful. And in New Delhi the sun may not shine over the ancient solar clock of Jantar Mantar—a huge 12-storey building being erected nearby could block it out.

India's cities have become cesspools of squalor, rot, confusion and shameless urban mismanagement. Town planners, with their outdated master plans, grandiose schemes and empty civic coffers, have been able to do no more than circumambulate, like headless chickens, the new wasteland of aimless macadam and rivers of filth that most cities have degenerated into. The cities have crawled sideways. They have spiralled skywards. But still, by last year the housing shortage in urban areas had touched a disastrous six million. A third of the people in urban areas live in shacks with gunny sacks as doors and pavements as toilets. Another half of them live shrouded in a concrete jungle of flats, not able to see beyond their neighbour's window. Parks and airy spaces are being gobbled up by hungry builders. And skyrise monstrosities have sprouted in the best planned areas of most cities.

Illustration by AJIT NINAN

Everywhere, overloaded city civic services are collapsing under the ceaseless hammering of the population bomb. City buses and suburban trains are bursting at their seams with commuters. Power shortages are common with most cities experiencing 'rolling blackouts'. Water is even scarcer with per capita supply in cities one of the lowest in the world. The less said about sewers the better. Phones scarcely work in most houses. Pot-holes only get deeper. Anarchy cascades down on what loosely pass for roads and highways in the name of traffic. The cities wallow in the filth and slime of their own pollution and congestion and slowly choke themselves to death.

And the giant melting pot of cultures and life-styles that cities have become is fast turning into a festering boil. Along with the buildings crime is going up. Suicides are up, so is unemployment. And social tensions are hitting new highs. As traditional neighbourhoods wither away or perish altogether, people fall prey to loneliness, isolation, and anomie in which television, notwithstanding its alien values, becomes the people's best friend. Through it the deprived of our cities and slums can switch on and off a world of instant maya.

Yet the pied piper-like clarion call of cities continues to exert a magnetic attraction. The endless stream of migrants in the last three decades has become a sea whose human debris has clogged most cities. India's urban population has grown from just 60 million before Independence to a staggering 156 million in 1981 and now constitutes 23.7 per cent of the total population. A fourth of them huddle together in just 12 metropolitan cities. And in Rajiv's 2001 the urban population threatens to swell to a mammoth 350 million giving India the dubious distinction of having one of the largest urban populations in the world.

The urban behemoth has to be tamed. But how? To many the answer seems crystal clear. Develop smaller cities and towns to act as "counter-magnets" to metropolitan cities. But in the sixth plan an effort to develop 231 towns as alternative growth centres didn't work out because states dragged their feet over the issue. The Central Government recently launched the ambitious National Capital Region Development Plan to halt Delhi's stupendous growth by developing cities in neighbouring states but it still hasn't set aside enough funds to get the project moving.

There is no time for vacillation. The solution doesn't lie in making existing cities grow bigger or developing suburbs that soon become uglier, phantasmagorical extensions of the parent city. The umbilical cord of job prospects, civic amenities and entertainment that sucks migrants to the big cities has to be cut and fragmented in order to develop feeder lines to newer towns and cities.

Funds for developing alternative growth centres have to be found and development plans implemented post haste. The national housing bank proposed sometime ago to fund and coordinate building activity has to be set up to halt the slumming of cities. Cheaper building material needs to be devised to cut costs.

The need to decentralise has become paramount. Central and state governments must take the lead by shifting less important departments and offices of public sector undertakings away from state capitals. Industries that have no direct bearing on the consumer needs of big cities should not be allowed to come up within its environs. Instead, incentives should be provided to set them up in smaller towns as is already being done in many states. In the long run planners would find it cheaper to fund development of newer towns rather than pump money into big cities to improve their overloaded civic services.

All this needs to be done on a war-footing before the hum of cities, as Lord Byron once prophetically remarked, becomes the sounds of human torture.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

PAPER Bilt CHEMICALS

EDIBLE OILS GLASS CLAY ENERGY

ARE YOU WILLING TO UTILISE YOUR CREATIVE BENT OF MIND?

ARE YOU WILLING TO ROLL UP YOUR SLEEVES AND WORK TOWARDS AN ACHIEVABLE FUTURE?

ARE YOU WILLING TO PARTICIPATE IN A CHALLENGING EXERCISE OF CHANGE?

JOIN US

WE ARE B I L T. AN ORGANISATION IN TRANSITION

BALLARPUR INDUSTRIES LIMITED. An Organisation undergoing Change. A process generating challenge and uncertainity, anxiety and relief, pressure and stimulation. Involving careful introspection of our Business, Technology, Environment and People. Through people. An adventure for people who have conviction and perseverance. We believe in GROWTH WITH AND THROUGH PEOPLE.

YES, BILT. A turnover of Rs. 300 crores. An ever widening Product portfolio consisting of Paper, Chemicals, Glass, Clay ..... and new ventures into Telecommunications with knowhow from OKI, Japan and man-made Fibre with technical collaboration from Dupont, USA.

We need a MANAGER – COMPUTER SERVICES

A key job at our Head Office. To implement Computerisation plans of departments, to generate Computer awareness and lead a group of professionals, and to supervise and direct Computer related systems. A job for an MSc in Computer Science/BE/MBA (Systems). With at least 10 years experience in the field. A job for a person with a Systems Perspective, Analytical Mind, Leadership Traits, Assertiveness, ability to withstand pressure and a sound knowledge of the latest in Computer Sciences. Growth prospects are high. So are our salary commitments for the right person.

So, are you willing to stretch yourself and let your equation with the Organisation transcend a mere economic one? If you are, COME, LET'S BUILD A BETTER BILT TOGETHER.

Apply within 10 days, superscribing the code M-CSD to:

GENERAL MANAGER
PERSONNEL AND ADMINISTRATION
BALLARPUR INDUSTRIES LIMITED
THAPAR HOUSE, 124, JANPATH
NEW DELHI – 110001

NDD

TELECOM Bilt FIBRES

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Zia's Unease

● South Block analysts have detected perceptible discomfiture within the Pakistani Government—and a consequent softening towards India during the last few weeks. President Zia has been rattled by a cooling in popular sympathies for Afghanistan after the Karachi riots (in which about 500 Urdu-speaking Muslims have been slaughtered by Pathans, many of whom are Afghan refugees) and Mikhail Gorbachev's offer to pull out Soviet troops from Afghanistan within 18 months, a development that jeopardises the logic of increased US military aid. And the massive Indian military exercises on the western front are also causing considerable alarm on the other side of the border.

Quick to take advantage, India first despatched Home Secretary C.G. Somiah and then Foreign Secretary A.P. Venkateswaran to Islamabad for high-level "normalisation talks" with several offers, including a new proposal for a friendship treaty, the opening up of the Khokrapar-Munabar border checkpost in Rajasthan to facilitate travel between the two countries, a free exchange of books, periodicals and students, more trade and easing of visa and police reporting requirements for Pakistanis.

Pakistan responded cautiously but favourably. The most noticeable shift was that for the first time, it tacitly accepted as valid the Indian complaint that Sikh extremists operating in Punjab were being trained and armed there and promised to investigate and put a halt to it. "This is the furthest Pakistan could go without openly acknowledging its complicity," said one diplomat.

Political Gloss

● Last fortnight Uttar Pradesh Health Minister Lokpati Tripathi, who is also president of the state Olympic Association, held a gala press conference at a New Delhi five-star hotel to announce plans for the Indira Gandhi Gold Cup Hockey Tournament, organised by the association, in which eight countries are to participate. Reporters were issued specially-packaged glossy material, in expensive jackets. But the material turned out to be a painful disappointment. It contained not the details about the upcoming sports event or information about participants but rather elaborate propaganda about the 20-Point Programme, glossy mugshots of Rajiv Gandhi, and copies of speeches by Chief Minister Bir Bahadur Singh. With that the fine distinction between sports and politics was finally obliterated.

Cartoon by AJIT NINAN

Riding Roughshod

● Morale among security agencies guarding the prime minister has not been particularly high after the Rajghat episode. A recent incident in the Andamans involving a senior officer of the Special Protection Group (SPG) has given it a further knock. Rajiv, vacationing there, wanted the driver of the white Ambassador he was travelling in to go faster. The driver resisted, aware that the bullet-proof, air-conditioned car had a speed limit. A disgusted Rajiv finally took the wheel and raced the car. Expectedly, the car heated up and stopped. But the already-annoyed prime minister really lost his cool when the replacement turned out to be a black Ambassador—one he dislikes.

The unfortunate recipient of his wrath was N.R. Reddy, deputy director of the SPG. A furious Rajiv instructed his secretary Sarla Grewal that Reddy be flown back to the mainland. Grewal resisted carrying out the order, and later asked Rajiv if he still insisted on it. Thereupon, she was instructed to accompany Reddy on a special flight back. A distraught Reddy was last fortnight trying to figure out what to do about his uncertain future. Informed sources feel that Rajiv was taking out his wrath over the Rajghat case on Reddy, who is being blamed for not taking the prime minister by a different route even after the first shot had been fired.

Convention Centre

● The prime minister's image of a whimsical globe-trotter, Congressmen say, is increasingly rubbing off on the ruling party and the Government. Both, it is being increasingly said, are placing more emphasis on international gloss and glitter rather than domestic bread and butter. Members of the ruling party, as well as several senior ministers, are fed up to the gills with the spate of international conferences organised by the Government and the party.

At least half a dozen such conferences have been held during the last year alone, the latest being a two-day international symposium on apartheid organised by the Youth Congress(I) at a cost of Rs 40 lakh and attended by 167 delegates. Next is a 15-nation conference in the memory of Indira Gandhi, with the theme

"Towards a New Beginning". Some key ministers who have met Rajiv in recent weeks have candidly told him that their constituents have begun to frown on these wasteful extravaganzas and would rather have the party and the Government concentrate on rurally-oriented meetings. In other words, how about a new beginning at home?

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

INDIA TODAY
INTERNATIONAL EDITION

GIFT INDIA TO SOMEONE YOU CARE FOR...

GIFT FOR _____

ADDRESS _____

CITY _____ CODE _____

COUNTRY _____

Please send one year's subscription of INDIA TODAY, International Edition and my gift card to the person named above. Enclosed is my cheque/DD/M.O. for Rs _____ payable to Living Media India Pvt. Ltd.

MY NAME _____

ADDRESS _____

CITY _____ CODE _____

COUNTRY _____

Send this advertisement and payment to:
Living Media India Pvt. Ltd.
Subscription Department
P.B. No. 69, Delhi-Mathura Road
Faridabad 121007, Haryana, India

Annual Airmail Subscription Rates

Rs 585
ABU DHABI
AFGHANISTHAN
ANTIGUA
AUSTRALIA
BAHRAIN
BAHAMAS
BARBADOS
BELGIUM
BRAZIL
BULGARIA
BURMA
CANADA
CHINA
CHILE
COLOMBIA
DENMARK
EGYPT
ETHIOPIA
FIJI
FRANCE
W. GERMANY
GHANA
GIBRALTAR
GREECE
GUYANA
HAWAI
HONG KONG
HUNGARY
INDONESIA
IRAN
IRAQ
IRELAND
ITALY
JAMAICA
JAPAN
JORDON
KAMPUCHEA
KENYA
KUWAIT
S. KOREA
LAOS
LEBANON
MALAYSIA
MALAWI
MALDIVES
MEXICO
MORROCO
NETHERLANDS
NEW ZEALAND
NORWAY
OMAN
PAKISTAN
PANAMA
PHILIPPINES
POLAND
QATAR
ROMANIA
SAUDI ARABIA
SEYCHELLES
SHARJAH
SIERRA LEONE
SINGAPORE
SOUTH AFRICA
SPAIN
SRI LANKA
SUDAN
SWITZERLAND
SYRIA
TAIWAN
TANZANIA
THAILAND
UAE
UGANDA
UK
USA
VENEZUELA
YUGOSLAVIA
YEMEN
ZAMBIA
ZIMBABWE

Rs 185
BANGLADESH
BHUTAN
NEPAL

NH 943

The Times of India

- It is not the job of the ruling party to strengthen the Opposition.
  ■ VASANT SATHE in Sunday Review

- The present Congress(I) is not a Congress party at all.
  ■ PRANAB MUKHERJEE, president, Rashtriya Samajwadi Congress

- We are no killers but law-enforcing men.
  ■ JULIO F. RIBEIRO in The Sunday Observer

- I am in the mainstream. What Ghising says is his problem. It is not my problem.
  ■ NAR BAHADUR BHANDARI, when asked if he supported the Gorkhaland movement, quoted in The Statesman

- The competition is so strong now that anybody who is inactive or incompetent cannot stay in any position in the Congress.
  ■ ANAND SHARMA, Youth Congress(I) president, in Sunday Mail

- It is a very vulgar trend in journalism today to peg issues down to personalities.
  ■ RAJEEV SETHI in Probe India

- What matters in any individual is the background and norms he inherits, and what I have inherited are middle class norms. This has been much more important in shaping my personality than any imposed discipline at Lever.
  ■ ASHOK GANGULY, chairman, Hindustan Lever, in Business India

- The first interview, like the first kiss, is hard to forget.
  ■ M.V. KAMATH in Imprint

- I have come to the conclusion that it gives people immense pleasure to see authority being pulled down. It shows them that we are truly democratic.
  ■ NALINI SINGH, television personality, in Sunday

- Run...run...you have to defeat all...fly....This has been the command I feel in my being.
  ■ P.T. USHA in Weekend Review

- I am so incurably lazy...sleeping is my favourite hobby.
  ■ ARJUNA RANATUNGA, Sri Lankan cricketer, in The Sunday Observer

- I always used to think of myself as an ugly duckling at school...which is why I believe more in talent than looks.
  ■ PADMINI KOLHAPURE in Telegraph Magazine

- I want to forget those years of solitary confinement. My Rajneesh phase is over, once and for all....Now, I hate the very mention of his name.
  ■ VINOD KHANNA in Newstime

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Hotel Rugby's twin-winter package awaits you atop Matheran

Twin-Winter Package
From 1-2-87 to 15-4-87

Mon to Thu
4 days per couple
Sup. Delux Rs. 1070/-
Delux Rs. 970/-
'A' Class Rs. 870/-

Fri to Sun
3 days per couple
Sup. Delux Rs. 890/-
Delux Rs. 790/-
'A' Class Rs. 690/-

Taxes extra as applicable

With more of frees:
- Welcome drink
- Child below 12 years
- Breakfasts and meals
- A horse ride coupon

And only extra:
- Each extra person on room sharing basis

For Booking Contact:
Matheran: Phone: 91-92
Bombay:
Thackers Restaurant,
B.K.K., Chowpatty,
Bombay-400 007.
Phones: 351614, 356859, 362266 (between 10 am & 3 pm – 6 pm & 10 pm)

Thackers - people who care for you!

COSMOS/RH-1575

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

It was 6.28 a.m.
While the world was still yawning from sleep, you were up and about.
Just you. And him.
It was another beautiful day in your life.

And K R Steelunion was right there, sharing it with you.

K R Steelunion touches your life. Every day of your life.

For 86 years now, K R Steelunion has been a part of everyday life in India.

You'll see our products a hundred times a day around you.

Everytime you open a can of baby food.
Everytime you reach for a soft drink.
Everytime you use your kitchen stove.
Everytime that you watch a new building coming up.

For 86 years, quietly and unobtrusively, we've been touching your life with products that have helped shape the world around you.

Our products include
Tinplate, Tin-free Steel, Steel Ingots, Billets, Steel bars and Rods, Wire Rod Coils, Cold Rolled Steel and Tinmill Black Plate.

The names you know us by.

Perhaps you know us better by the names of companies who use our products.

Names such as Kirloskar, Kelvinator, Metal Box, Siemens and ECE.

Or Poysha, GKW, Crompton Greaves, Larsen & Toubro, Zenith and Nagarjuna.

Or Premier Auto, TISCO, Balmer Lawrie, DLF Universal and Needle Roller Bearing.

And Graham Firth, Bharat Bijlee, Voltas and Nestle.

All customers of ours.

Customers who can testify to the quality of our products, to the strength of our service, to the innovativeness of our R&D.

Perhaps, too, you'd know us by the names of our overseas links.

Associates such as Nippon Steel, Kawasaki Steel, British Steel, Hoesch, Rasselstein, Sollac, Usinor, Mitsui, Marubeni, Otto Wolff, Coutinho Caro and Philipp Bros.

There's more on our anvil.

Soon, you'll be seeing a lot more of us.

With our plans for expansion and modernisation, we'll soon be playing an even bigger role in the daily life of India.

And in yours.

Since 1900
An associate of Khemchand Rajkumar

A multi-product multi-location Company

K R Steelunion Limited
Bombay: Mittal Court 'B' Wing, 4th Floor, 224, Nariman Point, Bombay 400 021. Phone: 223877, 223878, 223879
Calcutta: Everest House, 10th Floor, 46-C Jawaharlal Nehru Road, Calcutta 700 071. Phone: 444331

Reinforcing Bars

Cold Rolled Steel

Billets

Tin Plate for Cans & Crown Corks

K R Steelunion Limited

PRESSMAN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

VIP DOGS

Cartoons by AJIT NINAN

■ Empress Ts'u-hzi, Imperial China's dowager empress walked, talked, and travelled in the company of her ribboned Chihuahua perched regally on a silk cushion. Interestingly, the Himachal Pradesh Government has taken a leaf out of the empress' royal book. According to records for the last financial year, four dogs, one bitch and a pup were treated as state guests and given the same treatment as their masters.

The records show that five VIPs—this includes a member of the fourth estate—who were accompanied by their dogs, were treated as state guests. The red carpet was rolled out on their arrival and the VIDs (very important dogs) and VIPs walked out of the Government vehicle into the suites reserved for them in state rest-houses.

The Government's intentions are honourable but the drain on the exchequer has been severe. During 1985-86, the state Government declared 1,574 persons as state guests, and spent over Rs 30 lakh on their accommodation and transport. The amount seems considerable, but considering that no distinction is made between man and beast in qualifying to be a state guest, it isn't really surprising.

SPIRITED BURGLAR

■ It is commonly believed that burglars are all brutalised characters who will go to any length to ensure the success of their nocturnal missions. But the man who broke into a residence in an Alleppey home seemed a class apart. Entering the house which the family had left behind securely bolted, he quickly filled his empty airbag with Rs 1 lakh in currency notes, gold ornaments and some electronic gadgets.

Then, pulling out a quarter bottle of rum, he fished around in his host's well-stocked refrigerator and proceeded to plough his way through a quiet dinner by candle light. The cold potatoes, generous hunks of salted meat and bread, were all washed down with pure and undiluted swigs of rum.

But the sumptuous feast and generous quaffs slowly began to have their effect and as the uninvited guest rose from the table, he was floating on cloud nine. Reaching into the bulging airbag he had packed before dinner, he began to draw out hundred rupee notes and strewed them around the room with gay abandon. Soon after, he sauntered out minus the airbag leaving a trail of gold behind.

OMINOUS RING

■ Court marriages are still associated with couples who have eloped and wish to formalise their relationship, before their wrathful parents get to them. Consequently, most marriage rooms are dark and depressingly crowded chambers, with grim magistrates and anxious couples queueing up two by two, waiting to get over the legalities of getting married. But room number 137 in Delhi's Tis Hazari Courts is quite unlike any other marriage room or even unlike any other room in that rambling, shoddy building. Wine-red carpets, sofas, woodwork and an assortment of well-tended potted plants, makes it look more like an elegant lounge, rather than a place of legal activity.

It is rumoured that the room was given a face-lift in response to a number of complaints. But what still remains disconcerting is the last statement couples have to read out before the magistrate can declare them lawfully wedded. The declaration, one aspect of the Special Marriages Act of 1954, ends by saying that if any of the statements made by them is false, then they are liable to be imprisoned. Legally this may be desirable, but it does give the whole happy occasion an ominous, unpropitious ring.

LOVE COLLECTION

■ It is not uncommon to meet or hear of avid collectors of stamps, match-boxes, cigarette packets and sometimes even shoes. But collecting love letters is indeed a novel and unduplicated hobby. The Rajya Sabha was recently informed by an Andhra Pradesh member of his chance meeting with a postman who collected love letters instead of delivering them.

The retired postman apparently came to the parliamentarian for the express purpose of reading out a love letter written in chaste Telugu. When the member asked the postman how the letter had landed in his possession, the unabashed collector replied simply that it had been his hobby throughout his long and eventful service to collect well-composed love letters. He even showed the MP a bundle of several hundred such letters, part of his larger, well-endowed treasure. On tiring of his retired existence, he would leaf through these letters like anyone else would his favourite novel. But how he guessed the contents of the letter before delivering it at some anxious lover's house is anybody's guess.

—Compiled by ANN NINAN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THE MUSLIMS

A Contentious Call

THE difference was dramatic. On December 23, when Syed Shahabuddin called a press conference to convey the decision of the newly-formed All-India Babri Masjid Conference (AIBMC) calling on Muslims to boycott the Republic Day celebrations, barely a handful of journalists turned up. Nineteen days later, when the Coordination Committee set up by the conference met again to endorse the call, a battery of newsmen and photographers were waiting outside Shahabuddin's house in New Delhi to hear the outcome.

For good reason. In the interregnum, the boycott call—which Shahabuddin ineffectively tried to defend as a call to Muslims to "not associate themselves with official functions"—had blown up into a controversy that threatened to become a tragic watershed in the history of relations between India's eight crore Muslims and the Government. There have been many strains in this relationship, and even more in the relationship between Muslims and the majority Hindu community, but this call had an incalculably inflammatory potential. Argued Arif Mohammed Khan, rebel Congress(I) leader: "This one call could well create greater suspicion between the two communities than all the communal riots put together."

Showing a commendable appreciation of the dangers inherent in the call, Muslim leaders from an amazingly wide spectrum came out in opposition to the call. Muslim Congress(I) ministers and MPs, leaders of opposition parties, vice-chancellors, editors, jurists, administrators, industrialists—virtually every responsible opinion-maker in the community—criticised the boycott call as inflammatory, irresponsible and anti-national. Said a joint appeal issued by over two dozen eminent Muslims: "(The call will) further provoke inter-communal tensions and conflict and above all, alienate the great and creative Muslim community from the common heritage of democratic India." Argued Rizwan Ahmed, editor of Patna-based Urdu daily, Azimabad Express: "This call is suicidal for the community."

The purveyors of communal politics behind the call—apart from Shahabuddin, the other leading figure in the Coordination Committee is Indian Union Muslim League (IUML) President Ibrahim Sulaiman Sait—have never been so isolated within the community. The same forces were under attack last year also on the Divorce Bill, but then they had powerful support from Islamic scholars and Congress(I) Muslim leaders. This time, even those who were ranged on opposite sides over the Divorce Bill were speaking from the same platform. Both Union Minister Zia-ur-Rahman Ansari, a strident supporter of the Bill, and Moonis Raza, the vice-chancellor of Delhi University who had just as fervently opposed the Bill, condemned the boycott call at a seminar called by the AICC(I). Said Ansari: "Calling for a boycott is like banging your head against a wall. This is madness."

Janata Party President Chandra Shekhar, always very accommodative of the confrontationist politics of Shahabuddin, asked the Muslim leaders to reconsider their call. Said Chandra Shekhar: "The Republic Day is a day of rejoicing for the nation. Whatever may be the provocation, no community should do anything to minimise the importance of the occasion." Even known sympathisers of the cause of minorities were critical of the call. Said I.K. Gujral, an invitee to the meeting at which the appeal was adopted: "It is the most ill-advised call ever given to the Muslim community."

One year ago, the nation's Muslim community had been galvanised into psychological unity by the Supreme Court decision in the Shah Bano case. Opposition to the decision, which appeared to strike at the very core of the minority psyche and sense of identity

Patna Yuva Janata workers protest

K.M. KISHAN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

AKHBAR-E-NAV

Shahabuddin (third from right) and others at Babri Masjid meet gained the semblence of a nationwide movement as intellectuals, mullahs, middle class housewives, traders and labourers joined together in condemning the verdict and threatening a mass agitation for its revocation. Suddenly, obscure Muslim politicians and organisations gained prominence as the harbingers of a new Muslim politico-religious movement. Sensing the volatility of the issue, the Government hastily soothed it with the ointment of the Muslim Women's Bill.

IT is significant that the Muslim community—which was swayed by its leaders on the Shah Bano issue so far as to threaten to show disrespect to the Constitution—has now shunned a similar call on the Babri Masjid imbroglio, a matter about which Muslims feel equally strongly in Uttar Pradesh. It became increasingly obvious from this conundrum as it was played out last fortnight that the Muslim leaders had not only misjudged the character of the bandwagon they were riding, but had also exposed to public view their totally exaggerated communal self-importance. And the Muslim community had shown that while it would agitate over religious issues and against discrimination, it was not willing to be led into sacrificing its position under the Indian sun.

Between Shah Bano and Babri Masjid lie critical distinctions. In the first case Muslims felt, rightly or wrongly, that the very reference point for their existence and preservation of their identity—a special clause within the Constitution—had been rent asunder. They believed that if the Constitution itself had been rendered a toothless protector, any protest was justified. In the Babri Masjid case, as the Muslims so amply demonstrated, the community was neither united nor willing to pay heed to calls for anti-national brinkmanship over what was essentially a local Hindu-Muslim tussle over a disputed place of worship. They did not see in this controversy a situation in which the Government appeared to be pitted against the community's sentiments and were therefore unwilling to participate in a desecration of Indian nationhood. Most thinking Muslims, even when they protest injustices, imagined or real, still use the Constitution as a starting point. And they also realise that communal conflagrations, in which they have suffered, are not the same as organised religious persecution.

In choosing to single out Republic Day, the event marking the birth of the Indian Constitution, the AIBMC leaders chose not only the wrong symbol but also exposed themselves as opportunistic communalists who believed that they could direct the Muslim angst into a display of anti-national brinkmanship.

Muslims of all shades reacted with alacrity. They questioned first the grassroots support of the AIBMC. Its constituents—the Babri Masjid Action Committees of Uttar Pradesh and Delhi, and the Babri Masjid Restoration Committee of the Majlis-e-Mushawarat—can claim no all-India following. All the three bodies comprise politicians of limited appeal.

Most important, Maulana Abul Hasan Ali Nadvi, president of the All-India Muslim Personal Law Board, which represents a cross-section of Muslim sects and religious thought, declined to attend the conference that called for the boycott. In fact, Nadvi was the first to oppose the call issued by Syed Shahabuddin for Muslims to agitate last year against the reopening of the Babri Masjid-Ramjanmabhoomi lock following an adverse court decision in Faizabad. It soon became obvious, gauging the mood in Shahabuddin's own backyard in Bihar, that the wily MP is neither a national leader of the Muslim community nor a Khalifatul Muslimeen (undisputed Muslim religious head) to whom rank and file Muslims may

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

A LIFETIME AFFAIR!

CROSS BALLPENS AND CROSS PRODUCTS Now manufactured in India, by Chandra Industries (Cross Division) Bombay.

Cross Ballpen and Pencil Set now available in Four different models, GREY, CLASSIC BLACK, LUSTROUS CHROME AND G.P. Also available Ladies Ballpen in CLASSIC BLACK AND G.P.

CROSS®

SINCE 1846

LIFETIME MECHANICAL GUARANTEE

J.K. ADS.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

be obliged to pay serious heed.

Shahabuddin argues that the call is justified because of two reasons: the takeover of the Babri Masjid is the wish of Hindu chauvinist forces wanting to square up history's account with Muslims; and the Government's inaction on restoring the staus quo ante is proof that it "does not have the guts to defend the Constitution". "Therefore," he concludes, "this government has no business to celebrate the Constitution. Therefore, this celebration is a farce. Therefore, we shall not participate."

Shahabuddin maintains that all mosques have equal sanctity but Islam recognises the religious sanctity, of only three mosques: the ones at Mecca, Medina and Jerusalem. Muslims worship Allah, not his houses. The Babri Masjid issue has yet to become one of nationwide concern for Muslims. Babri Masjid committees have been formed only in Delhi and Uttar Pradesh. Even Muslims in other Hindi heartland states, let alone the south, have yet to come to the streets to demand its restoration. Said Hakim Rais Ahmed of Sambal: "This is a purely political call given by destructive people. Yeh sab rahzan hain, rahbar nahin (they are pirates, not leaders)."

That the politics of emotion being played out by Shahabuddin and company became an embarrassing mirror of their political ambitiousness was aptly evident in this summation by Syed Adibuzzaman Rizvi, a lawyer from Hazaribagh: "These so-called Muslim leaders have always tried to seize opportunities to emerge as the spokesmen for the community; but every time their plans are defeated by the Muslims themselves. They must realise that we are a new generation of Muslims and are not easily swayed by these kinds of appeals from clerics and mullahs." In fact, people from a wide cross-section wondered aloud why undue importance was being

SYED SHAHABUDDIN

Mixed Up

SYED Shahabuddin, 50, is a bundle of contradictions. He has a brilliant intellect but a narrow vision. He is articulate but he is convincing fewer and fewer people. He is a bright ex-diplomat who entered politics because he believed good men should enter public life. But even his closest friends now think he is a malevolent influence. He is secular in his personal life but patently communal in his politics.

His heart bleeds for the underprivileged but he sees only Muslim hurts. He deliberately named the journal he edits Muslim India but he refuses to concede criticism that the title is deliberately provocative. He says he speaks for the Muslims because nobody else does but his most bitter critics are Muslims. He is driven by the desire to address the wounds of his community but he takes a stand only on issues which do not concern their real grievances. He says his role model is Maulana Abul Kalam Azad but his confrontational politics is more in the mould of Muhammad Ali Jinnah. He says he is not trying to emerge as the "sole spokesman" of the community but he can't resist the temptation to boast that he told Minister of State for Defence Arun Singh in the Central Hall of Parliament last month: "I am standing between the Government and the Muslim masses and I won't do that any longer." He is very conscious of his Indian identity but he talks of getting Arab lawyers for arguing the Babri Masjid case.

He argues that the insecurity among Muslims cannot be addressed if the issues troubling them are not brought out in the open. But the pitch at which he argues their case only ends up offending most ears. He says he is not trying to capitalise on the community's insecurity but appeals such as the Republic Day boycott can only accentuate this very insecurity. He wants Muslims to be equal partners in the nation's destiny but he does not concentrate his energies on ensuring that the Muslims take full advantage of the opportunities they have. Among his friends he is known as a reasonable man but he refuses to accept that steps like the Republic Day boycott can only increase communal tension. Before his latest call, many liberal Hindus were willing to listen to him; now they too are convinced that he is a rabid communalist.

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

Shahabuddin: a narrow vision

He is a keen student of history but he does not seem to realise that his latest call marks a tragic watershed for his politics. He has been a student of mass politics from his days as a leftist university leader but he has misread the Muslim mind in the Republic Day call: he does not realise that all the rights for Muslims flow from the same Constitution that he is asking the Muslims to dishonour. He wants a solution to the Babari Masjid issue but he does not realise that this cannot happen unless Hindus cooperate.

He is not power-hungry—he spurned many overtures by Mrs Gandhi—but he desperately wants to be the undisputed Muslim leader. He is consumed with ambition but he does not realise that his pursuit of it is destroying him. The growing attack on him even has his wife worried. As she told a confidante: "When he had quit the Indian Foreign Service, I used to walk with my head high. Now, I am forever explaining on his behalf."

He could have been the bridge between the Muslims and the Hindus, but he is today a shrill voice that nobody wants to hear. He could have been one of independent India's heroes; instead he has emerged as a villain in a progressively grimmer communal scenario. For the tragedy of Syed Shahabuddin, he has only himself to blame.

—AJAY KUMAR with FARZAND AHMED

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

given to Shahabuddin's call in the first place.

In large parts of western Uttar Pradesh, a stronghold of Muslims, there was only scattered support for Shahabuddin and the AIBMC. Mostly, the community was confused—eager that the Babri Masjid issue in which, the community believes, an ancient mosque was captured by the Hindus through politically-tainted legal recourse, needs to be resolved by government action, and yet frightened by the boycott call. As Mufti Abdul Khalique, general secretary of Jamait-ul-Ulema-Hind in Meerut, put it: "If the purpose is just to register our protest, it is all right; but the boycott call is meaningless."

The Janata Party itself went through a convulsion of a kind last seen when it split seven years ago on the issue of the Rashtriya Swayamsevak Sangh (RSS). The demand grew within the party for Shahabuddin's expulsion; the party's central office was deluged by over 200 letters and telegrams asking for action against him. Three West Bengal leaders, including a national executive member, Ava Maity, quit the party in protest against Chandra Shekhar's lack of action against Shahabuddin.

The butt of the intra-party criticism against Shahabuddin was simple. He was using the umbrella of a secular party for patently communal politics. Said Janata MP and General Secretary Jaipal Reddy: "If Shahabuddin does not withdraw the call he should be expelled from the party." Party General Secretary Yashwant Sinha hinted strongly that Shahabuddin could well be expelled. Said Sinha: "Our party will not compromise on the issue of secularism."

RANJAN BASU

"If the purpose is just to register our protest, it is all right; but the boycott call is meaningless."

MUFTI ABDUL KHALIQUE
general secretary, Jamait-ul-Ulema-Hind

The Congress(I) coalition with the IUML in Kerala also came under considerable strain. The issue, in fact, first came to prominence in Kerala where the CPI(M) tried to embarrass Chief Minister K. Karunakaran for associating with the party when Ibrahim Sulaiman Sait was involved in the call. Karunakaran prevailed on the state unit of the party to dissociate itself from the boycott call but the demand grew within the Congress(I) for snapping links with the IUML.

Politicking aside, one thing was clear: by choosing the path of confrontation—Shahabuddin's semantics on "non-association" and "boycott" notwithstanding—an irresponsible and communal leadership is doing the greatest harm to the Muslims. It is still difficult to understand what the agitation on the Babri Masjid loses by withdrawing its contentious call. If the boycott call raises the temperature of communal intolerance to the point of violence, the blame will be entirely on this leadership. But, of course, the price for that will not be paid by these leaders. That tragedy will only visit the poor and the unprotected Muslim masses, the same masses these leaders claim to be speaking on behalf of.

—AJAY KUMAR with FARZAND AHMED

AYODHYA SHRINE

In Dispute

THE issue which triggered the boycott call is itself a matter of dispute. The Babri Masjid-Ramjanmabhoomi temple is in the centre of Ayodhya, a holy city for the Hindus. Hindus have been claiming it as the birthplace of Lord Rama for at least 150 years. But till 1949 it was, de facto, only a mosque. On the night of December 22 that year, an idol of Lord Rama mysteriously appeared inside. As tension mounted, the then district magistrate of Faizabad, K.K. Nayyar, put a lock on the outside gate of the compound. A court receiver was appointed and the court was asked to decide on the ownership of the property.

The issue remained frozen till early last year, when a Hindu filed a case in a Faizabad court asking for the lock to be removed as the original court order was not specific. The district judge granted the plea. Ever since, Hindu devotees, having thus "liberated" Ramjanmabhoomi, have been praying there. For Muslims, however, the order came as a judicial stab in the back. To them, it was handing over a disputed property to one side even before the hearing. A Babri Masjid Action Committee was set up in the state, which tried to take the issue to the streets with protest days and bandhs. Over 50 people have already died in the resulting communal incidents and police firings.

The shrine: centre of controversy

S. PREMI

In March last, Rajiv Gandhi assured a host of Muslim MPs that he would take action soon. In July, Union Home Minister Buta Singh promised a solution in Parliament. But the Government's options are limited. A writ challenging the district judge's order is still stuck at the admission stage.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Mitsubishi Advances the Science of Automotives.

Vehicles designed for the 1990's, the recently unveiled MT-90X and MP-90X, embody the leading edge of Mitsubishi technology.

Setting the technological pace since 1917.

Mitsubishi Motors has led the way in transportation technology longer than any other Japanese manufacturer, as its visions of automotives in the 1990's demonstrate.

Upholding a tradition that dates to 1934, the MT-90X hints at the future in truck technology. Aerostyled like all Mitsubishi vehicles, it has a car-like 0.38 drag coefficient. In tandem with an advanced gas turbine engine that is ready for the fuels of the future, it runs with exceptional grace and efficiency.

The MP-90X is a product for the future with an even longer history behind it. The MP-90X harkens back to the 1917 Mitsubishi Model A, Japan's first series-production passenger car. It features satellite and compact disc navigation aids, four-wheel steering and a host of scientific refinements.

Both these vehicles are typical of the pace-setting technology embodied in today's Mitsubishi vehicles. Vehicles like the world-class Canter, which is now being built to state-of-the-art specifications in India by Eicher Motors Limited.

EICHER
02865
गुरुकुल कांगड़ी विश्वविद्यालय हरिद्वार

Our heritage. Your advantage.
EICHER, our business partner in India, will help you find more detailed information about Mitsubishi vehicles.

EICHER MOTORS LIMITED
212, Deendayal Upadhyaya Marg, New Delhi 110 002.
Telephone: 3317139, 3317163, 3317170.

MITSUBISHI CORPORATION
New Delhi: Chandralok Building, 36, Janpath, 110 001. Phones: 343317, 343318, 322211.
Calcutta: 3-A Shakespeare Sarani, 4th floor, 700 016. Phones: 443486, 443489.
Bombay: Express Towers, 11th floor, Nariman Point, 400 021. Phones: 2024439, 2024531, 2024589.
Madras: Shakti Towers (Next to VTI), 4th floor, 766 Anna Road, 600 002. Phones: 88811.
Cochin: Shema Building, 1st floor, XXX/1413, M.G. Road, Ernakulam, 682 016. Phones: 360407, 366828.

MITSUBISHI MOTORS

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Many different routes, one single pursuit – excellence.
That's the mark of ITC management.

ITC
IN PULP & PAPER

Super productivity through mastery over technology is the watchword at BPL

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Bhadrachalam Paperboards, founded by ITC, is setting records in productivity year after year. And complementing this with rare ecological concern.

In 1975 ITC founded Bhadrachalam Paperboards Ltd. The objectives were to help reduce the Nation's perennial paper shortage and locate the plant in a backward area.

This bold venture has been crowned with success. BPL has consistently exceeded international productivity norms whilst product-quality is acknowledged as the industry's best.

Creativity—BPL's motive force

But productivity alone was not ITC's quest, nor BPL's goal. BPL excels in creating new products for new uses. For instance, the right kind of board to pack apples. Result: less spoilage, lowered freight costs and enhanced conservation of wood.

Wood, of course, is a special BPL concern. Planned afforestation apart, BPL's utilisation of mixed hardwood as feedstock—140 varieties from the surrounding forests—is an industry-first.

Nature and science defeat pollution

150,000 trees were specially planted at Bhadrachalam to form a 'pollution barrier' around the mill. They even include species that absorb smells from the chemicals used in the manufacturing process. High efficiency electrostatic precipitators arrest the escape of particulate matter into the atmosphere.

To deal with the enormous quantities of effluent water BPL has set up a unique effluent-treatment system. The 'treated water' is actually rich in nutrients that improve crop yields.

BPL's far-seeing approach is ITC's pride.

National Productivity Awards —three years in a row.

Unique effluent treatment and electrostatic precipitators battle pollution.

Strategic afforestation preserves ecological balance, builds feedstock.

Special attention to township, school system, recreational facilities...assure workers high quality of life.

Platinum Jubilee

How ITC enterprise leads in many fields

Agro-industry: Intensive research and development by ITC's Indian Leaf Tobacco Development Division helps evolve improved strains of tobacco, assists the farmer to increase crop yield.

Packaging & Printing: ITC's Packaging and Printing Division makes innovative printed packaging to the critical specifications of over 100 brand leaders.

Tourism: Welcomgroup, ITC's Hotels Division, earns considerable foreign exchange as the Nation's fastest-growing hotel chain offering international standards of service.

Exports/Cottage Sector: ITC's Marketing and Exports Division has helped sell over 150 cottage-sector products abroad worth Rs 4 crores in foreign exchange. In Shahjahanpur ITC is helping to revive the carpet-weaving industry; already 2500 families earn more, live better.

Music: Sangeet Research Academy and the ITC Sangeet Sammelans reflect the Company's resolve to promote India's cultural heritage.

Sports: ITC-sponsored events and the ITC-published Wills Books of Excellence have been highly successful. ITC also supports traditional sports like wrestling, tonga-racing, kite-flying and archery.

Now striding towards the 21st Century, ITC is confident of its resources, and the skills to manage them. Routes will be many and varied, but the focus will unwaveringly be on the pursuit of excellence. The inherited virtues and values of the past will doubtless put their imprint on the future.

Professional Management of Planned Growth

CC-0. Panini Kanya Maha Vidyalaya Collection. Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Nalini begins the day with a smile, snuggling in the comfort of her Bombay Dyeing towel and sheets.

Indulge in the omplete Bombay Dyeing xperience.
All day long and vell into the night.

It's afternoon. K and Rhea have desi on each other. From Bombay Dyeing Shirt Collection.

Vidya and Aliya, sheer poetry in their Haiku saris set the evening on fire.

Karan takes on the night in Cezari suit.

SUITINGS, SHIRTINGS, SARIS, DRESS MATERIALS, TOWELS, SHEETS AND FURNISHING FABRICS.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

BOMBAY DYEING

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

PUNJAB

Held to Ransom

PUNJAB'S increasingly volatile political scenario took yet another turn for the worse last fortnight, with a series of ominous and bloody developments. First, Roshan Lal Bairagi and Manjit Singh Bhandi, two captured terrorists, escaped from police custody at the Beas Bridge, near Amritsar. Barely a week later, terrorists gunned down T.C. Katoch, inspector-general of prisons (rules), in one of the busiest quarters of Chandigarh where he had gone shopping. Still, the death squads did not rest. A Sikh family—that of Gurjit Singh, headman of village Utur, near Amritsar—consisting of seven members, was wiped out in a hail of bullets and, within hours, three farm-workers of a ruling Akali Dal supporter were done to death a few kilometers away. Some days later, four women in Guru Ka Pind, near Tarn Taran were slaughtered because they were friends and relatives of a person, the terrorists believed, was a police informer.

But more devastating than the sky-rocketing number of butchered innocents was the appearance, for the first time in the state's recent history of violence, of members of the Khalistan Commando Force, who have taken credit for some of the killings, on a public platform last fortnight. The self-styled commando force, along with the Khalistan Armed Police, the Dashmesh Regiment and other such organisations, forms the shadowy, underground, terrorist network that has reduced Punjab to a state of permanent terror. So far, these organisations have been content to hide behind such political fronts as the All India Sikh Students Federation and the Damdami Taksal have offered. For these forces to come out in the open was a terrifying indication that each day of the Centre's drift and indecision on Punjab has strengthened the hands of the terrorists by leaps and bounds. Even police chief Julio Francis Ribeiro recently admitted that with no new political initiatives or action plan emanating from the Centre, the morale of policemen, judges, prosecutors and the common people is rapidly falling.

When the three youths in black clothes and black leather jackets took the stage at the public meeting called by Jathedar Darshan Singh Ragi in the village of Brahmpura, to protest against "excesses" by the Central Reserve Police Force (CRPF), they were taken at first to be just another group of folk singers. Then the leader calmly announced that they were there to represent the Khalistan Commando Force led by Labh Singh, a terrorist on the most wanted list of the Punjab Police. The group made no speeches but chose to express their political beliefs in verse. In traditional folk style they sang, Longowalwad bura, kursi da swaad bura (Longowalism is wrong, taste for power is wrong), along with ballads of the "valour and glory" of such known killers as Sukhdev Singh Sakhira (in whose name 22 bus passengers were recently massacred), Billa and Avtar Singh Brahma.

The Brahmpura meeting was called by the newly appointed jathedar of the Akal Takht, in order to protest against the alleged atrocities by a group of CRPF men in the village on December 27, when they were hunting for Avtar Singh Brahma. Those attending were representatives of virtually every political faction in the state, other than the ruling Akali Dal. Among those who have publicly proclaimed themselves as moderates were Amarinder Singh, Gurdev Singh Badal and other senior leaders of the breakaway Akali faction. Also present were two of Barnala's ministers who had resigned recently over the question of Gurcharan Singh Tohra's imprisonment, after his election as president of the Shiromani Gurudwara Parbandhak Committee. None of the moderates were, however, allowed to speak. Instead they sat meekly listening to what is euphemistically described as "the voice of the youth". Nobody man-

Police funeral for Katoch

Barnala feels he cannot fight the militants unless the Centre strengthens his hands but Delhi is unconvinced of his ability.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Strong chemicals in kattha, chuna and tobacco burn into soft mouth tissues... risking eventual cancer of the mouth or throat. It begins as an innocent white patch you don't even feel. See your doctor or dentist immediately.

Mouth cancer can also be caused by jagged tooth edges, ill-fitting bridgework and false teeth.

There's nothing to get worried about... yet. Oral cancer is completely curable if detected early.

That's why it's vital to have a cancer check-up at least once a year. Go to an Indian Cancer Society detection centre. Or consult your physician.

If you eat paan, be sure to rinse your mouth thoroughly before sleep. Regularly visit your dentist. And make the effort to stop chewing now.

NOW, CANCER INSURANCE!

The Indian Cancer Society offers India's only insurance policy against all expenses of cancer diagnosis and treatment. For just a small sum, both you and your spouse get coverage upto Rs.40,000. Phone or write for more details.

For appointment at other centres, contact:

- B-82, Defence Colony, New Delhi 110 024
- P-7, Old China Bazar Street, Calcutta 700 001
- 127, Angappa Street, Madras 600 005

INDIAN CANCER SOCIETY

National HQ: Lady Ratan Tata Medical & Research Centre, M. Karve Road, Cooperage, Bombay 400 021. Tel: 202 99 41/42

Early discovery, early recovery

daCunha/ICS/15/86

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

aged to summon up enough courage to intervene. Moderate leaders when asked afterwards what they were doing on the same stage as killers and secessionists came up with the stock answer that Parkash Singh Badal has used over and over again in the past year—they could not be responsible for what people belonging to other parties said on a public platform that they were only sharing.

ON the Brahmpura incident itself, the CRPF and the villagers have different versions of what happened. But nobody disputes that it all began due to a speech made by Avtar Singh Brahma, one of the ten most wanted terrorists in the country. Villagers say Brahma came out of the blue and started making a speech from somewhere in the village around 10 p.m., saying that villagers should not cooperate with the CRPF contingent housed in the village school. The speech continued for some 20 minutes and then Brahma and his accomplices started firing at the CRPF men, challenging them to come and get them. There was no response from them, according to the villagers version, till CRPF reinforcements arrived from other villages.

Then, nearly an hour later, the CRPF men smashed their way into people's houses and began the search. But Brahma had disappeared. Said a senior officer: "This village is known to have harboured Brahma and other terrorists in the past which is why the men broke into houses when the doors were not willingly opened. They really believed he was hiding in the village."

Officers argue that if the problem of terrorism is to be tackled firmly then the CRPF will probably have to get even more tough than it did in Brahmpura. This is where the real questions about Brahmpura arise. Punjab Chief Minister S.S. Barnala condemning the operation told INDIA TODAY: "One of the DSP's has been suspended but this is not enough. To my mind the guilty persons should be punished according to the law." The Government then went one step further and instructed the security forces to stay completely away from the public meeting. The residents of Brahmpura, and the militants in general, naturally saw this as an outright victory for them and the natural consequence was the demand for the CRPF to be removed altogether from the district.

YOGJOY/ The Tribune

Ragi addressing villagers of Brahmpura: ominous developments

At the crux of what appears to be going steadily more wrong with Punjab is Barnala's consistent uncertainty and his belief that he is really in no position to take a firm stand against the militants until the Centre makes some effort to strengthen his hand. He cited implementation of the Punjab Accord, release of the Jodhpur detenus and the release of the Misra Commission report—followed by punishment of the guilty men in Delhi—as some of the things that would help him take a stronger stand. Delhi far from being eager to comply with this very tall order, appears to be unconvinced of Barnala's ability to take a strong stand no matter what they do.

Throughout the fortnight Barnala, like an obedient serf, flew back and forth between Chandigarh and Delhi for meetings with Home Minister Buta Singh and Arjun Singh who is once again involved in Punjab affairs, but returned to Chandigarh without any clear view of the Centre's thinking. Worse he was later snubbed cruelly by Rajiv Gandhi who refused to meet him for three days in Delhi. A brief face-saving meeting was finally arranged at the airport lounge but nothing came of it. People in Punjab are beginning to vent their anger at the Centre, particularly at Rajiv Gandhi because they are unable to sense any appreciable concern or initiative.

If the Centre's calculations are directed towards winning the Haryana elections—dismissing the Barnala Government and pushing in the army in order to make a political impact just before the poll, the results could be as tragic as earlier. Exactly five years ago the late Mrs Indira Gandhi opened up the waters dispute question between Haryana and Punjab and created the atmosphere for the massive Akali morcha that escalated into violence, leading ultimately to Operation Bluestar and the devastation of Punjab's politics and social fabric.

In the current atmosphere of dithering and delay by the Centre, the only winners are the opportunists and the extremists. Barnala's policy of taking half-way strong measures and then apologising for them has—ever since the police entry into the Golden Temple last April and his subsequent shoe-cleaning—strengthened the Akali Dal (Badal) view of itself as the real Akali Dal and of Barnala as incompetent. Since this group's grassroots base is not absolutely certain, they are concentrating on trying to ensure it by kowtowing to the most dangerous kind of extremism. They admit privately that the demand for Khalistan and the violence disturbs them as much as anyone else but nobody has the courage to raise his voice and risk his life in the process, to say this.

So Punjab continues to be held to ransom by a group of terrorists representing districts around Amritsar and Gurdaspur. Figures recently released in Punjab speak for themselves: more than half the number of killings in the state during 1986 occurred in these two districts. Unless decisive action is taken now the voice of these violent districts will be heard all over as the voice of Punjab and talk of political solutions will then become irrelevant.

—TAVLEEN SINGH and GOBIND THUKRAL

daCunha/ICS/15/86

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Photographs by SHYAM TEKWANI

TAMIL NADU

Grapes of Wrath

Liquor store on Madras thoroughfare: aiming for the affluent

TAMIL Nadu's liquor business has seen some curious ups and downs in keeping with the changing political compulsions of the Government of the day. And so it was in the new year, when Chief Minister M.G. Ramachandran reintroduced prohibition, which he himself had lifted five years ago.

As 16,000-odd retail arrack and toddy shops downed shutters on January 1 1987, and over 20,000 of those employed in the trade contemplated a bleak future, Excise and Information Minister V.V. Swaminathan ringingly declared: "We are determined to implement the provisions of the Constitution. Under the Directive Principles, both the Union Government and the states are bound to ensure total prohibition. We did relax it temporarily but have now decided to enforce it more forcefully. It is a commitment our leader MGR gave to the people of Tamil Nadu."

But pious proclamations such as these that accompanied the ban neither told the whole story, nor were they convincing. The new prohibition covers only arrack, the poor man's drink, and not the more expensive Indian-made foreign liquor (IMFL). Indeed, the facts show that there is a deliberate attempt to aid the strong and influential IMFL lobby.

MGR's dramatic announcement about the return to dry days from the new year had come in mid-1986 at a public meeting. Later, a government spokesman explained the supposed logic of the decision. According to the official explanation, the state was reverting to prohibition because of the liquor addiction among the poor and the heightened social tensions this was generating.

If the state Government has changed its prohibition policy four times in a dozen years, it has been influenced each time by reasons that are both political and financial. It was K. Karunanidhi who, as chief minister, first scrapped it in 1971—and faced corruption charges relating to allotment of liquor vends. He reintroduced it in 1974 when the Dravida Munnetra Kazhagam (DMK) split and MGR walked out. In fact, Karunanidhi had imposed prohibition at MGR's insistence.

MGR came to power in 1977 and lifted prohibition four years later, only to reintroduce it now, five years afterwards. In 1981, he had changed his mind on the issue because, in the absence of free sale, bootlegging had become so widespread that the administration could no longer hold it down. In that year, MGR had even liberalised rules for the selection and appointment of new wholesale and retail outlets, both for arrack as well as IMFL. Apart from the smell of legal liquor, there was also more than a breath of scandal that time: the MGR Government was accused of favouring certain liquor barons with licences for wholesale IMFL distribution as also for arrack-bottling plants (INDIA TODAY, October 15, 1982). Today, the MGR Government faces strikingly similar charges.

If the state Government is willing to forego an annual revenue loss of a staggering Rs 200-crore in excise revenue, it is because, apart from other things, there is also political capital to be gained. There are about a crore regular arrack drinkers, with whose wives the liquid is not popular because of the expense and the tensions it causes. MGR clearly had his eye on the women's vote which traditionally welcomes a crackdown on drinking. It also helped counter DMK allegations that he was encouraging growth of the habit in Tamil Nadu.

It had also initially appeared to some in the ruling party that the step was aimed at hitting MGR's former cabinet col-

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"We are bound to ensure total prohibition. It is a commitment our leader MGR gave to the people of Tamil Nadu."

V.V. SWAMINATHAN minister for excise and information

ous than most people realised. In a state where Swaminathan forcefully talked of enforcing the Directive Principles of the Constitution, the Excise Department's actions seemed totally at variance. While, on the one hand, the department was ordering closure of all arrack shops and bottling plants, on the other, it was issuing new licences for outlets of IMFL. Between September and December last year, the Excise Department appointed 978 new IMFL dealers in addition to the 953 who already existed to bring the total to 1,931 for the entire state (see chart).

Charged Karunanidhi: "Liquor trade means money. This Government has made frequent changes in the excise policy only to help a few people. We want total prohibition but under the new law, rich people and expensive liquor have been left out. It is patently obvious that it has been designed to help the IMFL trade."

Indeed, the entire business was handled peculiarly, and particularly odd was the method of selecting new IMFL retail vendors. Applications for licences were invited through advertisements as early as May 1985 and more than 1,900 people responded before the last date, July 31, 1985. At that point, the question of introducing prohibition had not even been raised. Allotments were to have been made by January 1986 but, instead, the department sat tight on them until September 1986. This unexplained delay strengthened the allegation of the local liquor trade that the MGR Government was under pressure from the IMFL lobby, led by a north India-based distillery, to close down the arrack trade and aid the sales of their own products.

Suspicion grew to certainty when the selection of new IMFL vends got underway along with the ban on arrack sales. Moreover, the selection process could only be described as extraordinary. Instead of auctioning outlets to the highest bidder, as is the normal practice with most state governments, the MGR Government preferred to prescribe a beggarly fee of Rs 20,000 per shop. If auctions had been carried out, the state Government could have earned about Rs 20 crore, assuming a rough going rate of Rs 2 lakh per vend. But by going in for a small flat fee, the state has inexplicably settled to lose Rs 18 crore. Since the excise commissioner was the final arbiter to decide on allotment, inevitably, over a dozen parties have gone to the courts questioning his orders and seeking redress.

As if the gross violation of all established norms in deciding on the sellers was itself not enough, what was also shocking was the sheer number of licences issued. Madras district (population: 32.76 lakh, 1981 census), now has 412 shops selling IMFL compared to a total of 323 until last fortnight—118 for arrack and 205 for IMFL. In Coimbatore district (population: 30.60 lakh, 1981 census), 132 new IMFL licences were issued, more than doubling the number of liquor shops to 242. The Government, it was apparent, had deliberately and with considerable forethought chosen large towns with sizeable affluent populations to site new liquor shops.

Traders in Tamil Nadu allege favouritism in the selection. According to them, every second application has been rejected on flimsy grounds. An application in Madras, for instance, was turned down because the proposed premises were near a school. That would seem fair reason, except that at least three other vendors in Madras have got the go-ahead although their locations too violate rules and are adjacent to either restaurants, places of worship or schools.

A section of the opposition parties believes that the powerful industrial and liquor lobbies from other states were also instrumental in changing the state Government policy. Tamil Nadu, with an annual production of over 700 lakh litres of raw alcohol, which is required to produce IMFL, is comparatively better placed in alcohol production as compared to other states. However, since 500 lakh litres were being allotted for arrack production, alcohol-league, R.M. Veerappan, who had recently been sacked from the ministry. Speculation on this score was fuelled by the belief that a majority of the arrack vendors were close to the former minister. In fact, AIADMK leaders felt that the chief minister decided to come down heavily on the arrack trade only after first ridding himself of Veerappan.

Chart by B.K. SHARMA

But the design was much more devi-

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

From one success story to another... IFB AGRO INDUSTRIES LTD. promoted by Indian Fine Blank

A corporate success leading to another.

IFBL is now promoting a potential blue chip — IFB Agro Industries Ltd. To augment the scarcity of Industrial Alcohol, this unit will produce 15 million litres of extra neutral Industrial Alcohol for industries like pharmaceuticals, paints, varnishes, chemicals, etc.

The most modern uptodate systems will produce alcohol from sugarbeet in a backward area in Durgapur (Noorpur), South 24 Parganas, West Bengal, in technical collaboration with a world leader — Starcosa GmbH of West Germany.

The promoters are proven experts in their fields. April 1987 is the production start-up. The potential is excellent. The market is ready and eager. This is a dynamic issue you cannot miss.

With excellent financial backdrop, this will be a blue chip idea turning to reality. The issue highlights will tell you why. Because one success story leads to another.

IFB Agro — where the chemistry is just right for you

Highlights

- Successful and proven management — reflected in Indian Fine Blank's equity price of Rs.70 (as on 22.12.1986 in Calcutta Stock Exchange)
- Hi-tech pioneering project to manufacture INDUSTRIAL ALCOHOL of highest purity
- Technical collaboration with world leaders M/s. Starcosa GmbH of West Germany
- Critical plant and equipment imported from Starcosa GmbH and Elfa Apparatebau Vertriebs, GmbH of West Germany
- Tremendous potential for growth as Industrial Alcohol is in great demand
- Existing profit making company. 15% Dividend for June 1986
- 80CC*, 80L and other tax benefits
- Listing in Calcutta, Bombay and Delhi Stock Exchanges

*applied for Issue opens on

For Non-Resident Indians	24th January, 1987
For Indian Public	4th February, 1987

IFB AGRO INDUSTRIES LIMITED
33N, Block B, New Alipore, Calcutta 700 053.

IN TECHNICAL COLLABORATION WITH Starcosa GmbH WEST GERMANY

Pressman/IFB/3

Managers to the Issue

The Industrial Credit and Investemnt Corporation of India Ltd
Merchant Banking Division

SBI Capital Markets Limited

Standard Chartered
Standard Chartered Bank
Merchant Banking Division

Advisors to the Issue

B.N.K. Financial Consultants Pvt. Ltd.

Bank of Maharashtra
Merchant Banking Division

IFB AGRO

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

based industries and IMFL units were being denied their full requirement of raw alcohol. Some distilleries had made representations to the state Government on this count and some had even gone to court to get more favourable allocations. But they had had little success.

Now, with the ban on arrack production, 500 lakh litres of raw alcohol has suddenly become available. Though there is no official announcement, according to well-placed sources, the major beneficiaries are not only local industries who have been allotted an additional 150 lakh litres, but also liquor business in other states, which will get the rest. Said V. Gopalsamy, a DMK Rajya Sabha member: "The MGR Government has already made a deal under which the extra alcohol will be allotted to all the liquor manufacturing units in north and western India. We know these units have been hobnobbing with state Government officials." He also pointed out that it was similar export of alcohol by Karnataka which led to the allegations of corruption against Chief Minister Ramakrishna Hegde's Government.

But MGR seems unconcerned about the allegations. He was also unmoved by the bureaucracy's scepticism about the new policy. Official cynicism is ground in experience of the past when prohibition had bred innumerable illicit liquor stills. Police officials recall vividly the poor thirsting for adulterated liquor, which was as inevitable as the rise of a hoochmaker's mafia. Besides, as it is, an incredible 1.20 lakh excise cases of violation of dry laws are pending in court, while another 60,000 are under investigation. The new change will mean a fresh floods of cases, although the backlog is far from being cleared. This is bound to mean a substantial increase in the police work-load.

On the other hand, civil liberties activists have good reason to be worried about the misuse of law by the administration to implicate people it is displeased with. Memories are still fresh of the pre-1981 days when the police were accused of falsely implicating, in excise cases, people against whom they bore animosity. Sometimes, this was done simply by planting liquor bottles in their vehicles.

It seems doubtful if the prohibition policy will have the kind of salutary effect the MGR Government claims it will. After the immediate political and financial objectives are achieved, it would surprise no one if the Government stand is reversed before the decade is out.

—PRABHU CHAWLA in Madras

TAMIL NADU

Language Bomb

VIOLENCE has finally scarred the placid south Indian state of Tamil Nadu. Last month saw the state rocked by no less than a dozen blasts, the loss of four lives and injury to 50 others. Coming in the wake of the crippling anti-Hindi agitation, the blasts created a sense of panic among people. Security had to be stepped up at the Central and state government offices and there were policemen all over, frisking people at random, inspecting luggage boots of cars and the side carriers of two-wheelers.

The blasts, behind which the police saw the hand of Dravidra Munnetra Kazhagam (DMK) activists, erupted soon after the police crackdown on that party's leadership. Some 20,000 DMK activists were arrested for burning copies of the Constitution and disrupting state services as part of the party's month-long anti-Hindi agitation.

The first blast went off on the very day K. Karunanidhi, DMK president, was arrested—December 9. The blast shook the Hindi Prachar Sabha building in T. Nagar in Central Madras. No one was injured but it damaged office equipment and the building facade.

Soon after, a string of moderate to very powerful blasts shook the state. One of the most serious incidents was the explosion in a compartment of the Tiruchi-Erode Passenger train at Mutharasanallur railway station near Tiruchi in the early hours of December 23. A man was killed and 25 others were injured. Police believed it to be a powerful time bomb. Later a time bomb went off in Madras killing a woman pavement-dweller and injuring her rickshaw-puller husband.

A total of 19 persons, including a member of the Tamil Eelam Liberation Organisation, Karthik, were arrested in connection with the blasts. Most of them belonged to the DMK. A top police official, alleging DMK involvement, said in many cases, blasting expertise available with the dropouts from some of the Sri Lankan Tamil militant groups like the Peoples Liberation Organisation of Tamil Eelam, Tamil Eelam Liberation Organisation, and the Eelam Peoples Revolutionary Liberation Front had been used.

The DMK, however, strongly refuted the charge. Said K. Manoharan, the Security check at night in Madras

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

deputy general secretary of the party: "The MGR Government and police have embarked on a witch hunt against us."

The bombs themselves were only simple gelatine sticks tied together, and attached to a detonator. Sometimes the whole contraption was linked to a timing device. But the general effect on the populace was frightening.

Confessed Y. Prabhu, a chartered accountant: "I have been regularly travelling all over south India but now I feel nervous about train journeys." Echoed T.T. Vasu, president of the Music Academy: "We are thinking of advancing our evening programmes, so that people do not have to stay late."

The fortnight also witnessed a hoax bomb threat at the chief minister's Ramavaram residence on the south-west fringe of Madras. But a frantic search revealed nothing. Said Walter Dewaram, Madras city police commissioner: "Every day we receive 40 to 50 bomb threat calls."

But by the end of the nightmarish fortnight the police were feeling more confident of dealing with the situation. Said K. Ravindran, director-general of police and chief of the force: "The situation now seems to be under control. All the bombs which burst or which were detected before bursting used gelatine sticks. Now we have sealed all the gelatine shops in the state and the sale of the material, even for genuine purposes like deepening of wells and earth-breaking, has been banned." But how far this measure will succeed in putting the lid on the language chauvinists remains to be seen.

—S.H. VENKATRAMANI

MADRAS

Police Affair

COMING as it did from Tamil Nadu Chief Minister M.G. Ramachandran, the summary transfer of K. Mohan Das, 55, director-general of police (intelligence) to the obscure post of commissioner for training and administrative reforms, was indeed, nothing short of a bolt from the blue.

When Home Secretary T.V. Venkatraman was instructed last fortnight to issue the orders forthwith, he could hardly be faulted for disbelieving his ears—the unpredictable MGR had again done the unexpected by easing out one of his closest confidants. Requests from the state police Director-General K. Ravindran and Chief Secretary A. Padmanabhan to rethink the matter persuaded MGR to relent, but only slightly. Mohan Das was made to go on long leave.

What exactly led to the downfall is not clear, but it is believed that the police officer and the chief minister differed on how the Liberation Tigers of Tamil Eelam (LTTE) and their leader Velupillai Pirabhakaran, should be handled. Mohan Das wanted to deal firmly with them, as with all other Tamil militant groups, for transgressing the law, stocking illicit arms and illegally operating their own wireless. But MGR's patronage of Pirabhakaran came in the way.

In fact, their widely divergent attitudes largely contributed to the confusion following Operation Disarm—the police swoop on the militants in November last when arms were confiscated and scores of militants arrested. An outraged Pirabhakaran protested to MGR alleging maltreatment by the police. And as always pandering to Tamil sentiments, MGR directed that some of the weapons seized from the LTTE be returned. But the police promptly retrieved them. MGR had to personally order the return of a wireless set, seized under Mohan Das' directions, when Pirabhakaran undertook a dramatic fast unto death.

Das wanted to deal firmly with militants for breaking the law but MGR's patronage of Pirabhakaran brought matters to a head.

After that, matters snowballed. The militant leader alleged that the intelligence chief had established clandestine contacts with the Israeli secret service Mossad while on a recent trip to Bombay. Mohan Das was also supposed to have visited Singapore without the prior official sanction required for all overseas trips. He is also said to have stayed there in a hotel whose part-owner was a Jaffna Tamil having, oddly enough, close links with some Colombo-based Sinhala groups. That was disturbing enough for MGR to believe that his intelligence chief was not playing ball with him and although his privilege leave was later sanctioned, it did not help Mohan Das.

Tense and upset, Mohan Das said that there was a malicious smear campaign against him by colleagues jealous of his professional success and claimed that "I was not asked to go on leave. In fact I had to plead with the Government to give me long leave for my daughter's marriage. I went to Singapore only after obtaining the oral consent of the chief minister and I had also informed the chief secretary and the home secretary about my trip. As for the seizure of the militants' arms and wireless sets, as a professional police officer, I only carried out orders from the competent authority".

If the stocky Mohan Das looked shocked, this has to be viewed in the context of his remarkable ascent. From the time he had first caught the chief minister's eye while an enquiry officer with the Sarkaria Commission probing charges of corruption against the then DMK government of K. Karunanidhi, to his meteoric rise as DGP, Mohan Das had enjoyed total access to MGR, supplying him information on rival politicians and purveying political gossip. As a top government official acknowledged: "Whatever his official designation, Mohan Das had practically become the deputy chief minister."

With MGR maintaining an enigmatic silence, the rumour mills worked overtime but answers were few and far between.

—S.H. VENKATRAMANI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THE NEW GENERATION ALLWYN AUTOMATIC

NO HANDWINDING. NO MAINTENANCE. NO COMPARISON.

ALLWYN

AUTOMATIC WATCHES

Manufactured under licence from

SEIKO

Continuous accurate performance: the beauty of bi-directional movement; the dependability of the latest Japanese technology. That's Allwyn Automatic ... Dynamic styling. A wide winning range.

Time FOR THE NEW GENERATION ALLWYN

3-year guarantee

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

'It's funny how every time we set up the Barbecute a party just happens!'

INTRODUCING

Prestige

Barbecute

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

MAA (S) PBE 1 A 86

Anywhere, anytime, it's great times with Prestige Barbecute.

It's strange how every man who loves good food and good company turns out to be a terrific barbecue chef. He may have never seen the inside of a kitchen before but Prestige Barbecute brings out the creative cook in him.

Prestige Barbecute. It does wonderful things. Set it up some place and a party just grows around it. Neighbours drop by. Friends get wind of it and come calling. The children call up their friends. And before you can say seekh kabab, a full blown party is under way.

And as the glowing coal slow grills the chicken tangri and the corn-a-cob gets browner, the tantalizing aroma of food makes everyone hungrier, livelier, then the stampede for food begins!

Discover how to put the sizzle in a party, even an instant party, with new Prestige Barbecute. Light and conveniently portable, it can be set up in minutes on a terrace, in a backyard, on the beach, even a traffic island!

Next time you are in the mood for fun, set up the Prestige Barbecute.

And watch a party evolve. A party where everyone is a great chef. Everyone wants to grab the juiciest morsels. Everyone gets hungrier every minute. And everyone has a simply marvellous time.

Portable barbecue- 5 minutes to assemble.

Rs.495/=
Local taxes extra.

Designed by
Prestige of London

A TTK Product

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Gracious [greiʃəs] a. kind, benign, indulgent. b. gracious living, elegant way of life. At The Oberoi, Bombay, every one of our rooms and suites is a perfect example of gracious living. Here, you will find a sophisticated luxury created by the finest furnishings and fabrics in subtle shades. We've taken special care in designing spacious bathrooms with extensive vanity areas. And each room even has its own private dressing room. At The Oberoi, Bombay, gracious living is a way of life — because you deserve the best the world has to offer.

The Oberoi

BOMBAY

For reservations contact your Travel Agent or the Hotel direct: telephone 202 5757, telex 4153/4154 OBBY IN. Or any of the Oberoi Sales Offices.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BOMBAY

The Money Scramble

INCESSANT political and bureaucratic bickering held up a Rs 100-crore grant that was to benefit Bombay's slum-dwellers, until last fortnight when the city's Congressmen agreed to stop quarrelling and start spending. The money in question was an unexpected gift to the estimated 90 lakh people of this exploding metropolis from Rajiv Gandhi at the time of the Congress centenary celebrations in December 1985. For some time, not much was heard of what became of Rajiv's offer, except of course when there was an extended semantic dispute over whether the money would be a "loan" or a "grant" to the city of his birth.

That matter was settled when some energetic lobbying by the Bombay Regional Congress(I) Committee chief Murli Deora produced a clarification from the Union Finance Ministry: the Rs 100-crore was to be a grant from the Centre to tackle the inter-related problems of housing and slum improvement in Maharashtra's capital. But before the money started pouring in, the state Government had to submit a scheme to the Centre on how it would be utilised. This took longer than expected, and the scheme was about to be cleared by the Union housing and urban development ministries when it was enmeshed in another unseemly controversy.

In a flurry of activity, Gurudas Kamat, the youthful Congress(I) MP from Bombay North-East, the largest parliamentary constituency in the state with 14 lakh voters, protested to Rajiv, Maharashtra Chief Minister S.B. Chavan and state's Housing and Urban Development Minister V. Subramaniam that the people of the suburbs were being unjustly ignored in the state Government's proposal to spend the grant.

Kamat felt that the suburbs deserved a larger slice of the centenary cake. "We Congressmen have an emotional attachment to the fund, so my demand was that the money should be allocated on the basis of the population or equitably to all assembly constituencies," he stated, adding, "after all, the majority of Bombay's population, and especially the slum-dwellers, live in the suburbs."

Kamat's salvo against Subramaniam led to a public wrangle which was finally settled after a four-hour-long meeting between the housing minister and the city's MPs and MLAs who had begun demanding that projects be taken up in their constituencies too.

Said Subramaniam: "The prime minister was clearly against the dispersal of the grant and felt we should do something tangible to set an example in housing and slum improvement. He was also keen that the Rs 100-crore should provide a nucleus for raising institutional finance, and we are likely to raise another Rs 100 crore to Rs 150 crore from the Housing and Urban Development Corporation and urban and co-operative banks for the various projects under the scheme."

Since an ambitious shelter programme which seeks to provide 85,000 dwellings to the poor under a Rs 285-crore World Bank-aided scheme has already been taken up by governmental agencies and the municipal corporation, Subramaniam proposes to utilise the Congress centenary grant mainly for the renewal of dilapidated buildings and upgradation of existing slums.

Under the scheme, the Government will spend Rs 32 crore on the development of Dharavi, a slum with a population of nearly 3.5 lakh; Rs 41 crore on repairs of dilapidated buildings; and Rs 22 crore for slum improvement. For emergencies Rs 5 crore will be reserved.

But Bombay's problems are so gargantuan that the scope of the scheme was inevitably restricted, making many Congressmen feel left out from its benefits. Of the 20,000 buildings which the state Housing Ministry identified for repairs, nearly 4,000 are on the priority list and another 1,500 are beyond repair. To patch up all the dilapidated buildings, the authorities need a mind-boggling Rs 1,500-crore. In fact, Rs 41 crore earmarked under the grant will at best put right 4,000 tenements in about 40 to 50 buildings in the older lo-

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THE WORLD AS ELECTRIFIED BY

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

In 75 years, GEC have fanned out in all sectors to become India's leaders in everything electrical.

Wherever, there is electricity, there is GEC.

From simple fans to high-tech electrostatic precipitators, GEC meets every electrical need. In homes. In industry and agriculture.

What is more, GEC expertise is now fighting pollution for a cleaner, purer environment.

Supporting our electrifying performances are our 7 gigantic manufacturing bases, our network of 18 branches and hundreds of dealers spanning the length and breadth of our country.

To keep us ahead in "everything electrical", are our collaborations with Radyne of U.K., Krupps of Germany, Elex of Switzerland, Nickex of Japan and American Air Filter of U.S.A., all big big names in the world's electrical business.

75 1911-1986

And of course, our parent company, GEC (U.K.), themselves international leaders in electricals for 100 years, look fondly at a chip of the old block.

It's a happy day for every one of us at GEC India to end 75 years on a note of achievement.

We are all set to spark off a great future. To continue to herald high technology. Just the way we have been doing for 75 years.

TRADE MARK GEC PERMITTED USER–
THE GENERAL ELECTRIC COMPANY OF INDIA LIMITED.

GEC

The General Electric Company of India Limited
Magnet House, 6, Chittaranjan Avenue, Calcutta 700 072.

GEC Plugged in at No. 1 position.

OUR DIVISIONS:

AIR CONTROL DIVISION:	Ceiling, Table and Exhaust Fans. Air Circulators. Man Coolers, Axial Flow and Centrifugal. Air Pollution Control Systems and Equipments including Electrostatic Precipitators.
FURNACE DIVISION:	Arc Melting, Induction Heating and Heat Treatment. Turnkey Electrical Projects.
INDUSTRIAL CONTROLS DIVISION:	Meters, ACBs, OCBs and MCBs, DOL Starters, AC & DC Contactors, Pulsars, Soft Starters, Switch Fuse Gear and Vacuum Contactor Panels.
MOTOR AND PUMPS DIVISION:	Agricultural Pumpsets 2HP - 20HP and Industrial Motors 1/2HP - 1200HP in LT and HT range.
SWITCHGEAR (HT) DIVISION:	Vacuum / Bulk Oil Circuit Breakers and Flame Proof Switchgears.
TRANSFORMER DIVISION:	Distribution and Power Transformers upto 125MVA and 220KV range and Drycol Breathers.

GEC/1-C/PREM ASSOCIATES

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

calities of central Bombay, extending from the sleazy area of Kamathipura to the labour localities of Parel and Lalabaug.

The Government hopes to make a show-piece of the Dharavi project, since this 175-hectare expanse in the heart of Bombay epitomises both the city's adventurous spirit and its decay. "Dharavi is representative of Bombay's cosmopolitanism with people from all parts of the country," says Subramaniam, "and we would like to make an impact there."

Dharavi is also where, as general secretary of the Congress(I), Rajiv first came into contact with the misery and degradation of life in a slum. During his padyatra through the area more than four years ago, Rajiv had created hope among its residents that some of their perennial problems would be solved. If nothing else, it is appropriate that his impulsive generosity in gifting Rs 100 crore to Bombay should at least benefit the people of the city's largest slum.

—M. RAHMAN

RSC

Ragtag Band

AND now enter the Rashtriya Samajwadi Congress (RSC). President and theoretician (undisputed): Pranab Kumar Mukherjee. Conscience-keeper (self-appointed): Sisir Kumar Bose. Crowd-puller (optimistically): Ramarao Gundu Rao. Also starring: Prakash Mehrotra, Shyam Sunder Mohapatra, F.M. Khan, Jambuvantrao Dhote and last but not the least, Mayapati Tripathi. Guest appearances: Maneka Gandhi, Sarat Chandra Sinha and K.P. Unnikrishnan. Box-office rating: sure flop, say political pundits unanimously; wait and see, say Messrs Mukherjee, Bose and Rao.

Even the party's formation was like a re-run of an old film. As in 1978, when the Congress(I) was formed, the venue was Delhi's Vithalbhai Patel House. Eyewitnesses to both events confirmed that the turnout (around 3,000, allegedly Congressmen), the size of the shamiana, and even the level of enthusiasm was the same. But there was one crucial difference: there was no Mrs Indira Gandhi. The absence of a similarly charismatic personality was enough for many to dismiss the party as a non-starter.

There were other telling differences. Mrs Gandhi had 22 MPs with her; Mukherjee has only Khan and himself. Two chief ministers came to her convention: Chenna Reddy and Devraj Urs. This time there weren't even any ministers. Even the number of MLAs could be counted on one's fingertips. As Mukherjee later said candidly: "Most of those who came were ex-MLAs, ex-ministers, ex-office-bearers."

For the rest, it was the usual tamasha, complete with a declaration of intent, a 16-point alternative programme for the nation and a series of speeches painting Rajiv Gandhi in the most damnable personal and professional terms. It was predictable, boring and thoroughly unconvincing. The press inaccurately dubbed them Indira 'loyalists'. Mohapatra, Khan and Dhote—all members of the party's 10-member working committee—had been removed from the Congress(I) by Mrs Gandhi herself. It also called it a collection of disgruntled Congressmen, united only by the fact that they had all been deprived of the loaves of power. There was merit in this, though, as Mukherjee asked: "You can call us disgruntled, but what about the thousands of middle-level Congressmen who came?" Political observers were unanimous that the party had little more than nuisance value: bereft of a constructive ideology, a credible leadership or a mass following of any note.

But Mukherjee is undismayed; on the contrary, he is full of hope. Puffing on his pipe, sitting behind a desk in the sprawling bungalow allotted to him on Willingdon Crescent, he explained his reasons. Congressmen are increasingly disgruntled with Rajiv. Unlike his mother, they cannot approach him directly. Neither has he set up any institutional forum for them to vent their grievances. More ominously, they are developing doubts about his ability to get them elected. Bluntly put, it was Mrs Gandhi's ability to guarantee this that drew Congressmen to her.

Today, they are with Rajiv—why should they leave him? But if the string of electoral failures is repeated in Haryana and Kerala, they will start looking for an alternative. The RSC will spend the next three years building up an organisation and extending its influence among the "Congress masses". When, as Mukherjee expects, the fence-sitters in the Congress(I) develop doubts about their leader on the eve of the next general election, the RSC will be ready to receive them. As he says: "Where else will they go? Congressmen have always looked for alternatives within the Congress framework."

In effect then, the final tally of box-office returns of this latest political starrer can only be drawn three years hence. "Ours is a marathon, not a 100 metres sprint," said Mukherjee. The problem is: few believe that Mukherjee, or his rag tagbag of colleagues, have either the credibility, mass following—or the stamina—to last.

—AJAY KUMAR

BHAWAN SINGH

Leaders at the launching: old wine

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"The first paperless society in the world".

Is India about to acquire this dubious distinction?

Pardon us for indulging in what might appear to be a bit of advertising hype.

But the situation is serious enough to warrant it.

The problem: India's Paper Industry is in a mess.

The mess begins in the forests of India, from where bamboo—the essential raw material for making paper—comes.

Even though the Paper Industry uses less than 2% of India's wood resources, forest based raw materials, including bamboo, are normally in short supply.

And whatever little is available, the State Governments make it prohibitively expensive by imposing irrational royalties.

The way out, of course, is to encourage paper mills to develop plantations for their own use. Strangely, the State Governments have been lukewarm to the idea.

Consequently, raw material prices have shot up 217% in the last decade.

In the same period, power/fuel prices and excise duty have also, so to speak, scaled new heights; up 358% and 390% respectively.

Enough, clearly, to break the back of any industry.

All this, unfortunately, is only one part of the story. The other, and equally damaging, is an obsolete piece of legislation called the Paper (Control) Order.

Introduced in the early 70s—a period of acute paper shortages—its purpose was laudable, and strictly short-term: supply of paper at concessional rates for the educational sector.

The shortages disappeared.

The short-term arrangement continues to date!

Every paper mill in the country has to sell 25% of its output to the educational sector at a price well below the cost of production. The Industry is expected to recover these losses in the open market. Unfortunately, that doesn't happen, thanks largely to shortsighted Governmental policies.

A case in point is the supply of writing printing paper. A buyer can get it minus excise if the Registrar of Newspapers so wishes. In practice, the Government does not allocate it to the newspaper industry, thereby denying them the excise benefit.

This only encourages imports because Indian paper ends up being far more expensive than imported paper.

The overall result is quite naturally, sickness on an alarming scale in the Paper Industry.

To get back to the beginning. While it's unlikely India will become 'the first paperless society in the world', the situation has all the makings of a national catastrophe.

And that's not advertising hype.

That's fact.

Issued in the national interest by the Joint Committee of the Paper Industry.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

KARNATAKA

Electoral Surprise

IF there was much jubilation in state Congress(I) circles last fortnight, it was for good reason. So impressive was the party's performance in the crucial state zilla parishad elections that it took even party leaders by surprise. Although the Janata Party won control of 17 of the 19 zilla parishads, the Congress(I) won 395 of the 887 seats. This did not compare poorly with the 449 seats won by the ruling Janata Party, considered unbeatable in Karnataka. Said state Congress(I) President Oscar Fernandes happily: "Voters have given a befitting reply to Hegde's so-called value-based politics." Even Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi was elated. In Bangalore soon after the results were announced, he described it as "a movement in the right direction".

Because of the nature of the elections, at first sight it was the Janata that seemed the clear victor: it had gained control over all but two of the zilla parishads. In three of the 19 parishads, however, it won because it had a larger number of MLAs, who, as ex-officio members of the parishads, exercised voting rights, and thus tilted the balance in Janata's favour.

It is easy to see why the Congress(I) is excited. In the March 1985 Assembly elections, it had won only 66 of the 225 seats. Since then it was believed to have lost ground further due to a failure of local leadership. But this time the party polled 3 per cent more votes than the 41.10 per cent votes it had polled in 1985. Chief Minister Ramakrishna Hegde acknowledged his adversaries' political come-back when he said that his Janata "has been forced to learn some lessons".

If the elections were a referendum on the performance of the four-year-old Hegde Government, the verdict was clearly not in its favour. Last fortnight's was the second electoral warning in less than five weeks of the Janata's weakening hold on the electorate. The first was the result of the assembly elections in which the party retained its three seats, but with slightly reduced margins.

From the Congress(I)'s point of view, it has been balm for the humiliation it had to bear after the last elections. Besides, for its leaders, it is a reply to Hegde's taunts they have had to suffer about their ineffectiveness as a party in Karnataka. Said Veerappa Moily, chairman of the Public Accounts Committee and former leader of the Opposition in the state Assembly: "The verdict is decisively in our favour. People have endorsed our role as a responsible opposition. Hegde's charisma has finally begun to fade because it was held up by only publicity stunts."

Voters queueing up outside a polling booth; and (inset) Ramakrishna Hegde: "forced to learn some lessons"

MUSHTAQ AHMED

Indeed, the Janata victory did not come easily. To ensure his party's hold on the 1.20-crore electorate, Hegde undertook an extensive electioneering campaign which took him to nine of the state's 19 districts. Travelling in his Vijayavahini, a specially designed campaign-van, Hegde covered over 4,000 km and stopped at nothing. He liberally announced new welfare schemes and development programmes and, with an eye on the elections, ensured the implementation of certain promises he had made during earlier campaigns, like the supply of sarees, dhotis and mangalsutras at subsidised rates.

The campaign was weighted heavily in Hegde's favour from the beginning because the state Congress(I) does not have a person to match his stature. Oscar and other members of the party countered this disadvantage by putting up new and young candidates: 40 per cent of them were less than 40 years old.

But the chief minister's trump card was his state government's discretionary power to restructure constituencies, a power he put to full use. The Congress(I) alleged that constituencies were carved out in a way that suited the Janata's strength in various areas. Under this, over 100 of the 887 non-reserved areas were converted into reserved areas.

Charged Fernandes: "Hegde played a lot of dirty tricks. All our strongholds were declared reserved seats, which meant that all the powerful and effective Congressmen from these areas were kept out of the elections." Refuting this allegation, Janata's M. Raghupathy, former education minister, said: "The chief minister believes in passing on power to the weaker sections of the population. Our government gave more seats in the zilla parishads to scheduled castes, women and minorities."

But Hegde's gesture seems to have backfired. The new job reservations policy, by including almost everyone, has

Chart by B.K. SHARMA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

It's easy to get rid of paperwork. Just get rid of paper.

Faultless logic, isn't it?

If one were to examine the relationship between the Government and the Paper Industry over the last 15 years, one could easily arrive at a strangely disturbing conclusion: the Government appears to be following the kind of logic mentioned above.

Some examples of what we mean.

The essential raw material for making paper, bamboo, comes from forests.

Even though the Paper Industry uses less than 2% of India's wood resources, forest based raw materials, including bamboo, are normally in short supply, thanks to the State Governments' grossly inadequate afforestation programmes.

The way out, of course, is to encourage paper mills to develop plantations for their own use. Strangely, the State Governments have been lukewarm to the idea.

And whatever little raw material is available, the State Governments make it prohibitively expensive by imposing irrational royalties on it.

Consequently raw material prices have shot up 217% in the last decade.

Another example. The cost of making paper has increased 186% in the last 10 years. End prices have simply not kept pace with inflation. A case for excise reliefs appears to be clear, right?

The Government, on the contrary, has increased excise by 398% in the last 10 years.

Under the Paper (Control) Order, the Government picks up 25% of the paper in the country for the educational sector at a price well below the cost of production.

The purpose, ostensibly, is to make educational books available at low-cost. In reality, this doesn't happen.

In any case, this order was created in the early 70s as a strictly short-term measure to combat a situation of acute shortages.

The shortages have disappeared, and with them the logic of this legislation.

In terms of technology, the Indian Paper Industry is well behind the developed world.

To upgrade—and clearly that has to be done — massive investments are required. The paper mills cannot do so on their own since they've been virtually stripped of cash. The Government doesn't help.

A Catch-22 situation, if ever there was one.

The overall result is sickness on an alarming scale.

The situation, to put it mildly, has all the makings of a national catastrophe.

And that's something no one wants. Not you, the reader. Nor the Government. And least of all us, the paper mills of India.

Issued in the national interest by the Joint Committee of the Paper Industry.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

adversely affected the Scheduled Castes—18 per cent of the electorate—and they voted against the ruling party. The Janata Party lost heavily in areas dominated by them. Fernandes and his men, sensing the alienation of this section, effectively used this dissatisfaction to show that the Hegde Government stood for the rich, the upper castes and urban people.

However, the charges and counter-charges notwithstanding, its victory has given the Janata Party control of rural politics through the newly instituted system of zilla parishads. Parishad chiefs, who hold the rank of ministers of state, will control 40 per cent of Karnataka's Rs 800-crore annual budget. It will leave them in a comfortable position to distribute favours and jobs, the very basis of state politics.

Karnataka is now readying for the next round of elections—later this fortnight—to the panchayat mandals, grassroots level bodies below the parishads. Inspired by the recent outcome, the Congress(I) is now determined to consolidate its hold over the rural electorate. If it succeeds, Hegde's ambitions of making it politically at the national level will have to be shelved.

—PRABHU CHAWLA

BJP

Rural Pitch

THE Bharatiya Janata Party's (BJP) search for a political identity found yet another horizon at its three-day National Council meeting held in Vijayawada last fortnight. Long characterised as a representative of the urban middle class and small traders, the party donned a new mantle by attempting to champion the interests of the farming community. An entire day was devoted to adopting a charter on 'The Basic Rights of the Kisan', which culminated in a call for a country-wide rally of peasants in March in Lucknow.

The leadership explained the move in predictable 'the-farmer-is-neglected' logic but clearly another short-term objective had been at work: the need to come closer to the Lok Dal's stand on farmers. The two parties are partners in the Haryana Sangharsh Samiti, expected to be the major opposition front to the Congress(I) in the ensuing assembly elections in that state.

The 10 basic rights listed in the charter contain all the predictable demands: among them, remunerative prices for farm produce, adequate supplies of water and power, protection of tenancy rights, compensation at market value for lands acquired by the Government, and better wages for farm labour. The charter also demands a replacement of the Agricultural Costs and Prices Commission by a broad-based agency comprising farmers and consumers.

Kalyan Singh, chief architect of the charter and BJP leader in the Uttar Pradesh Assembly, drew attention to known statistics underlining the neglect of agriculture: plan resource allocation for agriculture dipping from 37 per cent in the first plan to 24 per cent in the seventh plan and the gap in the ratio of rural and urban incomes widening from 1:2 in 1950-51 to 1:4 in 1983-84. Argued Singh: "Our efforts are intended to liberate the kisan from perpetual poverty and exploitation."

But the charter offers no solutions to the problems it highlighted. Admitted Kailash Joshi, BJP leader from Madhya Pradesh: "The charter revealed the raw deal meted out to farmers but failed to come up with anything new." In the event, the BJP's espousal of the farmers' cause may well turn out to be a non-starter.

For the rest, the Vijayawada meeting was mostly business-as-usual. The ruling Congress(I) was criticised for its policy of drift, the party's home-grown creed of integral humanism was incorporated into the constitution, the threat from the growing infiltration from Pakistan and Bangladesh was highlighted. Former party president Atal Behari Vajpayee raised a few eyebrows by predicting a split in the ruling Congress(I), but he didn't adduce his reasons. Party president Lal Kishan Advani sprung a surprise, however, by saying that the party "had an open mind" on the question of a presidential form of government. The party had strongly opposed the move when it had been first mooted during the Emergency. Advani explained that the party's earlier stand was because it feared that the proposal was merely a ruse to confer dictatorial powers on Mrs Gandhi. Now, he said, the same danger did not exist.

Vijayawada marked another point of departure for the BJP. Barely two years ago, it had contested the Lok Sabha and Andhra Pradesh assembly elections as a partner of the Telugu Desam but last fortnight, the party came out with a 100-point chargesheet against the Telugu Desam Government accusing it of maladministration. Said state party general secretary M.P. Venkiah Naidu: "There is growing discontent in the state as the Telugu Desam is going the Congress way. The BJP is cashing in on this situation to become a stronger political force in Andhra Pradesh."

Vijayawada was chosen as the venue because the party is keen on extending its influence in the south. But results of the zilla parishad elections in Karnataka—where the BJP won a mere six seats—came as a damper even as the meeting was in progress. For all that, the BJP still hopes to emerge as a national alternative. This optimism, however, seems somewhat misplaced: in truth, the party is still in search for as clear a political identity as its earlier avatar, the Jana Sangh, had.

—AMARNATH K. MENON in Vijayawada

K. MARUTI

Vajpayee at Vijayawada: rallying peasants

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

That the Paper Industry needs to be saved is no longer a point of debate.

And if 'turn of the century' targets are to be met, remedial measures have to be taken now.

Listed below is a 10-point 'get well' programme that the Government should implement immediately.

1. Stimulate demand. At present, India imports about 2 lakh tonnes of newsprint.

The Indian paper mills can easily substitute almost half of this by cream wove paper.

This can be treated as 'deemed export' and it would go a long way in reviving the Paper Industry. Also, India would save about Rs. 80 crores in foreign exchange every year.

2. Encourage paper exports and ban import of coated papers.

The former can be done by increasing the cash assistance from a current 8% to 25% of export price.

The latter also is perfectly feasible since the manufacturing capacity for coated paper is underutilised in India (only 57%).

3. Repeal the Paper (Control) Order. This order was instituted (in 1974) when demand outstripped supply. The situation is the exact opposite today.

All that this legislation has managed to do is impoverish the Paper Industry.

4. Reduce excise duties. The consequent increase in capacity utilisation will more than make up the loss to the Government.

5. Rationalise royalties on forest-based raw materials and encourage the development of industrial plantations.

The present rates are extremely high. Also, they're revised arbitrarily every year, thereby making any kind of financial planning a nearly impossible task.

The benefits of encouraging paper mills to develop their own plantations are self-evident.

6. Continue duty-free import of pulp and waste paper. Not only does this protect forests in India, it will also, in the long run, allow the paper mills to develop alternative raw materials for better grades of paper.

7. Encourage modernisation and expansion plans. Most of the mills rely on obsolete technology. And since they've been virtually stripped of cash, they're hardly in a position to invest on their own.

Excise reliefs, soft loans, and concessional duty on imported equipment would serve the purpose adequately.

8. Encourage new investments. The necessity of new investments is obvious. All that's required is a package of fiscal measures — say, excise relief equivalent to 75% of the value of plant and machinery, and easy term loans.

9. Encourage 'environment protection' measures. One example of this would be the replacement of wood packaging by corrugated packaging.

10. Evolve a stategy for reviving closed/sick units. The Government has already done that in the textile industry.

And it's working.

So why not here?

These 10-points have been amplified upon in a memorandum which the Paper Industry has recently submitted to the Government.

The facts are all there. They are also incontrovertible. And they suggest an obvious course of action.

It's now up to the Government.

Issued in the national interest by the Joint Committee of the Paper Industry.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

FACOR

FERRO ALLOYS CORPORATION LIMITED

(India's No.1 producer and exporter of ferro alloys) require

MANAGER MATERIALS

for their 100% Export Oriented Unit in Balasore District, Orissa.

This is a challenging position in the Senior-level Management cadre with excellent growth prospects.

Qualifications & Experience

Graduate in Mechanical/Electrical Engineering or Post Graduate in Science/Commerce with adequate technical background and with MBA/PG Diploma in Materials Management from IIMM. Should have at least 5 years' experience in Imports, Exports, Central Excise & Customs, Shipping, Purchase procedures, Stores and Inventory Control in a large manufacturing industry. Experience in the Metallurgical industry will be an added advantage.

Age: Around 40 years

Remuneration: Salary plus attractive perks and other fringe benefits.

Please apply in strict confidence within 10 days with detailed resume to:

President
FERRO ALLOYS CORPORATION LTD.
Charge Chrome Plant
D.P. Nagar, Randia 756 135, Balasore Dist., Orissa.

ART-4533

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BIHAR

Draconian Ordinances

EVEN to a state long accustomed to rule through ordinances, the sudden amendment of the Bihar University Act and the Patna University Act last fortnight had the effect of a political bombshell. Ostensibly designed to de-politicise the seven strife-torn universities, the two ordinances sparked off vehement charges from the academic community that the Government was out to emasculate university autonomy and victimise teachers.

There was no denying the draconian scope of the ordinances which strengthened the state Government's grip on the universities. They suspended the democratically-elected senate and the syndicates, which acted as vital checks on the authorities, and vested their powers in the vice-chancellor, generally a political appointee.

That the brain behind the ordinance was Bihar's Governor and Chancellor P. Venkatasubbaiah was evident for he had been campaigning for long to get the campuses cleansed of politicians. The clause barring ministers from becoming members of any university body or the governing body of colleges was especially believed to be his handiwork. While that in itself was laudable, the academic community, comprising some 20,000 teachers, was upset over the arbitrary powers the governor had acquired including that of transferring teachers. Besides, by conferring wide powers on the pro-vice-chancellors and registrars, the potential for conflict with the vice-chancellors had become explosive.

The joint action committee of the Federation of University Teachers Associations of Bihar (FUTAB) and the Federation of University (Service) Teachers Associations of Bihar (FUSTAB) charged that the Government had gone back on an agreement entered into with striking teachers last August whereby no decision on the university set-up was to be taken without consulting the teachers.

When teachers observed a "betrayal day" last fortnight, the state Government made it clear that it would not backpedal on its stand. Education Minister Lokesh Nath Jha firmly declared that the provisions of the ordinance had been drafted with a view to improving the administration of higher education in the state. Proof of the Government's good intentions, he claimed, was evident in the mere suspension—and not abolition—of the syndicates and senates. The explanation did little to cool frayed tempers, for the ordinances were silent about the basis on which new members would be nominated to the re-constituted senates and syndicates.

This was, however, not the first attempt by the state Government to control the universities. When L.K. Mishra was sacked as vice-chancellor of Bihar University on charges of corruption by Venkatasubbaiah last year, nobody was fooled about the real reasons behind the action. Mishra was known to be a follower of the dissident Congress(I) leader and former chief minister Jagannath Mishra and it suited Bindeshwari Dubey to get rid of him. The motives became even more apparent when Venkatasubbaiah asked all the vice-chancellors to resign "voluntarily"—most of them were known to be Jagannath Mishra's men.

Perhaps the only instance of constructive change was when the late chief minister Kedar Pande superseded the university administrations and appointed IAS officials as vice-chancellors in the early '70s. It brought peace, but only temporarily, for the officials had to be withdrawn following political pressure and the Jayaprakash Narayan-led agitations again left the campuses in a shambles. The Emergency brought discipline only to give way to the Janata wave and the ordinances of 1978 and 1979 conferring vast powers on the chancellor and vice-chancellors were withdrawn following strong objections by the UGC.

Agitating teachers (above): and Venkatasubbaiah (right) with Dubey: playing politics

But the scope and sweep of the present ordinances go far beyond anything ever contemplated or attempted before. And as political scientist V.P. Verma argues, in perhaps no other country has university autonomy been sacrificed at the altar of political expediency.

However, one strong dissenter was the English language daily The Indian Nation, which pointed out: "Nominated senates and syndicates do not prima facie appear desirable in a democratic set-up but it is well to remember that conditions in Bihar are extraordinary. We have an overdose of democracy in our universities which has played havoc with the future of our students."

—FARZAND AHMED

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar
ART-4533

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

MADHYA PRADESH

Unwilling Hosts

IN a move reminiscent of the post-Operation Bluestar days, jails in Madhya Pradesh are again being used to house Akali leaders under the National Security Act (NSA). While the chief of the breakaway Akali Dal, Parkash Singh Badal, has been lodged in Jabalpur jail, Gurcharan Singh Tohra, the president of the Shiromani Gurudwara Prabandhak Committee, is in Raipur jail. Similarly, other jails—Rewa and Sagar in particular—are being readied to receive another group of 12 detainees from Punjab. But, unlike the last time, when their presence in the state hardly invited any attention, this time citizens and political parties have not taken kindly to their being sent to the state's jails.

Their main apprehension, growing out of Tohra and Badal's flirtation with the extremists in Punjab, is that the presence of the NSA detainees will give a spurt to terrorist activities. Durg, near Raipur, which has a large population of Sikhs, is listed in intelligence dossiers as an important base for extremists operating from the state. The arrest of some individuals from Durg, who the police claim were involved in the assassination of General Vaidya in September last year, has ensured the town's notoriety.

(Below) Raipur jail, where Tohra (inset) has been detained; and (bottom) jail staff clearing bushes around the prison premises: tightening security

Photographs by VINAY SHARMA

Tohra's arrival in Raipur jail triggered off a volley of protests from politicians—mainly from the Bharatiya Janata Party—and student leaders who threatened to launch an agitation for the Akali leaders' removal from the state's jails. Some students united under the banner of the Prerana Parishad and held a public meeting and burnt an effigy of a terrorist to draw attention to their demand. In Durg, the police had to take measures to prevent any outbreak of violence because of the escalating tension between the two communities.

However, Chief Minister Motilal Vora seemed unruffled by the protest, saying: "Tohra is totally safe in Raipur jail and I see no reason to move him to another prison." He also denied reports in local papers which claimed that Raipur jail did not fulfil many of the requirements for keeping VIP—hence high-risk—detainees. "Every condition laid down by the Centre has been completely fulfilled," he maintained.

Senior bureaucrats and police officials too believe that from the point of view of security, the state's jails are ideal: they offer comfortable facilities for VIP prisoners, have adequate security arrangements, and air-link facilities necessary for the periodic visits of members of the NSA advisory board. They concede, however, that their wards are giving them a sleepless time. "We know that both Tohra and Badal are respectable politicians but in view of terrorist activities we keep our fingers crossed all the time," said a concerned senior police officer in Raipur.

Consequently, security has been made even tighter in and around both places and surveillance operations of civilians intensified in the area. Jawans of the Madhya Pradesh Special Armed Forces have been deployed outside both the jails and equipped with the latest electronic devices and automatic weapons. A special anti-terrorist commando force selected from the ranks of the police has been posted around these prisons. Mini-police outposts with wireless links have been erected at both jails. At Raipur, the entire area around the prison has been cleared of bushes and any other kind of habitation. A motorable path for patrolling has also been constructed around the outer walls.

Security inside the jails has also been

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Is there life on this barren moonscape you wonder ... till you hear the distant chant of prayers.

The sudden change from the lush, green valleys of Kashmir almost numbs your senses. Here is a stark and desolate landscape of incredible beauty that transports you into another world. For centuries, Ladakh has remained hidden from travellers behind its high mountain passes. The pristine and unspoilt home of a people close to nature, who still practise one of the oldest and purest forms of the Buddhist religion. Come, cross the Himalayas to the land beyond.

ACCESSIBILITY

Daily flights to Leh from Delhi and Chandigarh, via Srinagar. The nearest railhead is Jammu. From here, Ladakh can also be reached by road, via Srinagar (434 km). Buses, cars and jeeps are readily available.

ACCOMMODATION

Guest Houses and Tourist Bungalows available at Drass (147 km from Srinagar), Kargil (204 km), Khaelso (337 km), Saspol (372 km) and Leh.

TOURS

Regular tours to Ladakh are organised by the Department of Tourism, Jammu and Kashmir. Information available at all branches. In addition, there are also two package tours of Kashmir and Ladakh (13 and 11 days' duration) covering places like Srinagar, Pahalgam, Gulmarg, Kargil, and Leh. For details, write to J&K State Transport Corporation, 218 Kanishka Shopping Plaza, 19 Ashok Road, New Delhi-110 001.

SEASON

Best season is June to October.

LADAKH

Discover India

Discover yourself

Department of Tourism
Government of India

In India you'll see the world.

Rediffusion/DT/5142

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The Hero Honda CD 100 gives a fantastic 80 km./litre.*

Just think, in terms of cost, a mileage of 80 km./litre* works out to under 10 paise a kilometer.

Or in terms of distance—a full 720 kilometers* on a tank full of fuel.

This phenomenal economy is due to the latest 4-stroke engine from Honda—the world leader in motorcycle technology.

And apart from being the most fuel efficient motorcycle in the country, Hero Honda CD 100 offers you much more—total comfort, total power and total reliability. In short—a total performance motorcycle.

Also, there is a nationwide network of 150 dealers and service points, for prompt, efficient service.

So fill it, shut it, forget it—for the next 720 km*.

*At 40 kmph with a load of 130 kg.

HERO HONDA

Committed to total customer satisfaction

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Whether it's to seat ten or thousands, Moderna offers you a seating system to match.

Ideal and practical for auditoria

Cool and comfortable at a gymkhana or club — stackable too

Strong and sturdy at lounges

A special range for training centres

Graceful and elegant at public halls

Moderna seating systems. Lightweight and portable, yet so sturdy — Moderna doesn't crack or chip like wood. And remains unaffected even in the most adverse climatic conditions. That's because Moderna is made from tough polymers.

Moderna is also easy to maintain — just a wipe with a damp cloth keeps it looking as good as new. For years.

Moderna. Ergonomically designed to provide the maximum seating comfort. Available in beautiful non-fading colours. And sleek, stunning designs. Come take a look at our new additions.

For more details on Moderna, write to Blow Plast Ltd., Leo House, 88C Old Prabhadevi Road, Bombay 400 025. Tel. Nos. 4301011/ 4300537.

BPL-2896

MODERNA

Moulded furniture systems

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Give the devil his due.

A truly envied TV doesn't happen just by magic. Not even black magic. That's why, when your neighbour envies your pride as an ONIDA owner, don't be too proud to discuss the reasons. You can begin by telling him about ONIDA's world-famous Japanese pedigree. And that itself will explain some of the features that you can then show him.

When he's floored by the mind-blowing clarity and sharpness of the picture, give him a helping hand by mentioning that the secret lies in ONIDA's much higher resolution than that of any other brand, and in the direct processing of signals within the TV.

Then when he's moved by the great sound, show him the sound features that make it possible. The novel Triple Speaker function where the tweeter lets you clearly hear all frequencies. And the unique adjustable ear flaps that invite you right within the acoustic field of the TV!

All this talk, mind you, is not merely to give credit where it's due. You have a major motive. Because, only when all your neighbours buy their ONIDA, can you stop worrying about their envy, and relax.

ONIDA with cordless remote. Neighbours' envy. Owners' pride.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Ha

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

tightened. According to jail officials, both Tohra and Badal have been segregated from other prisoners and the area has been made out of bounds even for jail staff. Tohra's barrack has been spruced up and carpeted, the walls painted and furniture put in. He has reportedly asked for Punjabi and English newspapers and a TV set. Badal, it is reported, keeps himself busy cooking, something he enjoys immensely. During his sojourn in Pachmarhi in mid-'84 he used to do all his own cooking assisted by a helper provided by the jail authorities.

The elaborate arrangements notwithstanding, apprehensions remain regarding a well-planned attempt to break into the jails, particularly Raipur. The state Government, however, has no other option but to play the role of the reluctant host.

—N.K. SINGH in Raipur and Jabalpur

MADHYA PRADESH

Shadow Play

FOR Motilal Vora, the chief minister of Madhya Pradesh, it was, finally, a time for assertion. Weary after spending one-and-a-half years in the dominating shadow of his predecessor, Arjun Singh, now Union communications minister, Vora last month set about establishing his authority by gunning for Singh's men. In one fell swoop, he got rid of B.K. Mukherjee, director-general of police, K.S. Thakur, chief of the state's 20-point programme implementation committee, and Surendra Singh Solanki, chairman of the Bhopal District Cooperative Bank. The moves were particularly striking because Vora's critics have often accused him of harbouring a fear-complex about Singh.

Retaliation was not long in coming, though. Singh set about proving that in spite of his removal from the powerful post of Congress(I) vice-president, his clout in Madhya Pradesh remains unaffected. Although his whirlwind tours of the Vindhya, Gwalior and Chhattisgarh regions did not exactly set either the Chambal or the Mahanadi on fire, he succeeded in proving his point.

Singh's followers accorded him tumultuous receptions everywhere and the low-profile Vora, who accompanied him to some places, was simply sidelined. It was the Gwalior trip that first provided evidence of the schism between the two. Singh's supporters had organised a farmers' conference at Morena with him as chief guest. Although it was attended by Singh's trusted lieutenant, state party chief Digvijay Singh, and other politicians, Vora, who was in nearby Gwalior, was pointedly left out. To add insult to injury, Vora had to attend functions in Gwalior where the arches welcomed Singh but did not so much as mention his name.

Even in Chattisgarh—considered the stronghold of his arch foe in state politics, V.C. Shukla, and the homeground of Vora himself—Singh drew large crowds. This sent a jittery Vora rushing to Shukla for consultations—it was the first time the two had met after Vora took over as chief minister in 1985. The pair obviously had a lot to be worried about.

Vora faced attack in another form too. Last fortnight he was harangued by a delegation of ruling party MLAs and MPs from Rewa division who complained that the region had been neglected ever since Singh—who belongs to the area—left the state. The delegation, led by Congress(I) MP Martand Singh and legislator Ajay Singh—Arjun Singh's son—was generally regarded as a demonstration of discontent.

The delegation demanded that the representative of this region in the state Cabinet—the present incumbent, Ram Kishore Shukla, is considered a Vora supporter—be changed to "someone acceptable to everyone". The obvious suggestion was the inclusion of Ajay Singh, who comes closest to fitting that bill. The chief minister reacted with an additional allotment of Rs 1.60 crore to Rewa division for drought relief, much more than the amount allotted to Raipur division whose suffering is greater.

Digvijay Singh also haunts Vora. He keeps shooting off letters to the chief minister complaining of inefficient administration and non-implementation of vital decisions taken during Arjun Singh's time. The Madhya Pradesh Congress(I) Committee came under Arjun Singh's total influence when he was party vice-president and its office-bearers function as parallel power centres, often embarrassing Vora.

One such recent case was the uproar in Raipur following the arrest of Ramgulam Thakur, general secretary of the Congress(I) Raipur (rural) unit. A former fire-eating socialist and trade unionist, Thakur was charged with 33 criminal cases, including six of assaults on public servants, when he joined the ruling party in 1985. In spite of this record, he got his party post through Digvijay Singh when V.C. Shukla's men were being purged.

Recently, Thakur, who swears loyalty to Arjun Singh, was allegedly assaulted by the policemen who came to arrest him, and he had to be hospitalised. They also allegedly misbehaved with his wife and mother. "I've been leading the struggles of tendu leaf workers in the area, who are exploited by traders close to Motilal Vora and V.C. Shukla. Hence they entered into a conspiracy with the police to eliminate me," Thakur fumed in a letter to the Raipur party chief. Indeed, the district units—rural and urban—not only condemned the police action, holding it similar to "police terror during the Raj", but also threatened to launch an agitation if the guilty policemen were not punished.

"The police will take action against anyone involved in criminal activities irrespective of whether or not he is a member of the ruling party," said Vora sternly, but he also ordered a magisterial inquiry into the incident. Clearly, the ghost of Arjun Singh is not about to leave the chief minister for a long time to come.

—N.K. SINGH in Raipur

MOTILAL VORA

Vora's attempts to assert his authority in state politics have only underlined the influence Singh continues to wield.

ARJUN SINGH

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

One good thing

Cosmo Ferrites: To manufacture soft ferrites- a vital input for electronics.

Cosmo Films. India's leading manufacturer of BOPP film whose track record has become the envy of the Stock Market.

Now, Cosmo Films is blazing another trail. Through Cosmo Ferrites — a hi-tech venture to manufacture soft ferrites — in collaboration with technology leaders VEB Elektro-Consult Berlin in conjunction with the Kombinat VEB Keramische Werke Hermsdorf.

Commercial Production:
Slated for the first quarter of 1987.

Success in Sight:
What's more, the demand for soft ferrites is growing rapidly in consonance with the growth of the telecommunications and electronics industries.

In the tradition set by Cosmo Films Limited, Cosmo Ferrites is all set to be another success.

Other Issue Highlights:

- Promoters successful track record. The market price of Cosmo Films Share is Rs. 85* as per the Bombay Stock Exchange quotation.
- Well equipped R & D Laboratory — latest instruments from the USA, Holland, and Austria.
- 80 CC and other Income Tax benefits.
- Easy Liquidity — Shares to be listed at Delhi, Bombay, Calcutta and Ludhiana Stock Exchanges.

* as on 11.12.86

CF COSMO FILMS LIMITED

PROMOTES

Cosmo Ferrites Limited
Himachal Pradesh

CLARION D

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

g leads to another!

The unprecedented success of

Cosmo Films

The forthcoming success of

Cosmo Ferrites

ISSUE OPENS ON 29TH JANUARY, 1987

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

GOA

Papering Differences

THE high-powered visitors from Delhi barely needed a day to turn the tide in the surging crisis that had engulfed Goa's Cabinet. But what remained as precariously poised as the broken Mandovi bridge dividing north from south was the fate of the language bill seeking to make Konkani the official language—the cause of the week-long violence in end-December.

Congress(I) General Secretary R.L. Bhatia announced before returning to New Delhi that "the crisis was over" and the four rebel ministers in Chief Minister Pratapsinh Rane's cabinet had withdrawn their resignations. The four—Power Minister Harish Zantye, Law and Revenue Minister Sheikh Hassan Haroon, Tourism Minister Louis Proto Barbosa, and Panchayat Minister Francisco Sardinha—had submitted their resignations arguing that they couldn't work with Rane and had stubbornly refused to change their stand. Even on the eve of the mediators' visit 12 of the 22 Congress(I) legislators in the 33-member Goa Assembly met at the residence of Zantye, an aspirant for the post of chief minister, to once again reassert their loss of faith in Rane's leadership. "Rane will have to go, otherwise the Congress(I) will lose its credibility," a rebel leader asserted.

But the moment Bhatia got off the plane at Dabolim airport and greeted a nonplussed Zantye with, "how are you, chief minister?" it was apparent that the Centre was not willing to back the demand for a change in leadership seriously. By nightfall Zantye had signed a tersely worded letter withdrawing his resignation, while the others held out demanding a face-saving phrase like "at the request of the high command" before they patched up with Rane. Ultimately, they relented and called upon the chief minister at his official residence, and wished him a belated Happy New Year.

But this seems to be only a temporary reprieve for Rane. The Assembly arithmetic is heavily tilted against him. Of the 19 Congress(I) MLAs (excluding three who are nominated) 10 have come out against him. Rane seems to be in minority even in North Goa from where he himself has been elected. Four of the seven MLAs have turned rebels and are likely to vote against him. Despite his decisive minority Rane has been able to retain his chief ministership only due to the Centre's backing. The high command is determined to foil any attempt by the MLAs to dictate terms and force a change in the leadership. As a senior party office bearer put it: "It will have an effect in states like Orissa and Bihar where MLAs have been agitating for a change in the chief ministership."

But dealing with the language tangle will not be as easy as resolving the Cabinet crisis. As Bhatia observed after the rebel ministers withdrew their resignations, the situation in Goa is "back to square one". With the Assembly scheduled to meet on February 4, the ruling party is caught in a dilemma. It can neither risk the wrath of the pro-Marathi lobby by pushing the official language bill, introduced last July through the legislature nor can it go back on its pledge to the Konkani protagonists and agree to give equal status to Marathi. In the Assembly, as outside, the language problem defies solution—everyone speaks Konkani, but when it comes to making it the official language, the legislators and the people, begin to speak in different voices.

Since all the parties involved in the dispute—the pro-Konkani Goa Congress, the Maharashtrawadi Gomantak Party(MGP), the Konkani Projecho Avaz, besides the Congress(I)—agree that Konkani is acceptable to the people of the Union territory, the whole question

Bhatia (top, second from left) meets rebel ministers; and partymen await outcome

Photographs by NAMAS BHOJANI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

hinges on what status the other language in the territory, which is mainly used as a written language by the older members of the majority Hindu community, should be given. "We are still trying to reach a consensus on Marathi, and maybe we will have to return after consultations with the prime minister for another round of discussions," Bhatia said after talks with leaders of all the different groups.

BUT already Marathi has been given substantial concessions in the existing bill, and with the protagonists of both the languages belligerently sticking to their stand it was not clear what the compromise could be short of.

But the party to lose the most from the delay would be the Congress(I). "Whatever the decision, the high command must move soon," said PCC(I) chief S. Katkar. "The impasse is only helping the regional parties, the MGP and the Goa Congress, and both Marathi and Konkanis are moving away from our party."

In fact, the danger to the Congress(I), which came to power after 17 years of MGP rule in Goa, is that the language issue may split the party, besides dividing the people of the state. The Congress(I) had won the elections in 1980 after factions from both the MGP and the United Goans, a party representing the Catholics of south Goa, came together, finally ending the polarisation of electoral politics on religious lines.

The language issue now threatens to slice through this secular coalition. "It's happening already in the party organisation at the grassroots level," admitted a senior Congress(I) MLA. "Since both sides see us dithering, it is difficult to collect a small group of party workers who seem to be crystallising once again into MGP and United Goan, Hindu and Catholic factions."

But neither the MGP nor the Goa Congress (a breakaway group representing Konkani-supporting Catholics of south Goa) would be over-eager to help the ruling party out of its dilemma. MGP leader Ramakant Khalap made it clear after Bhatia's visit that his party would not compromise on the demand for equal status to Marathi, while Goa Congress chief Wilfred d'Souza stated categorically that the dual language formula was unacceptable. Both, however, are one in their demand for immediate statehood for Goa, and for seeing the elections which follow as a referendum on the language issue. "But it will be foolish for us to go in for statehood immediately since if language is the issue in the next elections our party will be wiped out," said a Congress(I) leader. "As it is if we don't resolve it in the next three years, both the opposition parties are bound to exploit the issue in the assembly elections at the end of 1989."

With Rajiv Gandhi having stated clearly that the people of Goa should resolve the language question before they are granted statehood, the Congress(I) desperately needs a miracle to bail itself out from a sinking official language bill. With the situation becoming increasingly polarised, even a senior Congress(I) legislator and ardent supporter of Konkani admitted: "Now after all this heat and dust if the party does not issue a whip the bill will be defeated. And if it issues a whip and the bill is passed god knows what the future consequences will be to the party."

The only hope some of the older legislators have is that somehow the warring groups would agree to keep the language issue in abeyance. "Most of the youth, whether Hindu or Catholic, is totally for Konkani," said a Congress(I) MLA from north Goa. "Today I will not be able to go home if Marathi is not given equal status but when my son, who knows only English and Konkani, grows up a solution may be possible."

In fact, one solution, reportedly from Eduardo Faleiro, but later denied by the Union minister, was to make both languages official for a period of 15 years while also allowing the use of the Roman script for the benefit of the Catholics. But the Home Ministry has advised that constitutionally the Assembly of Goa can only give official status to one language. It could, though, as in Pondicherry (or even in the Goa bill which stipulates Gujarati for Daman and Diu), allow for the use of a second official language at the taluka level. But in Goa this could become a farce, and the centre of another controversy since the Catholic and Hindu population is well dispersed in several talukas.

But while the politicians play their games, the administration in Goa is now better prepared to deal with any fresh flare-up. The 14 companies of CRPF and Gujarat SRP personnel are still on duty. "If trouble breaks out again we will take swift action," said an official. Since the Assembly will meet in the first week of February, Goa's famed carnival has been cancelled. But whether the easy going attitude of Goans, both Hindu and Catholics—called susegad in Konkani—will ultimately triumph over the deadly passions aroused over the language issue remains to be seen.

—M. RAHMAN

Rane: a temporary reprieve

The Congress(I) cannot ignore the pro-Marathi lobby by pushing the official language bill nor let down Konkani protagonists by giving equal status to Marathi.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

25 Years of Engineering Excellence

Mr. Arun Kirloskar
Chairman

Excerpts from the speech delivered by Mr. Arun Kirloskar, Chairman at the 25th Annual General Meeting held on December 12, 1986.

For the growth of any institution or nation, the prerequisite is a visionary and a leader. However, without an army of loyal, dedicated followers the visionary along with a leader cannot produce miracles or results.

This year is a landmark in the life of your Company because it marks 25 years of excellence in the engineering industry.

We did not increase prices to offset the cost increases. On the other hand, we have tried to absorb the increase by improving productivity supplemented by savings from cost reduction efforts.

Prime Minister, Hon'ble Mr. Rajiv Gandhi, showed steely nerves and astute skills. He steered the country quickly out of the stormy and menacing conditions.

"... you will find this government moving faster than you are moving. The problem will not be with the government constraints or government restrictions or the time taken by government but whether you can keep up with what we are doing..."

Many of those who imported the latest technology had different ideas. They thought this was an invitation to manna of quick profits.

While others were struggling and posed thousands of problems for indigenising small (below 100 HP) engines, your company started 1200 and 1600 HP engines of latest U.S. designs with 50% indigenous content.

It was with the help of the suppliers, workers and all involved that this Company achieved the No. 1 status in the diesel engine industry. It takes much more than just technology to be No. 1. It takes hard work and discipline.

I want to clarify at the very outset, that it is senseless to talk only about productivity of workmen and take for granted the white collar and managerial productivity.

I wish to make a fervent appeal to the government that indiscipline and sub-standard productivity must be made grounds for termination of employment.

We have in fact indulged in a sterile quarrel over public and private sector concepts. As is made clear by the Prime Minister, we have only the national sector.

The Prime Minister's concepts of modern technology and strong economy are well supported by his worthy colleague Hon'ble Mr. V.P. Singh, our Finance Minister...one who acts with firm conviction and takes political risks in implementing what he thinks right is a great man indeed and when he succeeds he becomes greater still.

Industry and trade can take initiative in creating employment only if the hurdles to productivity are removed.

There is a law for minimum wages.There is no law for minimum productivity.

Several managements succumb to pressures and buy industrial peace instead of securing the rightful demand for appropriate productivity. The goal should be "buy efforts not just peace".

I say with conviction and three decades of experience that 80% of the parts of diesel engines can be made on simple machines to the highest quality standards by dedicated workers and creative engineers.

Many thought modernisation meant immediate introduction of manless factories and robots.

I am personally greatly indebted to both Padmabhushan Mr. S.L. Kirloskar and Mr. C.S. Kirloskar for their unstinted support and absolute trust reposed in me.

PRIME MOVERS PAR EXCELLENCE 25 YEARS

SILVER JUBILEE

Kirloskar Cummins Limited

Kothrud, Pune 411 029 (INDIA)

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

UTTAR PRADESH

Death on the Gomti

DECEMBER 30 will forever remain a memorable day in the lives of the fishermen of Lucknow. On the surface of the Gomti floated countless bodies of dead fish. Abandoning their rods, lines and nets, they waded into the river and picked off from the surface as many fish as they could lay their hands on. But in spite of the large numbers they carted away, by noon a 6 km stretch of the river still remained covered with thousands of dead fish. Little did the fishermen realise that far from being a bounty from the gods, it was in effect a poisonous omen of industrial pollution caused by man.

Reacting swiftly to the crisis, the Uttar Pradesh Jal Sansthan, responsible for the city's water supply, stopped pumping in water from the river. The district administration banned the sale of fish indefinitely. And the barrage gates built downstream was opened in order to speed the river's flow. The Uttar Pradesh Pollution Control Board (UPPCB) warned the people against bathing in the river or using its water. The board also secured an order from the Lucknow bench of the Allahabad High Court against two manufacturers—Mohan Meakins Ltd upstream in Lucknow, distillers of Indian-made foreign liquor, country liquor and rectified spirit; and Oudh Sugar Mills downstream in Hargaon, Sitapur, manufacturing rectified spirit—stopping the discharge of their effluents into the Gomti till the hearing of a writ petition, filed on December 31. "It was an ecological disaster of the highest order," said Dr M.C. Saxena, scientist-in-charge of the Fetotoxicity Department of the Central Industrial Toxicology Research Centre (ITRC).

Yet Chief Minister Bir Bahadur Singh, as well as the district and Nagar Mahapalika officials, while admitting that the fish had died because of pollution of the river, ruled out that the water posed any threat to human health. Brushing aside most of the questions at a press conference, Singh said: "The Government is looking into the matter and will try and get the river rid of pollution."

But this is a tall order that the Government might never fulfil. Last month's disaster was not the first. A similar incident as officially recorded took place on March 10, 1981, and it is unofficially claimed that it recurred again on March 7, 1983 and May 3, 1984. Immediately after the first incident, the UPPCB issued a notice to Mohan Meakins and began proceedings in the court of a special magistrate on July 16, 1981. The court issued an order on July 4, 1982, restraining the company from discharging the effluents into the river until it installed an effluent treatment plant. A similar proceeding launched against Oudh Sugar Mills also resulted in an order issued on March 8, 1984. But the court orders have not been implemented. The two concerns are contesting the orders in the high court, on grounds that their effluents do not pose a pollution hazard.

But Dr Saxena points out that the trade effluents of distilleries contain aldehydes which have carcinogenic (cancerous) and mutagenic (compounds which mutate with genes) effects on human and animal bodies. "There is no known procedure in the world to prevent aldehydes from being released in trade effluents of distilleries," he said.

According to an analysis of samples of the river water taken by the ITRC on December 30 and 31, the fish died because of the gradual depletion of dissolved oxygen in the Gomti. "The fish could have died of asphyxia," said an ITRC scientist who analysed the water samples. The dissolved oxygen content in the water samples ranged from 1.2 to 3 mg per litre (mgl), a level insufficient for respiration in any amphibian species. "As against 6 mgl—the normal biological oxygen demand (BOD) of fresh river water—the BOD recorded in the upstream was found to be over 60 mgl and downstream it had risen to 840 mgl," said Surendra Singh, secretary of the UPPCB.

The board believes that the two concerns are the major polluters. Mohan Meakins —working with two distillation plants of 12,000 litres and 6,000 litres capacity—was discharging after partial treatment, an average of 20,000 to 25,000 litres of effluents daily. The Oudh Sugar Mills which has no treatment plant, discharges 5 lakh litres of effluents per day. But both denied these charges. "We are releasing effluents which have a BOD of around 100 mgl, which is the prescribed limit," said Rakesh Mohan, managing director of Mohan Meakins, insisting

S. PREMI

Collecting dead fish: man-made disaster

The UPPCB firmly believes that Mohan Meakins and Oudh Sugar Mills are the major polluters of the Gomti river.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

that the distillery had closed on December 29 by 8.30 p.m. And C.P. Dalmia, proprietor of Oudh Sugar Mills, said that it was impossible that the trade effluent from his plant could pollute the Gomti. He accused the board of "implicating us in order to take the pressure off Lucknow". But sample analyses indicate that there was an excessive discharge of trade effluents into the Gomti on the night of December 29.

Citizens and political parties have rallied to force the Government to take action against the culprits. Students in Lucknow launched an awareness drive on January 5. Mulayam S.Yadav, leader of the Opposition in the Vidhan Sabha called for a "decisive agitation" to control pollution. The Legal Aid Centre—a voluntary organisation—filed a writ petition against the state Government and the UPPCB for its inaction against, the Nagar Mahapalikas of Lucknow, Sultanpur and Jaunpur, the Central Drug Research Institute and the ITRC.

The Gomti has been turned into a sewage drain by both industries and civic bodies of towns on the way. A UPPCB survey in 1981 states that the average flow of the Gomti in Lucknow is 814.5 million litres per day, of which at least 500 million litres comes from industrial effluents or municipal drains. Said R.P.S. Parihar, superintending engineer of the Jal Sansthan: "We draw about 163 million litres of water from the Gomti everyday, and this has to be excessively dechlorinated for three days because of its colour." The river is almost like a lake in Lucknow as the barrage downstream is permanently clamped to maintain a water level of 344.6 feet. In this 15-km stretch, the water is almost stagnant and there is a great possibility of a back-flow of waste water and trade effluents to the river downstream.

Yet Mohan places the blame on the Lucknow Development Authority. He claimed that the "poisonous water" pumped from the Suraj Kund pond into the Gomti was responsible for killing the fish. But P.K. Jain, the executive engineer on the project site, said: "We have been pumping the pond water into the river since December 25. We stopped the work on January 5 and the fish died on December 30. During the operation, the labourers ate fish from the pond but no one complained of a bad stomach." Whatever might be the reasons for the pollution, it is clear that if something is not done soon, Lucknow might be the next victim of a man-made tragedy.

—DILIP AWASTHI

LAST WORD/RAJINDER PURI

All in the Family

Mr Arun Shourie will be joining the Indian Express group from February 1 as Executive Editor of the Indian Express. He resigned from The Times of India on Friday. Asked how he felt on rejoining the Express, he said: "That is where the action is. I am delighted."

—News report, page one, Indian Express, January 3, 1987.

The editor pushed back his glasses and rubbed his eyes as the staff filed into the room for the morning's editorial conference.

"Well," said the editor. "what goes in the paper today?"

The news editor cleared his throat. "We might have space problems today, chief—there was lots of action yesterday!"

"Action, action, always more action," the editor murmured wearily. "Okay, what should be our lead for page one today?"

"The latest reshuffle is the talk of the town, chief," the news editor said. "We could do an inside story on that!"

The editor frowned. "You mean Rajiv has reshuffled the Cabinet again? Gosh, I didn't even notice it this time...."

"Not Cabinet reshuffle, chief," the political correspondent broke in indulgently. "He means the reshuffle of the editors. You know that Hindustan Crimes, Indian Espresso and Crimes of India have all got new editors recently. We could do an inside story on that!"

The editor nodded approvingly. "The readers will love that," he said. "What angle should we take?"

"There's a lot of public misunderstanding about the reshuffle, chief," the political correspondent said earnestly. "People tend to make fun of Arun Surely for rejoining Ram Nath Going-car after the two had abused each other so violently in public! True, Going-car had called Surely a plagiarist, chief—but that's no reason why a guy can't have a second homecoming to a place where the action is!"

"Right," said the news editor solemnly. "I mean this isn't any cheap defection trick like what Sharad Pawar played, is it fellows?"

"Of course not," everyone in the room said in a chorus.

The editor stroked his jaw thoughtfully.

"But what about the dynastic angle? I mean, does it look okay for Arun Surely and Suman Dubbly to work together in the two top spots in the paper? They are related, aren't they...?"

"Aw c'mon chief," the news editor protested. "They're not even blood relatives, nothing like Rajiv Gandhi and Arun Nehru!"

"I suppose you're right," the editor said with a sigh. "You're all pretty sure there is nothing messy in the whole affair then?"

"Of course not, chief," they all said together. "Going-car is too much of an idealist for that."

Just then the tea boy intervened. "But who would want to read a news story about editors, sir?"

"The prime minister and the Cabinet of course, who else?" the editor snapped. "They take so much interest in the appointment of editors—surely they would want to read all about it..."

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foun

Today, n scooter h a success the NV.

A superb combination c durability and features for the Indian user, the NV has a runaway success among scooters.

LML Vespa 150 NV.

The scooter that's winning the hearts of tens of thousands of users across the country.

With its stunning style and technological superiority.

Safety and durability.

And, an amazing new value-for-money.

The runaway success that set a new record!

With a sophisticated production plant, that's only 3 years old, rolling out the NV at the record-breaking rate of 12,000 scooters per month, nearly 50,000 numbers of this runaway bestseller have already reached their proud customers – in just 16 weeks of its launch. A new record in scooter production indeed!

Discover the NV feeling today!

If you're in the waiting for a LML Vespa scooter, visit our nearest showroom today.

Test ride the LML Vespa 150 NV.

Feel its distinct difference in technology, performance, style, durability and safety.

Compare its outstanding value.

You'll agree, among all scooter choices, here's the one that's truly way ahead.

And now, in our tradition of meeting specific customer needs, the NV comes in a 3-gear model too – the NV3-TRIDENT!

LML vespa 150 NV

The proven success among scooters

SRISHTI/LML/32

Vespa Car Company Limited. A joint venture of Lohia Machines Limited and Piaggio of Italy.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

that the distillery had closed on December 29 by 8.30 p.m. And C.P. Dalmia, proprietor of Oudh Sugar Mills, said that it was impossible that the trade effluent from his plant could pollute the Gomti. He accused the board of "implicating us in order to take the pressure off Lucknow". But sample analyses indicate that there was an excessive discharge of trade effluents into the Gomti on the night of December 29.

Citizens and political parties have rallied to force the Government to take action against the culprits. Students in Lucknow launched an awareness drive on January 5. Mulayam S.Yadav, leader of the Opposition in the Vidhan Sabha called for a "decisive agitation" to control pollution. The Legal Aid Centre—a voluntary organisation—filed a writ petition against the state Government and the UPPCB for its inaction against, the Nagar Mahapalikas of Lucknow, Sultanpur and Jaunpur, the Central Drug Research Institute and the ITRC.

The Gomti has been turned into a sewage drain by both industries and civic bodies of towns on the way. A UPPCB survey in 1981 states that the average flow of the Gomti in Lucknow is 814.5 million litres per day, of which at least 500 million litres comes from industrial effluents or municipal drains. Said R.P.S. Parihar, superintending engineer of the [illegible]than: "We draw about 163 [illegible] of water from the Gomti

the brunt

A

Mr Arun Shou
the Indian Express
ary 1 as Executive Express. He resig of India on Frida
on rejoining th
"That is where delighted."
—News report,
press, January

The editor
glasses and ru staff filed into morning's edit
"Well," sai goes in the pa
The news, throat. "We m
lems today, c action yester
"Action, action," the rily. "Okay, for page o
"The
the to

With a special tread and massive shoulder lugs for the long haul. CEAT's the one.
The largest manufacturer of automotive tyres in India.

CEAT TRUCK TYRES

CEAT

born tough

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Now fashion is computer co-ordinated by Dinesh.

To create a whole new generation of premium safaris.

With special S 'n' Z effects that reflect a play of light and shade.

With the new co-ordinated look, aptly called Nuovo.

With lightweight fabrics in quiet colours and shades.

The effect is remarkable. The fashion is trend-setting. The name, of course, is Dinesh.

dinesh
Safaris

Designs programmed for fashion

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Head Hunting

DIRECTOR-generals of police are obviously carefully chosen men. But Uttar Pradesh seems to have a lot more difficulty finding them than do other states. For the second time in three years, the Government is in a quandary over the issue. This time, it was only after DGP D.K. Aggarwal had retired that a committee was set up under Chief Secretary J.A. Kalyankrishnan to recommend a suitable successor. And interim director-general P.C. Kakkar, inspector of police (training), hasn't even been promoted from the post of inspector general (IG).

An official spokesman puts the blame on Central directives which stipulate that police chiefs must have 30 years' experience and should also have worked as IG's for at least four years: there was no candidate in the state who could fulfill these qualifications. The state Government had asked the Centre if it could consider candidates with over 21 years' experience and about four years as IG. Half a dozen officers under consideration possess these qualifications. Meanwhile, the one lakh-strong police force has only interim relief.

Back to Square One

AFTER nearly six years, Rajneesh is back where he began. Last fortnight, when the guru of the guiltless, laid-back lifestyle came home to his Koregaon Park ashram after a futile search for a bungalow in Bombay, Pune Police

BHAWAN SINGH

Rajneesh: full circle

Commissioner B.J. Misar welcomed him with an order to leave the city within 48 hours. The reasoning was that his presence with his disciples could disturb "public tranquility", arising out of drug-trafficking and indecent public behaviour.

His disciples got an interim stay from the Bombay High Court and an understanding was finally reached between the yogi and the commissar. Misar agreed to keep the order "in abeyance" till April after a commitment from Rajneesh that he did not intend to stay in Pune for more than three months. Western devotees were also allegedly told by ashram authorities to observe rituals of Indian public behaviour when outside the ashram. Obviously, Pune's citizens are not going to accept Rajneesh's libertinian philosophy as they have in the past.

Delicate Irony

IN an ironical turn of events, the Dravida Munnetra Kazhagam's (DMK) anti-Hindi agitation was followed by an immensely successful week-long festival put up by the Uttar Pradesh Government. Large crowds thronged the Music Academy auditorium last fortnight in Madras and went into raptures over Bismillah Khan's melodies on the shehnai even though some 20,000 DMK activists were in jails across the state. Indeed, the crowds came in large numbers not only for Khan's performance but for all the festival's shows. Commented Tamil short-story writer R. Kedhar: "It is mostly the political parties who make a hue and cry about Hindi. The middle and upper classes see and enjoy these cultural functions purely from the artistic point of view."

SHYAM TEKWANI

Khan: good response

All the same, nobody was taking chances. Uttar Pradesh Chief Minister Bir Bahadur Singh's inaugural address was translated into Tamil in copies distributed to the audience. And since Tamil Nadu ministers couldn't run the risk of having to make a public speech in praise of Hindi, they preferred to stay away.

Herculean Chore

CLEANING the Augean Stables of the 70,000-strong Bihar police force of rampant corruption, inefficiency and brutalities is the job state Director-General of Police Shashi Bhushan Sahay has set upon himself to accomplish. Sahay began by creating departments of law and order and of personnel. While the first has yet to show results, the second experiment in managing the men on scientific lines has become a pioneering effort. In fact, a national seminar at the National Police Academy at Hyderabad has recommended that all police forces should have a personnel department patterned on the Bihar model.

K.M. KISHAN

Sahay: impressive start

Sahay plans to provide capsule training courses for the men, put constables in charge of villages and make them responsible to maintain "information directories", containing vital village information. Says Sahay: "The idea is to bring an attitudinal change among the men, particularly constables working at the grassroots, to be more useful to the people."

An anti-corruption cell to deal exclusively with complaints against force members has also been set up. Within the first few weeks, 88 complaints were received. Inquiries were

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Oriental offers the best interest rates your money can grow with ...

Earn upto 30% on your investment.

* Monthly interest payable on 1st day of every month.
* Interest for deposits is calculated from the date of receipt of the cheque or demand draft at any of our offices.
* 90% of the deposit amount can be availed as loan at any time.
* Premature withdrawl is normally allowed.

Complete security and dedicated service

The Oriental Finance & Exchange Co.,

Administrative Office:

Parsn Commercial Complex, 121, Mount Road, Madras – 600 006

Phone: 472948/472529/471147/477045/477112/476564/476645

Branches:

Bombay: D-103, Poornima Apartments, 1st Floor, 23, Peddar Road (Near Jaslok – Hospital), Bombay-400 026 Phone: 4949150/4947643

Madars: C-4, Parsn Commercial Complex, 121, Mount Road, Madras-600 006 Phone: 472948, 472529

Trivandrum: Opp. SMV School, M.G. Road, Trivandrum-695 001 Phone: 76166

Kottayam: Municipal Shopping Centre, T.B. Road, Kottayam-686 001 Phone: 2493/3316/2372

New Delhi: G-39, Pawan House Middle – Circle (Near American Express), Connaught Place, New Delhi-110 001

Hyderabad: 3-6-690/1, Himayat Nagar (Opp. Telugu Desam party Office), Hyderabad-500 029 Phone: 61653

Visakhapatnam: 16, 2nd Floor, T.S.N. Colony, Visakhapatnam-530 016

Vijayawada: 30-22-31, Eluru Road (Near Vijaya Talkies), Vijayawada-520 002

Calicut: Khadija Bldgs., General Hospital – Road, Calicut-673 001 Phone: 64829

Bangalore: 1101, O.T.C. Road (Opp Luciya Hotel), Bangalore-560 002

Coimbatore: 449, 1st Floor, Vivekananda – Road, Ram Nagar, Coimbatore-641 009

Cochin: Padma Junction, M.G. Road, Ernakulam-682 035 Phone: 367995

Thiruvalla: Malliyathu Buildings (Opp. Transport Bus Stand), Thiruvalla-689 001

Trichur: Post Office Road, Trichur-680 001 Phone: 22417

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

initiated in 66 cases and, last fortnight, action was taken against 17 policemen. While more results have yet to be discernible, it is clear that the start itself is impressive.

Deadly Journeys

HIMACHAL Pradesh Chief Minister Virbhadra Singh is coming under increasing pressure from his own MLAs to do something—and soon—about making road transportation safer in the hill state. During the last two years or so, a staggering 200 people have lost their lives in road accidents and as many have suffered injuries. On December 20, 1986 an overloaded bus of the Himachal Roadways Transport Corporation (HRTC) plunged down a deep gorge killing 47 passengers. Accidents such as these have given rise to demands for the resignation of Transport Minister Sat Mahajan. Under public pressure, Mahajan submitted his resignation recently but Singh asked him to withdraw it.

Charges levelled against HRTC include corruption, overworked alcoholic drivers, poor maintenance, and the acceptance by top officials of sub-standard spares and machinery in return for kickbacks. During the past nine months, the state spent a whopping Rs.5.46 crores on fuel and repair of government vehicles. But most of this money, it turns out, was spent on vehicles attached to bureaucrats, senior government officials and ministers.

Indira Blitz

THE son-et-lumiere programme on the life of Indira Gandhi, Bharat Ratna Indiramma, is churning out effective propaganda for the Congress(I) in Andhra Pradesh. After 300,000 people attended 41 successful shows in Hyderabad, beginning on November 19, Mrs Gandhi's birthday, programme sponsors decided to take the show to some other towns in the state. The 100-minute show is selective in its portrayal of an eventful career, highlighting decisions like the abolition of privy purses and bank nationalisation while glossing over the Emergency period. Its novelty is the elaborate set—22 platforms in an arc, flooded with lights or kept dark for the 127 sound, dance, dialogue and commentary sequences, the scenes shifting swiftly from one end of the arc to the other. Occasionally, two faces of Mrs Gandhi can be glimpsed by the spellbound audiences.

S.V. RANJAN BASU

Scene from Bharat Ratna Indiramma: effective propaganda

"The time has come when we have to take Indiraji back to the masses," says state Governor Kumudben Joshi, who heads the National Institute of Social Action, co-sponsor of the programme along with the Song and Drama Division of the Information & Broadcasting Ministry. The only problem the successful sponsors face is explaining why they failed to devise similar shows on Mahatma Gandhi and Pandit Nehru.

Kiss and Tell

THE placid world of Malayalam literature is likely to be considerably stirred up by a forthcoming book about the intimate life and times of the late Kesava Dev, Kerala's best-known writer after T. Sivasankara Pillai. Kesava became a controversial figure after his marriage, at the age of 57, to a 17-year-old girl called Seetalekshmi 30 years ago. There were allegations that, towards the end of Kesava's life, his wife ill-treated him, and much speculation over whether they had a marital relationship at all. After Kesava's death in 1983, Seetalekshmi, 47, wrote Kesavadevinte Nitya Kamuki (The Evergreen Lover of Kesava Dev), in which she wrote about her child marriage and her son's birth, but remained mum about the sex question.

Seetalekshmi: opening up

Now, three years later, Seetalekshmi, who has a leading publisher backing her, is about to give the critics what they'd wanted in the first place. "I am fed up with people concocting wierd stories about my sexual relationship with my late husband, Kesava Dev," she said, adding: "I do not want to write any pornographic literature but still it will have all the intimate details to silence my critics."

Explosive Situation

THE communal nightmare in Ahmedabad is still a long way from dawn. And with municipal elections round the corner, the situation needs only a spark to flare up again. Many of the independent contestants are rabid fanatics or notorious bootleggers. One of the independent candidates, Latif, for instance, is an underworld kingpin who was allegedly actively involved in the riots and is now cooling his heels under the National Security Act (NSA) in Sabarmati Jail. The Congress(I) has been reportedly requesting him to withdraw from the fray, promising release in return. But that may not work out.

The Congress(I) has other concerns as well. Many well known names have been struck off the Congress(I) list because, as state party president Ahmed Patel says: "We don't mind losing a few seats. But we want clean candidates." Jethalal Parmar, mayor of Ahmedabad, is among those denied tickets. Baroda Deputy Mayor Nissar Bapu, detained recently under the NSA for his alleged involvement in the riots, has also been axed. However, Patel has not remained entirely true to his word. He has given tickets to many newcomers with a not-so-clean image, reportedly under pressure from party MPs and MLAs.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

TRIPURA

Harvest of Hatred

LESS than six years after the shattering tribal-Bengali violence of June 1980 which consumed more than 3,000 lives, the distant state of Tripura is threatened with an equally bloody encore. Guerillas of the Tribal National Volunteers (TNV) are killing Bengali settlers in a calculated way to incite ethnic clashes between the state's 5.50 lakh tribals and 18 lakh Bengalis. The toll was 111 last year, 70 of the killings occurring in November and December alone. An on-the-spot report from Special Correspondent SHEKHAR GUPTA:

THE bend in the road can make it to any manual on the art of laying ambush. A steep stretch uphill, a precipitious drop to the right, and an abrupt turn to the left, overlooked by a cliff covered with thick greenery ideal to camouflage a whole group of guerillas. There is no hope for someone trapped here by ambushers.

But last fortnight, the gun barrels peeping out of the shrubbery at the TNV's favourite ambush spot belonged to jawans of the Central Reserve Police Force (CRPF). "This, the Gandhari Road, was our Achilles heel. But we'll make sure nothing happens here," says Bhagat Singh, a commandant of the CRPF battalion, recounting with horror the series of killings that have taken place here. The patrol is just one of the many such in Tripura, desperately trying to keep the roads open.

The tension is palpable. And Tripura Inspector-General of Police H.C. Jatav issues a grim warning: "Things are extremely serious and we are faced with an extraordinary situation. If it is not handled properly, we could have a carnage worse than the one we saw in 1980."

In each of the recent attacks, the TNV has deliberately killed Bengalis in tribal-majority areas but bordering Bengali majority habitations. The plan is to invite Bengali retribution, finally create large-scale disturbances, leading to an exchange of populations between tribal and non-tribal areas.

The guerillas are confining violence to areas bordering the state's tribal Autonomous District Council (ADC), which represents two-thirds of Tripura's 10,486 sq km area but less than 30 per cent of its population. Five lakh of the population is tribal and only 95,000 are Bengalis. If these Bengalis flee, the TNV could press for a purely tribal state in the future.

Evidence that the guerillas are suc-

Unless the situation is contained, it can lead to frightening tribal-Bengali violence that will leave countless dead.

CC-0 ... Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ceeding in their designs lies strewn all over the affected areas. In Amarpur, a small township in southern Tripura, there was immediate communal tension after a TNV hit-squad killed 11 non-tribals. The Bengali backlash was instant and angry hordes lynched Arun Kumar Jamatia and Subhash Jamatia, two former tribal extremists who had settled in Amarpur after surrendering in 1983. The toll would have been much higher if the CRPF had not intervened to save 15 other tribals.

It was again timely CRPF intervention that stalled an attack by hundreds of Bengalis, armed with daos (choppers), on a tribal funeral procession. They were reacting to a rumour that the tribals were carrying not a body but a cache of rifles concealed in a funeral wrap.

Amarpur was almost completely destroyed in the 1980 carnage. Tripura's Left Front Chief Minister Nripen Chakrabarty sees continuing danger for Amarpur because of the population pattern. He says that though the town is Bengali dominated, any killing of tribals there would mean a raid by tribals who make up 75 per cent of Amarpur sub division's population. Chakrabarty sees a complete change in guerilla strategy: "They no longer attack either security forces or political opponents. They are just killing the poorest Bengalis in isolated areas to start a migration. Today's situation is most inflammable."

If his government last fortnight held a sober celebration of its ninth year in office, it was for another good reason too. The resurgence of violence, which has come when Assembly elections are less than a year away, has suddenly given a new voice to the state's opposition parties, led by the Congress(I).

The attack was led by Union Home Minister Buta Singh who accused Chakrabarty of refusing to either declare Tripura a disturbed area or ban the TNV. Union Minister of State for Home Affairs P. Chidambaram, who visited the state on a fact-finding mission last fortnight, accused the Government of indulging in 'mere fire-fighting' operations. Taking the cue from him, state Congress(I) leaders and their allies in the Tripura Upajati Juba Samity (TUJS), a tribal party, too turned vocal.

"The TNV is nothing but part of the Left Front. They want to drive out Bengalis from our state," says Sudhir Majumdar, leader of the 17-member joint Congress(I)-TUJS opposition in the Assembly. Adds Shyama Charan Tripura, TUJS leader: "The Government has failed to protect the lives and property of the people. And to hide its failures, it is indulging in a preposterous hunt for excuses and scapegoats." Such a state of political confrontation will benefit the guerillas who, intelligence officers say, are planning more telling strikes in the days to follow.

These officials feel that the TNV is particularly determined to prove its strength after the surrender last year of the Mizo National Front (MNF) guerillas, with whom they staged joint raids till as late as 1984. According to credible official estimates, the TNV today has at least 200 armed men controlled by its headquarters, called Singlung ("work place"), located in neighbouring Bangladesh. The

Assam Rifles personnel check out a tribal home and; (below right) a Bengali woman widowed during a TNV raid with children: mounting attacks

Photographs by PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

NRIPEN CHAKRABARTY

Seeking Parity for Tribals

HIS fate has often been likened to that of an able helmsman stranded on a leaky ship with a mutinous clutch of sailors. All the same, at 82, Nripen Chakrabarty, the Marxist stalwart, is remarkably cool and sharp in spite of tremendous pressures. What is more, he is enthusiastic not only about resolving the extremist problem, but also about the development of the tribal population in the state he has ruled for nine years. Last fortnight, he spoke to SHEKHAR GUPTA. Excerpts:

Q. You have taken several political measures in the past to bring the extremists overground. Why then this revival of violence?

A. Unfortunately, in the recent past the Centre has signed agreements with leaders of extremist organisations. I am referring to Laldenga. Our tribal extremists believe that if they increase the tempo, they too would be given concessions.

Q. Why are there differences between you and the Centre on solving the extremist problem?

A. I am solely trying to say that the Centre should try to draw a distinction between Tripura and other north-eastern states. We have a mixed population and the fear of communal backlash after a TNV raid is as dangerous as the raid itself. We are not against the army. But army deployment may not work well for ethnic unity.

Q. Why are you opposed to banning the TNV ?

A. We have said that the Centre is free to impose the ban. The point is that the TNV is not a political organisation with a clear membership.

Q. Why has the tension between the state and the Centre not lessened with the emergence of Rajiv Gandhi's Government?

A. Where is the Government in Delhi? Who is the Government? Who do I talk to? There was a cricket tournament here and for 15 days I unsuccessfully tried the civil aviation minister and secretary to ask for a special flight. The Indian Airlines people in Calcutta said they did not have any pilots as all of them had gone with the big pilot (to Andamans). In Delhi, Rajiv Gandhi controls some people and some people control him.

Q. Many criticise your approach to the problem. You are accused of holding secret talks with TNV leader Bejoy Hrangkhawl. Is it true?

A. He came to me in the past. He said he was fed up of the underground life and wanted to surrender. I would talk to him even today if it was possible.

Q. You have often talked of an economic solution to the ethnic problem. Can you spell it out?

A. You cannot solve this problem unless tribals are at par with Bengalis. Today we are trying to reverse the problem of land alienation. But in Tripura, 80 per cent of all cultivators own less than two acres each. Also, only 10 per cent of the land is irrigated. It cannot feed them for more than three months in a year. The first need is to give people work. Even when we take away land from Bengalis and return it to the tribals, we have to help the Bengalis resettle because they are also very poor.

Q. But several of your critics say that you are pro-tribal....

A. They sometimes call me Nripendra Jamatiya (laughs). But just look at the way tribals have been exploited. If I were a tribal youth today, I would have joined the TUJS.

Chakrabarty: headaches unlimited

TNV's armoury includes at least three light machine guns, three Sten guns, eight self-loading rifles, one grenade launcher and 33 bolt-action rifles, besides an assortment of grenades, pistols and revolvers. Several of these automatic weapons have been seized from the security forces, including the CRPF and the Border Security Force (BSF), in successful ambushes.

In addition, unconfirmed reports say that the TNV armoury may have been beefed up by arms given to them by their Mizo mentors before their surrender. Intelligence officials feel that the MNF held back at least a hundred automatic weapons, many of which may have been bought by the TNV, the rest probably having been sold in Bangladesh's port city of Cox Bazar.

In any case, intelligence censors and the interrogation reports of captured extremists and sympathisers here confirm yet another disturbing fact: the increasing help for the extremists from the Bangladesh Government. At the recent rounds of flag meetings, Bangladesh officials made no secret of the fact that they were helping the TNV in retaliation for India's alleged backing of the decade-old Chakma rebellion in that country.

But the foreign intervention is just incidental, a factor of aggravation rather than the originating cause of violence. The basic problem is rooted in the poverty and misery of the tribals who are untouched by government welfare agencies, and are among the most awfully placed people in the world. They include 18,000 shifting cultivators who, as Chakrabarty says, 40 years after Independence, haven't so much as a postal address. They are exploited by Bengali money lenders and despised by Bengalis in general.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

At the time of Independence, the tribal-Bengali population was more or less even. At the time of Tripura state's accession to India the then maharaja had declared the tribal areas restricted for the plainsmen. But following the massive influx of Hindu refugees from erstwhile East Pakistan, these lands were dereserved, resulting in large-scale alienation of all that the tribals had and valued. A 1974 research report on Mohanpur block in west Tripura said that 27 per cent of the tribals there suffered from land alienation and over 81 per cent of them were indebted to Bengali money lenders.

After the simmering tribal hatred against the Bengalis erupted in June 1980, the state's Left Front Government took several significant steps to reverse the situation. This included restoration of land alienated in the past 15 years, and most significantly, creation of the ADC, a highly unpopular step with the Bengalis. In the election to the ADC last year, the ruling Left Front secured a two-seat majority against the TUJS-Congress(I) combine. "If only we were able to fulfil the expectations raised by us, the tribals would have got what they had fought for," says Narayan Rupini, the diminutive chairman of the ADC.

A bulk of the council's Rs 28 crore budget this year will be spent on development programmes in the tribal areas. "Our first priority is education and a lot has been done in this field," says Benod Kumar, chief executive officer of the ADC. But complains Rupini: "Whenever our people or party workers go out to work, they are attacked by extremists in league with TUJS workers. Of the 456 political murders in Tripura since the 1980 carnage, 375 have been of our partymen. How can we do our jobs?"

IN that grievance lies an analysis of what makes the Tripura countryside so dangerously rife for trouble. With battle lines sharply drawn between tribals and Bengalis, both political groups are campaigning for support. The ruling Left Front operates in tribal areas through its well-organised Upajati Gana Mukti Parishad which has been locked in a conflict with the TUJS, which emerged in 1967. The conflict often turns violent, but as these two outfits battle it out for tribal loyalties, the Congress(I) tries to win back the support of the state's 71 per cent Bengalis. A shortcut to this is by constantly playing on their anti-tribal feelings.

With the first round of mutual recrimination now over, both the Centre and the state Government are now trying to find a way to curb violence. Last fortnight, as Chakrabarty returned following a series of discussions in New Delhi, there was a constant traffic of officials between Agartala and Delhi. Under persistent pressure from the Centre, it was apparent that the state Government had decided to declare certain areas bordering Bangladesh as disturbed, to give special powers to the security forces operating there. At the same time, the Centre had conceded the state's demand to release in phases five battalions of the Assam Rifles to gradually replace the six CRPF battalions and one Rajasthan Armed Constabulary battalion. Explains Jatav: "We insisted on having the Assam Rifles because it knows jungle warfare." It has also been decided to set up unified operational command at Agartala under the control of the Tripura Government. But the Congress(I) and the TUJS assert that it is a case of too little, too late, and claim that only an army operation can improve things now.

The Left Front thinking, on the other hand, is that the use of any more force would be counter-productive as it would alienate the bulk of the tribal population which does not back the TNV. Chakrabarty still insists that the best approach to the problem is political. But he is also wisened by his experience of the past. Bejoy Kumar Hrangkhawl, now the self-styled 'Supremo' of the TNV, had once surrendered to Chakrabarty to return to his village, Kamala Cherra, 100 km north of Agartala. However, in August 1982, he returned to the jungle to revive the insurgency in an even bigger manner.

A political initiative also seemed to succeed in July 1983 when Binanda Jamatiya, another major extremist leader, came overground with 319 supporters, many of whom later joined the Marxists' tribal wing. But Jamatiya was later assassinated by the TNV hit-men who have by now accounted for 46 surrendered extremists.

A tribal at work: land alienation

Though Chakrabarty claims that his door is still open for a political settlement, he has to tread warily. A mistake at this stage could wreck his party's chances in the next election besides giving the communal Bengali opinion new strength. The painful fact of life for him now is that, much sense though his political approach makes, he just does not have the time for it. It can only follow a large-scale paramilitary operation to first control the TNV and restore the Government's credibility. The bloodied ethnic battlefields of the North-east brook no complacence for with trouble already erupting all over, the last thing India needs is another Nellie in its most imperilled border lands.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Sisters in Arms

THE feminist press in Britain and India have joined hands to come out with a unique publishing project that will gladden the hearts of all sisters in the cause. Based in Delhi, Kali for Women is India's first feminist book publishing house. Much to its credit, it has already got several path-breaking titles on its catalogue. And across the seas, the London-based Women's Press Ltd has made a name for itself for its revolutionary ventures in promoting lively and provocative writing by and on women.

The two sisterly concerns have recently come together and produced an unusual anthology of short stories from India under the candid title of Truth Tales—Stories by Indian Women. The collection comes from a whole tradition of modern Indian writing which is outside the familiar Indo-Anglian framework and is for all practical purposes almost unknown to the common reader in Britain. And the Women's Press acknowledges that it is a tradition that represents some of the most "dynamic trends" in contemporary Indian literature in general and feminist fiction in particular. The anthology has stories from seven major Indian languages—Bengali, Gujarati, Marathi, Hindi, Urdu and Tamil, besides English. Each of these languages has a vigorous literary tradition, and as such, the collection represents seven distinct sensibilities. Among the authors included in this representative collection are two very senior and renowned litterateurs, Mahasveta Devi (The Wet Nurse) and Ismat Chughtai (Tiny's Granny). The other authors and stories featured in the anthology include both the new and old: Ila Mehta (Smoke), Suniti Aphaie (The Dolls), Mrinal Pande (Tragedy, in a Minor Key), Lakshmi Kannan (Muniyakka) and Vishwapriya Iyengar (Midnight Soldiers).

The book: feminist fiction

The book is scheduled to be released later this month. But the Women's Press is already very optimistic that this unusual collection will capture the imagination of fiction lovers—as well as feminists—all over the country. What remains to be seen now is whether the sales of the book will come up to the ambitious and upbeat estimates of its editors and publishers.

Maths Wizard

SHEKHAR Sharma, 53, a mathematician educated first in Patna University and then in Oxford and now based in Britain, has suddenly come into the limelight for cracking a complex mathematical code that has kept the experts baffled for nearly 75 years. With his English wife Anthea Grubb and a colleague George Nicholson, Sharma has simplified the 'Minimax Theory', presenting a complete decoding and declassifying of the minimax and maximin procedures.

Sharma

Sharma, who is currently professor of mathematics at Birkbeck College, University of London, explains that for any human endeavour to succeed, an optimum strategy is needed. This involves minimising the weak aspects and maximising the strong ones, and the Minimax Theory is what helps attain this. Their combined effort was acknowledged only recently, by the celebrated mathematician E.R. Lorch, in the prestigious Mathematical Review. Sharma, confides that there are distinct advantages in being married to a mathematician: "If we have any mathematical problems, we can discuss them in bed."

New Alignment

IT is now the turn of Britain's Labour Party to get enticed by the concept of non-alignment. The campaign group of Labour MPs, backed by youth and Labour campaigns for peace and nuclear disarmament, are planning to hold a conference on non-alignment on January 24. According to the agenda planned, the meet will discuss, among other things, the "adoption of a non-aligned foreign and defence policy for Britain", besides a national campaign to win public support for such a policy. All the ambassadors and high commissioners of non-aligned governments in London have been invited to send their countries' representatives.

Organisers say that the programme will include "workshops" on several important issues related to the Middle East, Central America, South Africa, Ireland, the Indian Ocean, the Pacific US bases, Europe and disengagement from NATO. The participants include trade unions, anti-nuclear and peace organisations, solidarity groups and those concerned with the re-direction of resources from arms expenditure towards development in the Third World. Likely speakers include Michael Manly, Anthony Wedgewood Benn, Eric Heffer, Jeremy Corbyn, and representatives from the African National Congress and the Greens from West Germany.

Tenacious Tycoon

ABDUL Shamji—the Ugandan Asian business tycoon who dominated media headlines here a year ago, in the spectacular Johnson Matthey Bank (JMB) collapse—has staged a remarkable come-back. Even as the enterprises of other Asian millionaires like the Sethias and the Sipras have fallen apart at the seams, Shamji has tenaciously clawed his way back to regain control of the Gomba Group and its Ritzy Park Lane headquarters. Gomba, one of JMB's biggest debtors, repaid more than £ 20 million (Rs 38 crore) enabling the receivers, Price Waterhouse, to pay the remaining money owed to the Bank of England. Shamji's Gomba had control over such quintessentially British institutions like the Wembley Stadium and the Duchess and Garrick theatres. These substantial assets have been sold by the receiver. But Shamji has managed to retain several million pounds of assets including the Mermaid theatre and the Skindles Hotel. Shamji, who had consistently defended his companies, has now shown the way to other Asian magnates in dire straits.

Shamji

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

When a woman is as poised at a business meeting, as she is at a society soirée... chances are, she's a Vichitra woman.

Leela Naidu

for Vichitra

DESIGNER SAREES
WITH A TOUCH OF CLASS

Design: The Creative Cell.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Showroom: E-23, South Extension II, New Delhi 110049 Telex: 3161403 BP IN

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The world's most beautiful floors... Now in India

SPARTEK FLOORS: Elegant, tough, easy to maintain

SPARTEK FLOOR TILES are now made in India, in collaboration with CeramicUS of USA...leaders in ultra-modern Ceramic technology. Technology that offers you unlimited decor options - in terms of colours, designs, textures, sizes and shapes - in a flooring material that has the most advanced physical anti-wear properties till date. Including the incredible advantage of being so easy to lay that it's ready for live-in use in a matter of 48 hours.

For more details write to:
SPARTEK CERAMICS INDIA LIMITED
52 CHAMIERS ROAD,
MADRAS 600 028.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

SPARTEK

made in India in collaboration with CeramicUS

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Gujarat, the land of giants like GSFC and GNFC...

now presents another industrial giant

Gujarat Heavy Chemicals Ltd.

a Rs. 245 crore project co-promoted by GIIC.

Gujarat. The country's second most industrialised state. Hub of hardcore economic advance. Home of the corporate lions... GSFC, a mammoth fertilizer complex. GNFC, and world's largest single stream ammonia and urea plant. IPCL, pride of India's petrochemical sector. Ankleshwar, Asia's biggest chemical industrial estate.

GIIC — Catalyst of Growth

GIIC, the flagship of industrial Gujarat, has spearheaded Gujarat's phenomenal industrial development both as financier and promoter, for close to 20 years. As a development banker, GIIC ranks first among all the State Industrial Investment Corporations in India — having to date assisted over 2,600 industrial units with loans exceeding Rs. 300 crores which, in turn, have generated investments of around Rs. 1,000 crores.

GIIC — Pioneer of the Joint Sector

As promoter, GIIC is an active financial participant in an array of highly successful projects in the public and joint sectors. In fact, GIIC is the pioneer of the joint sector concept in India... with over 70 projects involving an investment of Rs. 1,240 crores. GIIC enterprnses cover fields as vital and varied as engineering, petrochemicals, machine tools, chemicals, pharmaceuticals, plastics, cement, leather, electricals, electronics and more. In many ventures, GIIC has collaborated with such internationally famed companies as Mitsubishi, Krupp, Lurgi, Linde, ICI and Goodrich.

GHCL : Colossus of the Chemical World

- Located in Gujarat, the state with most favourable industrial climate and many successful projects.
- Promoted by GIIC and DALMIAS — eminent promoters of several large ventures.
- Largest joint sector project in the country with an investment of Rs. 245 crores.
- A highly cost-efficient 1200 tonnes per day Soda Ash plant providing unmatched economies of scale with the largest stream designed capacity in the country.
- State-of-the-art proprietory technology from world renowned AKZO ZOUT CHEMIE of Netherlands.
- First-ever technological features in the highly automated plant utilizing the advanced 'dry liming' process.
- Critical equipment imported from KLOCKNER INDUSTRIE ANLAGEN, West Germany — world leaders in chemical plants.
- Abundant and captive reserves of all major raw materials in the vicinity of plant.
- Doubly assured power supply — captive 11 MW power generation to meet the entire power needs of the plant plus 100% standby arrangements.
- 'Perfect Energy Balance' between steam and power, resulting in lower energy costs.
- Assured market : demand continuously growing at a compound rate of 9% p.a. over the last 30 years.

GIIC's Biggest Venture — GHCL

And now, GIIC, jointly with Dalmias and in technical collaboration with world leaders Akzo Zout Chemie of Holland and Klockner Industrie Anlagen of West Germany, promotes its most ambitious venture to date : GHCL — a mammoth Rs. 245 crore project to manufacture 1,200 tonnes per day of Soda Ash.

India's production of Soda Ash lags far behind consumption, and the demand-supply gap is expected to increase from the current 1.90 lakh tonnes to 5.90 lakh tonnes by 1990-91. Significantly, the country had to import about 2 lakh tonnes of Soda Ash last year. GHCL thus enjoys a very happy market situation.

A Bright Future for All

Indeed, the prospects are happy not only for GHCL — but also for the entire community. GHCL will generate direct and indirect employment/business opportunities for several thousands. From every viewpoint, therefore, the GHCL project is a monumental landmark for GIIC — and the government and people of Gujarat.

Gujarat's gift to the nation

GHCL

Gujarat Heavy Chemicals Ltd.

Regd. Office : Mistry Chambers (6th floor), Khanpur, Ahmedabad-380 001
Head Office : 20 Community Centre, New Friends Colony, New Delhi-110 065

India's largest joint sector project

Sobhagya/637/86

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THE FASHION BUSINESS

LOOKING GOOD

HIGH fashion is finally out of the closets. In need of a new outfit for tonight's party? Don't panic. It's just down the road at your friendly neighbourhood boutique. Or rather, boutiques. Suddenly, fashion is no longer cocooned in five-star hotel arcades as the private preserve of perfumed socialites. It's now rioting in the streets in dozens of boutiques flourishing hip-to-hip in almost every big city.

Instant fashion, off the rack and ready-to-wear, now sports the labels of a bewildering range of purveyors with a mushrooming string of city outlets: Inter Shoppe, Ravissant, Burlingtons, Benzer, In Style, Ritu's, Wearhouse, International News, Vibes, Saks, Guys'n'Dolls. There's a new label being added almost every second day. Whether occupying prime space at the neighbourhood market-place or even the garage next door, high fashion is exploding—right at the doorstep.

And, despite new boutiques opening at the drop of a shirt, the boom seems to be just starting. Initially, it was the garment exporters feeding fashion outside the shores of the country who looked inwards to recognise the explosive potential of this market. Today, even large business houses like the Modis have decided to cash in with their new boutique, Obsession, in Delhi's posh New Friends Colony. "There is space for everyone," says Bibin Hara, manager of the Calcutta branch of Ritu's Boutique, one of the first boutique chains in the country.

Vijay Mehta, the fashion magnate who heads the largest boutique chain in the country, Inter Shoppe, estimates: "There has been at least a 500 to 1,000 per cent increase in the market over the last five years."

"Ready-to-wear has caught on like never before," feels Rama Sood of Burlingtons. And this craze is not just restricted to the fashion cities of Delhi and Bombay only. In Madras, says Sabita Radhakrish-

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Instant fashion, off the rack and ready-to-wear, now sports the labels of a bewildering range of purveyors.

Today's woman does not have the time to buy the fabric, choose a style, find a tailor and then chase him. She wants it all together.

It's a revolution in life-styles. Everybody is getting into the act.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Ready-to-wear fashions are exploding. High fashion is no longer an exclusive preserve.

RAGHU RAI

na of Amrapalli, one of the oldest boutiques in the city: "There has been such a boutique boom that every other road now has one."

In Calcutta every second week, city newspapers advertise the entry of a new boutique on the fashion scene. In conservative Bhopal, ready-made garments stores (they are yet to adopt the fancy name of "boutiques") have mushroomed with sales growing four times in the last two years. Any evening in New Market—Bhopal's main shopping centre—will show that more and more women are discarding their burqas and sarees and opting for the more convenient and fashionable ready-to-wear. In Cochin, last year alone 17 new posh ready-made garments stores opened and all of them are doing well. In Kottayam, several paan shops on M.G. Road have been converted into air-conditioned ready-made garments shops. Last month in Trichur, three new ready-made clothes stores opened the same day. Ready-to-wear casuals are the rage with youngsters in Ahmedabad though most of the fashion-conscious prefer to do their shopping in Bombay; just as those in Lucknow shop in Delhi. Even in Patna, which would appear to be immune to the fashion virus, more and more people are demanding "Delhi-type clothes", according to Surendra Gogia who runs a popular ready-made garments shop in Hira Palace market.

Fashion-consciousness has grown tremendously over the last few years and has spread to almost every corner of the country. "Teenagers in our days had no dress sense. They were just lost somewhere in between children and adults," recalls Bina Ramani, 43, who opened her new boutique, Once Upon a Time, in Delhi last month. Adds Parmeshwar Godrej, who began the Dancing Silks boutique in the Oberoi Towers, Bombay years ago: "The younger generation is becoming increasingly aware about being well turned out." The surfacing of the fashion rage among women can also be explained by its economics: the rising disposable income with the increasing number of young working women. Not only is the woman aware of what would look good on her now, but she also has the money to buy it. "This has made fashion monetarily more realistic," says Godrej.

Feeding this fashion epidemic is the growing number of boutiques and the reasons for their increasing popularity are not far to seek. "It's so much easier: they think for you," says Savita Jasra, 20, browsing through the latest boutique on Linking Road in Bombay. "They give you better designs, combinations and variety," feels Sharmishta Law, systems analyst at Calcutta. Argues Aditya Dhala of Good Shepherds, Madras; "You can make instant decisions since you know what it looks like on the spot." In Ahmedabad, Shiraz Cambatta prefers boutique-wear as "good tailors are so hard to come by nowadays". And Reema Dhawan, a young marketing executive in Bombay, sums it all up: "If you want something

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

An astonishing variety of boutiques is flourishing hip-to-hip in every big city.

RAGHU RAI

razzmatazz, that's the only place."

Neither is the craze confined to the fairer sex. "I don't remember when I went to a tailor last," says Selvan, 24, an engineer in Bangalore. Adds Sanjay Dodeja, manager at Amigo boutique for men on Brigade Road, Bangalore: "The ready-to-wear fever is catching up with all classes at all ages." Even in the backwaters of Kerala in Idukki "Chirag Din shirts have become a status symbol," says Thomas George, a middle class cardamom dealer who had come to Kottayam last fortnight just to buy himself a Chirag Din shirt. (This, despite the manufacturers' claim that their shirts are sold only in Bombay.)

And being drawn into the fold of the fashion fever are millions, as helpless tailors watch them go, attracted by the convenience and variety of ready-to-wear.

INTER SHOPPE

VIJAY MEHTA, 40

SALES

Rs 5 crore a year

LINE OF SPECIALITY

Young, trendy ready-to-wear

"There has been a 500 to 1,000 per cent increase in the market over the last five years."

"I can duplicate a pant or shirt of any leading manufacturer and it would be better than the original. But still, in the last few months my business has come down because my customers are preferring expensive ready-mades," grumbles Kocha Annan of Flaming Tailors, once Trivandrum's leading tailor.

Bangalore's Pisey Tailors are more realistic and have shifted their tailoring operation to the interior of their shop, renting out the front portion for ready-to-wear sales. The situation is not so bad in towns like Lucknow and Patna where tailors still retain a good clientele despite the clear trend towards ready-mades.

But in Delhi and Bombay, many tailors have realised that the days of personalised tailor-made outfits are fast coming to an end and have come together to begin fabrication units for ready-to-wear units. "It's easier for the tailors also," says Abdul Sattar, who stitches most of the ready-to-wear range at Memsaab boutique on Hill Road in Bandra, Bombay.

Boutiques with exclusive labels, once worn only by ritzy stores selling high fashion which only the elite could afford, are now throwing open their doors to the common man. "The awe of boutiques has gone," says Nalini Sharma, one of the pioneers in the business with Nalini Sarees. "Today, they cater to people right across the board," she adds.

If the up-market is looking for exclusive designer-wear, they pick it off-the-shelf at boutiques like Ravissant or Ritu's Zardozi collection. Here an outfit can cost anywhere from Rs 1,500 to Rs 10,000 or more. "There used to be a price range above which ready-made garments were not acceptable. Now that barrier has been broken," says Ritu Kumar, who has more demand for her Zardozi than she can

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Fashion-consciousness has grown tremendously among the middle class over the last few years.

Photographs by PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

handle. But down the fashion spiral, there is a boutique for every pocket. At Nalini's, the price ranges between Rs 150 and Rs 3,500, at Inter Shoppe between Rs 100 and Rs 1,000, and they dip sharply at the garage boutiques in the colonies where the quality would be as good but the overheads much lower. And for those who want to be in fashion and for whom the budget doesn't stretch to boutiques, there is always the pavement bazaar selling you surplus from garment exporters at throwaway prices and making fashion a reality on the streets. "If you've got the eye you find everything here," says Ambica Kuthiala, an executive at OBM Advertising and a long-time regular at the bazaar. "You find things at the footpath which you wouldn't ever find in the shops," adds her twin Amba.

Boutique owners also acknowledge the importance and impact of the pavement bazaar on the Indian fashion scene. "These pavement shops are playing a very important role in changing apparel habits," says Vijay Mehta of Inter Shoppe. "The first ripple of change starts here and the next time, they come to the boutiques to get better quality."

Whether it is the pavement bazaar or designer-wear the buyers are there, clamouring for more. And each one finds a price bracket to settle into—or squeeze into. Being in fashion is becoming increasingly important. "I'll take a bus instead of an autorickshaw to work to save enough to buy the clothes I like," says Meena Jain, a young stenographer in Delhi. "You can't be popular in college if you're out of fashion," says Aarti, a first year student.

So, accompanying the constant whirr of electric sewing-machines at the ready-to-wear manufacturers is the loud ringing of cash registers. The Inter Shoppe chain grosses Rs 5 crore a year and sales are growing at 50 per cent per annum. Mehta intends to open another 10 shops next year in semi-metro towns like Pune, Baroda, Hyderabad and Ahmedabad, apart from new ones in Bombay, Delhi and Bangalore.

At Benzer, the departmental store in Bombay, ready-to-wear contributes as much as 60 per cent of the gross revenue of Rs 4 crore to Rs 5 crore each year. "Day by day, it's growing," says Chiman Savla, one of the partners. In Style, which opened in November 1983, has doubled its sales over the last three years. Ravissant grosses Rs 1.5 crore from three outlets. Ritu's rakes in nothing short of Rs 1 crore a year. Shilpi's sales in Madras have grown ten times in the last seven years. Chiragh Din, 'the shirt's people', admit to a growth of 40 per cent in sales over last year and is opening a new outlet selling only

RITU'S

RITU KUMAR, 42

SALES
Over Rs 1 crore a year

LINE OF SPECIALITY
Zardozi

"There used to be a price range above which ready-to-wear was not acceptable. Now, that barrier has been broken."

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Crores are being spent on advertising for image-building and creating loyalty to designer labels.

RAVISSANT

RAVI CHAWLA, 45

SALES
Rs 1.5 crore a year

LINE OF SPECIALITY
High fashion ready-to-wear

"Indian styles are chic in the cut but less revealing than designer wear in the West."

ready-to-wear trousers. Newman shirts in Delhi have been growing at 100 per cent a year and have reached an annual turnover of Rs 2 crore. Equus shirts in Madras have almost doubled their turnover in eight months. Raymonds, with their new Park Avenue Collection, recorded a 50 per cent hike in sales in their fashionable Warden Road showroom in Bombay. Even a new boutique like Obsession already has a whopping turnover of Rs 25,000 a day in its very first month, and Ramani opened Once Upon a Time with sales of Rs 10,000 a day in the first fortnight. And profit margins in this business hover around a meaty 50 per cent.

At smaller boutiques too, sales are rising faster than hemlines. At Saks and Part-2 on Bombay's Linking Road, sales have upped seven times since they opened in 1982-83. A chain like Bangalore's Wearhouse, which deals in only export surplus—and was opened only because warehouse rents for stocking export surplus were becoming too high—reported a sales increase of one-and-a-half times in the last year. "What started as a stepchild has begun to beat the other children," confesses Dinesh Hinduja, partner in Wearhouse.

The fashion boom, however, is no accident. The bigger fashion houses, which have grabbed a lion's share of the market, have stitched together careful marketing strategies. For some, image-building and exclusiveness are the pegs on which to hang their marketing hats. In Style labels itself "The most fashionable address in India", Benzer calls its shoppers "A class apart", Inter Shoppe pushes its "Futuristic Fashions" image and the Raymonds Park Avenue Collection "Says style. Unmistakably."

And most of them buttress their claims with hefty advertising budgets. Chiragh Din spends Rs 17 lakh to 18 lakh a year, Benzer Rs 10 lakh to 12 lakh and Inter Shoppe Rs 18 lakh. "Today they buy labels, not clothes," says Nasser Latif of Sunyanavt boutique and ready-mades in Cochin. Noticing the craze for Chiragh Din and Double Bull shirts, Latif started his own range of Godfather shirts which were manufactured in the same units that were supplying shirts to these popular brands in Bombay. But he had spent more time on designing his shirts than an image for their label, and his shirts flopped. "Ultimately I had to remove my label from the shirts pockets to sell my products," recounts a bitter Latif. Kannan of Seemati, one of Kerala's biggest ready-mades shop owners recognised this "brand-consciousness" early in the day and carefully launched his Monsier-Gent's Exclusive.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The darzis have realised that the days of made-to-measure clothes are over.

Photographs by PRASHANT PANJIAR

His sales zoomed from five shirts to 45-50 shirts a day. "We try and sell a look, not a garment," says Sadhana Sabharwal, a member of the Inter Shoppe designing team. And the success of that look hinges just as much on the image portrayed in the ad campaigns and the interior decor of the shop as on the clothes. For each price bracket, the look is different. The high-fashion merchants as Ravissant like to emphasise the exclusivity of belonging to this bracket. Ads flaunting only the label as a status symbol, invitation cards by name to the target audience, personalised birthday and anniversary greetings to customers. To complement it in the shop, they have studio lights and a hushed effect suggesting restricted entry. Boutiques catering to the young crowd flaunt the slick look of the West—breathless action-packed ads, dazzling neons beckoning outside the shop, and loud English music inviting you in.

The fashion explosion is, in the Indian context, an idea whose time has come. More people are switching from tailored to ready-to-wear garments for the simple reason that time is at a premium. "Today's woman does not have the time to first buy fabric, choose a style, find a tailor and then chase him. She wants it all together," says Bina Pandit, in-charge of production at Ritu's Boutique in Delhi. "We provide instant ideas to the busy executive for whom time is money," says T.R. Ranay, one of the partners of In Style, which boasts of a display of over 300 styles in men's shirts. There is, of course, another reason. More and more Indians are shedding inhibitions—and the traditional saree and suit ensemble—in favour of fashion. "Initially, our clientele used to be only from the few rich business families," says Ravi Chawla of Ravissant. "But now we also have wives of senior executives and lady executives coming in."

And, he could well add, bringing with them a new dress sense and awareness. Just a few years ago, Chawla recalls, he could tell his customers on the phone that a new style had come in and they would say: Keep it for us. But today his customer has very definite ideas about what she would feel comfortable in. "It's a drastic change," says he. "They know exactly what they want."

Today's woman is not only more definite about her dress sense but wants outfits to suit a variety of occasions, even to go to the office. Which explains why one of the biggest alterations in the fashion market has been the dazzling variety of salwars on display. Inter Shoppe has at least 30 to 40 variations of the salwar at any time—the dhoti salwar, Patiala sal-

OBSESSION

BINA MODI, 42

SALES
Rs 25,000 a day in first month

LINE OF SPECIALITY
Trousers and Skirts

"Indian designers may be good but very few are exposed to western styles."

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The increase in young working women has meant that they have more money for clothes.

ONCE UPON A TIME

BINA RAMANI, 43

SALES
Rs 10,000 a day in first month

LINE OF SPECIALITY
Brocade and Sequins Work

"A tremendous fashion awareness is coming in. There is an excitement in the air today."

war, combination salwar, tapered salwar, ankle salwar, and the pintucked salwar. The kurtas, loose and flouncy until recently, are tapering off to a narrow silhouette. Padded shoulders and narrow hems combine to give a square look. The young collegiates have discarded the dupattas for scarves and short jackets. But feels Alka Kapoor, design and production manager at Ravissant: "The dupatta is an essential part of the Indian woman's psychology." But that doesn't rule out fascinating innovations—it could be caught on one end with long flowing tassles, it could be merging into a sleeve at one end, it could be a short fabric stitched into the kurta at the shoulders to provide just a fall at the neck, it could be an improvised collar extended and flung over one shoulder. Loose baggy trousers with lots and lots of pleats are stubbornly dominating trouser fashions although for girls, ankle-length leotards have made a daring entry with long and loose T-shirts. Bright sashes and broad belts complete the ensemble with co-ordinated shoes. Long gathered skirts to the ankles are swirling in to join narrow, figure-hugging midis with suggestive slits and oversized shirts and jackets.

The bold prints and stark contrasts in winter colours are now making way for fresh sunflower yellows, emerald greens, flaming oranges with cheerful floral prints. Most fashion houses are already splashing in whites for the summer along with lilacs, mints, lemon yellows and baby pinks.

The image in vogue appears to be that of the complete woman—smart, independent-minded and elegant. A lot of boutiques have recognised this and have introduced a range of handbags, footwear and accessories to go with their dresses. Vama in Bombay, best known for its sarees, is also into the ready-to-wear business in a big way. It has also started a new range of shoes and bags. "Today's woman wants the total look," says Jaya Patel, the younger of the two sisters managing the shop.

As for the smartening up of the men, says Sanjeev Anand, 25, browsing through show windows at Connaught Place in Delhi: "Men have always been fashion conscious. It's just that we have better designs available today with the increase in competition." But Raju Daswani, partner, Chiragh Din, senses a change: "Men seem to have polished their tastes now. Fancy is out, sober is in." But not too sober. The hottest selling colours in shirts for men at Ravissant are turquoise blue, purple, pink and red.

The young men on the campus wear a

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Even the traditional saree market has changed with the introduction of designer sarees.

PRASHANT PANJIAR

L'AFFAIRE

RAJESH NANDA, 29

SALES (From one outlet)

Over Rs 1 crore

LINE OF SPECIALITY

Designer Sarees

"With the advent of the designer saree, everybody is trying to establish a label in sarees."

new look. They wear a riot of colours too but gone are the shaggy manes and hirsute faces of male students. The emphasis is now on the "clean look". Conservatism is making a come-back. Crew-cuts, clean-shaves, well-cut trousers—or "clean" jeans.

Among the most rapidly expanding markets today is designer-wear for men. After the astonishing array of labels in men's shirts (Park Avenue, Chiragh Din, Double Bull, Liberty, Four Seasons, Newman, Equus, Monsier...). "The big market potential now is ready-to-wear suits for men," says Sunil Arora of Impulse, one of the leading buying houses in garments exports. And not just designer suits. So enthused is Raymonds with the response to its Park Avenue designer range, that it is now contemplating introducing a designer range of underwear for men. And Appearances in Delhi, which began modestly four years ago in a side lane in South Extension, has now decided to cater to the "complete appearance" of a man with shirts, trousers, suits, ties, designer shoes and even a beauty parlour for men.

It's a revolution in life-styles. Everybody's getting into the act. So, enter "The Designer Saree". The craze for "signature sarees" began in pockets—city pockets, that is: Ananda in Calcutta, Vama in Bombay, Maheshwaris in Madras. "Today, it has become a status symbol. The tag is more important than the saree itself," says Nalini Sharma of Nalini's. Signature sarees are the rage today—L'affaire, Vichitra, Ravissant, are all scrambling for what was once considered an essentially traditional market. "Everybody is trying to establish a label in sarees. That is why you suddenly see so many saree advertisements in the newspapers today," says Rajesh Nanda, who started L'affaire as an exclusive designer saree showroom distinct from the Handloom Emporium, also owned by his family and dealing in sarees. Today he has a turnover of more than Rs 1 crore from only one shop and has nine designers working full-time in his studios trying to reproduce on sarees, traditional prints from old folk art, like the Mithila paintings. "Designer sarees have changed the old culture of sarees being sold by lalas sitting on gaddis," says Nanda. "The Festival of India and Vishwakarma sales have made the handloom saree chic," says Vama's Patel, whose boutique specialises in handloom sarees and whose regular clientele includes Shabana Azmi and, until recently, Smita Patil. "The designer sarees are drawing a much younger crowd," says Panna Kamdar of Vichitra. They used to run after French chiffons once, but today

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Boutiques provide style with convenience and offer prices to fit every pocket.

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

VAMA

JAYA PATEL, 25

SALES (Refuses to divulge)

LINE OF SPECIALITY

Sarees and Salwar Kameez

"Today's woman has no time to waste. She wants the total look and ready-to-wear is convenient."

the rage is traditional cottons. "Even Sonia Gandhi wears them," says Kamdar. In less than two years, sales at Vichitra sarees, an offshoot of the well-known Uttam saree house, have already caught up with and are racing beyond the levels reached in the last 40 years.

In fact, it is surprising just how much is being—and can be—done to the saree. Ravissant sarees have loud prints splashing across the entire saree, and no pallav. The favourite colours at the moment—orange and green. Ananda sarees are trying to revive old traditional prints. "Nothing can be more beautiful than a traditional Indian saree beautifully worn," says Ghostho Kumar, designing for Ananda. Vichitra is following the colours coming in the West in sarees too. Instead of the gold-yellow which dominated this season, the colours for the coming season will be mauve, violet and indigo. The latest in saree fashions are identical shawls to match them. While L'affaire goes so far as to weave shawls in identical patterns as the saree, Nalini has introduced bold and bright prints in shawls to match the sarees. Besides, to match with identical sarees and shawls are co-ordinated blouses. Specialising in this is Isha Chopra in her latest boutique, Razzle Dazzle. Chopra offers cholis in zardozi work designed to match with the print of your saree.

Professional designers in India so far have all had their eyes trained on the export market, and that is reflected in much of the fashions available in the domestic market. Inter Shoppe's Mehta says his designing team travels abroad to absorb the styles of the West and bring them in. Chimes in Chawla: "I do have separate designers, fabricators and manufacturing personnel, but when I finally get down to decide the Ravissant shapes for the season, subconsciously I must be following the styles of the West."

Others are still more forthright: "As the dress hemlines go higher in the West, our kurta hemlines follow the same style; as the skirts go tighter there, our kurtas do the same," says Patel, who designs outfits for Vama. Yet, they all admit that the kind of clothes an Indian woman would be able to carry off are very different from the West. "They are chic in the cut but less revealing," says Chawla. "There is still a resistance to the outrageous," says Percy Rehman of International News in Bangalore. So there are modifications in western styles to suit the Indian climate, but very little original designing. "The pathetic part about the Indian fashion boom is that designers still don't get their due," says Ritika Chopra of

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Superior [su:'piəriə] a. higher in rank or quality; better or greater in some respect; high quality. Superiority in the new Oberoi, Delhi shows itself in the smallest details. Whether it's unpacking and packing bags, a warm welcoming smile, efficient and accurate business service in the Executive Centre or an attentive but discreet waiter, we make sure that our service is impeccable — because you deserve the best the world has to offer.

The Oberoi

NEW DELHI

For reservations contact your travel agent or the hotel direct: tel 699571 telex 2372/3829 OBDL IN or any of the Oberoi sales offices.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Designer-wear for men is one of the most rapidly expanding markets today.

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

BENZER

CHIMAN SAVLA, 35

SALES (In ready-to-wear)
Rs 2.5 crore a year

LINE OF SPECIALITY
Men's Wear

"Earlier the middle class stayed away. Now even they are buying exclusive ready-to-wear."

Guys 'n' Dolls. "Boutiques want the designs but they don't want to pay professional designers for them," complains Sandeep Anand, a free-lance designer trying to make a dent into the domestic market. Besides, the bias in favour of designers from the West is yet to be erased. Says Bina Modi, who prefers to design the Obsession dresses herself: "If I do take on a professional designer I will take someone from abroad. Indian designers may have a good sense of designing, but very few are exposed to the western world." For her men's range, Obsession for Men, to be launched shortly, she has appointed Italian designer Albert Benitsky.

But there are hopes of this changing with the new National Institute of Fashion Technology, the first-ever institute for fashion designing in India, scheduled to open its doors to aspiring designers in New Delhi next month. "For the first time we have formal training in pattern cutting available in India—a must for any designer," says Anand, who plans to enrol at the institute. "We may finally have genuine home-bred designers with this," says Mehta. But even on borrowed ideas, the up-market fashion is not doing badly. Against the four distinct seasons in the West, India has five—with collections just as distinct—to cater to a wider variation in the temperature.

The most elaborate collection, as in the West, is the Winter Collection, introduced just before Christmas and the New Year. It is European in its look and the colours are a combination of the bright and the dark. The Ravissant collection this season displayed stark, eye-catching contrasts of bright blue with dark green, blood red with fuchsia pink, purple with bright yellow.

Spring ushers in a light carefree look—off with the cumbersome woollens. The colours are still bright, but they are combined with pastels. Then comes the Holiday Collection in May, which has pastels and whites for those unable to escape the heat of the plains, but also concentrates on a distinct range for those off to the hills, and a separate range of beachwear. The monsoons bring in a change once more with the wet look and the trousers inching above the ankles, and finally come September and the Ethnic Collection for that traditional festive look over Puja, Dussehra and Diwali. But whatever the season, as far as the Indian fashion industry is concerned, it looks like being a long and fruitful summer.

—TANIA MIDHA with bureau reports

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

A quality product of Bakelite Hylam

Feel it with your eyes. See it with your fingers.

Now Decolam adds a new dimension of elegance and opulence to interiors with new 3-D Decolam. This ultra premium range of laminates with impeccable Italian connections has a fabulous look and feel that's so real. And what a range of chic, contemporary finishes! Shimmering aluminium, sophisticated fabric, web and hessian, natural cane and burnished coppers in classical Indian designs. New 3D-Decolam — you'll agree its a touch of genius from Bakelite Hylam.

3-D decolam
DECORATIVE LAMINATE

Cut out and mail for free booklet on the Decolam range of designs for beautiful interiors.

Name _____

Address _____

_____

Tel. No.: _____

Occupation: _____

Mail to: _____

Decolam P.O. Box 758, Bombay 400 021.

ITC

INTAS BHL P 35 2720

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

MADHYA PRADESH

The Runaway Nun

CONSIDERING it was an abduction that wasn't and an elopement that was, it created extraordinary tension, and brought Madhya Pradesh close to the brink of a major law and order breakdown. It all began on January 4 when a first information report was lodged with the police about the abduction of Induprabha, a 20-year-old Jain sadhvi, by two motorcycle-borne youths. The incident apparently occurred near Simrole village, 10 km from Indore, when she and five other Jain nuns were on a pilgrimage.

News of the abduction spread like wildfire with the popular Hindi daily Nai Duniya carrying the item on its front page the next day. The political fall-out soon made itself felt, for though there are only four lakh Jains in the state, it is a wealthy and influential community.

Chief Minister Motilal Vora, who happened to be in Indore that day, was gheraoed by angry crowds and had to be whisked away to safety. The city observed a total bandh and the district administration ordered the closure of all educational institutions. Shops downed shutters, and thousands of people staged a black flag march demanding action against the kidnappers.

Even as state Director-General of Police, M. Natarajan rushed to the city and a massive combing operation of the surrounding jungles got underway, the agitation spread to Dewas, Vidisha, Dhar, Khargone, Burhanpur, Ratlam and Neemuch. And just when it seemed the situation was getting out of control, Induprabha herself came to the rescue.

Wearing a colourful nylon saree, complete with bindi, bangles and wig over her close-cropped pate, she walked into an Indore police station with her lover, milk supplier Radheshyam, 31, and a lawyer, to say that the kidnapping report lodged by the nuns was untrue. She said she had renounced the religious order she had followed for seven years. She told a magistrate that she wanted to live with Radheshyam, who is married and a father of three children. The police, closed the investigation, announcing her return over loudspeakers.

VIMAL GUPTA

Induprabha with Radheshyam: making a new beginning

Life for Induprabha was not easy. Sitting in Radheshyam's home in Dudhia village, 20 km from Indore, she said she was initiated into the puritanical life of a Jain nun at 13, "because my parents desired it". Hers is a poor family from Rajasthan's Pali district and the younger sister followed her footsteps.

The tenets of their order dictated every aspect of their life. They could only move around in a group, always on foot and had to subsist entirely on alms. "Sometimes, during the rains, we could not move out for alms and had to go without food for days," she recalled. No water or medicine was permitted during illness and every three months was the keshlochan—the process by which a sadhvi's hair is pulled out after applying a little ash on the hands. "It was very painful and I used to bleed often," she said.

It was not very surprising that she was attracted to the milkman at Jain Bhawan. His visits to the hospital after she underwent an appendicitis operation also cemented the bonds. After her recovery, the 'abduction' operation was staged with the help of Radheshyam's two friends.

But the past is over for Induprabha. Radheshyam's family has welcomed her. She plans to study further—having passed her Sahityaratna Examination from the Hindi Sahitya Sammelan—and "if possible, get a job".

But orthodox elements in the Jain community are still trying for Induprabha's release "from the clutches of her kidnappers". Advocate Manohar Dalal has filed a habeas corpus petition in the Indore High Court alleging that her statement to the magistrate was made "under duress" and the Jain Mahamandal Secretary Fakirchand Mehta has demanded a judicial inquiry.

The affair has ignited a fierce debate within the Jain community over the advisability of initiating girls at a tender age into a life of self-denial. Dalal said that "mostly poor girls take to this life", because their parents cannot afford to meet the exorbitant dowry demands to get them married. But he also admitted: "A small child if trained properly can easily adapt to a life of celibacy. It will be very difficult to ask a girl of 18 to renounce the world—she can elope with anyone!"

Others were more discerning. Many organisations within the community have given a call for "introspection". Jain writer Pyarelal Shreemal blamed the whole system of initiation at an early age and in a statement demanded that "the Jain Sadhu Sammelan not allow anyone to become a nun before the age of 30". Going a step further, state Jain Yuva Sangh General Secretary Virendra Kothari urged a serious look at the evil of dowry. Women belonging to various social organisations echoed his call and lent their full support for Induprabha. But the number of listeners within the community were limited.

—N.K. SINGH in Indore

Mail to: Decolam P.O. Box 758, Bombay 400 021.
3D decolam DECORATIVE LAMINATE

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

DCM LIMITED

Speech by Shri Bansi Dhar, Chairman, at the Annual General Meeting of the Company held on December 26, 1986 at New Delhi.

Shri Bansi Dhar

Ladies and Gentlemen,

I extend a warm and cordial welcome to you on the occasion of the 98th Annual General Meeting of the Company. The Directors' Report and the Audited Accounts of the Company have been with you for some time and, with your permission, I will take them as read.

I speak to you today after my first full year in office. During this period, there have been significant changes in direction both at the national level as well as within your Company. In a rapidly transforming socio-economic and business environment, changes are inevitable. In such a situation, what is necessary is Management of Change to ensure a smooth transition.

National Scenario

In the last couple of years that Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi has been at the helm of affairs, he has initiated several directional changes to eliminate stagnation and to accelerate growth in our economy. Apart from introducing liberalisation in key areas affecting the economy, the biggest change the Govt. has introduced is to give a long term perspective to the new policies. This approach will enable adequate time to the economy to respond to the new policy initiatives, and is most welcome indeed.

During the last few years, our country has moved towards self sufficiency in food grains thanks to the green revolution and the forward looking policies of the Govt.. There is now a surplus of wheat and paddy in spite of two years of drought. However, India continues to import large quantities of sugar, edible oils and pulses to meet domestic needs. Whilst emphasis is being given to increasing the production of these commodities in our country to avoid scarce foreign exchange outgo, a much greater thrust is required in this direction.

At a time when the country is faced with a mounting trade deficit, erosion in the value of the rupee, and large impending repayments of IMF loans, continued import of products indigenously available is disturbing. This is not only an unnecessary strain on foreign exchange resources but leads to poor utilisation of valuable industrial facilities already installed in the country at enormous costs.

If India has to overcome the balance of payment crisis, conditions have to be created to make indigenous goods cost competitive. This will not only provide that much needed impetus to exports, but will also enable imports to be curbed. However, it has been seen that Indian products suffer a considerable cost disadvantage due to labour-intensive methods, poor labour productivity, over protective labour legislation and the high cost economy that has built up over the years. Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi has, very rightly, placed great emphasis on increasing productivity and enhancing quality at every level, and this is perhaps the prime task for all of us. In this context, some of the laws need to be reviewed to make them more relevant to the national objective of increasing productivity.

The availability, quality and cost of infrastructural inputs like power, fuel, transportation, etc. is also a matter of considerable anxiety. The Govt's. approach in evolving a long term policy on administered prices is a step in the right direction. Along with this, a serious effort will have to be made to cut back non-plan expenditure, which ultimately affects the entire cost structure of the economy.

Indian industry is also constrained by high Capital Costs, amongst other factors. Like to like, manufacturing facilities set up in India entail a much greater investment than in developed countries. The problem is further aggravated by the high cost of capital. All these tend to push up product prices. Measures need to be evolved to improve Capital Input/Output ratio to make Indian industry more competitive.

It is gratifying to see that the measures taken are beginning to show results on various fronts. I am, therefore, confident that with the dynamic and pragmatic steps being taken by the Govt., the Indian economy will respond and vital break-throughs will be attained to enable Indian products stand up in a competitive environment.

The deteriorating environmental situation and the need to curtail pollution has been an issue of great national concern. The Environment (Protection) Act, 1986, recently brought into force, is a measure that has our fullest support and cooperation. I would urge the Govt. to take the initiative in working out a coordinated approach and a package of measures to encourage industry in meeting the exacting standards required, specially for the older plants.

Challenges and Perspective for the Company

Your Company, too, has faced the challenge of change and I am happy to state that we are set to improve the working with a more unified and cohesive approach. There were, however, two unexpected factors last year which have had a serious impact on the working results for the year under review. It is the internal strength of the organisation which has enabled us to surmount the difficulties and given us the confidence to look at the future with optimism.

Last year, I had referred to the unfortunate accident at the SFFI unit, which has consistently been one of our more profitable units. The incident took place in the sulphuric acid plant but the Delhi Admn. ordered closure of other plants also. I am happy to inform you that apart from the acids group, which still remains closed pending direction from the Court, all other plants of the unit have been given permission to restart and are now operating. In the current financial year, it is expected that the unit will perform satisfactorily.

The Supreme Court ruling in our case against the Rajasthan State Govt.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

in regard to concessional power tariff was the other tremendous set-back. This dispute, pertaining to years prior to 1980, had been adjudged in our favour in the lower courts but was lost due to a retrospective amendment in legislation. Such actions affect the credibility of various fiscal incentives offered by a Govt., and in the long term, will inevitably reflect on decisions for further industrial investments.

Whilst we take pride in the Company's ability to face unprecedented challenges, it is important for us to plan for the future to keep pace with ever-changing business priorities. This will call for the best of professional competence, business acumen and maturity in deciding the path to be followed.

To this end, we have commenced the task of revamping DCM Limited. A fresh look is being given to the organisational set-up in the Company to help us in planning for future growth. We are also endeavouring to make existing investments more productive, competitive and profitable because these are ultimately the foundations on which we have to build our organisation in future.

We expect the liquidity position of your Company to show an improvement in the next few years and are accordingly undertaking programmes for modernisation, expansion and diversification.

Priority is being given to modernise and upgrade existing investments. Thus, the textile operations are proposed to be modernised, and efforts are being made to increase capacity utilisation of the chemicals unit at Kota. It is also proposed to technologically update the Vanaspati Plant at Delhi to improve the yields and consequently profits.

The rayon tyre cord industry has been subject to a demand recession due to consumer preference for nylon tyre cord, and we are examining possibilities of changing the product mix to better utilise the installed infrastructure.

Information technology and electronics today are sectors with a great potential for future growth and development. Your Company is already well positioned in the field of computers and electronic data processing systems, and efforts are continuously being made to identify new applications. The Company is also looking at the possibility of manufacturing Colour Television Picture Tubes. A technology tie-up with NEC of Japan has already been signed, and the Company is hoping to get the necessary clearances for the project soon.

You are already aware that the Company is setting up a Cement Plant at Kota. The Plant is based on state-of-the-art technology from M/s Lafarge of France and is scheduled to start up within this financial year.

Besides, the Company has entered the field of bio-technology, another high-tech area, in a modest way, and plans to enlarge this aspect of the business are being reviewed.

Your Company has always believed that human resources are also as important as tangible assets. It is the commitment and contribution of its people which is the determining factor in corporate excellence of any Company, and efforts are being made to harness the inherent strengths of our colleagues at all levels.

Two years ago, Dr. Bharat Ram had informed you of the proposal to close the oldest unit of the Company at Delhi. This was in conformity with the Master Plan of Delhi. To finance the shifting, and setting up modern facilities, it was decided to convert the land for housing development and into flatted factories. It is always a painful decision to close down any unit, especially so as the emotions and aspirations of our employees are of the utmost importance to us. It is with the same sense of responsibility to our employees that we made a separation offer that is unparalleled in the country, and a vast number of workers responded favourably to the offer. However, we are still awaiting the judgement of the Hon'ble High Court and the sanction of other statutory bodies before proceeding further in the matter.

Our commitment to our shareholders has always been of priority to us. Thus, earlier this year, when Shriram Fibres Limited, a company promoted by DCM, offered rights convertible debentures, DCM Limited offered its allotment to you in turn. The response has been overwhelming, and I hope that all of you will have benefited from this.

Changes in the Board

During the year, Mr. H.T. Parekh resigned from the Board of Directors for reasons of health. Mr. Parekh, with his background in finance and his experience in ICICI was of immense help to the Company and we shall always cherish his association with DCM Limited.

The passing away of Lala Jagan Nathji, the oldest director of the Company, is a matter of great sorrow and grief to us. He lent his vast experience and maturity to the operations of the Company, and we shall miss his wise counsel and advice.

Dr. S.S. Baijal, Chairman, IEL Limited has consented to join the Board of your Company, and I extend a very warm welcome to him. Dr. Baijal has a distinguished and eminent record in the chemical industry and his contribution will be valuable to us in the management of the Company.

It also gives me pleasure to welcome Mr. Mantosh Sondhi, Chairman, Ashok Leyland Limited to the Board of Directors of your Company. Mr. Sondhi has a very rich administrative experience and has held several important positions in the Govt. and industry. We look forward to his active participation in guiding the affairs of your Company.

Acknowledgements

DCM Limited, which started with a textile mill in Delhi ninety seven years ago, has grown upwards and outwards into a large conglomerate of diverse units. This has largely been possible through the enterprise of my predecessors, commitment of our managers, loyalty of our thousands of employees, the cooperation of the Financial Institutions and our Bankers, the support and encouragement of the Govt. of India and various State Governments and — most of all — the unstinting support of our Shareholders. To all of you, my most sincere thanks and gratitude.

Note: This does not purport to be a record of the proceedings of the annual general meeting.

DCM

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Performance.

The criterion for judging the level of success achieved by a company. The evidence of serious endeavour and efficient management. Performance speaks volumes for the sense of commitment at Swadeshi Polytex.

Driven by the ardour and professionalism of the present management, the entire team is putting in their very best. And bettering it all the time.

Taking recent performance as the indication, the company is racing ahead at super speed.
Towards a super record.

SP jailene®

Swadeshi Polytex Limited

creating tomorrow's fibre today.

Shems/20411/86

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

COMMON CAUSE

FOR the first time in recent corporate history, sworn enemies in the textile world have decided to don the raiment of friendship. After fighting and back-stabbing each other for decades, Orkay's Kapal Mehra and Reliance's Dhirubhai Ambani on the one hand and JK Synthetics' Govind Hari Singhania and Swadeshi Polytex's Raja Ram Jaipuria on the other have decided to come on a common platform, battered by plummeting profits and a shrinking domestic market. The textile industry's top 10 manufacturers have, in a joint memorandum, demanded adequate protection against imports from abroad and rationalisation of excise structure. Industry circles, however, feel that the new cartel has been formed just before the budget to cut into Bombay Dyeing's clout with the Government.

OIL HUNT

PRIVATE parties (multinational oil companies) have again submitted bids for exploration of offshore oil. This is the fourth round of bids. During the third round there were no takers (a real embarrassment to the Indian Government). This is not because there was no prospect of oil but because the Government's terms vis-a-vis repatriation and profit sharing were very strict. These terms have been liberalised again and companies will be allowed to explore almost on a turnkey basis with liberal royalty allowances. ONGC will only share in the profits and overall management. This is being done because of the upcoming oil crunch. The oil bill for exports is expected to cost India close to Rs 1,500 crore this year. Some of the companies bidding include Shell, Exxon, Chevron and Amoco. And there's more to come. The construction of a Rs 1,500-crore hi-tech refinery in Karnal is under consideration. The prime minister is personally examining proposals for the project and the Government is believed to be leaning heavily in the direction of letting a multinational undertake the scheme.

SHARPENING SKILLS

THE Tata group is sharpening its technological edge by going in for a whole spate of foreign collaborations. Heading the list is Nelco with as many as nine tie-ups on the anvil, some of which, like Mitsubishi for televisions and General Electric for a Tisco project, have already come through. Tisco is meanwhile, tapping Korf technology and is negotiating with Timken, 295th on the Fortune 500 list, for a ball bearing project. Aside from the Telco Honda accord which is still hanging fire, Tital watches (another Tata company) has hitched itself to Casio to manufacture quartz watches. The grape-vine has it that more than 20 other applications are awaiting government clearance.

BOOMING BUSINESS

DESPITE pressure on the corporate sector, the number of new companies floated has almost doubled during the last five years. According to a recently published government report, the corporate sector registered an increase of over 88 per cent between 1980-1985 from 58,000 in 1980 to about 1.10 lakh in 1985. Not only have more companies sprung up, more money has gone into big business. The report states the paid up capital of public limited companies rose by 87 per cent from Rs 14,500 crore to Rs 27,500 crore.

RECORD HOLDERS

THE front-runners of the Indian corporate sector can be defined by more yardsticks than one. Reliance maintains its supremacy in the market capitalisation stakes and Tata Steel tops in sales, gross and net profits. A comprehensive study by Aridhi Investment Consultants of the performance of the 500 top companies over the past six years has an interesting list of corporate record holders.

Chart by B.K. SHARMA

Colgate, for instance, has paid the maximum cumulative dividend per share. In maximum cumulative earnings per share, however, it has been edged to third place by Bajaj Auto and Century Enka. The three top foreign exchange earners are Brooke Bond, Hindustan Lever and Lipton while the biggest exchange spending splurge of Rs 202 crore was by Reliance.

GOING PLACES

THE Rs 61.6-crore turnover Blow Plast Ltd, which saw a 20 per cent growth in net profits in 1985-86 is set for another diversification spree. Its earlier ventures had largely stuck to the moulding machines—a phase which came to an end with its Jalgaon processed foods unit launched in August. The next project is for marketing various types of writing instruments. There has, however, been a temporary hitch—the four brand names the company wanted are already registered. The choice is now likely to be "Magna". The company also hopes to get into sale of computer software from the middle of this year. It is also keeping its option open on going in for manufacture of a whole range of electronic products and marketing management consultancy services. While the other projects have a longer maturation period, the writing instruments and software sorties are expected to add Rs 6 crore to the company's sales in the first year itself. Blow Plast has packed its VIP suitcases with plans to go places.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

INDO-FRENCH TRADE

Impressive Gains

SIX years ago, the French had barely a presence on the economic map of India. But starting in 1980, when the then president Valery Giscard d'Estaing became the first French head of state to visit India, they have more than made up for the earlier passivity. French collaboration—notably in the public sector—now straddles power stations and nuclear plants, fighter aircraft and helicopters, space research and telecommunications, oil exploration and environmental control. The signing of a "letter of intent" for the Rs 820-crore Dulhasti hydel project in Jammu & Kashmir last month with the French firm CGE Alsthom is only the latest in a series of French coups.

Increasingly, France is being seen as a serious contender to the country's traditional partners—the Soviet Union, the US and Britain. India's quest for sophisticated technology and the French capability to provide it, backed with innovative financial arrangements, has resulted in establishing a hardy base to Indo-French economic ties. This relationship has even withstood political squalls, like the involvement of key French Embassy officials in the Coomar Narain affair, and disagreements on such sensitive needs as the supply of enriched uranium for the Tarapur nuclear plant. Many Indian experts felt that the French were intractable, even rather perverse, in insisting on numerous sub-clauses to the transfer of uranium.

Although d'Estaing's visit marked a watershed—it was following that the National Aluminium Company (NALCO) signed a technical collaboration contract with Aluminium Pechiney for its Rs 1,600-crore complex in Orissa—it was the perception and initiative of the erstwhile French socialist government which cemented the bonds. Francois Mitterrand and his colleagues were attracted by the beguiling facade of Rajiv Gandhi as a "Third World leader". They descended on New Delhi in droves—ministers, bureaucrats, industrialists and most of them accompanied by their wives. Mitterrand's first Asian stop was India: "Along with Algeria and Mexico, India is one of the three pillars of the Third World," he proclaimed.

France's interest in the Indian market was not so much a case of a sudden outbreak of Indophilia among the French as of a calculated weighing of international trade and economic options that lured the French into the subcontinent. France's export industries, notably defence, were finding it hard to discover new markets. South America with its balance of payment problems had ceased to be attractive. With shrinking oil revenues, the Gulf was no more an irresistible target area. While the Iran-Iraq war came as a boon to the country's arms peddlers, the glitter soon faded as Iraq's defence debts to France went through the roof. Areas of Africa still under French influence are virtually broke. And the earlier promise of the billion-man Chinese market proved to be illusory because of China's relative inability to cope with quick economic expansion or absorb large doses of western high technology.

The Indian market was becoming increasingly tempting. Especially so under Rajiv Gandhi. When he revealed his 1985-86 budget, seasoned businessmen

Rajiv with French Prime Minister Chirac

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

in Paris habituated to negotiating complex deals with India couldn't believe their eyes. As one veteran said with pleasure: "It is still not wild capitalism (capitalisme impeteux) but it is beginning to look like economic liberalism." Particularly attractive was India's new liberal outlook on foreign technology. While the Indian market is not of any real bread-and-butter importance to France since it still lags behind others in the private sector, government to government cooperation has taken off impressively.

The signing of a flurry of "memos of understanding" were summed up by a French official: "India and France have a special relationship." Prominent examples of the hefty contracts won by French firms in the last six years include: Cit-Alcatel's huge contract to construct the first integrated digital switching factory in Gonda; Marcel Dassault-Breguet Aviation's contract to produce 40 Mirage 2000 aircraft (36 fighters and 4 trainers) valued at Rs 17 crore each; Aerospatiale's contract to supply 27 Dauphin helicopters at an estimated cost of Rs 82 crore; the Hazira-Bijaipur-Jagdishpur (HBJ) pipeline contract to the French-Japanese consortium led by Spie-Capag (total cost: Rs 720 crore); Airbus Industrie's contract to supply six Airbuses to Air-India to replace its existing fleet of Boeing 737s with a loan of US $ 393 million.

During the last few years, several French heavyweights were responsible for influencing the French Government favourably towards India. The single most important personality was the late Jean Riboud, boss of the giant Schlumberger group and long an India lover—perhaps because of his Indian wife Krishna—and a personal friend of Mitterrand. Others include Jacques Atali, the President's one-man think-tank at the Elysee Palace, the former foreign minister Claude Cheysson, industrialist Patrice Pelat, and designer Jean Louis Dumas of the Hermes group.

LEADING INDO-FRENCH COLLABORATIONS

NALCO- ALUMINIUM PECHINEY	Rs	1,600	Crore
40 MIRAGE 2000- MARCEL DASSAULT-BREGUET	Rs	680	Crore
27 DAUPHIN HELICOPTERS- AEROSPATIALE'S	Rs	82	Crore
HBJ PIPELINE - SPIE-CAPAG	Rs	720	Crore
6 AIRBUSES - AIRBUS INDUSTRIE	Rs	1,800	Crore
DULHASTI HYDEL PROJECT- CGE ALSTHOM	Rs	820	Crore
TOTAL	Rs	5,702	Crore

* Over the past three years

India's quest for sophisticated technology and the French capability to provide it, backed with innovative financial arrangements, has strengthened economic ties. But all is not wine and roses. Indian exporters have encountered a wall of protectionist legislation and private sector trade continues to be feeble.

Indo-French organisations like the "Association France-Union Indienne" steered by former ambassador Jean Daridan and Monique Moraz, and backed by an influential group of senators like Alain Poher, constantly keep India in public focus through organising high-profile seminars. The economic effort is coordinated by Francis Dore's Indo-French Economic Association, which has considerable clout with the current right-wing government and has amongst its members influential French industrialists with wide business interests in Asia. The French foreign office, until recently, was virtually run by old India hands such as Andre Ross and Serge Boidevaix, both former ambassadors in Delhi. And most French companies, with blessings from their government, station their own agents and lobbyists in Delhi.

AND the lobbying often gets hot, heavy, and controversial. While the aluminium complex in Orissa was fairly straightforward—a path-breaking accord signed by d'Estaing to signal the elevation of Indo-French economic collaboration—other contracts evoked considerable controversy. The Mirage deal provoked the Soviets and the British lobbies to knock the aircraft's "suitability" for the subcontinent, as well as its price; the telecommunications project at Gonda ran into heavy fire after critics said its hybrid E-10 B system was not as modern as made out to be. But French sources admit that it was favoured by India only after the French Government quietly offered to intervene with soft loans and grants as part of a broader package that included the Mirage as well as enriched uranium for Tarapur.

Similar controversies engulfed the sale of planes to Air-India and Indian Airlines by Airbus Industrie, and the HBJ pipeline project. According to sources here, what clinched the deal was when the French Government stepped in with an agreement that broke new ground in the field of soft loan export credits. For the first time, France extended a so-called single "monobloc loan" instead of the traditional mix involving a package comprising of treasury soft loan and commercial bank credits at consensus rates. It involves 1.2 billion francs.

In another typical move, French Foreign Trade Minister Michel Noir, during a visit to Delhi last month, proposed a credit package of Rs 700 crore to cover the foreign exchange component of three projects: HBJ, purchase of French helicopters and the Dulhasti Hydel Project. He also gave considerable publicity to France's keenness to participate in the manufacture of the prestigious Light Combat Aircraft for the Indian Air Force. He has weighty support from India's Ambassador in Paris I.H. Latif.

Said Latif: "You just have to look around you. Europe is saturated. Latin America has its debt problems. Our debt repayment record is excellent. Besides whatever internal strife there may be, we are still perceived as a country with political stability. Our effort here has been to really convince them that they need to hurry. The world is not waiting for them."

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Part of this effort was made via the year-long Festival of India in France, the result of an agreement between Mrs Gandhi and Mitterrand, which helped dispel deeply-etched Louis Malle images of damning squalor and deprivation, of mysticism and maharajas. The French also hoped that such extensive contacts would help India, in its own self-interest, recognise what it could gain economically and technologically from their country.

In defence, the French had built up a legendary reputation and were amongst the foremost arms salesmen competing with the two superpowers. They were amongst the leaders in telecommunications, computers, nuclear energy, space research, automobiles and rail transport. The socialists were eagerly scouring for new markets and India was potentially a prime partner. But there were voices of caution, on how not to deal with the Indians. The highly-respected confidential International Letter published by Danielle Hunebelle in Paris, acknowledged as one of the most expensive in the world, warned in a recent analysis: "India's obsession is to modernise its industry... using new technology... to export goods and earn foreign exchange. Don't think of going into India with second-rate equipment....The Indians already have enough of that... Your profits will lie in bringing in the best...India's highest priority is in electronics. Its people are skilled in designing software....I see excellent prospects in food processing, desperately needed... Bring in capital goods for servicing the power and telecommunications industries. Make machine tools and metal working equipment, medical instruments, road building and mining machinery." The newsletter went on: "If you are not among the hundreds of western companies now there, get your foot in the door."

Mrs Gandhi with Mitterrand in '82

The agreement on the Festival of India between Mrs Gandhi and Mitterrand helped dispel wrong notions about this country besides awakening India to what it could gain from France.

Despite this upbeat scenario and talk of a "special relationship", analysts like Francis Dore and many specialists warn that the impression of a "booming Indo-French trade" is illusory. Compared with Britain, the US and other West European nations, France still lags behind. The share of French technical collaborations accounted for only 6 per cent of the total Indian market and French investments represented only 2 per cent of the total foreign investments in India. All is not wine and roses in this relationship. India continues to encounter major problems in dealing with the French. Indian exporters have time and again come against a wall of protectionist legislation. Even as public sector cooperation has zoomed, private sector trade continues to be feeble. Harish Mahindra, the Indian industrialist, once leading a delegation of the Indo-French Chamber of Commerce and Industry, complained it was unacceptable that year after year the fourth industrial power in the world should have an inconsequential share of foreign collaborations entered into by India.

India continues to export "traditional items" to France: leather, garments, and jewellery, seafood and few heavy engineering items. There has been no hard-nosed follow-up to numerous seminars as to how Indian exports could be augmented and even moved away from these few areas. French financing continues to be notoriously unattractive. Says Ambassador Latif: "I do not want easier or softer loans. What I tell them is make your packages more competitive. Otherwise you miss the bus." While many French industrialists tend to agree that their credits are not "exciting", they caution that France does not have "unlimited funds".

While Indian officials are concerned about the balance of trade being consistently tilted in favour of France, they no doubt wish to keep up the momentum of Indo-French industrial cooperation. Viewed from Paris, that does not seem so easy. The socialist President and his conservative prime minister have been making rough weather of their now famous "cohabitation". Jacques Chirac, who visited India as prime minister in 1976, has been lurching from crisis to crisis: terrorism, student demonstrations and now bushy-tailed trade unions in a confrontationist mood. His attention has been rivetted on domestic strife, whereas President Mitterrand, perhaps the foxiest politician in the West with one eye fixed firmly on the next presidential elections, has adopted a posture of cool disdain and hauteur for the "incompetence" of the right-wing Government. However, officials of the Chirac Government insist that they are as anxious as their socialist predecessors to enhance ties and industrial cooperation with India. So no doubt, are its eager arms peddlers and corporate executives. They realise—as does New Delhi presumably—that these resounding proclamations of "special relationship" are firmly anchored in the continuing series of economic and technical agreements.

—RAMESH CHANDRAN in Paris

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

EVEN WHEN TRAFFIC CRAWLS IN NEW YORK, DHL DELIVERS ON TIME.

DHL's own fleet of 59 aircraft and helicopters complement 1,250 scheduled flights daily. So in places like New York and Houston, where the traffic density is heavy, you can trust DHL to make your documents fly.

In India, DHL caters to 80% of the top 101 companies, linking 35 business cities with over 50 offices.

It takes a lot to be No. 1 in the courier business. DHL. In India and worldwide.

Supersure, Superfast, Supercourier.

DHL WORLDWIDE EXPRESS®

DHL THE COURIER SERVICES DIVISION OF AIRFREIGHT PRIVATE LIMITED. Ahmedabad: 400211, 400212, 408077. Narol: 397363. Alleppy: 3373. Bangalore: 561905, 561906, 561907. Baroda: 322061, 322062, 322063, 322053, 322054. Bhubaneswar: 53178. Bombay: Nariman Point: 224190, 230163, 230171, 243519, 2046437, 2046457. Ballard Estate: 265761-265766. Worli: 4926333, 4921605, 4926643. Carnac Bunder: 263414. Airport: 6122057 - Ext. 369, 6121883. Calcutta: 448401, 446279, 442174. New Alipore: 459580. Chandigarh: 40400. Cochin: 6163, 69477, 69583. Coimbatore: 31305. Dehradun: 24566. Delhi: 3318945, 3318948, 3311896. Nehru Place: 6433360, 6439460. Rajendra Place: 5715543, 566383. Airport: 391351 - Ext. 2386, 392915. Hosur: 6810. Hyderabad: 237803, 237804, 237519. Airport: 1-11-256/A1/1, Road parallel to Airport approach, Begumpet, Hyderabad 500 016. Jaipur: 45372, 44479. Jammu: 47169, 47561. Jamshedpur: Ram Rup & Tulsi Bhawan, 2nd Floor, Room No. 6, Diagonal Road, Bistupur, Jamshedpur 831 001. Kalamassery: 6111. Kanpur: 212806, 212294, 212674. Ludhiana: 24708. Madras: 476315, 472264, 476834, 476152, 476175, 472331. Guindy: 431438. Parry's Corner: 23548. Ambattur: No. 883, 'C', 1st Floor, M.T.H. House, Ambattur, Madras 600 050. Madurai: 25262. Mangalore: 27425. Mysore: 32701. Pune: 26071, 26073, 28874. Wakadewadi: 53410. Quilon: 2673, 3631, 3632. Rajkot: 32016, 27262, 27224. Secunderabad: 74246, 72277. Srinagar: 75540, 71268. Tirupur: 22819. Trichy: 32244. Trivandrum: 65863, 67231, 86216. Tuticorin: 20660. Visakhapatnam: 61930.

RAKA:1280A:86

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Announcing the Plaza Nav Bharat, Hyderabad

It's the best address you can find for your office. In India!

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Platinum-edged Location

Hyderabad, the new boom city. Rapidly growing, power rich. The ideal location for fast expanding business. Now with the advantage of India's best business address—the Plaza Nav Bharat, Somajiguda. Strategically poised between the city's air and rail terminals, five star hotels and industrial estates.

An Office Complex Where Everything Works

Behind the granite and glass facade, the Plaza is all international style, all convenience. 6 floors of prime office space with a grand 4-floor shopping arcade below. Modern amenities like 8 active, wide-bodied elevators, standby generators, intercom exchanges, 24-hour water and security, a spacious conference hall and a basement and ground floor parking lot for as many as 300 cars. And, best of all, by a stroke of architectural ingenuity, access ways that both integrate and separate the shopping and office floors.

For Shopping Or Eating Out, Stay In

The Plaza's 4-level shopping arcade comes with modern and advanced state-of-the-art comforts .... central air-conditioning, soft piped-in music, carpeted escalators to all the shopping floors, a bank of pay-phone booths and more. The Plaza's international standard restaurant two floors up from the lobby is ideal for brisk business lunches or for entertaining valued clients. So to shop and dine in style, you don't even have to step out of the Plaza.

Incomparable Corporate Image

Having a place in the Plaza Nav Bharat will be like having your name in the Who's Who of the Indian industry. The location, the advantages, the company you keep, all go to upscale your corporate profile. Not just in Hyderabad, but in all of India.

Your Office Belongs Here

The Plaza has space for several prestigious offices in dimensions ranging from 119.784 sq. metres (1288 sq.ft.) to 687.642 sq. metres (7394 sq.ft.) and for a large number of exclusive shops and showrooms in dimensions ranging from 27.435 sq. metres (295 sq.ft.) to 87.327 sq. metres (939 sq.ft.).The Plaza will be ready for part occupation by 1988.

Promoting this unique plaza is the well-established, dynamic Nava Bharat Group. A Rs. 220 crore conglomerate, that is the second largest export house in the country. Managed by a young team of thoroughbred professionals, the Group exports tobacco and tea, manufactures products as diverse as cigarettes, capacitors, vegetable oils, sugar and industrial linings. It is also involved in marine and drilling operations and ferro alloys, and has taken over the renowned Beardsell Group and all its manufacturing and marketing divisions. Yes, the Nava Bharat Group backs its structural strength with solid corporate strength.

To book your footage of prestige, for rent or ownership, mail in Coupon for the free colour brochure, to the address shown below.

Name .....

Designation .....

Company .....

Address .....

.....

PLAZA NAV BHARAT

The ideal home for your business

Nava Bharat House, 6-3-654, Somajiguda, Hyderabad 500 004, India

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

'When I think of the good things in life, there's one I just cannot leave out.'

'When I look back and think about things life has given me, I feel really grateful. A happy childhood, the best possible education, fame on the cricket field, an understanding wife, lovely children...

Yet, just when I decide I've seen it all, life loves to spring surprises on me. It did that some time ago. By introducing me to Gwalior Suiting. Their Golden Glade Worsted Suiting and Dornfab ranges are a perfectionist's dream. I immediately added Gwalior Suiting to my list of the good things in life. It's one suiting I recommend without hesitation to every man who cares about what he wears.'

M. A. K. PATAUDI

GWALIOR SUITING

IN A CLASS OF ITS OWN

MAPP-GR-86-115

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

STUD FARMS

On Rough Turf

JUST two years ago, the thunder of hooves over the Indian turf had seemed deafening. With horse-racing turnover registering an average growth of over 35 per cent every year, the animals were in short supply and horse breeders couldn't count their money fast enough. Everybody who could rein in a stallion opened a stud farm and made a killing. And then suddenly the bandwagon gave way. There were too many taking a ride.

A mere 30 stud farms at the beginning of the '70s grew to 100 by the mid-'80s and the number of horses parading the auction ring shot up from 365 to 915. Only, the demand couldn't keep pace and the yearlings galloping in suddenly found no takers. There has been no increase in the number of racing venues. The ban on horse-racing by the Tamil Nadu Government has only worsened the situation. The closure of the Madras Race Club has blocked out an annual demand of nearly 200 new horses.

The industry in India has never seen such a glut. In fact, it has been a sellers' market with an acute shortage of horses ever since Partition, when the scalpel ran through the industry, leaving the racing venues in India and the stud farms in Pakistan.

Until this recession, the average price for a colt or filly was over Rs 1 lakh. It dipped to as low as Rs 44,000 at last fortnight's auction in Madras. Understandably, there is panic among the breeders. This price not only chews away at the once handsome profits but even implies considerable losses for the medium-sized stud farms. "Private breeders who have been in the business for more than 30 years are slowly getting out," says Dr Farokh Wadia, secretary of the National Horse Breeding Society of India. "We are in a very tough situation and do not quite know where we are heading," admits Farooq Rattonsey, owner of the Kehelan Stud Farm in Bangalore.

"The prices will not look up for another five years at least," predicts Major Pradeep Mehra, former national polo player and commandant of the President's Bodyguard who now owns Usha Stud Farm, one of the largest in the country. Mehra is watching the market anxiously with nearly 20 young horses to sell this season.

Though the industry is reeling, those in the top bracket, producing thoroughbreds, have less to worry about. Although prices have come down across the board, the depression has been less for the more expensive horses. "Good horses can still be sold, it's the trash which remains unsold," says Rajendra Singhji, former maharaja of Idar, who runs a large stud farm on his estate north of Ahmedabad. The bigger and more established breeders like Singhji and Mehra feel that this recession may turn out to be a blessing in disguise for the industry. They feel that only the best will survive, making for better breed and quality.

"Breeders have so far lived sheltered lives and have not been interested in attracting new owners," points out S.C. Jain, chairman of the Royal Western India Turf Club, the country's premier racing club. "They have made no real effort to promote the sport," adds A.K.S.(Sonny) Brar, owner of the Dashmesh Stud Farm in Faridkot. Until now, with horses in short supply, the various turf clubs were vying with each other to attract them by advancing attractive interest-free loans, subsidised stabling and free maintenance of horses. It is no longer so, as the clubs have realised that there are far too many horses peering over their fences in any case.

Having now become acutely aware of the need to do something urgently about increasing the demand for their horses, around 20 breeders have come together to form a public limited company, the Thoroughbred Racing and Breeding Ltd (TRBL). This step is

"Private breeders who have been in the business for more than 30 years are slowly getting out."

FAROKH WADIA
secretary, National Horse Breeding Society of India.

"Breeders have so far lived sheltered lives and have not been interested in attracting new owners."

S.C. JAIN
chairman, Royal Western India Turf Club

Horse breeding: an uncertain future

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

designed to promote racing and open new race courses in India. TRBL has taken up Meerut and Lucknow, but is facing problems in the capital city of Uttar Pradesh as the local Gymkhana Committee does not want to relinquish control.

Breeders feel that they are being given a raw deal. Cash continues to flow in through the betting counters, clubs continue to make money, and the Government makes over Rs 25 crore every year through tax on racing. And yet their own share in the industry's annual turnover—estimated at well over Rs 200 crore—is declining rapidly.

They say the recession is only partly explained by the simple mechanics of demand and supply. According to them, the other major factor depressing the market is bad management of horse racing by turf clubs.

"People are getting fed up of owning horses because racing is not straight," asserts General Wadalia of the Qutb Stud Farm in New Delhi, who has been in the breeding business for nearly two decades. "Lack of control over the organisation of racing is leading to this recession," he feels. Other breeders agree and cite the case of Bangalore where the state Government had to take over the management of the Turf Club as stewards reportedly had an interest in some horses and were blatantly manipulating the results to fill their pockets.

By and large, the Centre shows very little interest in the sport since it is a state subject. And with almost all major racing centres—Bangalore, Hyderabad, Calcutta, Madras—falling in non-Congress(I) states, there is virtually no coordination in policies.

Breeders have made repeated representations to the respective state governments about their problems but the passive response has made them throw up their hands. "I don't think people in the Central Government are really worried. They would've been worried if they didn't get their revenue," remarks Major B.P.Singh, of the Guru Hari Stud Farm in Delhi echoing the sentiments of most disgruntled breeders.

With the states neither showing interest in opening new racing centres nor offering any incentives to prospective owners for the purchase of horses, breeders are getting increasingly worried as the February auction in Bombay draws near. Over 600 horses will be up for sale and nobody dares to predict how low the price will dip—or how many breeders will be forced to close shop this season.

—TANIA MIDHA with M. RAHMAN

ACC-BABCOCK

In Boiling Water

WHEN a Fortune 500 public sector giant takes on a comparatively puny private sector company, no one need guess who the gods will favour. When the behemoth has also the Government rooting for it, all that will probably be left is to pick up the pieces. And this is precisely what has happened to ACC-Babcock Ltd (ABL) after Bharat Heavy Electricals Ltd (BHEL) decided to lock horns with it in the market.

Chart by B.K. SHARMA

Today ABL, a Rs 57-crore company, has filed a winding up petition in the Bombay High Court: its 6,000 workers have been paid a paltry Rs 500 apiece since October. Accumulated losses have mounted to Rs 26.71 crore. The immediate order book is blank and emergency meetings are on in Delhi to decide on how to dispose of the remains. "We have gone to the Government and told them, do what you will," says a senior ABL executive. "Take us over if you want. We just can't carry on any longer."

ABL's tale of woe began in 1981. Primarily a boiler manufacturer, its sole competitor in the country was the Rs 1,700-crore public sector giant BHEL. Under long-standing arrangement, ABL was traditionally given a quota from all the available orders: mainly from state electricity boards and other power generation units. But 1981 ushered in an order famine and BHEL grabbed for itself orders for more than 10,000 MW leaving a meagre 210 MW for its rival partner. Under Industry Ministry's patronage, BHEL resisted all the Energy Ministry's appeals to give ABL a slice of the cake.

Early last year, threatening to wind up, ABL approached the Government with its woes suggesting, among other options for the problem, a take-over or even a merger. And on February 24 last year, Vasant Sathe, energy minister presided over a meeting in his office which was attended by then industry minister N.D. Tiwari and officials of the ministries of energy, industry and the Planning Commission. Together they worked out a compromise, agreeing that ABL should be given its rightful share.

But such was not to be. The argument given this time around for back-tracking was that BHEL itself has no orders. Minister of State for Public Enterprises K.K. Tewary told INDIA TODAY that he was worried about the depleting orders and would not entertain any "tinkering around in such a core sector". Dismissing ABL's petition for a take-over if there was no other solution, the minister of state, said categorically: "Under no circumstances am I going to consider taking over ACC-Babcock or merging it with BHEL."

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Caught in the cross-fire with no solution in sight, ABL officials were nonplussed. "We are stuck in a squeeze play," says an ABL official. "They tell us we must compete for orders. But when it is a government body supplying to a government body how do we get an edge in."

In 1982 ABL had got a letter of intent for supply of three 210 MW boilers from the West Bengal State Electricity Board (WBSEB). However, these were snatched away by BHEL after the electricity board was reshuffled. After much persuasion, the public sector company agreed to hand back one of the boilers.

ABL blames its problems on the Government. They say that it was at the Government's request in 1976-77 that it enhanced boiler manufacturing capacity from 500 MW to 1,000 MW. But now when the Government's ambitious power programme has gone awry and orders are not so easily forthcoming, BHEL promptly grabs whatever is available while its smaller rival is left stranded.

There is, of course, another side to the story. BHEL contends that it has been getting orders simply because it maintains a finer quality. They accuse ABL of producing inferior products, priced so high that it cannot compete in the open market. They also claim that the company's after sales servicing is poor.

However, given the fact that users have expressed dissatisfaction with both BHEL and ABL boilers such charges are difficult to prove. Besides, BHEL has been accused of undercutting its boiler price and making up on turbines (it is the only turbine manufacturer in the country) in order to edge out ABL.

All this unofficial mud slinging notwithstanding, the Government has set up a five-man committee to decide ABL's future. The company at present is constructing boilers for various projects worth Rs 2,000 crore. But as the WBSEB and the Department of Atomic Energy who have placed orders with ABL have testified before the Bombay High Court, their projects will get indefinitely delayed if the company shuts down as BHEL and ABL technology are poles apart. The boilers are still in various stages of construction and, worried officials say, it will not be possible for the public sector giant to immediately step into the breach.

As things stand, ABL's future is gloomy. Yet another idea aired as a possible solution—a proposal reportedly backed by Vasant Sathe—is a plan to pump in an estimated Rs 25 crore to revive the company. But concerned officials admit that this can only be successful if the order bottleneck is cleared. The plan is not being taken very seriously, because with resources still scarce to finance the power programme, most see it as yet another possible instance of promises that will not be kept.

Energy Minister Sathe, keen to save ABL, has reportedly backed a plan to pump Rs 25 crore into the ailing company.

"We cannot get led away by Vasant Sathe's bohemianism."

K.K. TEWARY minister of state for public enterprises

But all efforts to bail out the company are stalled. Tewary, remains a formidable stumbling block in the plans to save the company. The minister of state emphasised that in spite of Sathe's being in favour of helping out ABL, "we cannot get led away by the bohemianism of Vasant Sathe." He admitted that considering the fact that thousands of workers are involved, there is "tremendous amount of pressure. But I will never agree and the Industry Ministry is also against the take-over." Tewary said angrily: "They are literally threatening us, presenting us with a fait accompli with their Bombay High Court petition saying, 'take us over or we'll go in for liquidation'."

"There are apologists in their favour saying we must save the investment in the company by financial institutions. But we are not going to take over any sick industry or any industry likely to go sick in the near future," stressed Tewary, pointing out that "had the company been serious about keeping good health, they would have jolly well used the various licenses they have stacked away for diversification."

The minister of state says he has had "enough of taking over companies after they have been squeezed white by the private sector". He argued that any such step would only negate all the measures they have been taking to restore the profitability of the public sector. Proclaiming that he was refusing permission on principle, he asked: "What do we do about the hundreds of other such companies—Rohtas for instance—waiting to be taken over? Whom would we say no to?"

In the meantime the State Bank of India has frozen ABL's accounts leaving it with not even enough money to make a second token payment to its workers (Rs 500 for each person was put together by scraping the bottom of the barrel from another account). The Industrial Development Bank of India which had been approached for a loan of Rs 21-crore to finance projects has rejected the application. All work, hence has ground to a standstill.

Resigned to their fate, an ABL executive said: "Right now the ball is no longer in our court. Let the court decide what we should do and tell the Government. We shall accept whatever they say." Apathy it seems breeds in boilers too.

—PARTHASARATHI SWAMI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

TOURISM

Busting Records

FOR the country's tourism industry, 1986 turned out to be a dream year. Right from January foreign tourists flocked to the country's varied holiday resorts and by Christmas their number had crossed the magical million mark—a figure that had eluded the country for more than five years. The result was a 26 per cent increase in foreign tourist arrivals, the highest ever. It quickly dispelled the gloom cast by the previous two years, that had seen arrivals drop by 5 per cent, and raised hopes of India emerging as a major tourist centre.

And even as foreign tourists searched for hotel rooms and contended with overbooked flights, the Union Tourism Ministry was busy making new year resolutions. The first: never get caught napping when a boom really booms. The ministry is finding it difficult to explain why India really clicked. Tourism Secretary, S.K. Misra thinks it was the Festival of India (FOI) celebrations in the US, UK and France that had made "a very significant change in India's image abroad".

While, admittedly, the FOI did have an impact, other factors seemed to have helped as well. For instance, Bob Garner,34, an American salesman from Minnesota and his wife, Janet, came to India to "discover spirituality and values". He says that the film, Gandhi by Richard Attenborough had moved them considerably. In fact, the spate of films and television serials on India have had much to do with creating awareness.

But in an industry, which depends on the prevailing political climate as much as it does on the weather, several indirect factors could have spurred the Indian boom on. The Chernobyl nuclear disaster and the fear of radiation spreading into Europe, as well as the rise of terrorism in that region scared large numbers of American tourists away from the continent. Also, with Sri Lanka still a troubled paradise, many of the sun worshippers shifted their umbrellas to Indian beaches.

Surprisingly, India's continuing troubled political situation didn't seem to dissuade foreign tourists as in the previous years. Many in the travel business believe that the prime minister's positive image abroad has had much to do with this. As Inder Sharma, chairman, Sita Travels, one of the largest travel agents in the country, said: "The general perception of India seems to have improved and those who cancelled their holidays to India in 1985 took them in 1986."

Unlike the Tourism Ministry, not everyone in the business is dazzled by the million figure. Gautam Khanna, senior vice-president of the Oberoi chain of hotels, points out: "A million isn't a hell of a lot when you consider that a small Asian country like Singapore has more than five million tourists. And its about time we crossed it anyway."

And for travel agents the boom is worrying. C.S. Welinkar, president, Travel Agents Association of India, says: "Hotel rooms and airlines seats are already overbooked and unless tourist facilities increase dramatically we might end up with a debacle soon." But with most of the travel agents having recorded a healthy growth rate of 25 per cent they aren't complaining too much.

The hotel industry too has been booming. The Government-owned India Tourism Development Corporation, the largest hotel group in the country, recorded a 15 per cent increase in occupancy rates in most of its hotels and a happy R.S. Jolly, senior vice-president, says: "Our profits have more than doubled." The Taj group of hotels not only found occupancy rates shooting up by 5 per cent but Rabindra Seth, special advisor, public relations, says: "Our lean season for foreign tourists had shrunk from six months to just two—June and July."

PRASHANT PANJIAR

That seems to be a national trend. While previously most foreigners visited the country during the more "civilised" months from October to March, of late arrivals between April and August have been rising rapidly and are now almost equal that of other months. For instance,

Chart by B.K. SHARMA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Bargaining at New Delhi's Janpath; (right) lounging by a hotel pool

while November 1986 brought the maximum tourists, 1.05 lakh, August wasn't really far behind with 86,921 and wet June drew 76,145 foreign tourists.

INITIAL estimates indicate that British tourist traffic, which forms the largest single chunk, jumpedup by 21 per cent last year. Tourists from the US, the second largest group, increased by 14 per cent. But the real surprises came from Soviet Union, Italy, Spain and France with tourists to India showing a 50 per cent increase. Bloating the boom was a healthy rise in tourist traffic from Germany, Belgium, Canada and the Middle East.

Tourists on a repeat visit formed a high 42 per cent of the arrivals to India last year. But there has been a definite shift in the type of foreign tourists. While cultural tourism still forms the largest motivating factor, there is an increasing number who come to spend time at Indian beaches and mountain resorts. But the fastest growing segment is business tourism. With India playing host to several international conferences—apart from entering into many more foreign collaborations than before—there has been a 25 per cent increase in the movement of executives to the country.

Last year, foreign exchange earnings from tourism were estimated to be around Rs 1,800 crore making it possibly the largest net foreign exchange earner in the country, outstripping export earnings from such varied merchandise as handicrafts, gems, precious stones and readymade garments.

ITDC

The Union Government, which had for long regarded tourism as a "luxury industry", has only now begun to realise its vast economic potential. As a first step it has persuaded most states to declare tourism as an industry. This may help the hotel sector with much-needed subsidies for land and investment costs and should do much for developing the niggardly infrastructure facilities that currently exist in the country.

But with the Tourism Ministry setting an ambitious target of wooing 2.5 million tourists by 1990, the challenge is even greater. Hotel facilities will have to increase substantially to meet the demand. Currently there are 500 approved hotels having around 31,600 rooms and the ministry estimates that another 250 hotels with about 25,000 rooms have to be added in the next three years. At the moment this seems an uphill task.

Meanwhile, in a bid to boost publicity abroad, it approved of an additional Rs 5 crore for 1987. By next month, Americans and Europeans are going to be subjected to a massive publicity blitz. The Tourism Ministry has lined up 200 advertising films of 30 seconds each to be put into every major television programme in these countries apart from backing them up with similar spots on the radio. Other than projecting adventure tourism and its beach resorts, the overriding message will be "India is a land of all seasons", and for all reasons too.

And realising that there is a big potential for adventure tourism, the Centre is now apportioning a large part of its tourism budget for its development. Jammu & Kashmir has been the major beneficiary with Rs 14 crore being sanctioned for making Gulmarg an international ski-resort and Rs 1.4 crore towards the development of an international golf course. All this has left other states unhappy. Himachal Pradesh, for instance, complains that its major projects like an airfield at Shimla and cable car projects in its mountain resorts have been languishing for a lack of funds.

Another major area of complaint, which the ministry would find hard to resolve, are the inadequate airlines services. The flights are invariably overbooked and delays have become inevitable, leaving tourists sore. Enzo Pera, an Italian sales manager, who combines his business trip with tourism, complains: "I have never been to Kashmir because I could never get a seat on the flight to Srinagar." While the domestic airlines problem is going to be difficult to resolve in a bid to boost foreign charter tours, the cabinet has finally taken a decision to allow them to operate at a lower air fare. Till now Air-India insisted that the fare charged by charters should be similar to its rate but the new decision would certainly boost group travel.

But the most crucial aspect is the rapid development of infrastructure facilities within the country. A survey done by the Tourism Ministry indicated that as many as 42 per cent of the tourists came by what is called "word of mouth" publicity. And while Misra hopes that "Indian tourism would take off by 1990" it may as well take a nosedive if tourists go back complaining of the raw deal they received in the country.

—RAJ CHENGAPPA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

TELECOMMUNCA
ONLY THE PRINCIPLE

Present day telecommunications means not just two persons out of earshot talking to each other, but also people communicating with machines and machines with each other.

In the 100 years since Alexander Graham Bell first invented the telephone, technologies and equipment have grown infinitely more complex, more specialized to match growing communication needs.

In India, the first telephone was cranked into activity in 1881 in Calcutta. Since then, the Indian telephone network has grown in size, sophistication and in strength

Today, there are over 8,000 telephone exchanges with a total capacity of approx. 3.7 million lines in the country. All cities and towns in India have access to a telephone network. Over 8,000 villages are served by exchanges and nearly 22,000 by long distance public call offices.

The country is now switching over to electronic and digital exchanges. The first digital transmission route between Kanpur and Lucknow is operational. Optical fibre cables too, have been used on a test route.

AT&T and Philips Telecommunications (APT), formed by AT&T (USA), the largest

AT&T AND PHILIPS TELECOMMUNICATIONS

AT&T

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

UNCATIONS TODAY: PLE REMAINS SIMPLE

telecommunications company in the world and Philips (Holland), Europe's premier multi-technology electronics organisation, is not a new presence in India. The country has trusted the Philips name for over 50 years. Since 1984, APT has had the privilege of supplying 25 containerized electronic telephone exchanges suited for both urban and rural areas. An additional two are being currently installed at Delhi and Bombay.

In transmission too, Philips has been closely associated with the Indian telecommunications network for over 12 years. Today, APT is supplying India with advanced digital transmission systems which can carry 140 million signals per second (the equivalent of 1,920 simultaneous telephone conversations).

Our access to the best of American and European research and our experience worldwide make us an ideal partner for designing and building truly advanced and continually updated telecommunications networks to keep pace with India's programmes.

Where new needs are surfacing and where technologies have grown so advanced and so complex that today only the principle has anything in common with yesterday.

AT&T and Philips Telecommunications
India Liaison Office: Prakash Deep
Ist Floor, 7 Tolstoy Marg,
New Delhi 110 001.

React/0644/86/C

IONS YOUR CONNECTION WITH THE FUTURE

PHILIPS

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Issued by AT&T and Philips Telecommunications, Hilversum, Holland.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

DUPLICATOR INDUSTRY

Tough Times

THE price war bug seems to have bitten the duplicator industry. Even as prices continue to plunge in the personal computers sector, the duplicator industry seems to be undergoing a similar experience.

Yet market leader Modi Xerox is succeeding with a high priced product. "But then," says President B.K. Modi, "we are in a different league." It is Modi Xerox which has sent the others searching for storm shelters. In an industry composed of screwdriver units, importing kits and assembling them here, the entry of a large-scale manufacturer with both muscle and name is bringing about a sea change.

Efficiency Equipments, which was hawking the Sharp copier, closed shop three years ago. Says Rajiv Talwar who headed the outfit: "There were so many indigenous manufacturers coming in, it did not make sense to carry on."

Others left the decision far too late and are now finding it tough with all the manufacturers on a price cutting spree. Nelco, which has a tie-up with the Japanese MITA, was selling its 9122 model at Rs 80,000 in October 1983. Today it costs just Rs 68,000. "The market has become more competitive," says Rajendra Bhinge, divisional manager Office Products.

IBEL, priced its BM 121 at Rs 58,000 in May 1985, while now an equivalent model is priced at Rs 56,000. Even Modi Xerox while raising the price of its copiers by some 6 to 10 per cent, has reduced servicing charges, making the overall package a relatively cheaper proposition. "That is not a price cut. We are just passing on some benefits to the consumers," Operations Manager Mahesh Mani clarifies. He feels that the present price war is born out of a sense of panic. Many of the small-timers have been paying lower import duty through under-invoicing and have thus much larger margins to play with.

Others feel that the fall in prices is not due to competition. J.K. Malhotra Holdings, which markets the Nashua model, saw a 15 per cent drop in prices. "But that is due to the fall in the prices of kits," says Chairman Jayant Malhotra.

Many deny of any fall. Both Hindustan Reprographics Limited (HRL), which has a tie-up with Toshiba, and the Chowgules, who market the Canon machine are "maintaining levels". Incidentally, Gestetner, has a manufacturing arrangement for a Canon copier.

The Rs 60-crore industry with a growth rate of 25 per cent has only the haziest ideas about market share. "We have 35 per cent," says Modi Xerox. HRL claims another 35, J.K. Holdings says 20, Chowgules 20, Nelco 15....add them all up and you are closer to 250 than 100.

The confusion is apparent in the copier consumables market which is also witnessing a price war. Traditionally, the seller is supposed to provide all the necessary supplies of the key consumable—the toner. But toner prices had long been pegged at very high levels. Chowgules markets an 880 gm packet for Rs 2,075. But smuggled toners were available for Rs 1,600.

The situation has now been compounded with the entry of IBEL Chemicals, a company set up to manufacture toners for all copiers. When IBEL launched its Canon toner in mid-August last year at a price of Rs 1,350 there was a price crash. Open market levels were ruling at Rs 1,200. Copier companies are now finding one of their lucrative sources of income slipping away.

Says Mani: "We are not really bothered. Aside from IBEL, Modi Xerox has the only other toner manufacturing unit in the country. We just tell the customer that we are no longer responsible for the machine. After people see a few discards, they will stick to us."

Sales Manager Raj Unni of IBEL Chemicals is confident that they will soon capture a big chunk of the Rs 20 crore consumables market. With a tie-up with Olin Hunt of the US, technology will not be a problem.

Unni considers the high price of consumables as typical of Japanese marketing technique. "Sell the core product cheap and make a killing on the accessories and replacements. Just take a look at Maruti. We are out to break that cycle," he said quite confidently.

With the price of everything connected with the industry falling, it is the men lower down who will be effected. Jobbers who charged Rs 2 for a single copy, now charge 50 to 75 paise. It is a big segment now, but as offices increasingly install copiers, they will be out of business.

"It is a very fast changing scenario," says Mani. "We are on the threshold of a cultural change. The trouble is that in India we went in for computers before copiers. You go to a chairman's office and you will find a PC. It probably does not work or he does not know how to use it. But ask him for a copy of a document and he will set his typist at work."

What the copier crusade means is the demise of the cyclostyling machine. But that, is years a coming. It takes India long time to copy the ways of the West no matter how hard the copiers try.

—PARTHASARATHI SWAMI

With everyone on a price-cutting spree, manufacturers find the going difficult.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Instamoney

Courtesy: In Style

BOBCARD spells yet another advantage of being a Bank of Baroda account holder.

Wherever you go in India and Nepal on business or pleasure – the best of hotels will accept your BOBCARD immediately. So will leading stores – whatever your needs – from fans to furniture, from clothing to curios, you can get it all without cash at a moment's notice.

BOBCARD could also enable you to withdraw cash from specified branches of Bank of Baroda in the country.

A further convenience – a large network of identified branches all over India can service your BOBCARD requirements. The membership fee is extremely nominal.

BOBCARD

Instant convenience – use it in shops, hotels, departmental stores and other establishments.

Bank of Baroda
(A Government of India Undertaking)

Imageads/BOB/86406-B

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Feno's Greatfeel®

More than just a stunning cover-up!

The appeal of Feno's Greatfeel is its versatility. With one wash you can clean up sloppy stains. Even make a clean stroke after your little Picasso's finished his masterpiece.

Greatfeel – PVC Foam Leather Cloth.

The seat of luxurious comfort for over a decade. And the favourite feel of interior decorators.

In beautiful soft textures that shape snugly to pleating, moulding or ridging. In peacefully quiet and cheerfully loud colours that help you stamp your individuality.

Manufactured with the latest technique of Transfer coating by Release paper. Bring home that Greatfeeling.

A feeling that's exclusive.

Feno's Greatfeel®

Renoplast Private Ltd.

306, Chenoy Trade Centre, Parklane,

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Co-optex Show Rooms at:

Ajantha House, No. 164, Dr. D.N. Road, Fort, Bombay-400001. No. 2, Rajniketan Building No. 356, Bhandarker Road, Matunga, Bombay-400019. Udyog Mandir, No. 2, Basement, 7-C, Pitamber Lane Mahim, Bombay-400016. Plot No. 73, HIFA BAUG, M.D.S. Marg, South of Railway Station, Chembur, Bombay-400071. No. 4, Rupam Sion Circle, Sion, Bombay-400022. No. 2, India House, Opposite: G.P.O., Watchand Hirachand Marg., Fort, Bombay-400001. Apna Bazaar, Near Town Hall Building, Jam Nagar Post, Gujarat. Apna Bazaar, Lal Darwaja, Ahmedabad.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Amul Chocolates

a gift for someone you love

Marketed by:
Gujarat Co-operative
Milk Marketing
Federation Ltd., Anand

Six delicious varieties...
Amul Milk Chocolate, Amul Crisp, Amul Coffee,
Amul Fruit & Nut, Amul Bitter, Amul Orange

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THE MARKETS

Cheery Start

THE New Year has brought cheer. The bulls, so long battered by the bears, have begun sharpening their horns once more. The financial institutions, thanks to belated government instructions, returned as buyers at a time when the market had practically collapsed. Since December 8, therefore, they have been picking up nearly all the listed scrips that matter. This has resulted in the Financial Express' equity index (Base 1979 = 100) looking distinctly more chirpy, with a gain of more than 11 points from 349 at the close of last year.

The market has apparently rung out the old. But ringing in the new is a totally different matter altogether. Share values did perk up at the Calcutta Stock Exchange settlement on December 30. The bulls had to pay up just 12 per cent contango against 18 to 24 per cent a fortnight before. At the Bombay settlement six days later, it was the bears who had to bear the burden. Short of shares to deliver against the speculative sales they had made in the hope of values falling further, they had to instead pay up the interest on the difference in prices. But this is not really a sign of renewal of public confidence. The lay speculator has been once bitten and will think twice before he decides to take a shot at the markets again.

Chart by B.K. SHARMA

Scrips were up, thanks to the fund-flushed institutions (and many marketmen feel they were deliberately waiting for values to drop before getting into a lucrative rescue act). TELCO closed at Rs 640 on January 5, up from the Rs 582.50 at the close of 1986. TISCO also gained a welcome Rs 52.50 on rumours of a steel price hike. The bull operations were particularly noticeable in Reliance which moved up from a low Rs 182 to close at Rs 216. On the whole, however, listed scrips were devoid of common support.

The reasons are legion: a drug policy which still remains undefined, a software policy which after the initial bouquets is drawing its share of brickbats, and the anticipated deficit of a shocking Rs 5,000 crore in the next budget.

This is why even the year-end reserve forecast of an improvement in the economy during the next financial year did not have much impact on the trading sentiment. The people who had sold short have squared up but there is still a dearth of buyers.

Marketmen will look back at the year that went by as the year best forgotten. There were crises aplenty which inspired many an unscheduled closure. There were the raids, rampant inside trading and finally the promise that the much-needed reforms were on the anvil. The reforms were Rajiv Gandhi's guarantee and the markets are hoping he will deliver very soon.

ACTIVE STOCKS

	1986 HIGH	1986 LOW	CLOSE 7.1.87	Change in Fortnight
Ashok Leyland	45.00	23.00	32.00	0.50 +
Associated Cement	389.00	186.00	226.50	7.50 −
Atlas Copco	138.00	64.00	122.00	6.00 +
Asian Paints	280.00	130.00	220.00	8.75 +
Avery India	164.00	100.00	159.00	9.00 +
Bajaj Auto	4800.00	1950.00	4350.00	100.00 +
Baroda Rayon	490.00	205.00	232.50	nil
Bata India	131.50	54.00	136.00	7.50 +
Bayer	680.00	445.00	640.00	10.00 +
Bharat Forge	86.00	48.00	71.00	8.00 +
Britannia Ind	186.00	85.00	170.00	4.50 +
Blue Star	120.50	75.00	97.50	nil
Bombay Dyeing	49.20	30.80	43.00	5.00 +
Brooke Bond	96.75	56.00	84.00	4.00 +
Ceat Tyres	560.00	240.00	510.00	20.00 +
Century Spinning	1690.00	710.00	775.00	10.00 +
Chloride India	146.00	86.00	140.00	5.00 +
Colgate	385.00	200.00	357.50	10.00 +
DCM	58.50	26.25	37.50	1.00 −
Dunlop	75.50	49.75	73.25	0.25 +
Elecon	127.00	80.00	105.00	5.00 +
Escorts	117.00	69.00	81.00	2.00 −
Finolex Cables	125.00	36.00	118.00	3.00 +
Food Specialities	375.00	161.00	184.00	11.00 +
Garware Nylon	61.50	24.00	28.00	2.00 −
G.E. Shipping	36.00	13.00	19.25	1.00 +
Gujarat St Fertilisers	182.00	92.50	165.00	28.50 +
Grasim Ind	102.00	59.00	87.00	3.00 +
Hind Cocoa	265.00	97.50	256.25	10.75 +
Hindustan Lever	192.00	124.00	185.00	12.00 +
Hindustan Motors	128.50	29.25	33.75	3.00 −
Hind Dorr	660.00	255.00	327.50	17.50 +
IEL	84.50	48.00	60.50	0.50 −
Indian Hotels	157.00	75.00	97.50	7.50 +
Indian Organic	97.00	61.50	75.50	0.50 +
Indian Rayon	151.00	70.00	74.00	1.00 +
Indrol	515.00	200.00	490.00	30.00 +
Ingersoll-Rand	505.00	220.00	287.50	2.50 +
ITC	86.50	53.00	76.25	1.50 +
J.K. Synthetics	132.00	72.00	77.50	3.50 −
Kinetic Engineering	385.00	220.00	295.00	15.00 −
Kirloskar Cummins	775.00	505.00	740.00	7.50 +
Lakme	195.00	105.00	106.25	3.75 −
Larson & Toubro	204.00	82.50	96.00	1.00 −
Lipton	69.00	46.50	64.50	3.50 +
Lohia Machines	70.00	21.00	24.00	0.50 −
Madura Coats	92.00	51.00	70.00	1.00 +
Mahindra & Mahindra	86.00	36.50	46.00	1.00 −
Motor Industries	1000.00	352.50	385.00	10.00 +
National Organic	840.00	500.00	570.00	5.00 +
Nirlon	77.00	21.50	19.00	5.50 −
Orkay Silk Mills	192.00	92.00	110.00	10.00 +
Otis Elevator	200.00	88.00	180.00	10.00 +
Peico Electronics	104.50	48.00	57.25	0.25 −
Ponds	390.00	200.00	360.00	nil
Premier Auto	99.00	25.00	25.50	3.50 −
Ranbaxy	160.00	105.00	130.00	nil
Raymond	97.00	58.00	75.00	8.00 +
Reckitt & Colman	183.00	81.25	182.00	11.00 +
Reliance Industries	392.00	179.00	228.00	44.00 +
Shriram Fibres	88.00	30.00	36.00	0.50 +
Sandoz	142.50	62.00	140.00	18.00 +
SPIC	184.00	41.00	49.00	1.50 +
Tata Steel	1610.00	927.50	1120.00	125.00 +
Telco	910.00	460.00	620.00	72.50 +
Vulcan Laval	162.50	42.50	47.50	nil

WORLD VALUE OF RUPEE

COUNTRY	CURRENCY	UNIT	TT Selling Rates Rs	TT Buying Rates Rs
Australia	Dollar	1	8.7175	8.6722
Austria	Schilling	100	96.9489	96.1223
Bahrain	Dinar	1	34.8600	34.8000
Bangladesh	Taka	100	43.3110	43.2990
Canada	Dollar	1	9.5350	9.4586
Denmark	Kroner	1	1.8014	1.7872
Egypt	Pound	1	9.5480	9.4998
France	Franc	1	2.0512	2.0325
Hong Kong	Dollar	1	1.6856	1.6731
Indonesia	Rupiah	100	0.7900	0.7800
Iran	Rial	100	17.2030	17.1779
Italy	Lira	100	0.9400	0.9200
Japan	Yen	100	8.2712	8.2034
Kenya	Schilling	1	0.8100	0.8000
Kuwait	Dinar	1	44.6463	44.5900
Malaysia	Dollar	1	5.0505	5.0092
Mauritius	Rupee	1	0.9769	0.9665
Nepal	Rupee	1	0.6009	0.5907
Netherlands	Guilder	1	6.0052	5.9977
Pakistan	Rupee	1	0.7600	0.7500
Singapore	Dollar	1	6.0089	5.9977
Spain	Peseta	1	0.0969	0.0958
Sri Lanka	Rupee	1	0.4639	0.4554
Sweden	Kroner	1	1.9434	1.9262
Switzerland	Franc	1	8.1405	8.0754
Tanzania	Shilling	1	0.2800	0.2700
Thailand	Baht	100	49.9000	48.0000
UK	Pound	1	19.3704	19.2437
USA	Dollar	1	13.0900	12.9950
UAE	Dirham	1	3.5669	3.5665
USSR	Rouble	1	19.4900	19.4300
W. Germany	Deutschmark	1	6.8306	6.7796

These rates were supplied by The Bank of Tokyo Limited, New Delhi and quoted between the banks on 7.1.87.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Extracts from the Statement of the Chairman Sri M.L. Mittal at the 2nd Annual General Meeting held on 30th December, 1986.

"A year of considerable achievement and profitable growth"

Dear Shareholders,

It gives me immense pleasure to welcome you all at this Second Annual General Meeting of the Company. I wish to extend a warm welcome to the large family of about 30,000 members spread through out the country. I also take this opportunity to wish you all a very happy and prosperous new year.

IMPRESSIVE PERFORMANCE — A GOOD BEGINNING

During the period under review which was the very first year of operation, the Company achieved a turnover of Rs.47.75 Crores. The Company produced 30,379 MT of Galvanised Sheets inspite of teething constraints faced by the Company and was able to earn a profit before interest and depreciation of Rs.6.66 Crores. The production could have been much better, if the Company would have received adequate C.R. Coils, the principal raw material which is in short supply in India, and has to be procured mainly by way of imports.

Your Directors have recommended a dividend of 20% including a maiden interim dividend of 10% already paid in the very first year making a good beginning. These achievements show that your Company has amply demonstrated its ability, its will to work and its aim to maximize returns to the Shareholders.

PIONEERING IMPORT SUBSTITUTE PRODUCTS—HERALDING A NEW ERA.

You must be happy to note that though several Letters of Intent were issued by Government of India, ours is the first plant in the country to start production of thin gauge Galvanised Sheet with technical assistance from Nippon Denro Mfg. Co. Ltd., Japan. Hitherto imported, the production of ISPAT SHEETS heralded the era of thin gauge Galvanised Steel Sheets in the country. With regular indigenous availability the prices of thinner gauge Galvanised Sheets in the Country have come down considerably during the last year. The prices could have been brought down even further but for the anomalies existing in the present import duty structure i.e. the rate of import duty on C.R. Coils, principal raw material for the products of the Company is much higher than the import duty on the finished Galvanised Sheets.

The products of your Company are today in great demand and conform to the highest international standards.

The applications of the thin gauge Galvanised Sheets are manifold. In the past, due to non-availability of the thinner gauge sheets, its use was restricted to the areas of house buildings, factory sheds, airconditioning panels etc. However, by our emergence as local producers of thin gauge sheets, uses in other areas are expanding very fast. Your Company is planning to produce materials to meet the demands in various Industrial Sectors, like electrical appliances, automobiles, refrigeration, storage tanks etc. The Company's marketing development wing is actively exploring new areas of use to create further demands, as is being done in other developed countries. The Company has established 19 sales centres spread all over the country to ensure efficient distribution of the products and satisfaction of our consumers.

M.L. Mittal, Chairman

BUOYANT ECONOMY—RIGHT CLIMATE

Before I discuss the future plans of the Company, I would like to share my thoughts with you on the present economic scene. The new economic policy aims at reducing areas of control, minimising procedural requirements and creating incentives for savings, investments and efficiency. We can see the new thrust forward and I believe the Country is on the threshhold of a quantum leap in economic development. At Nippon Denro Ispat, we are perfectly positioned to capitalise on this situation.

EXPANSION AND DIVERSIFICATION—MEASURES OF CONTINUOUS GROWTH

A major hurdle in the company achieving higher production was the "regular availability of C.R. Coils — the basic raw material". To end this hurdle and also as a measure of continuous growth, your company decided to set up manufacturing facilities for C.R. Coils. The Company has already received a Letter of Intent for the manufacture of C.R. Coils with a capacity of 100,000 MT per annum. This Cold Rolling Mill complex is being set up in technical collaboration with the renowned HITACHI LTD of Japan and will involve a capital outlay of approx. Rs.80 Crores. The company is implementing this project with the same zeal, dynamism and dedication and I am confident that the project would be completed well within the implementation schedule.

THE ISPAT SPIRIT—SATISFACTION TO CUSTOMERS AND SHAREHOLDERS

We have the State-of-the-Art Technology and the finest facilities available, but at Nippon Denro Ispat Ltd, I feel our greatest competitive advantage is the Ispat Spirit which has developed our fast-paced, intense and enthusiastic approach to satisfying our customers and our shareholders. This spirit will fuel our future growth.

The impressive results that your Company has achieved in the very first year of operation are due to the ISPAT SPIRIT that exists in your Company.

I feel it is again the result of this ISPAT SPIRIT that the shares of your Company at present command a value of around Rs.43.00 in the capital market and is already a fancied script. Our endeavour to grow, and grow profitably, shall continue. And in the same vein our efforts to maximize returns to the shareholders. This spirit is crucial for our ongoing growth.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

Before I conclude, on behalf of my colleagues on the Board and myself, I wish to place on record our appreciation for the co-operation and timely assistance extended to us by the Government of India, Government of Maharashtra, Financial Institutions, Bankers of the Company, SICOM, MIDC, Iron & Steel Controller, various other Government and Semi Government authorities.

We are indeed thankful to the shareholders of the Company, all investors, share brokers, underwriters and other business associates who have reposed so much confidence and trust upon us but for whose understanding and co-operation, your Company would not have achieved such success in such a short time.

Equally significant is to acknowledge the sincere and dedicated services of all the executives and other employees of the Company for their untiring and dedicated efforts and services. Last but not the least, let me also offer my sincere thanks to each one of you for sparing your valuable time and giving us the benefits of your presence in this meeting.

NOTE : This does not purport to be a record of the proceedings of the Annual General Meeting.

NIPPON DENRO ISPAT LIMITED

Regd. & Head Office :
Chatterjee International Centre
19th Floor, 33A Jawaharlal Nehru Road
Calcutta 700 071.

NIPPON DENRO ISPAT LIMITED

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

AN inconsistent picture continues to be reported by the indicators. Infrastructure developments have been encouragingly healthy, but industrial production, on the other hand, is depressingly stagnant. Stock prices are now gradually emerging from the doldrums, and gold continues to scale new peaks. A guesstimate is still for steady growth.

All data are seasonally adjusted. Current trends are computed on the basis of six months (weekly data) or two years (monthly data) figures. Quarters in text are calendar quarters.

Wholesale Price Index

1970-71 = 100

Current Trend
8.5% p.a.

The ripple effects of the September leap in prices are still being felt. Encouraging signs of a softening in the inflation rate are present.

Industrial Production Index

1970 = 100

Current Trend
5.3% p.a.

The reported growth rate represents increases in 1985. For 1986, no growth is apparent. But this is inconsistent with other growth indicators.

Manufacturing Output Index

1970 = 100

Current Trend
5.2% p.a.

Growth in manufacturing is disappointing and given developments in infrastructure, the lack of increase since January-February is suspect.

Money Supply

Rs Crore

Current Trend
17.2% p.a.

In contrast to credit to the private sector, money supply shows signs of acceleration. Budget deficits may be financed by money creation.

Commercial Bank Credit

Rs Crore

Current Trend
10.8% p.a.

No signs of abatement are present in the sluggishness of the provision of credit to the private sector.

Share Price Index

1970-71 = 100

Current Trend
— 8.9% p.a.

The trend rate is deceiving. In 1987, the stock market has returned to life and may soon be challenging the highs of 1986.

Power Generation

Million KWH

Current Trend
9.4% p.a.

Even with a November decline, the first two months of the last quarter have registered an 8% increase. Prospects are for steady growth.

Closing Gold Price

Rs per 10 gm

Current Trend
27.0% p.a.

Unlike foreign markets, domestic gold prices are not entering a trading range. Is gold becoming a proxy for an overvalued exchange rate?

INDUSTRIAL PRODUCTION

Growth of Items in June, 1986

	% Growth
Salt	277.55
Air Gas Compresses	35.64
Cosmetics	23.93
Synthetic Resins & Plastics	22.61
Railway Locomotives	20.78
Tea Machinery	17.68
Ferro-Alloys	16.41
Hurricane Lanterns	16.04
Watches & Clocks	14.1
Mining Machinery	13.59
Generation & Transmission Equipment	13.58
Iron & Steel Pipes	12.08
Fertilisers	11.94
Textile Machinery	9.41
Petroleum & Coal Products	9.17
Buses Trucks & Jeeps	8.97
Sewing Machines	7.42
Boilers Steam Generating Plants	7
Electrical Lamps	6.58
Tea	6.32
Conveying Equipment	6.07
Bolts & Nuts	5.9
Soaps & Glycerine	5.86
Railway Rolling Stock	5.77
Tyres & Tubes	4.67
Chemical & Pharmaceutical Machinery	4.57
Motorcycles & Bicycles	3.69
Organic Chemicals	3.51
Electrical Motors	3
Inorganic Chemicals	2.48
Bakery Products	2.35
Tobacco Manufacture	2.32
Non-Ferrous Basic Metal Industries	2.03
Electric Light & Power	1.77
Electrical Fans	1.76
Iron & Steel Structurals	1.66
Earth-Moving Machinery	.93
Power-Driven Pumps	.45
Telecommunications	.41
Cotton & Blended Fabrics	.23
Dry Cells	– .01
Airconditioners & Refrigerators	– .06
Paints & Varnishes	– .14
Mining & Quarrying	– .36
Grain Mill Products	– .36
Cotton & Blended Yarn	– .64

Of the 86 series considered, 40 of them with a total weight of 42.7 had a positive growth and 46 of them with a total weight of 45.1 had a negative growth.

SELECTED INDICATORS

	1986	1985
Coal
Thousand Tonnes, November	14274	13073
Saleable Steel
Thousand Tonnes, November	751.9	665.9
Cement
Thousand Tonnes, November	3000	2654
Fertiliser
Thousand Tonnes, November	662.0	507.2
Thermal Plant Load Factor
Per Cent, November	53.3	50.2

Compiled by THE POLICY GROUP/ICIM

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CHILD ABUSE

Tragically Widespread

PHYSICAL cruelty, often assuming bestial proportions, is inflicted daily on countless hundreds of thousands of children by adults throughout the country. Experts say that even though the phenomenon is widespread it is still not taken up seriously by government authorities and doctors who refuse to face up to the socially debilitating ramifications of this malady. Very often the child abusers are the parents and close relatives. Special Correspondent RAMESH MENON reports on this tragic phenomenon with a spotlight on Gujarat:

Gopal Parmar, 8, who is deaf and dumb is tied up by his parents and tethered to an iron grill of the window of his house before they leave for work. Bondage and severe beatings are the only way Gopal's parents know of subduing his rebellious spirit. Handicapped children are the worst victims of child abuse.

KALAJI Patel of Hassannagar village in Gujarat was born blind. For 18 years his parents, farm labourers, chained and locked him in the house. He grew up sitting in a dark corner, unable to even talk as no one spoke to him. He had long matted hair and nails which looked like claws. He had also become mentally retarded.

A few years ago, a social worker attached to the Blind Men's Association (BMA) in Ahmedabad spotted him. Kalaji could not even walk properly as his back had bent after years of sitting in a crouched position. After a great deal of persuasion, Kalaji's parents unchained him and let him out. BMA workers have now taught him the basics of living. He has started walking with help, and also speaks a few sentences. But the best years of his life have been lost.

Kalaji is not alone. There are many unknown hundreds of others like him who suffer abuse at the hands of their parents and other relatives in what psychiatrists now recognise as a growing national problem.

Mayur, 5, from Baroda, was brutally slapped around and flung onto the bare floor by his mother when he was barely two weeks old. Reason: his parents' marriage was coming unstuck and his mother associated the child with her husband. And Kamini Khatri, 7, of Wadhwan was branded on the thighs with a red hot iron rod by her stepmother. Reason: she detested having to look after a child who was not hers.

Gopal Parmar, 8, remains tied up for hours to the iron grill of a window of his house in Rajpur Gomtipur in Ahmedabad. He is deaf and dumb and also hyperactive. Physical bondage is the only method his labourer parents understand when they go out to work and have to leave Gopal behind with his aged grandparents. When they do not tie him up, Gopal's parents beat him brutally in order to subdue his rebellious spirit. His grandparents, Jotharam and Somti break down and weep when they witness this violence but remain helpless to stop it. Sometimes when Gopal is unable to take the violence any more, he signals his submission by voluntarily stretching out his little arms asking to be tied up again.

There are no accurate figures of the extent of child abuse because most of the incidents are neither reported nor punished. But experts believe that the phenomenon is widespread, and caused by the pressures of modern-day life, the break-up of traditional families, working parents, increasing divorces and alcoholism, job and marriage frustrations, and the mental conditions of the parents themselves. The defenceless child becomes the easiest scapegoat—indeed the whipping boy—for the adult's pent up rage and frustration. Says Dr Manorama

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Mehta, superintendent of the children's hospital in Rajkot: "Child abuse all over India is very common. It has come to be accepted as a normal pattern of life. Even educated parents who batter their children refuse to recognise the damage they do to future generations."

Children are the victims of physical abuse even in schools, usually at the hands of insensitive teachers, who believe that only a relentless rod can straighten out an errant child. Though there is a clear provision in the Directorate of Education's grant-in-aid code banning corporal punishment in government-recognised schools, even the best of such schools doles out large doses of crude punishment. A primary school child in Ahmedabad turned deaf after a teacher hit him on the face.

In other cases, children are punished by being made to kneel on rough gravel, or ordered to bend and touch their toes for long periods under a scorching sun. Says Frenny Ginwala, a senior Ahmedabad-based teacher: "Teachers are not committed to ensuring the emotional growth of children and so, resort to abuse. This damages the child's ego who then grows up with all kinds of complexes."

Child abuse takes a variety of forms—physical, sexual and emotional. But in India, even the major hospitals do not have specialists capable of detecting and dealing with this problem. Some even plead total ignorance about its very existence. As a top Ahmedabad doctor said: "Child abuse does not take place in India. I have not seen a single case in the last 30 years." But, as an INDIA TODAY investigation was able to establish, nothing could be further from the truth. Says Dr Lalit Vaya, a psychiatrist: "Most of the time we never get to know why the child has been abused as he is too young to talk and the parents often lie." The commonest falsehood is that the child fell and broke his limbs.

Lalit Vaya notes that while most Indian parents inflict a high degree of pain, they refuse to be branded as "child abusers", arguing that violence against the child is a necessary act of discipline. But there is a thin line between a mild but firm slap with an open palm delivered to a child's buttocks and an act of brutality. For example, Jagruti Brambhatt, 5, from Khambhat in Gujarat, gets convulsions. Her mother, Jyotsna, has realised only now, after consulting doctors, that the child's paroxysms have been caused by the constant beatings she receives. Jyotsna says that she beats Jagruti severely because she is "so hyperactive and uncontrollable".

In this incident, alert doctors were able to establish child abuse, and realised that the patient needed no medication save a cessation of the beatings. But in most cases, a child suffering from fits would have been treated like any other similarly-afflicted patient. Several doctors admitted that children under their care with different symptoms could well be victims of such situations. But the real malady is hardly ever detected because most doctors neither have the time nor the inclination to ask the right questions.

In many cases parents who were

"The answer to reducing the alarming increase in child abuse is not merely to have stiff penalties against parents. They have to be educated and made to realise the damage done. Doctors only talk of healthy babies, forgetting that children are safe only if they have mentally healthy parents."

RATNA BILWANI
psychiatrist

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"I cannot shout at others in the house. They are all older. In my frustration my eight-year-old son, Taral, gets severe beatings from me and now suffers from a severe speech impediment."
RAKSHA SHAH
Ahmedabad housewife

themselves abused as children unconsciously recreate the situations they lived through. Children are also abused by parents who have great expectations of them and often exert intolerable mental pressure on the child.

An Ahmedabad doctor who was treating a three-year-old boy for constipation, found that none of his medicines was working. He referred the child to a psychiatrist. It did not take long for the psychiatrist to discover that the child was terrified of passing urine and stools because his mother had beaten him when he was a toddler "for not learning good toilet habits". The mother wanted the child to use the toilet as adults would, even before the little boy was a year old.

Continued physical and emotional abuse may result in the child becoming an introvert, emotionally insecure, incapable of loving, lacking self-confidence, pessimistic, aggressive, rebellious, and destructive. Ramesh Vankar, 14, from Umeta village in Kaira district in Gujarat had the makings of a good student. He liked studying, but when he was just six, his brother (now aged 35) used to beat him daily, asking him to "bring money home as food was not free". This brutality left deep scars on his left leg. He ran away from home to escape the torture, worked in a Baroda hotel and learnt how to easily earn Rs40 a day as a pimp. He says he does not dislike the job and will continue with it. He, however, adds: "I would have liked to study, but my brother broke all my dreams."

Unable to defend themselves, abused children get their own back on parents by neglecting their studies—this invariably hurts parents the most—and using other forms of emotional blackmail. But most children, no matter what they do, are unable to change the painful reality around them.

The children most vulnerable to battering are, perhaps, the handicapped. Pravin Mithar, 5, is now mentally retarded, the victim of severe beatings at the hands of his mother, Santosh, who admits that she beat her baby at the slightest provocation—frustrated by the fact that by being born blind he had shattered all her expectations.

In an overcrowded chawl in Ahmedabad, Mohammed Yunus, 6, is crippled in both legs by polio. Notwithstanding the child's handicap his mother, Zuleka Bibi beats him regularly and severely. She mumbles the excuse that she feels frustrated by his handicap and by the fact that she has five other children she is barely able to feed. "It is our poverty and desperation that makes us ill treat our children," she says.

The children of mentally unstable parents who refuse to seek professional help for themselves suffer equally. Raksha Shah, an Ahmedabad housewife, lives in a joint family in which there is considerable disharmony. She admits: "There is so much tension. I cannot shout at anybody in the house as they are all older to me. In my frustration, my son, Taral, who is now eight, gets severe beatings from me at the slightest excuse." Taral is now undergoing treatment at the Child Guidance Clinic of the Civil Hospital for faulty speech—a result doctors say, of the constant trauma he undergoes.

Dr Ratna Bilwani, a psychiatrist says: "The answer to reducing the alarming increase in child abuse is not to merely have stiff laws penalising parents, but to educate and make them realise the damage they are causing. If parents have emotional problems, they have to be helped. We doctors keep talking of healthy babies, forgetting that children are safe only if they have mentally healthy parents."

Mohammed Yunus, 6, is crippled in both legs by polio. His mother, Zuleka Bibi, thrashes him regularly because, she admits, she feels "frustrated by his handicap". She also has five other children she is barely able to feed. Poverty is often the reason parents ill treat their children.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Matters are, of course, not helped by the fact that the laws for protecting children are hardly ever enforced. Under the Bombay Children's Act of 1948, parents can be punished for cruelty to children with a fine of Rs 1,000 or two years in jail. The law clearly specifies that any person who wilfully assaults, ill treats, neglects or creates a situation causing mental and physical agony to a child shall be punished. The fact that the police do not have a department to deal with abused children is indicative of the callous indifference to the problem.

EVEN when parents agree to be counselled along with their abused children, they often refuse to admit their fault and continue to justify their actions on the ground that there is no other way to discipline the child. A well-to-do mother recently brought her seven-year-old son to a psychiatrist, saying that he had become totally unmanageable. It did not take long for the psychiatrist to discover that the child was emotionally abused. His mother hated him because he was dark complexioned and constantly compared him to his two fair sisters.

Severe beating often leads to lifelong abnormalities in children. Ahmedabad's Manoj Lalchand, 12, is under psychiatric treatment as he is rebellious, destructive, and refuses to study. He has a normal intelligence quotient but the emotional imbalance created by parental battering has taken its toll. "My mother beats me with a cricket bat. It is very painful. I am mischievous, but often I get beaten for no reason," says Manoj, who is clearly terrified of his mother.

"Minor girls are often sexually abused by close relatives. But because of the social stigma attached to rape victims, these cases are never registered with the police or even otherwise revealed."
DIVYASBEN MARWADI
social activist

His father, Kanayalal Lalchand, who is too busy with his cloth business to spend time at home, was himself a part of the problem. He admits frankly: "I used to come back tense after a hard day's work, and my wife would reel out a long list of complaints. Our beatings have harmed the child, so I hardly do it now." But, the damage has already been done.

Girls are usually mistreated more often than boys, often the form being sexual abuse—a problem that is rarely talked about or reported. Because of the intense stigma attached to rape victims, the social system protects elders who rape children. And girls who have been raped as children are usually traumatised for life.

In one of the few such instances that have come to light, the packed central hall of Bombay's Vidhan Sabha was stunned into silence three years ago. The then minister of state for home Vilas Deshmukh, admitted before a shocked house that the superintendent and cook of a government-run residential primary school for Adivasi children in the state's backward Yavatmal district stood accused of raping 14 girls aged 6 to 10 under their charge.

Points out Divyasben Marwadi, a leading social activist: "Minor girls are often sexually abused, sometimes by close relatives. But because of the stigma against rape victims, cases are never registered or revealed." Adds Nandini Rawal, project officer, BMA: "Most blind girls are sexually abused by the time they are 15, in spite of strict checks kept at institutions for blind girls."

Whatever the reasons for violence against children—poverty, alcoholism, desperation—the stark fact is that the problem is ignored and treated neither as a disease by professionals nor as a crime by law enforcers. The problem is simply ignored or brushed under the carpet. What is obviously needed is a radical new awareness among doctors, teachers, parents, social workers, policemen, and legislators about a sickness in society that is taking a heavy toll of the next generation of Indians.

Manoj Lalchand, 12, is now under psychiatric treatment for being rebellious, destructive, stubborn—emotional disturbances created by parental abuse. "My mother beat me with a cricket bat," he says. His cloth-merchant father says they don't do it any longer. But the damage is done.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Logic Systems presents an upgradable Office Electronic Typewriter that costs only Rs. 8950/- including installation, training and standard accessories, delivered at your doorstep with nothing extra to pay ...

... and is inexpensive to operate !

Do you still want a Manual/Portable Electronic Typewriter ?

Choose from a range of six models - from single line memory to unlimited memory.

We deliver within 24 hours!

Logic Systems
LS 301

Manufactured under Technical Collaboration with B S I Holland.

ADVEL-LS-038

Logic Systems

Regd. Office : Logic Systems (P) Ltd. 161, Defence Colony Flyover Market New Delhi - 110024 Ph.: No. 693006, 692017
Sales Office : No. 3, Anarkali Bazar Pragati Maidan New Delhi Ph.: No. 3310975

BRANCHES: JAIPUR TEL. 73790 • BHOPAL TEL. 66481 • CHANDIGARH • LUCKNOW TEL. 75536 • BOMBAY TEL. 549955 • PUNE • AHMEDABAD TEL. 24895 • NAGPUR TEL. 32360 • MADRAS TEL. 82217 • BANGALORE TEL. 569577 • COCHIN TEL. 367720 • TRIVANDRUM TEL. 67462 • SECUNDERABAD • PATNA • GUWAHATI • BHUBANESWAR TEL. 53492 • CALCUTTA TEL. 771376 • VARANASI TEL. 53775

O.E.M./DEALERSHIP ENQUIRIES ARE INVITED.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

DHANALAKSHMI

ACCEPTS FIXED DEPOSITS

Managed by corporate achievers.

Consistent 18% dividend right through.

More than 100% all round growth.

Rated as one of the best financially managed companies.

- Interest paid from day one.
- Advance interest cheques offered.
- Guaranteed security.
- Fixed, Cumulative and other schemes available.
- Network of over 40 branches and 73 collection centres.

Further details contact :

DHANALAKSHMI CONSOLIDATES TRUST LIMITED (DCTL)

Regd. Office : Shivalaya Buildings, Madras - 600 105

Corporate Office : Esplanade, Madras - 600 001

Phone : 24045, 23584, 474019, 476402,

Telex : 041-6950 DCTL IN Cable : DHANINVEST

Or agents/brokers

Offices in all major cities and district centres

Design : Perceptions

House of Dhanalakshmi

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The NRI Sop Opera

SOME time ago there was a cartoon by Laxman portraying a gentleman dressed in a dark suit being introduced by a Gandhi-capped politician to a meeting of fellow-politicians as the most exceptional kind of Indian patriot—the non-resident Indian.

The fuss that is being made about non-resident Indian investments in this country and the numerous tax concessions and other inducements being lavishly offered for this "investment" are based, in my view, on a conceptual confusion.

It would be desirable to examine the objectives with which these concessions are given and whether, in fact, the objectives for which they are intended are being met.

The tax concessions are that the maximum rate of income tax payable by non-resident Indians, or foreigners of "Indian origin"—that is people whose grandfathers were citizens of pre-partition India (who will all be referred to henceforth as NRIs)—on their Indian investments is 20 per cent and so is the rate at which the capital gains tax is levied.

In addition, certain investments, for example, units of the Unit Trust of India, National Savings Certificates etc, are exempted from all taxes. All NRI investments are completely free of wealth tax without limit.

The non-tax concessions are that higher rates of interest are allowed to NRIs on bank deposits and National Savings Certificates than are allowed to resident Indians. What is more, while there are some qualitative restrictions on the total percentage of NRI holdings of the equity capital and convertible debentures of a company, there is no limit at all on the holdings of non-convertible debentures.

This kind of investment is totally prohibited to foreigners who are not NRIs. Moreover, NRIs are permitted to invest freely in the equity capital of all new issues up to 40 per cent and up to 74 per cent in similar new issues of high priority industries listed in Appendix 1 to the Industrial Licensing Policy. Other foreigners are not afforded the same privileges.

There are three possible reasons why the NRI is placed in this favourable position: first, to attract capital; second, to attract foreign exchange; and third, to attract technology and know-how. If the country is in need of more capital or foreign exchange or technology and know-how from abroad, however, why are the concessions and inducements limited to NRIs alone and not extended to all foreigners?

The economic effect and foreign exchange burden on servicing the capital, whether by way of dividend, interest or repatriation, is exactly the same for all non-resident investors, whether they are NRIs or not. But the fact is that the amount of capital and foreign exchange and the quality of technology and know-how available to non-Indian foreigners is infinitely greater than to NRIs.

> "We believe that the affluent class of NRIs will invest in India for patriotic and not commercial reasons. But it is doubtful if the patriotism of this class is so great that it will invest in India when it can get better returns in other countries."

If we exclude foreigners but allow these concessions to NRIs, the only reason can be that we believe that NRIs can invest in India, not for commercial reasons but for patriotic ones, which non-NRIs, of course, will not. Is this assumption at all tenable?

Basically, NRIs consist of two classes—one consists mainly of temporary migrants, mostly to the Gulf area, who are generally poor. They will remit their savings to India in any case because the money is needed by their families here and because they intend to return to India. The other class of NRIs consists of permanent migrants, usually belonging to the professional and business classes, who have no intention whatsoever of returning to India.

It is this affluent class towards whom all these concessions and inducements are directed. But is the patriotism of this class so great that it will invest in India even if it can get better financial returns in other countries? This is very doubtful indeed.

The reason why these Indians have migrated is that they are in search of money; the reason why they don't come back is because our low pay scales and high rates of direct taxation (in spite of the recent reforms instituted by the present finance minister) prevent them from maintaining a standard of living compatible with their abilities and qualifications without becoming totally dishonest.

If they are staying abroad because of the lure of money—of which there is no doubt—though they often give other non-material excuses for not returning in spite of the very clear social disadvantages and discriminations from which they suffer, why is it assumed that they are so patriotic that they would be prepared to invest in India without maximising their profit?

And why, in particular, do we extend this assumption to those who have made patent their lack of loyalty to this country by renouncing their Indian nationality and embracing another? And if this assumption is indeed correct why are concessions offered to them which make the return on investments in India actually higher than are today available practically anywhere else in the world?

If the country is in need of foreign exchange, is the best and cheapest way to obtain it through the kind of concessions that we give to the NRIs? I would submit that it certainly is not.

An NRI who deposits dollars in an Indian bank for five years and a day earns, free of all taxes, interest at the rate of 12 per cent per annum which is remitted to him in dollars. If the Government of India were instead to borrow dollars for the same length of time in the international market they would be able to float a loan at around 8 per cent. If the loan was for a maturity of seven to 10 years, the cost would be around 10 per cent. Industrial debentures of the same maturity, which we woo NRIs to buy, give a net return of over 16 per cent. The country is therefore paying 50 per cent more that it need for the favours of NRIs.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The effect of NRI investment in equity or convertible debentures can best be illustrated by the most recent case. The Government of India has decided that Rs 88 crore of the G series of Reliance convertible debentures shall be set aside for NRIs. These debentures are convertible at the end of 12 months into two ordinary shares at a net cost of Rs 72.50 each. The price of a Reliance share in the depressed stock exchanges of today is, as I write, Rs 190.

It is hardly likely that it will be less than Rs 145 a year from now. What we are doing then is to borrow Rs 88 crore worth of dollars at 100 per cent interest (even neglecting the 13.5 per cent interest on debentures) for a period of 12 months. Dollars are available to the Government of India for that period at an interest rate of 6 per cent. Nor is this example untypical.

It seems to me the concessions and inducements to NRIs for portfolio investment have been given under total confusion between the two entirely different kinds of operation which the word investment covers, viz, direct investment and portfolio investment, which have different consequences.

Direct investment consists of the investor or entrepreneur spending money on the purchase of physical goods for establishing or expanding a productive enterprise which creates new and additional wealth for the country. Portfolio investment, on the other hand, consists of the purchase by the investor of an existing (or sometimes even new) financial instrument with the object of selling it when the price has risen.

People like me have for a long time pleaded in favour of foreign investment. But when we do so we are pleading for direct investment and not portfolio investment. While direct investment in equity capital is in the long run more expensive than the market loans which the Government of India can manage to raise, the reason why it is favoured is because it brings in foreign exchange and capital, besides technology.

Transfer of technology is today prominent in the minds of policy-makers. But the fact is that at least in the western world, the latest and best technology is almost exclusively in the hands of private companies, usually multinationals. Technology is not a sack of potatoes which can be bought and transferred in a one-shot arrangement.

It is something which develops continuously, becomes obsolete rapidly and has to be updated. Thus, a meaningful transfer of technology involves a continuous relationship with its source till such time as the transferee has reached a level of technology at which this continuous import can be replaced by a totally indigenous updating.

This stage has not been reached in any country—even the most highly advanced. The result of this has been a continuous inter-country transfer of technology and inter-country investment.

Portfolio investment, however, is a totally different matter. The portfolio investor represents the exploitative and predatory aspects of capitalism. He creates, unlike the direct investor, no wealth nor does he provide any other input for economic growth. His function is to simply buy when the market is low and sell when it is high, pocketing the profit. It is a zero-sum game from the national point of view—the profit of one investor is the loss of another.

> "The policy should extend the benefits available to NRIs to all foreigners and abolish non-resident portfolio investment. The haemorrhage caused by the outflow of foreign exchange must be stemmed by reducing direct taxes."

But as long as both the buyer and the seller are residents—not necessarily nationals—of the same country, the effect on the national economy is nil. But when the profit maker is a resident abroad, no matter what his ancestry or the colour of his skin, the profit made by him must be transferred across the exchanges.

In developing India, this profit for a wise portfolio investor can be colossal and the net effect of allowing portfolio investment is not an earning of foreign exchange but a substantial drain on existing resources.

The NRI scheme suffers from another peculiarity. As a result of our taxation policies, Indian capital is continuously sent abroad, of which the recent IMF paper on Indian assets in Switzerland has made the public aware. Since Switzerland is not the sole tax shelter, the totality of Indian capital in foreign countries must be astronomical.

And now that a large number of Indians have relations abroad, the NRI money-laundering operation has become glaringly simple. Money is illegally transferred abroad and is held in the name of brothers, sons or nephews. These relatives then invest in India in a business of their own and then transfer the profits quite legally abroad again.

I happen to be the chairman of an expert committee of the United Nations called the Committee on Investments. In that capacity, I was questioned some years ago about why India did not allow foreign portfolio investment. My answer was that in India finances were managed by a highly sophisticated group of persons who had no desire to allow India to be looted by foreigners.

It was therefore a matter of surprise when India allowed portfolio investment four years ago, even though to thinly veiled foreigners known as NRIs. The explanation I got was that one of the objects of the scheme was to get back the Indian money which had illegally gone abroad.

To my question as to why taxes couldn't have been pruned to prevent the money from leaving, the authors of the scheme replied that such reduction, though economically sensible, was politically impossible. So it made sense to get the money back!

I am afraid the present policy does not make economic sense. It should be modified in two respects—the first to extend the benefits available to NRI direct investment to all foreigners. It is only then that we can attract meaningful investment.

The second is to abolish the scheme for non-resident portfolio investment and to revert to the prohibition of such investment. Above all, we must stem the haemorrhage caused by the outflow of foreign exchange and capital by further reducing direct taxes.

The reductions made by the present Finance Minister Vishwanath Pratap Singh have cut the irrationality of our taxation system but the combined effect of wealth and income taxes is still lethal. If Indians resident in India were given the same treatment as given to those who have migrated there would be no incentive to export our capital and foreign exchange. Nor would it be necessary to bring it back at considerable cost to the national economy.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CHINA

Changing Strategies

AFTER more than two decades of single-minded obsession with Pakistan, Indian defence planners have begun to look with some concern at China's renewed drive to refurbish and modernise its conventional military might. Even though defence comes last in Deng Xiaoping's "four modernisations" programme, experts in Beijing and Hong Kong say that this is the time for relatively smaller neighbours such as India and Vietnam to begin worrying. They point out that in its quest for parity with the Soviet Union, the Chinese would succeed in matching India in terms of sophistication, mobility and firepower. "So far, your people have been smug in feeling that your more modern army and air superiority could neutralise the Chinese numerical edge over the Himalayas. But soon it would be a thing of the past," says a Beijing-based western military diplomat.

This is not an exaggeration for, in the aftermath of the disastrous invasion of Vietnam in 1979 (in which China lost more than 34,000 soldiers) the top brass of the Peoples' Liberation Army (PLA) has decided to shed manpower in favour of better weaponry and electronics.

So far, the Indian defence plans for the Himalayas are based on the theory that the well-dug-in defenders would take such a heavy toll of the attackers as to make the price of ultimate victory unaffordable to the Chinese. But now, with the Chinese unwilling to accept too many casualties, the approach will have to change. A senior Indian general taking a pragmatic view says that in a future war, "we would not have thousands of Chinese troops swarming up the hill right into our killing ground. We could instead have massive heliborne attacks from the flanks or the rear, backed by overwhelming artillery fire".

The Chinese drive to strengthen its helicopter force to make it capable of mounting heliborne operations in the Himalayas worries Indian defence experts the most. While the PLA air force already has some American Sikorsky helicopters, it is now making inquiries for attack and transport helicopters in western markets. Routinely, most of these would be deployed against the USSR and Vietnam. But helicopters can be shifted easily and this would solve the PLA's mobility problems in Tibet. It will also render obsolete the Indian doctrine of defending the Himalayas in depth—to hit back at the Chinese invaders when their supply lines are stretched.

India is also monitoring China's expanding investments in tanks, artillery, armoured personnel carriers, command control communications and intelligence (C31) systems as well as the navy. The immediate Indian worry, however, is the relatively smaller acquisitions. Last fortnight, the Chinese signed up with the US for the supply of ANTPQ-635 Firefinder radar at Rs 29 crore apiece. The radar is used to detect the trajectory of the enemy's artillery shells so as to pinpoint the location of his guns and is extremely useful in the mountains. The Chinese are believed to be deploying them along the Vietnam border. Shifted to Ladakh, these would prove to be force multipliers.

Another setback to India could come in the field of air superiority. Today, the Chinese can throw in several times more fighter bombers into a conflict than the Indian Air Force. But the PLA aircraft are slow, carry too little ammunition, are poor on electronic counter-measures and could be easily shot down. But this is an area in which the Chinese are now concentrating. Drawing generously from the Soviet MiG variants transferred to them by the Egyptians, the Chinese have perfected a new model of J-8M (also called F-8) fighter which has nearly the same capabilities as the Soviet MiG-23, which India has.

The Chinese are also feverishly searching world markets for avionics, radars and missiles to equip their newest creation displayed at the 1986 Farnborough air show. Says Claire Hollingworth, an expert on the Chinese military at Hong Kong University: "It now seems likely that the $5 million (Rs 7 crore) credit from the US will be used to update the interceptor capabilities of the F-8, providing it with similar power in action as that of the MiG-23."

Besides, in September, the China Aerospace Technology Import Corporation signed an agreement with the US company Flight Refuelling for the supply of inflight refuelling equipment and expertise for its Quiang-5 attack aircraft. Inflight fuelling would add substantially to the strike range of the air force. Significantly, only last year the Chinese sold 140 Quiang-5s to Pakistan.

Quiang-5: Chinese attacker

Indian experts studying the scene concede that it is impossible for India at this stage to match all the new Chinese acquisitions. The only way out, they say, is to strengthen India's own defences further by making them more flexible and, above all, to ensure through good diplomacy that the Chinese should not find another adventure across the Himalayas politically feasible, no matter how much noise they make over the elevation of Arunachal Pradesh to statehood.

—SHEKHAR GUPTA in Beijing

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Admire our track record

We were the first in India to instal the latest Continuus Properzi Cold Rolling Mill for steel wires... the first in India to commission an imported High-Speed Block to roll 5.5 mm Wire Rods through a Controlled Cooling Line... the first in India to introduce rolling of the smallest steel section of 1.9 mm round in coils. Today, we are one of the leading integrated Mini Steel Plants in the country, producing over 100,000 tonnes of Carbon and Alloy Steel wire rods, wires, rods and structurals annually, for a wide range of applications.

The Indore Steel Group is entering the 21st century in a big way – joining hands with Brown Boveri of Switzerland and Mannesmann Demag of Germany, for its ambitious expansion programme. This is in addition to its existing collaboration with Ovako of Finland – a world leader in wire rod technology. Future plans include expansion into Sponge Iron, Rolling Steel Strips and diversification into Ceramic Tiles and Industrial Alcohols.

Just the sort of performance you'd expect from an industry leader!

There's more to come...

THE INDORE STEEL GROUP

Shri Ishar Alloy Steels Ltd.
Indore Steel & Iron Mills Ltd.
Indore Wire Company Ltd.
National Metal Industries.
Shri Ishar Finance Pvt.Ltd.

Head Office: 314, Bhagirathpura,
Post Box No. 6, Indore 452 003
Tel: 21821/21822/21823
Telex: 0735-215 DGN IN 0735-330 SIAS IN

Regd. Office: A-63, Mittal Court,
Nariman Point, Bombay 400 021.
Tel: 242769/242784 Telex: 11-3444 ISIM IN Cable: DEPENDABLE

Watch out for our forthcoming Public Issue.

PH Advertising 1066/91A

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Featuring Ms. Persis Khambatta in Floral Silver Matt

THE NEW PASSION...

Product of the Garden-Vareli Group of Companies

Garden* VARELI DRESS FABRICS

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Pan Am's New Visit USA Fare

Rs. 469 Per Coupon

Now you have yet another good reason to fly Pan Am to the USA—their new Visit USA fare of just Rs. 469 per flight for passengers originating in India. Just buy a minimum of four flight coupons or a maximum of eight and you can spend from 7 to 60 days travelling all over the USA. For passengers from Nepal or Sri Lanka it's just US$ 37 per flight coupon. And that's not all. For a small additional fee we'll also give you the option of travelling to the Caribbean or Mexico. To qualify for these great low VUSA fares you must take one of Pan Am's 747's from Delhi or Bombay to the USA and return on Pan Am. And remember Pan Am offers a range of services to fit your every travel need. Including Indian flight attendants and superb Indian cuisine to make you feel right at home. For reservations or information contact your Travel Agent or nearest Pan Am office now.

Note: Passengers must originate and terminate travel in India/ Nepal/ Sri Lanka. Transatlantic travel must be via Pan Am to and from the USA. Offer valid through 31st March 1987.

Call Pan Am New Delhi: 345222, 345244; Bombay: 2029020, 2029048.

Systems 358

Pan Am. You Can't Beat The Experience.®

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ORG launches India's first multi-CPU UNIX® based Super Mini Computer.

The ORG Supermax

The pioneers in the Indian computer industry have done it again!

ORG introduces yet another revolutionary product – the Supermax. A new concept in expandability, the Supermax allows an addition of up to 8 main CPUs... giving a phenomenal increase of 700% in processing power.

The Supermax has been designed by Dansk Data Elektronik (DDE), a leading manufacturer of computers in Europe with an installed base of more than 3000 microcomputers and 500 super mini computers.

The Supermax is now being manufactured in India by ORG SYSTEMS.

HARDWARE
* Multi-CPU, 1 – 8 main CPUs MC 68000 series.
* 1 – 8 MIPS Performance
* 32 Bit Architecture
* Intelligent I/O Controllers
* Processing Power Increases up to 700%
* 1 – 128 Users
* 1 MB – 64 MB Main Memory
* 36 MB – 6000 MB Disk Storage

SOFTWARE
* UNIX® System Implementation
* ORACLE® Relational DBMS
* Powerful Query/Report Writing Facilities
* PASCAL * C * ANSI COBOL
* FORTRAN * BASIC
* Communication with mainframes
* Link with other ORG products including ORG PC

UNIX® is a trademark of AT&T Bell Laboratories
ORACLE® is a trademark of ORACLE Corporation

ORG Supermax
As ambitious as your growth plans

ORG SYSTEMS
Computer Division of Ambalal Sarabhai Enterprises Ltd.
Nandanvan
Wadi Wadi, Baroda 390 007
Tel.: 321141/321392

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

AIDS

Campus Jitters

JABALPUR in Madhya Pradesh is hardly the kind of town that is associated with sexual permissiveness. Nor for that matter is Quilon, the cashew growing centre 70 km from Trivandrum in Kerala. But these towns are now faced with the threat of the modern sexually-transmitted scourge: Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome, better known by its chilling acronym, AIDS.

A routine medical check in these towns taken at the directive of the Union Health Ministry showed frightening results: in the blood samples of nine people, all foreign students, the presence of the AIDS virus was detected. In Jabalpur, the six victims were all Kenyan males while in Quilon the three cases reported were Tanzanians. None of these cases, however, have showed any outward manifestations of the devastating disease so far. In Jabalpur, Dr S.K. Kanwar, joint director of health services, said: "We suspect that they may be simple carriers of the disease, who have the capacity to transmit it to another person but can remain unaffected themselves."

But in both towns, as soon as the news spread, panic broke out. Not only were the AIDS victims dismissed from the university but the high commissions of both these countries were trunk-called to fly them out immediately. In Quilon, Anand Bose, the young collecter, personally saw to it that everything used by the three affected students was destroyed. In both towns, all foreign students were looked upon with suspicion and as public pressure mounted, they were asked to undergo compulsory AIDS tests. The Quilon victims were kept under police surveillance and soon whisked out of town. In Jabalpur, the ostracised students barricaded themselves in their dorms where a bewildered Manashon Ongei, 26, one of the AIDS victims, wondered: "Will I live or die?"

Ongei, the only son of his parents, came to India in September last year. White with fear, he pleaded with the authorities to allow him to remain in India. "If you repatriate me to Kenya, I shall certainly die there; we don't have any medical facilities," he reportedly told the doctors. John Kwado, 25, another expelled student who came to Jabalpur in July 1984, burst into tears when he heard that he was suspected to be suffering from AIDS.

When medical examinations of foreign students in Jabalpur and Quilon threw up nine cases of AIDS, they suddenly found themselves socially ostracised.

As Jabalpur University authorities struck the names of the six victims off their rolls, Vice-Chancellor H.P. Dixit said: "We told them that it was in their own interest to leave the town for better medical treatment." But it was only after a top official of the Kenyan High Commission flew into Jabalpur last fortnight that things started moving. He had a closed door meeting with the students and finally persuaded them to fly out with him to Delhi.

But life has changed not only for the banished students. All foreign students in the two towns suddenly found that no Indians were talking to them, no one was visiting them and few were even going to the places they went to. "I was a regular visitor to the Indian Coffee House, but I have stopped going there ever since the AIDS news," said Ramoo Shrivastava, resident editor of a local Hindi daily. In Quilon, Sasi, a paan-shop owner says: "The AIDS patients used to buy cigarettes from my shop. But today people are hesitating to buy from here." Mary Onyia, a Nigerian student admitted: "We are all very much afraid. We have restricted our activities and most of us don't move out socially at all."

Foreign students in Jabalpur: private agony

Most foreign students—especially Kenyans—are scared, not only that they might be carrying the dreaded AIDS virus but that they may be deported, en masse, back to their countries. Interestingly enough, in Jabalpur, although students from other nationalities including several other African countries, were also examined for AIDS, so far none of them has been found afflicted with the disease. It was only the Kenyan male—none of the 72 Kenyan girl students had it—who was suffering from the problem. Yet all foreign students have been told that they will not be allowed to appear in their examinations until they undergo the medical test.

There were other problems as well. So far blood samples of 837 of the estimated 1,200 foreign students have been collected. But there is a shortage of AIDS kits to test the samples and the health authorities say there is no point in collecting more till the kits arrive.

Their worries don't end there. Some of the AIDS victims are believed to have had sexual contact with Indians and authorities are busy trying to probe into their private lives to find out who did what to whom. A social worker of the Health Department has been put on the difficult job of trying to find out, by talking to them in confidence, whether any student or someone else had any sexual contact with the AIDS victims. The public humiliation along with the private agony of AIDS is certainly not going to be easy to live with—but then, those are only some of the side effects of the terrifying disease.

—N.K. SINGH and SREEDHAR PILLAI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Crompton Greaves

Explore our testing grounds which even our competitors hold sacred.

Crompton Greaves. The only high technology company with impulse testing, low voltage high power, extra high voltage and lighting laboratories in the country.

Even competitors test their transformers, controlgear and switchgear in the Crompton Greaves laboratory to check out performance. And our low voltage high power short circuit testing voltage laboratory for controlgear and switchgear is considered the best in the country. So is our lighting laboratory, equipped with the most sophisticated photometric testing equipment in India. Our lighting lab's current generation equipment is the best of its kind, comparable with those of international giants in illumination engineering. Our computer controlled Mirror Gonio photometer tests light sources and luminaires exhaustively to ensure effective utilisation of every lumen of light.

With a highly qualified team of scientists and engineers new products are constantly designed, developed and prototypes tested to suit the technological needs of an advancing nation.

Crompton Greaves. The 250 crore company that's a part of your daily life.

Crompton Greaves is everywhere. In the city. In the village. At the factory. And at home. Manufacturing the widest range of electrical equipment in the country. From 400 kV transformers and reactors to light bulbs. From switches to switchyards. From circuit breakers to 6000 kW motors. From pumpsets to electric fans.

Crompton Greaves. With 9 manufacturing units, a network of 16 sales branches, and a work force exceeding 9000, it's the company people like to take for granted. Because it's so reliable.

It's the company that's going to play an increasingly important role in your life.

It's the company whose standards are as sacred as its testing grounds.

We were the first. We are the future.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

'TOPAZ' ends the imported myth.

India meets the international challenge from the spinning wheel to the spacecraft, satellites, rockets, computers. All milestones of Indian technology! And TOPAZ continues the Indian tradition of self-reliance. TOPAZ has made incredible strides in blade manufacturing technology. TOPAZ blades' instant recognition the world over is an established fact, proving once again that India can make it and make it better. TOPAZ remains the blade with a STAINLESS reputation. The reason why more and more people choose TOPAZ.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

TOPAZ STAINLESS

The National blade with an International edge

MALHOTRAS
The blade technologists.

Concept-MI-9176

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

KGMC

Terminal Illness

PATIENTS come from faraway places to be treated at Lucknow's prestigious King George's Medical College with complete faith in its competence. Most of them are poor people who spend their hard-earned savings to be treated at what they naively believe is a premier institution. If they were to know of its disorganised insides, their trust would turn to horror. Senior Correspondent DILIP AWASTHI investigates the shocking state of affairs. His report:

KING George's Medical College (KGMC) of Lucknow—the nerve-centre of Uttar Pradesh's medical services—completed 75 years of its existence recently. But at a time when it should have been celebrating its platinum jubilee, all the employees—from professors to junior doctors to class IV staff—were on strike to press their respective demands. "It is a disgrace to celebrate such an event with a complete strike. Only the KGMC could do this," says Health Secretary Shyam Suri disgustedly.

The postponement of the celebrations, which were to have been attended by Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi, served to illustrate the decay that has overtaken one of the country's top medical institutions over the years. KGMC's 1,850-bed hospital with a 1,400-member staff has as many as 31 departments, including five super-speciality departments—and three more are in the making. But none of these impressive figures reflect the true—and appalling—state of the hospital. Put bluntly, it is a disgrace to the state's health services. Uttar Pradesh's Health Minister, Lokpati Tripathi, does not even try to defend the situation, admitting: "It is nothing but bad administration."

The emergency unit—the hub of any hospital—is a perfect example of the sorry state of affairs. The casualty room which has neither beds nor equipment, has only two house officers from any speciality at a time. Concedes a house surgeon on duty: "You might find an ENT student handling a patient who is in a diabetic coma (related to medicine) or an orthopaedic graduate treating some unfortunate patient's eye."

Only three specialities—surgery, orthopaedics and ENT—are represented in a separate emergency surgical ward. Besides, there are hardly any drugs, bandages, syringes or other primary medical aids to deal with emergency cases. To top it all, the only telephone number of the emergency mentioned boldly in the telephone directory was disconnected for non-payment of bills over 18 months ago.

One of the four posts of chief medical officer (CMO) for the emergency has been lying vacant for over a year while the CMO-in-charge here, Dr Maya Mathur, has applied for long leave to look after a nursing home in which she is a partner. According to hospital records, 80 per cent of the medico-legal cases are handled by house surgeons who have neither the training nor the experience, because the other two CMOs are rarely present to deal with them.

Of the six ambulances attached to the casualty wing, only two are in running condition. And to transport the patients from the casualty wing to the various departments, there is but one trolley—which until recently had only three wheels—and one wheelchair.

Not only is essential equipment out of order, even basic, life-saving drugs are often unavailable. The appalling state of neglect is all-pervasive.

The emergency complex has no provision for the primary pathological or radiological (blood urea, blood sugar or X-ray) tests, essential before any operation. There is evidence of carelessness all over. Blood is stored in a refrigerator that has a door that lies detached from its hinges. For the 12-bed ward, there are only six drip stands. Also, the whole complex is infested with rats that run wild. It is here that critical cases are referred to, not just from Uttar Pradesh but also from Bihar

CC-0. In Pub

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

and Madhya Pradesh.

The emergency surgical ward has two operation theatres for general and orthopaedic surgery but none at all for ENT. The two auto-clave units outside the operation theatres have not been functioning for two years, as a result of which the linen, cotton and instruments used during operations are not sterilised. The four air-conditioners in the theatres seldom work, and there is no generator in case of power cuts and breakdowns, which are frequent. Says a junior doctor: "Three times a week—and this is the minimum—we conduct operations by torchlight or candlelight." Incidentally, nine of 14 operation theatres in various departments also do not have generators.

Every now and then, patients are rudely woken to the reality inside the hospital. In September, P.K. Khare, a senior high court advocate, got a shock when he was brought to the hospital with a head injury only to be operated upon by torchlight. The first thing he did on discharge was to sue the institution in the Lucknow bench of Allahabad High Court. Acting on his writ petition for compensation, the court ordered the installation of power generators in all city hospitals within three days. However, the college authorities managed to pacify the advocate, who dropped the case. The matter ended there and the authorities haven't done a thing about implementing the court orders.

It isn't in the emergency alone that patients have to suffer. Last June, Sohan Lal, 18, suffering from hypospadias (a disease leading to disfigurement of the organs) had to pay Rs 500 to a technician to get operated out of turn in the plastic surgery department. The technician performed the operation all by himself and Sohan Lal's genitals developed gangrene. An inquiry ordered since, has yielded no result.

Murat Chand, being treated for a stomach ailment in January last year, started vomiting after being put on a glucose drip. Fortunately, a junior doctor had the good sense to remove the drip. It turned out that the glucose bottle was spurious.

Some other home truths about the institution:

► Although pathological and radiological tests are vital in diagnosis, the services of the college's pathology department are available only four hours a day. The radiology department has five X-ray machines, but because of obsolete techniques and infrastructure, the results are not only poor, but the examination actually creates radiation hazards. Moreover, eight of 13 such machines in other departments have been out of commission for periods ranging from a year to two.

► The cobalt radiotherapy unit, a basic requirement for cancer treatment, is non-functional since 1983. Official explanation: Rs 60 lakh for a new machine has now been sanctioned. Similarly, the thyroid scanner in the surgery department has been out of order since December 1985. Explanation: not replaced due to shortage of funds.

► A hundred dental chairs from Australia—all donated—arrived in Lucknow in June 1985. They were not lifted for more than a year because there was reportedly no money to pay the demurrage. When they were finally unpacked, half of them were already non-functional.

► A full-body CAT-scan, a donation again, this time from Japan, has not been commissioned for more than six months. The unit, sensitive to humidity, has now been installed in the damp old part of a building of 1914 heritage.

► The empyema ward and the TB outpatient department are housed in a crumbling building which has been declared dangerous by the local municipal corporation.

► The paediatrics department does not have an intensive care unit though 25 per cent of the total 4,000 deliveries in the hospital every year are in the high-risk category. There are no artificial respirators or even monitors to check oxygen count.

► Only one of the two dialysis machines works and none of the six medicine wards has refrigerators.

Moreover, the very essentials in any hospital regularly figured in the "Not in Stock" list last year. While for 25 days over 1986, oxygen cylinders were unavailable,

Photographs by PRASHANT PANJIAR

(Clockwise from left) Non-functional hearse and body outside morgue; refrigerator for blood storage with broken door; auto-clave unit used as dustbin: shocking disorder

Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Health Minister Lokpati Tripathi dismisses the plea of fund shortage and blames the situation entirely on poor administration.

The squalid hospital kitchen: a mockery of medical care insulin, the primary life-saving drug, has been out of stock for eight months. Ether, cotton bandages, lucoplast and even saline fluid were repeatedly unavailable last year.

Both, Senior Medical Superintendent Dr Dinkar Chandra and Dr B.K. Khanna, college principal for five months, blame the poor financial position for the existing situation. Says Khanna: "The prices of equipment—mostly imported—and drugs are rising by leaps and bounds every year. The Government within its existing constraints cannot support us the way we would like. Several of our proposals are not even responded to."

KGMC's budget, which was Rs 2.05 crore in 1980 has increased to Rs 3.47 crore in 1986-87. About half this amount goes into paying staff and doctors' salaries. The per patient expenditure per day has risen from Rs 4 to Rs 6 in 1980 to stand at between Rs 8 and Rs 10 today. But Chandra says that this is only half the sum actually required. The number of patients has also swelled. Today, though the sanctioned bed strength is 1,583, there are actually 1,850 beds. And even this extra number is inadequate: there are still patients who have to make do on the floor.

Chandra provides an example of fund shortage. He says that the budget for X-ray films which was Rs 6 lakh in 1984-85, was raised to Rs 7.50 lakh the next year but slashed to just Rs 2.25 lakh in 1986-87. "It is only a third of the money we require. What is more, the cost of films has risen by 30 per cent," says Chandra. And he adds: "The Government has a tendency to make cuts that prove detrimental to hospital running." He also argues that KGMC gets only a fraction of funds available to a set-up like New Delhi's All India Institute of Medical Sciences (AIIMS).

Tripathi takes a diametrically opposite viewpoint. He dismisses the complaint of fund shortage saying that Rs 12 crore over and above the regular budget have been provided to KGMC since 1980 and adds: "If that had been properly utilised, things would have been different." Dissatisfied by the current set-up, Tripathi says that he has already "warned the present superintendent of the college twice in the past year".

BUT the crux of the matter is that it is not a question just of the senior administrators currently in charge. KGMC's decline has been taking place over several years and no one has thought it necessary to reverse the downslide. When the Government took over the administration from Lucknow University in 1981, the hopes that had been raised of an improvement have now been belied.

Tripathi admits this shortcoming, saying: "We have so far failed to provide KGMC or for that matter any hospital with people who know the job of running a hospital. We will have to change the system of having an ordinary doctor as superintendent." He says that the Government is now planning to create for this purpose, a special cadre of doctors trained either at AIIMS or the Post Graduate Institute of Medical Education and Research, Chandigarh.

Although there are complaints of fund shortfalls, Uttar Pradesh in its wisdom is now setting up the Rs 100-crore Sanjay Gandhi Post Graduate Institute of Medical Sciences at Lucknow. Tripathi, naturally, defends it.

Complains a senior lady paediatrician at KGMC: "We seem to have everything but the will to work. If we want some basic drugs or equipment to save a baby, we are treated as if we are being done a personal favour. Everything works on an ad hoc basis."

The truth is that no one, neither in KGMC or in the state Government, has given serious thought to the sickness that plagues it. After all, the situation couldn't have persisted over the years if someone in authority had cared. Its state is a reflection actually on the callousness with which common people are treated, whether in hospitals or elsewhere.

But the state's premier medical college could still be saved. As Dr N.C. Misra, professor in the department of surgery and a reputed cancer specialist, says: "Each one of us, whether in the Government or on the medical college staff, has to put in everything to revive this fine place." It would indeed be a tragic irony if an institution of doctors died of a curable illness.

—DILIP AWASTHI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

You don't become an acknowledged success like Satish Mehta without recognising a good business deal when you see one. That's why he lost no time signing on the dotted line for his Diners Club card. For frequent travelling in India and abroad and checking in and out of hotels, Satish finds it makes perfect business sense.

But what really clinched the deal was the package of extras that went with the card: Free flight insurance, commission-free travellers' cheques, attractive discounts at hotels abroad, personal cheque cashing facility, a generous purchase bonus. And something that has special value in his Book — a consolidated statement of account every month.

Satish Mehta has succeeded in business by putting his cards on the table. That goes particularly for his Diners Club card!

Enterprising businessman Satish Mehta puts his Card on the table

Diners Club
Welcome to our world

Diners Club India Pvt. Ltd.
Raheja Chambers,
213 Nariman Point,
Bombay-400 021.

LINTAS DC 131 2417

For details contact The Sales Division: ◻ Bombay Tel: 244949 ◻ Delhi Tel: 602565 ◻ Madras Tel: 475112
◻ Bangalore Tel 563982 ◻ Hyderabad Tel: 822674 ◻ Calcutta Tel: 447280.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Your bathroom is a room too!

Only Cera sanitaryware can give it that special touch.

You take so much care over all your rooms. Why not your bathroom? The bathroom of your dreams can be yours with Cera sanitaryware, available in exclusive designs and 30 fascinating colours, with ISI certification.

Cera sanitaryware . . . it leaves no room for doubt.

CERA

Madhusudan Ceramics
Ankur, Mirzapur Rd.
Ahmedabad 380 001
Phone: 23951

Shop 2 CERA 7/86

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

If this uniform material stands the strain of marching, everyday

It has to have the best quality yarn.
It has to be

entyce®

Reflects good taste. At affordable prices.

'Entyce' fabrics include a variety of uniform material. In cotton, blends and polyester.
'Entyce' uniform fabrics are produced on the most modern machinery with sophisticated technology and rigorous quality tests at every stage.
'Entyce' is the most used uniform fabric by quality conscious users like Defence Services, Transport Corporations, Police, P & T, Air India, Indian Airlines, BHEL, IOC, BPCL, ONGC, IPCL, BEL and several industries and almost all leading educational institutions, specially in Polyester blended fabrics.

However small the requirement may be, 'Entyce' offers a choice of fabrics and material.

MCA/NTC/119

national textile corporation (TAMIL NADU & PONDICHERRY) LTD.
A GOVERNMENT OF INDIA ENTERPRISE

10/64 SOMASUNDARAM MILLS RD COIMBATORE 641 009
TELEPHONE 37665 (5 LINES) TELEX: ENTYCE-CB 345

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Elegance holds a place of distinction!

Bilbo. Known by the company it keeps

Furniture that is designed and crafted to perfection deserves nothing less than superior quality covering material. Bilbo.

Cool and comfortable, soft and supple, Bilbo can be stitched like fabric with pleats, ridges and folds.

Just wipe with a damp cloth and Bilbo keeps its subtle colours, its stylish elegance for years.

Bilbo. The touch of distinction your finest furniture deserves.

Bilbo

A rich, rare elegance to cover your finest furniture.

Manufactured by:

BHOR

The Bhor Industries Limited, 392, Veer Savarkar Marg, Bombay 400 025, Phone: 43022*

Branch Offices: 4/24A, Asaf Ali Road, New Delhi 110 002. Phone: 269813/271563 ☐ 10/A, Ho Chi Minh Sarani, Calcutta 700 071. Phone: 449194. ☐ Raji Buildings, 730 Anna Salai, Madras 600 006. Phone: 811274

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CRICKET

A New Confidence

IT will be remembered as a series of records and achievements: the explosive Kapil Dev getting his 300th Test wicket; Sunil Gavaskar hitting his 34th century and nearing the milestone of 10,000 runs in Test cricket; Dilip Vengsarkar bashing two successive centuries; the third or fourth comeback of Mohinder Amarnath; Mohammed Azharuddin back among the runs at last and the blooming of Maninder Singh.

But personal achievements aside, the just concluded series with Sri Lanka, could at best be regarded as a batting and bowling practice for the Indians. The country's cricketing prowess would be actually put to test when the team faces a strong Pakistani side which begins a five-Test tour from January 16. As India's Captain Kapil Dev told INDIA TODAY last week: "What we have to see is how effectively our batsmen and bowlers perform against Pakistan which has a better attack and a finer batting side."

If Kapil is cautious he has plenty of reason to be. Compared to Pakistan's battery of quick bowlers, which includes Imran Khan, the Sri Lankan pacers like Ravi Ratnayake, Asantha De Mel and Graeme Labrooy appeared friendly. And spinners Asoke De Silva and Donanurasari are no match for the guiles of Abdul Qadir. Add to it the immense competitive spirit that is generated when these two teams meet and India has a tough fight ahead.

But if the Lanka tour did anything it was to give the Indian team the taste of victory again. Said Kapil: "Winning makes a lot of difference. It raises team spirit and adds to the confidence of the players." India have now won two of the last three series—they beat England 2-0 in England and drew with Australia at home—the Indian team goes into the contest with Pakistan on a confident note.

India's batting has got a tremendous morale boost. The middle-order looks much more solid than before. Vengsarkar has come into his own with his breath-taking haul of nearly a thousand runs in the last eight Tests. Mohinder Amarnath has played himself into the team again. The 199 that Azharuddin got in the Kanpur Test, has re-emphasised Zaheeer Abbas' assessment that he is the best bat to come out of the subcontinent in recent years.

Kapil (left) and Vengsarkar: raising hopes

Photographs by PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

Sunil Gavaskar (left) and Maninder Singh: in full cry

To add to Pakistan's worries the remarkable Gavaskar remains evergreen. As Pataudi said during the Delhi one-day match: "Sunil seems to get younger by the day." And even Dev, who never seems to get out of controversies with Gavaskar, said: "Do I have to say anything about Gavaskar's performance? He just keeps getting runs." If there is any cause for worry it is Srikkanth's poor run: he got just 62 runs in three innings in the Test matches. If he isn't able to regain his form and Raman Lamba continues to be out of his depth against top-class bowling, India will be on the lookout for a reliable Test opener.

But perhaps the best thing about the Lanka series is that Indian bowlers are finding their feet. Much to everyone's relief Kapil Dev has ended his long drought of wickets. He was not only back with much of his old fire but even got his 300th wicket to join the select band of six other players in the world that include Fred Trueman, Dennis Lillee and the irrepressible Ian Botham. A bit piqued about the doubts raised about his ability, Dev said: "I don't have to prove to anybody that I can bowl." Kapil's hunting partner is, however, a matter of some concern: Chetan Sharma's exuberance is not matched by his ability. Madan Lal and Roger Binny are not getting any quicker, and Raju Kulkarni and Bharath Arun are still greenhorns.

But the most comforting aspect is that after a long while India is again developing a spin trio that can win matches for it. The pick of the bowlers this season was the young left arm spinner Maninder Singh. Following in the famed Bishen Singh Bedi's bowling steps, Maninder distinguished himself by capturing 18 wickets in the three Tests including a career best 7 for 51 in Nagpur. With off-spinner Shivlal Yadav returning to form and Vice-Captain Ravi Shastri steadily pegging away, India seems well on its way on developing a formidable spin attack. But as a senior member of the team says: "They lack experience but with a lot of dedication and hardwork the team could mature."

Kapil Dev is unwilling to comment on India's chances against Pakistan saying simply: "We don't take any team lightly. And we have to watch how the Pakistanis play initially before I could give an assessment of our chances." Kapil's caution seems to summarise the mood of the Indian team as it gets ready to battle with its arch-rival.

—RAJ CHENGAPPA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Sakthi's contribution to Socio-Economic growth

COMPARATIVE DATA (Rupees in lakhs)

Particulars	Year ended 31-3-85	Year ended 31-3-86	Half year ended 30-9-86
Deposits	329.35	1012.33	1568.00
Advances	563.34	1461.56	2356.87
Gross Earnings	82.65	323.67	304.10
Profit after depreciation	17.70	116.63	96.65
Profit available for distribution	22.73	129.24	125.52
Dividend	8.13 (20%)	17.81 (20%)	16.52 12% (Interim)

"... As per the Press Reports, the earning rate for our share of 121% is the highest among all the Hire Purchase and Leasing Companies in the country at present. This speaks volumes indeed. In respect of certain other parameters too, our Company's performance compares favourably with those of many other units in the industry.

"... It is said that every vehicle on the road generates employment to about 20 persons and we have financed over 1000 vehicles. You can imagine the amount of employment we are creating. Nearly 6000 people have benefited by our assistance for consumer durables, such as T.V.s, Refrigerators, etc., I consider that this way we have enabled 6000 families to have a better quality of life or a higher standard of living. There is no doubt whatsoever that our activities are promoting Economic Development and National good to a considerable extent.

A Company, which has established 23 offices and 7 Safe Deposit Vaults in less than 3 years in 5 States and attracted about 27,000 Depositors with about Rs. 18-crores as Deposits and 7,000 Borrowers, who have availed over Rs. 25-crores, promoting so much of National Welfare, is not a mere Finance Company. It is a MINI-BANK"

Extract from the speech delivered by Shri S.N. Pai, Executive Chairman, at the Inaugural Function connected with the opening of the Bombay Branch Office of the Company held at the Shanmugananda Hall, Sion, Bombay, on Sunday, the 23rd November, 1986.

SAKTHI FINANCE LIMITED

SAKTHI FINANCE LTD

Regd. Office : 475, Dr. Nanjappa Road Coimbatore – 641 018.

Branch Offices :

TAMILNADU :

T.Nagar-Madras; Adyar-Madras; Anna Nagar East-Madras; R.S. Puram-Coimbatore; Cross cut Road, Coimbatore Karaikudi; Madurai; Pollachi; Sakthi Nagar; Tirunelveli; Trichy; Tuticorin; Vellore; Gobichettipalayam; Pattukkottai; Erode.

KERALA : Calicut; Palghat; Ernakulam; Trivandrum.

KARNATAKA : Bangalore MAHARASHTRA : Bombay PONDICHERRY

UIPCSF:30:86

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Making the most of your money

If you've been waiting for a Calculator that's compact, accurate and quite simply remarkable in cost–performance – then the waiting is over.

The House of Rayala, that brought you quality Halda Typewriters now brings you quality Halda Calculators.

Elegant. Sleek. And very economical. In an easy to operate range that includes models from the Pocket to the Printout Desk Top and Scientific Calculators. With the Halda stamp of reliability.

Halda Calculators – A business decision you'll be proud of for years to come.

RC HC 1 2417

• Desk Top • Wizard • Technocrat • Personal

HALDA

From quality Electronic Typewriters to quality Electronic Calculators.

Head Office: RAYALA CORPORATION PVT. LTD., 36 Mount Road, Guindy, Madras 600 032. Tel No. 414744/418443

Branches: PHONES: • Ahmedabad 23802 • Vadodara 558599 • Bangalore 571654 • Bhubaneshwar 51656 • Bombay 4128249/4128292 • Calcutta 270292 • Coimbatore 34936 • Cochin 352946/353729 • Calicut 73164 • Delhi 6410492/6432480 • Kanpur 66583 • Lucknow 43304 • Madras 81730/810222 • Pune 68159 • Secunderabad 820480/74213 • Visakhapatnam 65511.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SHILLONG

Disputed Ownership

A historical claim revived by an illiterate Khasi clanswoman of Shillong is threatening to tie up the Meghalaya Government and a host of Central government departments in an unprecedented legal foul up. Ka Smienty Nongkhlaw Rngi, 62, is claiming that 1,000 acres of prime property constituting the heart of Shillong city rightfully belongs to her clan. Charging the state Government with violating an agreement signed more than a century ago, Smienty Nongkhlaw has demanded, in a petition filed in the Shillong District Court, that either her land be returned or else she be paid adequate compensation for it.

Under the matriarchal Khasi laws, Smienty Nongkhlaw is the legal heir to all the lands belonging to the 200-odd families which constitute the Nongkhlaw clan. The property she is claiming is valued at several hundred crore rupees, and comprises the entire former European ward (including Shillong's main market), parts of the army cantonment, the state secretariat and most of Shillong's main Central government offices.

The state Government's initial response to the claim was one of amusement: officials did not bother to reply to Smienty Nongkhlaw's first notice. But when she and her lawyer persisted and filed eviction notices under the Indian Tenancy Act in October, amusement turned to alarm. Old records were pulled out and the finer points of law studied. It was soon obvious that the illiterate clanswoman did have a case.

"This land always belonged to our clan," Smienty Nongkhlaw stoutly maintains, explaining through a Khasi translator: "My grandmother used to talk about the time when British soldiers with guns forcibly occupied our land. Since we were scared and could do nothing against them, the Britishers told us that instead of fighting and ultimately losing our land forever, it would be better if we hired it out to them and they would return it when they left." State government records with the Directorate of Surveys testify to the essence of the Nongkhlaw clan's claim.

In March 1861, a British military contingent led by Lieutenant Colonel J.C. Haughton, acting as the agent to the governor-general of the North-east frontier, had signed an agreement with the local Khasi Syiem (elected chieftain), Melay Sing, taking over several hundred acres of land in and around present-day Shillong. The Khasi chieftain, however, had rights only over lands owned by the Syiem and not individually held properties of the clans.

"This land was always ours. But we were made to lease it to the British. We now want justice."
SMIENTY NONGKHLAW
chief claimant

To swallow the islands of individual land within the Shillong area, Haughton subsequently had to force separate agreements with individual clans, most of whom sold their lands at prices ranging from 15 to 2,000 silver rupees. Only three clans—represented by U Beh Nongkhlaw Rngi, Dor Sing and Borjan Myntree—held on to their lands, but finally capitulated after two years.

The current dispute is over conflicting sections in the agreement signed by U Beh, an ancestor of Smienty Nongkhlaw. At one place, U Beh appears to have agreed to "gift" his land to the British. A little later, however, there is a mention of a yearly "compensation" of Rs 50. In the closing section, the agreement categorically stipulates: "I hereby renounce all right and title to the said land... so long as the said sum due on the 1st January each year, shall be continued to be paid in advance to me or my heir on demand."

Smienty Nongkhlaw claims that her ancestor "being illiterate and unfamiliar with the English language, was by dubious and questionable ways," persuaded by Haughton "to put his thumb impression to a hurriedly drafted document leasing out to the then rulers of India, the British Government, his clan's vast and valuable property." Smienty's lawyer Dr Martin Narayan Majaw, argues that the last clause proves that the land had been given on a conditional lease and the agreement should be treated as a lease document under Indian tenancy and property laws.

In fact, government records show that the annual compensation or rent, as Majaw insists it should be termed, was regularly paid to U Beh and thereafter to his heirs. The Nongkhlaw Rngi clan continued to live in vacant portions of the land leased to the British till the First World War, when the existing military cantonment was extended and the clan pushed to its present home in Laitkor, a small village overlooking Shillong town.

U Beh had signed the lease agreement on behalf of his youngest sister, Ka Nongkhlaw Rngi as under Khasi laws property is owned by a family's youngest daughter, called the Khatduh. The ownership of the land later devolved to Jynsu

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Smienty's mother, who regularly received the rent till 1976. But, thereafter, the payments stopped abruptly. To the state bureaucracy this might have been an insignificant omission, but, as Majaw points out, it amounted to the breach of "a formal, binding and legal contract" and an omission that nullified the 1863 agreement.

Majaw argues that there are other equally compelling legal reasons as per Indian property laws supporting his contention that the 1863 agreement that was signed with the British no longer holds good. They are the following:

► If the agreement is taken to be a 'conditional lease' and the British Government the first tenant or lessee, the agreement should have lapsed in 1947 with the end of British paramountcy;

► By failing to register the 1863 lease agreement under the Indian Registration Act, the governments of India and Meghalaya are in the strict legal sense, mere "licencees" liable to be summarily expelled or evicted from the clan's Shillong land;

► Also in the instrument of accession signed between the federation of Khasi syiems and the Indian Government on August 18, 1948, the syiems continue to be the custodians of all land, rivers and forests in the state and apart from the raj lands, individual clans continue to have full rights over their lands. In the circumstances the then government of Assam should legally have drawn up a new agreement if it wanted to retain its rights over the Nongkhlaw clan's land in Shillong; and finally > "The land was a gift to the British. As its successor, the Indian Government naturally has the same rights over it."

>
> R.K. BORAH
> joint director of surveys

Aerial view of Shillong: disputed land

► By not paying rent for the last 10 years, the governments of India and Meghalaya, as Nongkhlaw's petition declares, "have become trespassers, illegally occupying land and enjoying the same without any right, title or justification".

The Meghalaya Government's initial reaction to the notice from Nongkhlaw's lawyer was an indignant letter from East Khasi hills Deputy Commissioner Neeraj Prasad to Majaw, cautioning him against disturbing the situation since the state Government was in full lawful possession of the land. Next, in the latter part of November last year, the deputy commissioner issued a notice asking the "legal heir" of the clan to contact him for payment of the annual compensation due to the clan. The notification stated that the compensation could not be paid for all these years because no legal heir had come forward to collect the money.

R.K. Borah, joint director of surveys, who is researching the case for the Meghalaya Government, says there are two claimants for the compensation money and "unless the true successor is determined it is not possible for the Government to pay up". The other claimant, the Government revealed, is Kelnar Kharkongar, a Khasi who lives on the outskirts of Shillong town, who has even sold some property within the Nongkhlaw area.

The Nongkhlaw Rngi clan protests that this is just a government ruse. "If the Government is serious it can easily determine that a Kharkongar can never inherit property belonging to the Nongkhlaw Rngi clan," says Jimmy Kharkongar, who is assisting Majaw in the case. Property ownership remains with the clan, passing to the youngest daughter of each generation and males marrying into the clan must take up their wives' surname. After the Government revealed the fact that Kelnar Kharkongar had also claimed a stake in the Shillong land, the Nongkhlaw Rngis filed a case against him last fortnight for criminal impersonation.

But Borah argues that the 1863 agreement is ambiguous and there is nothing concretely stated to suggest that it is a conditional lease as Majaw is arguing. Says he: "The words 'lease' or 'rent' are not mentioned even once in the agreement. The key word, on the other hand, is 'gift'; the land was a gift to the British and the Indian Government as its successor naturally has the same rights over the land."

But this is precisely what the petition filed in the Shillong District Court argues against. Although the 1863 agreement does refer to the land transfer as a "gift", the Nongkhlaw petition argues that in reality it hardly could be construed as one since it was not given free, but in exchange for a consideration in the form of an annual rent. "We want justice from our government but it is behaving just like the British," complains Smienty.

Majaw estimates that the state Government is capable of earning at least Rs 52 crore annually from the clan's land by letting it to sub-tenants. He is ready to settle with the state Government for exactly a quarter of the annual rental value, that is for an annual rent of Rs 13 crore, provided the Government pays up this amount from 1976, the year it stopped paying the "compensation". Alternatively, the Meghalaya Government can if it so desires, acquire the property at existing market rates.

But both options have a price tag running into hundreds of crores of rupees. The state Government now seems reconciled to fighting it out in court.

—INDRANIL BANERJIE in Shillong

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Some faces never age with time.

A picture one hundred years old. From the collection of Lala Deen Dayal, Hyderabad.

The memory still lives on vividly. Thanks to B & W photography.

Thumb through your family photo album.
There are those glorious old photographs that bring fond memories.
In black and white. Sharp and clear even after sixty, seventy or eighty years and more.
The choice is quite clear.
When you shoot pictures for keeps, shoot them on Black and White film.
You'd be glad you did.

Memories may fade with time. Not Black & White pictures.

इन्दु
INDU

INDU
B & W roll films and bromides

Sista's - HPF.621.86 C

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Ray at the festival inauguration

11th FILM FESTIVAL

Tragedy of Errors

OPENING night of the 11th International Film Festival was as exciting as a souffle gone flat. A galaxy of stars had indeed descended on Delhi for the inauguration on January 10. But no amount of the showering tinsel: the Kapoor khandaan, star-MP Sunil Dutt, Shabana Azmi, Poonam Dhillon, Anupam Kher, Naseeruddin Shah, Jaya Prada, and many tinier stars could salvage the festival from shabbiness. Cracks showed beneath the thin veneer of glamour quick-fixed on for the occasion. The frayed slip, alas, showed beneath the brocade.

Impresarios are certainly not in short supply: all the utsavs, both apna and unka, and various winter happenings are proof enough of an adequate supply of the conjurers of culture. But where were they on the inauguration night? Doordarshan's darlings kept appearing and disappearing, as did the little things burdened down by garlands. But nothing held the festival together.

It was to have been a hi-tech opening, electronically upbeat. Closed circuit television with two giant video screens were poised on each side of the stage to give a blow-by-blow account of the events. But all the hi-fi wizardry could not raise it above the level of a school function. Hindu shlokas at the outset jarred with the giant screen showing an electronic galaxy animated by strobe lights. The gold and silver cardboard peacocks pasted on a cellophane-like material hung incongruously across the stage. The 24 clips screened from the competition films were a jumbled mess because there was no voice to string them together. Pamela Rook's commentary did not make it to the show on time because some bureaucrat somewhere felt that a Doordarshan voice ought to have been used and not that of an outsider.

Whose festival was this anyway? Film delegates' or our ever-present bureaucrats', (some of whom came with their entire families, including crying babies)? More awkward still was the way in which the jury—two of whom never made it to opening night—were brought on to stage one by one, with an escort and then shuffled out the same way like schoolchildren. A rather ill-looking Satyajit Ray, the chief guest, was made to stand too long with nothing to do while Terence Stamp, the brilliant British actor and star of Theorem and Collecter, was not even called on stage, and sat forgotten in the audience.

The Directorate of Film Festivals and Urmila Gupta—who was only appointed the executive director on August 8—were hardly given any time to organise this festival since regulations were printed as late as September. Invitations to many countries to send their films went out too late. Algeria, for instance, does not have any films this time because they were asked for only two weeks before the festival began. Strangely enough, despite a focus on Asia and the Pacific there are no films from neighbours Pakistan, Nepal and Bangladesh. Obviously, the festival is not a priority for the managers of culture: they were still looking for interpreters for jury members 24 hours before the festival. The Information and Broadcasting Ministry even wanted to fly the jury to India on economy class tickets.

The festival has certainly been jinxed from the outset: jury member Sharmila Tagore opted out the day after the festival opened because she fell ill. Ajit Panja, the minister of state for information and broadcasting just had to accompany the prime minister on a 24-hour trip to Calcutta on the very day of the opening. But the last straw was the eleventh hour withdrawal of one of the two Indian entries—Ketan Mehta's Mirch Masala—by the National Film Development Corporation (NFDC) on the eve of the festival. Apparently, the film will be entered in another international film festival—perhaps the Berlin one. If even the NFDC prefers other festivals for its films, something is obviously very wrong with Delhi.

If there were too many blunders before the curtain went up, there were even more after it did. The reels of the Argentinian film Miss Mary went quite contrary: with the third reel of the film, the audience suddenly landed in Czechoslovakia and it was a good 15 minutes before the projectionist realised what a tour he had led the audience on. The same happened with Ettore Scola's Le Bal but fortunately the jumbled reels, this time, were from the same film. Tempers are also rising amongst film makers. The quality of the projection of films at the cinema where the Indian panorama is being held is dreadful: the screen itself looks like a cloud of dust with streaks across it. And at another cinema darkness descended over the magnificent vast landscapes of China in Yellow Earth.

There were, however, a few saving graces: an effervescent Madhur Jaffery who introduced Ismail Merchant, producer of the exquisite Room With a View and its heroine Helena Bonham-Carter, who put more into her hello than the lengthy orations of the others. Mercifully short and precise, also, was Urmila Gupta's speech, in happy contrast to the bumblings of actress Moon Moon Sen and the come-to-Karnataka-to-make-a-film drone of actor Anant Nag. Perhaps, the festival, although it did not start off too well, may still have a happy ending—Hindi film style.

—MADHU JAIN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

PARALLEL CINEMA

Fading Out Slowly

LIKE an extended dissolve at the end of a mildly absorbing film, the new cinema movement in India is gradually fading out from screens across the country. Producers are no longer willing to finance good, small-budget films in Hindi. Distributors and exhibitors are more than ever reluctant to risk showing films by even the established 'new wave' directors like Shyam Benegal or Govind Nihalani. The film makers themselves are being lured increasingly by the seductive power of television. And accomplished actors and actresses are once again in search of good roles. After more than two decades of controversy and promise, the alternative cinema movement appears to have reached a blind turn, if not the end of the road, uncertain about what to expect in the future.

The movement began in 1967 with Mrinal Sen's Bhuvan Shome, financed by the Film Finance Corporation—which later changed into the National Film Development Corporation (NFDC). It was quickly followed by Mani Kaul's Uski Roti, Kumar Shahani's Maya Darpan and Avtar Kaul's 27 Down. The 'new wave' cinema, as it was then called, surged ahead with the success of Shyam Benegal's Ankur, which was perhaps the first small film to get a significant theatre audience. It reached its peak with Govind Nihalani's Ardh Satya in 1983, which cost Rs 17 lakh, found buyers all over India in just two weeks and finally grossed over Rs 60 lakh.

But even as Ardh Satya became a runaway success, the small cinema movement started losing its audience. In the last five years, barely 50-odd sm Hindi films have been made and t number has been constantly declinin Today, according to Naseeruddin Sha the star most closely identified with t movement, there is just one such fi being made: Doosra Badshah, directed script-writer Hriday Lani. Lani's scri had won an award in the NFDC scri competition and so he got the money fro NFDC to make the film. Kumar Shahani presently working on an Indo-Frenc Hungarian production on painter Amri Sher-Gil but this is still at the scriptin stage. Says Shah: "Somewhere along t way, the motivation of film makers h petered out."

(Clockwise from right) Stills from Mirch Masala, Debshishu and Susman: small budget films whose only hope for distribution is possibly Doordarshan

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

NAMAS BHOJANI

"I am not deserting small cinema; but it cannot be seen as a religion by itself."
KETAN MEHTA

To an extent, the crisis in the parallel cinema movement is the reflection of a larger problem facing the film industry in India: the threat from TV and video. With big-budget films flopping, the small film makers feel they stand even less of a chance. But while nobody expects big cinema to die out, there is growing concern over the fate of serious films.

"The situation seems hopeless today," says Shabana Azmi, one of the few who has done equally well in both. "I am in a state of total despair. For the last five years I have happily done my quota of entertainment films, confident of the fact that every year I would also have two or three good films on hand. Suddenly, it's no longer so and everybody—Shyam Benegal, Mrinal Sen, Gautam Ghosh—seems to be doing television."

In fact, in recent months the films of many of the well-known directors from alternative cinema have been shown first not in cinema theatres but on the national network of Doordarshan. Producers can no longer sell these films to distributors; and with many good films lying unsold in the cans they have become wary of investing in any new projects. "Good cinema is dying its own natural death," says Manmohan Shetty, a partner in Neo Films, which produced Ardh Satya. "Though we are not in the red from the five films we have produced so far, we are not taking up any new films. There are no buyers any more."

Perhaps the best example of this disillusionment is Shashi Kapoor who, after producing five films with directors like Shyam Benegal, Govind Nihalani, Aparna Sen and Girish Karnad, now says that the whole venture was a money-losing mistake. Kapoor's Filmvalas lost substantially on its last production—Karnad's expensive erotic fantasy Utsav—and now Shashi is busy producing, directing or acting in a clutch of commercial films to try and recover his losses.

"My intention originally was to make good films which would also attract a large audience," says a bitter Shashi. But except for Benegal's Junoon, all the other films lost money, though Sen's 36 Chowringhee Lane earned international acclaim for her and Filmvalas. "Basically," he rues, "I was let down by directors who have a lot of contempt for the audience and the craft of film making." Shashi, who is also on the board of NFDC, feels that with the present crisis, even good directors like Shyam Benegal will find it difficult to raise money for their films in the future.

Two of Benegal's films, Trikaal (completed in end-1985) and Susman (March 1986) are still awaiting release. Trikaal is now likely to be premiered on the national network. A prolific director whose name had become synonymous with the new cinema movement, Benegal is now fully involved in TV productions. Besides the current serial Yatra, he is now working on an ambitious 52-part series called Discovery of India.

HARI OM GULATI

"We are just sorting ourselves out. Good cinema is going through a transition."
SAEED AKHTAR MIRZA

Small cinema films had certainly captured the imagination of a section of the urban middle class but if the movement has begun to peter out, the film makers must take part of the blame. Essentially, the film makers are facing the consequences of not having bothered much about the audience. "We have been making films for international film festivals after seeing European and American classics at the Pune Film Institute," says critic Iqbal Masud. "This limited approach has cut off small cinema from the common people."

Many film makers zealously continued to make films about the dispossessed, acquiring the label of radical but perhaps alienating the middle class audience at the same time. Says Mani Kaul: "These films had as little chance of success as the family planning films. Films should be made on social issues, but in a far more complex manner than was the case in small cinema."

The other aspect ignored by the film makers was the pace of a film, influenced as they were by newfangled theories on cinema from Europe. In the early years, their reaction to the rigid format of the commercial cinema was to make some experimental films which broke new ground. But many directors later failed to utilise one of the main strengths of popular cinema—a

RAGHU RAI

"The situation seems hopeless today. I am in a state of total despair."
SHABANA AZMI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

good dramatic structure. Says Govind Nihalani: "One cannot be so totally esoteric and forget the pace of a film." Script-writers also let down the film makers, by producing unimaginative scripts without strong characters with whom the audience could identify. Shashi Kapoor, for instance, blames the failure of Kalyug entirely on the script-writers.

But at the same time, small cinema directors remained somewhat unconcerned about the commercial prospects of their films. Says Shah: "It is not at all surprising that there are no backers for good films, since 99 per cent of them failed to recover their costs." Adds Marathi film director Jabbar Patel, who directed Smita Patil in her finest role in Umbartha: "Small cinema stars like Smita, Naseer and Shabana felt let down by some directors who did not care at all about the distribution of their films. Now small cinema's biggest star is dead, and the future is gloomier than ever."

Lack of outlets has been the main reason for the gloom surrounding the movement. Setting up a chain of alternative small theatres was the only solution, but this was not done by the Government when it should have been: in the early years when real estate prices in urban areas had not shot up to the present heights. Says Shabana Azmi: "The Government goes on and on about the need for good cinema; but we have been clamouring for small theatres for years and nothing has been done so far."

Critics of the NFDC feel that the organisation let film makers down by not giving enough importance to distribution in a market dominated by commercial extravaganzas. In fact, the NFDC has faithfully reflected the Government's own confusion over whether good cinema should be subsidised or show profits like any other commercial activity. Argues NFDC General Manager Ravi Gupta: "Our sales get restricted as we cannot deal in black money. Then, high theatre rentals and publicity costs, along with a limited audience, also prevent our films from breaking even on the theatre circuit."

THE NFDC has been financing nearly 20 cinema theatres annually but has only recently introduced an economically feasible scheme whereby it can screen its films in these theatres for four weeks in a year. "Only exemption from entertainment tax will give a fillip to exhibiting good films," bemoans Gupta. "And we have been repeatedly stressing, without much success, that state governments should exempt the 21 films featured in the Indian Panorama of the film festival from the tax every year."

While there might be an audience for good cinema in the country, the fate of a recent attempt at an innovative distribution of serious films indicates that serious film buffs, used as they are to seeing good films virtually free, may not always be willing to pay even a nominal price to see a Damul or a Holi. Last year, Manmohan Shetty started an organisation called Movement to distribute serious films to the 700 registered film societies in the country. These societies together have five lakh members and Shetty calculated that even if each member paid Rs 2 to see a good film, the Movement would be viable. Recalls Shetty: "We put together a package of eight films, but discovered that film societies, used to getting prints free from the National Film Archives or foreign embassies, were not willing to pay anything for a good, new film."

Doordarshan is the new hope. So far some 10 small cinema films have been premiered on Doordarshan. The NFDC is planning to enter into joint productions with Doordarshan. After the films have been shown on television, the NFDC plans to exploit their potential on the theatre, video and overseas circuits. Says Benegal: "The situation can change if Doordarshan consciously makes the promotion of good cinema one of its objectives."

But increasing reliance on Mandi House has its major pitfalls too. Argues Kumar Shahani: "We must be careful not to talk about film as if it has no function except to make money. After all, if the Government considers cinema a powerful medium, then importance must first be given to the subject and its treatment by the director."

After Saaransh, Mahesh Bhatt felt that the death-watch of small cinema had begun. With Janam, he felt the powerful reach of television.

But if the film's theme and the director's approach are to determine whether it should be sponsored by Doordarshan, then Mandi House will have to protect small cinema from the tyranny of the advertiser. "Doordarshan should follow not the American but the British model, where advertisers come in only after the commissioning officer and the film maker have decided on the production," says Mani Kaul. "But here things are different, and recently Mandi House was even planning to ask film makers to first get the sponsor's approval."

But though joint productions with NFDC will surely help Mandi House develop a more complex perception of cinema, Doordarshan seems quite ambiv Shyam Benegal's Ankur was the first small film to get a significant theatre audience. But now, he too can't sell his new films easily.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

lent about its own commitment to good cinema. It had taken up its own "telefilm" idea in 1985 but quickly abandoned it after the screening of just one film, Mahesh Bhatt's Janam. Bhatt had deserted mainstream cinema to direct Arth and Saaransh, but neither film was easy to distribute. "After Saaransh I felt the death-watch of small cinema had begun," says Bhatt, who is back as a full-fledged commercial film maker with the success of Naam. "But Janam did wonders for me and I became aware of the powerful reach of television." Despite the fact that Janam was well received, Doordarshan seems to have changed its mind and the second telefilm, Praveen Bhatt's Jeevan Sandhya, has been lying in the cans for the past four months.

Instead, Doordarshan has been occasionally telecasting good films on Saturday nights or Sunday evenings, paying a maximum of Rs 8 lakh (soon to be raised to Rs 10 lakh) for an unreleased film. But virtually every director whose film has been telecast complains about the reckless manner in which the film is cut by Doordarshan either to make it fit into the time slot or to conform to Mandi House's ideas about what is good for the audience. "Doordarshan's censorship is totally arbitrary and the director is never consulted," says Nihalani, who watched two of his films premiered on television, Party and Aaghat, after considerable vandalism by the censor's scissors.

Yet, as Nihalani (who is now directing the TV serial, Tamas) readily acknowledges, most serious film makers have not been able to resist the popular appeal of television. Many, like Saeed Mirza (Nukkad) and Kundan Shah (Yeh Jo Hai Zindagi), have tasted success on television that they couldn't have dreamed of in parallel cinema. And sometimes, as with Party and Ketan Mehta's Holi, audience response to TV premieres has prompted distributors to change their minds and buy them for modest theatrical releases, in Calcutta and Bangalore.

Govind Nihalani, whose Ardh Satya was the peak of parallel cinema, acknowledges that most serious film makers have not been able to resist TV's appeal.

SAEED Mirza—who after Nukkad's success is negotiating for a film with Raj Kapoor—remains optimistic about the future. "We are just sorting ourselves out, good cinema is going through a period of transition," he says. "Now if Doordarshan and NFDC come together, a new phase will begin and I'll happily make a film for television, even though it would have to be completely different from my earlier films."

However, the altogether different aesthetic demands of television make critics wonder whether small cinema's saviour will also turn out to be its undertaker. "Television is a depressing alternative, since on the box the image is vulgarised and its subtlety is lost, with prominence given to close-ups," says critic Masud. "While television will provide a solution to the present crisis, film makers will have to keep up the battle for commercial release of good films."

Shabana shares this view. "TV can only be an alternative, it can never replace the magic of the movie theatre," she says. "And I am not being snobbish, I am only too aware of television's vast audience. After Paar was telecast, even junior artistes and technicians on Bombay film sets who would never have paid Rs 8 to see it in a theatre spoke to me about it."

One alternative, of course, is to go big with a vengeance, and this is precisely what Ketan Mehta now plans to do. Ketan's Mirch Masala has been hailed as the finest film to emerge from the new cinema movement, but for months it has been looking for a distributor. Now the film maker is on the verge of signing up Amitabh Bachchan for his next film, Kartoos, which will have the superstar playing Mangal Pandey in the 1857 War of Independence. "I am not deserting small cinema; but it cannot be seen as a religion by itself," asserts Ketan. "One is willing to take the risk of making a big budget film instead of accepting the marginal role that the commercial industry and the Government is willing to give to our kind of cinema."

Shabana defends Ketan's decision to make a film with Bachchan, the only star with both the acting abilities and the commercial appeal to carry off a big-budget film like Kartoos. "It's totally unrealistic to criticise small film makers for signing up big stars," she says. "I know other actors have been complaining, but it is also important to know how much one is worth commercially."

But Kartoos inevitably will only be a single shot in the dark. As far as most other small cinema directors are concerned, the future is crystal clear—there are no funds, no buyers, and only Doordarshan promises some kind of salvation. As even Shabana, who so confidently bridges the gap between small and commercial cinema, confesses: "I have been wanting to direct my own film, but now I am frightened. What is there to look forward to?" Small, finally, is no longer beautiful.

—M. RAHMAN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SNAPSHOT

RAGHU RAI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Metalcraft magic... Allwyn Style

Allwyn Furniture Systems.
Your key to a readymade office.
Executive Tables, Chairs, Filing Cabinets,
Almirahs. And a host of other office accessories.

Allwyn. The metalcraft legend
that put its expertise to work.
And created office furniture
that's guaranteed to outlast lifetimes.

Allwyn. Designed for today's corporate needs. And destined to match tomorrow's.

ALLWYN

Sleek. And tough

Hyderabad Allwyn Limited
Corporate Marketing Division
Allwyn Bhavan, Erragadda, HYDERABAD-500 018.

Allwyn Furniture Systems ★ Executive Tables ★ Chairs
★ Filing Cabinets ★ Almirahs ★ Office Accessories

MARS HAF/86/9

Hyderabad Allwyn Area Offices: Ahmedabad Ph. 413941, Bangalore Ph. 228885, Bhopal Ph. 65986/ 62979 Bhubaneswar Ph. 52271, Bombay Ph. 4927575/ 4927586, Calcutta Ph. 446853/ 433576, Chandigarh Ph 41941, Cochin Ph. 368002, Gauhati Ph. 32691, Ghaziabad Ph. 843204, Hyderabad Ph. 552308/ 43407, Jabalpur Ph. 22665, Jaipur Ph. 65729, Kanpur Ph. 245249, Karnal. Madras Ph. 77177/ 811401, Nagpur. New Delhi Ph. 734740/ 730715, Patna Ph. 32745, Pune Ph. 66166 (PP), Vijayawada Ph. 62544, Visakhapatnam Ph. 61652.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

MADRAS

New Melody

COME winter and the cultural season in Madras is off to a lilting start to the strains of the veena, the beat of the mridangam and the heady jingle of dancing feet. For more than 60 years, the annual festivals organised by the city's music groups—called sabhas—formed the staple of the city's populace, keeping alive the traditions of music and dance with their rigid adherence to classicism and purity. But over the past two years, a subtle change has crept in. Old faces have been replaced by new. Gurus are increasingly making way for the disciples. And in place of the musician is the multitude. As this year's concerts showed, the change is here to stay. Says T.T. Vasu, president of the Music Academy, which held its 60th annual festival recently: "This liberalisation augurs well for Carnatic music."

The sabhas—whose number has dwindled from over a hundred a decade ago to a mere dozen now—have realised that strict adherence to tradition can lead to stagnation. At its recent festival, the Krishna Gana Sabha—active for 31 years and today one of the biggest in the city—made a major break from the centuries-old tradition of solo recitals by organising a massive 10-day Harinama Sangeerthanam for the first time. Instead of a virtuoso expounding on the rigid grammar of Carnatic music, there was a mass of people singing bhajans—from Mirabai to Surdas—in unison. The audience response was stupendous; and not only because it was invited to participate. The bhajan-singing, originally scheduled for one hour every morning, had to be extended to one and a half hours with crowds thronging the sabha hall long before the programme began. Says R. Yagnaraman, the sabha's secretary: "The rapturous involvement of the audience was a sight for the gods."

The liberalisation is not just confined to imaginative programmes. The annual festivals, hitherto considered the exclusive preserve of seasoned gurus like Ariyakudi Ramanujam Iyengar, G.N. Balasubramanian and Semmangudi Srinivasa Iyer, also featured fresh faces this time. These included S. Sowmya, a teenaged disciple of musicologist S. Ramanathan; Vijaya Shiva, a budding singer learning under D.K. Jayaraman; Neyveli Santhanagopalan, a disciple of Madurai T.N. Seshagopalan; and Sudha Raghunathan, pupil of veteran vocalist M.L. Vasanthakumari. Apart from the annual festival, the sabhas have now started organising mid-year concerts solely to encourage budding artistes. Observes Bharat Natyam dancer Chitra Visweswaran: "A lot of young blood is being introduced." For the uninitiated but curious, there is a welcome addition to the festival: lecture-demonstrations to educate and stimulate interest in music. Says vocalist Seetha Narayan: "At a time when some musicians fear that Carnatic music is becoming unpopular, this will give a big boost to new talent."

Mixed gathering at Music Academy fete (top); and Sudha receiving award

The resilience has extended to the accompanists as well. Until now, it was the gurus who dictated the choice of the musicians accompanying them, and they wanted only seasoned violinists and mridangists. But the sabhas have now taken the choosing into their own hands. At the Krishna Gana Sabha festival, veteran accompanists like Lalgudi Jayaraman, M. Chandrashekharan and T.N. Krishnan, were replaced by the much younger violinists Kovai Balu and Nagai Muralidharan who played with veteran vocalists like Nedanuri Krishnamurthy, Maharajapuram Santhanam and Yesudas. Asserted Yagnaraman: "No matter how big the musician, it is the sabha which will fix the accompanying trio."

The new cultural openness is also reflected in the assimilation of traditions from outside. The dance recitals of Krishna Gana Sabha, hitherto confined to south Indian forms, now also include Kathak and Manipuri, besides north Indian folk forms like the Punjabi bhangra. Predictably, the sabhas' increasing liberalisation has also begun to infect other spheres of cultural life in this insular metropolis. Last fortnight, the Uttar Pradesh Government held a cultural festival in Madras, close on the heels of a similar fete put up in the city by the Orissa Government—events that would have been unheard of a few years ago. The cultural mandarins of Madras—known as arch conservatives—are now reaching out, thus making for a richer pattern of artistic integration.

—S.H. VENKATRAMANI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Rare Air Fare

MY YEARS WITH THE IAF
by Air Chief Marshal P.C. LAL
Lancer International
Price: Rs 195; Pages: 380

FEW battle-tested military commanders take the trouble to write about their experiences. Of those who try, fewer still can tell a gripping story. Air Chief Marshal P.C. Lal was one such man and this makes his book My Years With the IAF a rare one. His wife, Ela, wrote more than 50 per cent of it but allowed herself to be persuaded not to claim co-authorship by the publisher, who argued that the book would sell better under the former air chief marshal's name.

The book was only half complete when Lal died in 1982. Had he been a less meticulous man or Ela Lal a less dedicated wife, the book may never have seen the light of day. But he left detailed pencil-written notes, transcripts of interviews he had conducted with army commanders and a list of persons remaining to be interviewed. Working from his notes and within the structure he had outlined, his wife completed the book three years after his death.

Most of the source material is unimpeachable, and this makes it the first authentic, IAF-cleared account of the 1971 India-Pakistan air war. But the book's importance goes beyond that. It is a readable account of a turbulent period on the subcontinent. Lal wields a facile pen and injects suspense and drama into his description of air battles in Burma during the Second World War and those against Pakistan in 1965 and 1971.

That apart, it needed a man of Lal's integrity, conviction and fairness to put down all that he has. Another person would have let service loyalty prevail and glossed over the shortcomings of the war. Not Lal. He does not hesitate to point out that in 1971 the IAF was forced to use some Second World War bombs and nearly 40 per cent of them turned out to be duds. Or that the napalm canisters dropped by the IAF fighters over Pakistani fortifications often failed to ignite and the planes had to do a second circuit to fire at the canisters to set them alight. Lal punctures the myth that the highly successful attack on Karachi harbour on December 9 was the result of navy-air force coordination.

In fact the IAF pilots who carried out the crucial air raid that set fire to the oil tanks near Karachi harbour did not even know that the navy would be attacking the harbour. It was on his own initiative that the Canberra squadron commander K.K. Badhwar led four planes to attack the oil installations. He had earlier spotted the oil tanks but permission to bomb them was denied to him by the Pune station commander Air Commodore Dilbagh Singh and the Central Air Command. But on December 9 Badhwar was assigned some target in the Karachi harbour area and decided to have a go at the nearby tanks. The conflagration caused a serious oil shortage which forced Pakistan to import oil from Iran. But the navy claimed the credit for setting the oil installations on fire. Says Lal: "The navy and the air force acted in close collaboration though the aim to launch their respective attacks from the air and from the sea was not known to either of the participants."

Lal is sensitive about the way General Sam Maneckshaw went about making public statements about "his air force", as if the IAF was a subordinate service. And in the chiefs of staff committee, Maneckshaw "tended to ask for more information about the other two services than he gave out about the activities of the army....giving the impression that he was more concerned with 'using' the other services to his own ends rather than collaborating with them". Lal says he and the navy chief Nanda did not make this an issue lest it effect the war effort. But later Lal strongly opposed the proposal to appoint General Maneckshaw as chief of defence staff. But he is fair to Sam Bahadur: "If ever a military officer deserved such a rank (field marshal), it is he." He later notes: "It takes a war to make our people work together. Peace breaks them into narrow sectional pieces."

But the untold story of the book is his wife Ela's. She spent three years preparing the draft, read two dozen books on the 1948, 1965 and 1971 operations and conducted over 40 interviews. "It was like fitting together a big jigsaw puzzle," she recalled. Still he had completed the most important parts himself, including most of the material on the 1971 war with Pakistan and his "summing up" of the lessons. Ela's most vivid recollection was of the inner torment her husband suffered during those war days. Every morning he would call up his staff officer to check how many pilots had gone out on sorties the previous night and how many had returned. "We used to cook only stews and other soft foods. He lost a pound each day and by the end of the war he had started looking glamorous. He also acquired a duodenal ulcer."

Self-assessment is always a difficult task: rarely can a person give a fair account of one's achievements without overstepping into boastfulness. Lal treads the middle ground sure-footedly. This is the kind of book that whets the appetite. One hopes it will encourage or provoke people like Sam Maneckshaw and Jagjit Singh Aurora to pen their reminiscences. Without that no account of the 1971 war can be complete.

—RAMINDAR SINGH

RANJAN BASU

Ela Lal: combined effort

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

In the sphere of engineering expertise, there's one that's flying high...

Bhilai Engineering Corporation (BEC)—it's a name that's today recognised in industrial circles as a 'high-flyer' in the field of comprehensive engineering capabilities. And with good reason, too. As a sophisticated engineering complex in the front ranks of India's new genre of engineering specialists, BEC offers integrated single-source facilities for design, manufacture, fabrication and commissioning of a wide range of critical castings, equipment and assemblies—right up to comprehensive project engineering and plant erection.

As partners in the modernization and expansion of Indian industries, BEC holds a proud track record of meeting the advanced engineering inputs of major industries like steel, mines, cement, process industries, power, heavy industries, and the Railways—with promptness and quality standards that compare with the best. BEC's reputed list of clients bears testimony to that.

BEC has also pioneered the indigenous development of hundreds of different types of critical engineering items—helping to bring a new self reliance to India's engineering requirements. What's more, steel plant equipment from BEC is also exported to the USSR, Egypt and Bangladesh, amongst others.

It is all this and BEC's speciality of tailoring its technology to evolving engineering requirements that has made BEC a much sought after partner for Indian industry; a high-flyer in engineering expertise.

Bhilai Engineering Corporation Limited

Industrial Area, Post Box No. 31
Bhilai 490 001, Madhya Pradesh
Phones: 5417, 5637. Tlx: 0771-214

Regional Offices: New Delhi
Calcutta, • Bombay • Visakhapatnam

BEC meeting the engineering challenges of core industries

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

R K SWAMY /BEC/11 A2

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Some of Sandvik's most experienced engineers are too busy to work at Sandvik.

CC-0. In Public Domain.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Because they're wrestling with your problems — on your job site. Working shoulder to shoulder with your field personnel. To achieve optimum efficiency and minimum cost per metre of drilling, for instance.

This on-the-spot expertise and consultancy service is what we call Sandvik's "show-how". It backs all of our sophisticated, state-of-the-art products. And makes sure they work towards giving you the edge, every time.

Behind all of this, of course, is sophisticated, relentless R&D. Without which, we believe, there can be no success. That's why we've set up one of India's most modern R&D labs. Manned by a team of qualified specialists. Working towards perfecting products to meet your specific needs. And solutions to meet your specific problems.

Sandvik goes to great depths — to bring you the benefits of our natural resources

Sandvik's high technology, high quality drilling bits are perfect for normal drilling or for modern high pressure rigs that demand high resistance to fatigue and stress. Whether it be tapping a new source or re-vitalising existing water wells or canals to irrigate vast tracts of land... be it the quest for drinking water, or for coal, zinc, copper or other minerals, where there's a drilling job to be done, Sandvik helps do it better.

SANDVIK

SANDVIK ASIA LTD

Not just know-how... but technical show-how

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Contract SA 80/86

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

◆ The Air Hostess used to fly once every week, until she finally landed for good last month. But she's far from grounded yet. Kitu Gidwani, the flying beauty who never showed her jet lag in the title role of the TV serial, is flying higher now. The model-turned-actress has just bagged an assignment that's going to make all the Sonu Walias and Kimi Katkars turn a deeper, wonderful shade of purple. She has been chosen by French film maker Christian Lara for his latest film Black. The prim-cheeked air hostess will now zoom into the jet set as a Brazilian theatre actress who lives in Paris and goes to Africa to do a play. In spite of the title and the theme, the film is not a dry document on apartheid. "It's an out and out fun film," says Gidwani, who wouldn't tell anyone how she clinched this plum deal. With the actress ready to shed and show all the way and with the film maker setting his sights on Cannes, the nights of insomnia may just wind on and on for the Walias and Katkars.

RATHIJIT GHATAK

Gidwani: flying high

◆ Serial number: 17. Date: 11.1.87. Type of launch: Parasail. Take-off time: 1317 hours. Landing time: 1319 hours. Person: Rajiv Gandhi. What, is an ex-pilot and present prime minister doing in the log book of the NCC Air Wing at Delhi's Safdarjung Aerodrome?

It all happened one morning last fortnight when Rajiv saw a group of NCC cadets afloat in their parasails, rehearsing for Republic Day. The PM descended on the assorted cadets, and commanders and ere they could recover their breath, helped himself to a parasail, and was gone with the whim. For two glorious minutes, he dipped, circled and swirled, making a perfect landing at the end. Confessed Rajiv, "Had a wonderful launch."

Rajiv: perfect landing

◆ She smiled and the Raj lived again. And the bunch of scribes could only gape for a while. "Come on, talk. Speak forth. I'm all here," she challenged and they gaped some more. Thus did Helena Bonham Carter—the love-lorn Lucy Honeychurch in Merchant-Ivory's A Room With a View—win the hearts of the press at the briefings during the Eleventh International Film Festival in New Delhi last fortnight.

RAM REHMAN

Helena: winning hearts

But it was not only newshounds whom she floored. The petite beauty, with true British blue blood coursing through her veins, was quite taken aback when a woman came up to her crying and told her how moved she was by her performance. But Carter had no stomach for compliments or adulation. She was busy gorging herself on "that lovely kali dal and roti". "We would get tired during the shooting," she disclosed. "But Ismail's succulent curries, kulfi and dal would make us work our palates off."

SIGNPOSTS

■ Died: Raj Narain, 69, after a cardiac arrest in New Delhi. The former health minister and veteran socialist leader had kept the political scene alive for decades with his quixotic remarks and legal wrangles. Ironically, the man who defeated Mrs Indira Gandhi at Rae Bareli in 1977 also proved to be instrumental in her return and the fall of the Janata regime in 1980. With him, the country's political scenario has lost much colour.

■ Died: Jaidev, 68, after a cardiac arrest in Bombay. The noted composer will be remembered for the mellow touch that he brought to Indian film music with his classical-based compositions. In spite of winning the national award for best music director thrice, the shy and selective composer preferred to keep a low profile. He is credited with introducing and grooming several singers who are familiar playback voices today.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ck when o her crying moved sh rmance. Bu stomach fo adulation ging herse kali dal an ld get tin ng," she di ail's succu lfi and d
ork our pa

OSTS

rain, 69, a rest in Ne health min an socialis
the politic ecades wit

rks and leg
lly, the ma
Indira Ga in 1977 al rumental
he fall of t
1980. Wi y's politic much colou

68, after Bombay. T will be r
the mello ought to I th his class positions.
the nation
usic direct nd selecti ed to keep redited w rooming s are famili oday.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

13000

12999

12998

12997

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Government Waste

As much as 20 per cent of the Rs 100,000 crore that the Central and state governments spend in a year may be going waste. INDIA TODAY looks at the problem and spells out 12 laws that govern the colossal waste involved in government spending.

COVER STORY 86

Advantage Barnala

The mammoth Sikh convention at Longowal village last fortnight showed that Sikhs in large numbers are willing to condemn the politics of extremism. It was also a significant personal triumph for embattled Chief Minister Barnala.

SPECIAL REPORT 22

Playing to the Gallery

His visit was unofficial and the reception from his Indian hosts, cool. Yet President Zia-ul-Haq of Pakistan managed to capture the glare of public and media attention during his unusual exercise in cricket diplomacy last fortnight.

CURRENT EVENTS 34

To Jail and Back

After two years in jail, Rajinder Sethia, who gained notoriety as the world's biggest bankrupt, was finally released on bail. But he still has to extricate himself from the tangle caused by unrecovered loans to London branches of Indian banks.

SPECIAL FEATURE 64

Shattered Lives

The trickle of Chakma refugees fleeing into Tripura from Bangladesh to escape atrocities by Bangladesh security forces has become a flood. The tales of brutality they bring are shocking but their numbers are certain to cause problems.

SPECIAL REPORT 76

The Merchant from Bombay

After years of making low-budget, artistically superior films, Ismail Merchant has hit the jackpot at last—with his latest film A Room With A View, which has grossed over Rs 65 crore since its release. A profile of a unique film maker.

CINEMA 124

CONTENTS

COMMENT 9
CAPITALOOK 12
VOICES 14
INDIANOTES 19
SPECIAL REPORT
Punjab: Advantage Barnala 22
CURRENT EVENTS
Assembly Elections Crucial Contests 30
General Zia-ul-Haq:
Playing to the Gallery 34
Congress(I): The Old Hold 39
Mizoram: The Rebel's Rule 40
Assam: Warning Signs 42
Uttar Pradesh: Student Games 43
Uttar Pradesh: House Grouse 49
Madhya Pradesh: Scandal Sheet 50
Calcutta:
Stealing from the Mother 55
Tamil Nadu: Militant Menace 61
Orissa: Siege of Balasore 62
SPECIAL FEATURE
Sethia: To Jail and Back 64
STATENOTES 68
SPECIAL REPORT
Chakmas: Shattered Lives 76
LONDONEWS 85
COVER STORY
Wasteful Government Expenditure:
The Dirty Dozen 86
TRADEWINDS 101
BUSINESS
Industry: Shaken by Competition 102
Reliance: Excess Trouble 104
Drug Policy: Ill Winds 109
Doordarshan: Ad Matter 110
Telephones: Wrong Number 115
Tax Raids: Smoke and Fire 116
The Markets: Hopeful Mood 123
CINEMA
Ismail Merchant:
The Merchant from Bombay 124
RELIGION
Buddhism: Revolt of the Nuns 133
INTERVIEW OF THE FORTNIGHT
Dr B.G. Ranchod:
"Apartheid will not go by force" 136
SPORTS
World Table Tennis: China Rules 139
U.P. Sports College:
On the Wrong Track 146
ENVIRONMENT
Tehri Dam: Under Fire 151
HEALTH
Contraceptives: Making it Easier 154
ARCHAEOLOGY
Ajanta Paintings:
Monument to Neglect 160
EYECATCHERS 164

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The Business Trip

For the creative manager, innovative solutions are not always the result of a sequential working out of management syllogisms. They are very often the result of patterns formed out of millions of bits of information (not necessarily business-oriented) scattered over the vast expanse of his unconscious mind. This, of course, is a truism.

Innovation therefore seems to get bullied out of its rightful place by the tyranny of the well-ordered, step-by-step routine of corporate existence—of time-consuming maintenance and fire-fighting. Today the executive realises the need to switch on another process of 'thinking' that will compress time and jog his intuition to arrive at that moment of illumination. The office and the home may not always be the best environmental stimuli for this kind of thinking.

Many have confessed however, to a surprising glimmer of intuition on particular occasions—those corporate errands outside their work city. Forced out of the discipline of commercial routine the mind seems to free-float to possible illumination. "You travel to this other city on a pressing matter, which you are going to sort out," said an executive, "but the pleasant surprise is that you suddenly seem to see answers to questions that troubled you on quite another matter. This comes as a kind of bonus on such trips. I don't know how it happens, but it does."

The concept of the business trip as creativity jogger prompted another idea—the hotel room as creativity jogger.

The hospitality designers of Welcomgroup asked themselves the question:
"Can we create an environment that will encourage this creativity jogging?"

They realised that this would call for more than the plushness and luxury of the five-star deluxe experience or the obvious provision of executive facilities

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

as Creativity Jogger.

and access to equipment. It would require the creation of an atmosphere of a different kind of exclusivity which allowed for uncluttered mental room combined with quiet intellectual stimulation.

It meant shaping a whole new quality of property and services. It involved programmes of executive life-style study and intensive training for a new breed of hotel personnel.

Maurya Sheraton Towers

Thus was born the idea of the Maurya Sheraton Towers which is now an international reality.

To describe the Maurya Towers it is necessary to dispel the traditional notions associated with five-star hotels. The hyperbole and the superlatives (that come to mind if you view the 'Towers' in the context of other hotels) are inadequate, for the simple reason that the Maurya Towers is another genre in the art of executive hospitality.

The exclusivity of each floor, the elegant design of the rooms; the Business Centre and conference rooms; the intellectual stimulation of the Tower Club with its library and bar, the dining room and the health club; the exquisite taste with which every corner is designed...all these are incomparable, but in a way not the real discriminators.

The real difference is in the intangibles which the sensitive and mature intellect will perceive; in the finesse, the unobtrusiveness of the service, the charm and the flair with which the personnel allow you that much-needed quiet and freedom (from even the smallest of irritants) to do your intuition-jogging.

Admittedly the Maurya Towers is not for everyone. But for you and your nucleus of brilliant people it certainly could be an investment in creativity.

The Maurya Sheraton Towers, at the Welcomgroup Maurya Sheraton, Diplomatic Enclave, New Delhi-110 021

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

He works with some of the loveliest women in India

One photograph by Glamour Photographer Adrian Steven, says more about a beautiful woman than a thousand words.

Adrian transforms the fashion model from a mere clotheshorse to a warm, intelligent, exciting woman, one who celebrates the glamorous life. That she is beautiful to boot merely adds to her desirability.

With what does Adrian work his wizardry?

A battery of cameras, though his favourite format is the 35mm, which he says gives him the sharpest results.

I notice, not without pleasure, that there are a few cartons of Konica color film on his table.

I ask him how he finds Konica.

"You tell me", says Adrian.

He opens a folder and carefully removes a set of new portraits he says he's just done on Konica film, Konica paper.

I whistle softly. Glowing skin, soft red mouth, silken fabric... they look almost touchable. I leaf through the prints slowly.

When I look up, Adrian is loading a camera for another assignment, due in minutes.

And joy of joys, he's using Konica.

Konica

SR-V 100

COLOR FILM & PRIN

FOR SMILES... BEHIND THE CA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

INDIA TODAY
THE COMPLETE NEWSMAGAZINE

VOLUME XII NUMBER 5
FOR THE FORTNIGHT MARCH 1-15, 1987

EDITOR
AROON PURIE

EXECUTIVE EDITOR T.N. NINAN
PICTURE EDITOR RAGHU RAI
FEATURES EDITOR INDERJIT BADHWAR
DEPUTY EDITOR DILIP BOBB
SENIOR EDITOR PRABHU CHAWLA
ASSISTANT EDITOR AJAY KUMAR

CORRESPONDENTS

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENTS RAMINDAR SINGH, SHEKHAR GUPTA
NEW DELHI PALAKUNNATHU G. MATHAI, RAJ CHENGAPPA, MADHU JAIN, JAGANNATH DUBASHI, SREEKANT KHANDEKAR, TANIA MIDHA
AHMEDABAD RAMESH MENON
BHOPAL N.K. SINGH
BOMBAY M. RAHMAN, PARTHASARATHI SWAMI
CALCUTTA INDRANIL BANERJIE
HYDERABAD AMARNATH K. MENON
LUCKNOW DILIP AWASTHI
MADRAS S.H. VENKATRAMANI
PATNA FARZAND AHMED
TRIVANDRUM SREEDHAR PILLAI
LONDON RAMESH CHANDRAN
NEWS COORDINATOR RADHIKA ROY
ART DIRECTOR M.G. MOINUDDIN
CHIEF OF PRODUCTION SHIRLEY JOSHUA, ANURADHA KAPOOR
COPY DESK SIMRAN BHARGAVA, ANN NINAN, SURYA GANGADHARAN, MOHAMMED ASLAM
CHIEF PHOTOGRAPHER BHAWAN SINGH
PHOTOGRAPHERS PRAMOD PUSHKARNA, PRASHANT PANJIAR
CARTOONIST AJIT NINAN MATHEW
CARTOGRAPHER B.K. SHARMA
LAYOUT ARTISTS ANUP GUPTA, PEALI DUTTA GUPTA
MARKETING DIRECTOR MOHINI BHULLAR

ADVERTISING MANAGERS

BOMBAY ANOOP ZUTSHI
DELHI NAGINDER RISHI
CALCUTTA MEERA PAUL
MADRAS R. ANAND
BANGALORE S.J. NAIDU
GENERAL MANAGER CHANDER RAI

• EDITORIAL OFFICE LIVING MEDIA INDIA PVT LTD. F-14/15, CONNAUGHT PLACE NEW DELHI 110001. PHONE: 3315801-4. TELEX: 31-61245 INTO IN CABLE: LIVMEDIA. NEW DELHI • SUBSCRIPTIONS: INDIA TODAY SUBSCRIPTION DEPARTMENT. POST BOX 69. FARIDABAD HARYANA • TRADE CIRCULATION: INDIA TODAY CIRCULATION MANAGER. F-14 CONNAUGHT PLACE. MIDDLE CIRCLE. NEW DELHI. PHONE: 3313076-8. TELEX: 31-62634 INTO IN • ADVERTISING OFFICES: 28 A&B JOLLY MAKER CHAMBER II. NARIMAN POINT. BOMBAY-400021. PHONE: 2026152, 2029326, 2029435. TELEX: 11-5373 THOM IN. CABLE: LIVMEDIA. BOMBAY • K-9. CONNAUGHT CIRCUS. NEW DELHI-110001. PHONE: 352378, 323576, 351273 AND 351323. TELEX: 31-2651 THOM IN. CABLES: LIVMEDIA. NEW DELHI • FAGUN CHAMBERS. 26 COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF ROAD. MADRAS-600105. PHONE: 477188, 477770, 479163. CABLE: LIVMEDIA MADRAS • 74/1ST. MARKS ROAD. BANGALORE-560001. PHONE: 568448, 579037, 579089. CABLE: LIVMEDIA. BANGALORE • 12C EVEREST 46C CHOWRINGHEE ROAD. CALCUTTA-700016. PHONE: 445398, 447726. CABLE: LIVINMEDIA. CALCUTTA
• COPYRIGHT 1984 LIVING MEDIA INDIA PVT LTD. ALL RIGHTS RESERVED THROUGHOUT THE WORLD. REPRODUCTION IN ANY MANNER IS PROHIBITED.
PUBLISHED BY CHANDER RAI FOR LIVING MEDIA INDIA PVT LTD. NEW DELHI AND PRINTED AT THOMSON PRESS INDIA LTD. FARIDABAD HARYANA • INDIA TODAY DOES NOT TAKE RESPONSIBILITY FOR RETURNING UNSOLICITED PUBLICATION MATERIAL •

CONTROVERSIAL RIFT

In a country where the Government is armed with dictatorial powers, it is a welcome change to see a president who refuses to be a rubber-stamping authority only ("Presidential Challenge", February 28). By questioning many of the decisions made by the Government, Gianiji has proved beyond doubt that Parliament is not performing the duties entrusted to it by the people.

Ahmedabad VINOD C. DIXIT

■ Your story on the President is yet another intellectual exercise in futility. While there will undoubtedly be a mild shock if Singh does not approve the Postal Bill, our constitutional institutions are such that the same bill can be enacted that much more harshly. One wonders why we need a president at all. Such is the state of Indian democracy.

Calcutta U.S. SAHASRANAMAN

■ After inviting Rajiv Gandhi to form a government—after Mrs Gandhi's assassination—without even waiting for the majority party to elect its leader, why has Gianiji suddenly become overzealous? His motives in trying to prove that the President is no more a mere rubber-stamp are obvious. He seems to have set his eyes on another term.

New Delhi GEORGE MATHEW

■ It is a sad reflection on the state of affairs that the holders of the two most respected posts in our country should indulge in such petty squabbles. One hopes that both Rajiv and Gianiji will show more maturity in the future.

Kottayam V.K. SATHYAVAN NAIR

■ The controversy between Rajiv and Zail Singh, apart from the mirch masala it has generated, has also brought to life a constitution which is more violated than defended, ever since the infamous declaration of the Emergency.

Bangalore G.I. DZOUZA

FRACTURED IMAGE

Your cover story ("Crumbling Credibility", February 15) reveals how and why Rajiv's image has taken such a severe beating in an astonishingly short period. On his election, all of us had dearly hoped that he would make an excellent prime minister. But now it appears that our hopes were misplaced. Rajiv is increasingly being seen as a leader who is not well-versed in the art of governance, has an autocratic bent of mind and is greatly susceptible to pressure.

New Delhi SUSHIL MEHTANI

■ You have done justice to A.P. Venkateswaran. All right-thinking Indians can only pray: "May his tribe increase."

Calicut C.P. CHANDRA DAS

■ With reference to your story criticising the prime minister's behaviour, it needs to be pointed out that bureaucrats have not been able to keep pace with changing times and have failed to arouse confidence among the public. Our politicians are to some extent responsible for inefficiency but our bureaucrats also cannot escape responsibility, because they are busy pleasing their political masters. I think Rajiv is justified in admonishing the top ranking bureaucrats.

Ahmedabad ATUL SHAH

■ It is not the dismissal of a senior bureaucrat like Venkateswaran which was so shocking as the manner in which Rajiv Gandhi chose to do it. Even the late Raj Narain couldn't have been credited with such a blunder.

Baroda NAZNEEN S. VIMADALAL

■ Whatever be the justifications given for the shifting of V.P. Singh from Finance to the Defence Ministry, the public will perceive it as a victory of the dishonest businessman and a blow to upright and straightforward people. To regain the people's confidence Rajiv should restore Singh's portfolio.

Aizawl K. VITTAL SHETTY

■ By constantly shifting those of his ministers who seem to gain popularity by doing their jobs well, the prime minister is only showing one of the most common of human ailments: jealousy. It

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Crompton Greaves

Examine the significance of a product line that's totally pollution free.

Crompton Greaves. Manufacturers of utility products of permanent value.

Crompton Greaves manufacture the widest range of electrical equipment in the country. From 400 kV transformers and reactors to a light bulb. From switches to switchyards. From circuit breakers to 6000 kW electric motors. From pumpsets to fans.

All of which are totally pollution free. And all, necessities of today's life.

Crompton Greaves. The 250 crore company that's a part of your daily life.

Crompton Greaves are everywhere. In the city. In the village. At the factory. And at home. Crompton Greaves. With 9 manufacturing units, a network of 16 sales branches, and a work force exceeding 9000, it's the company people like to take for granted. Because it's so reliable.

It's the company that's going to play an increasingly important role in your life.

It's the company whose significance can only increase as environmental pollution threatens.

We were the first. We are the future.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Crompton Greaves
LIMITED

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

ULKA-CG-C-6-86

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

also means that he now loves power and wants to sit on top.
Simla PRAMOD SUD

DANGEROUS INTERFERENCE

With reference to your editorial ("A Dangerous Mix", February 28), it is unthinkable that the chief minister of a secular country should subject his office to the dictates of a religious body. Barnala came to power obviously because people other than Sikhs voted for him. Under such a situation, the order of Sikh priests demanding that he step down, defies logic.
Delhi KAMALESH PRASAD

■ It is not the first time that the Akal Takht priests have acted as an extra-constitutional authority and interfered in national politics. Barnala should take a stand that "hukumnamas" of the Akal Takht cannot be issued on matters which have nothing to do with religion.
Agra M.C. GUPTA

GREAT CONTRIBUTION

Your coverage of the great flutist ("The Magic of his Flute", February 28) Hari Prasad Chaurasia who made his name by his dedication and devotion to music was excellent. Chaurasia has contributed greatly in popularising classical Indian music to foreign audiences.
Jamshedpur BHUPENDRA NATH BOSE

A CAVALIER STYLE

Your hard-hitting Comment ("The Importance of Style", February 15) could not have been better timed. Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi, who is sailing the country to the 21st century post-haste, has laid bare his cavalier handling of matters. His style of functioning leaves the impression that he is vulnerable to lobbyism.
Ahmedabad M.V. RAVINDRAN

UNJUSTIFIED ATTACK

Your article ("Bearing the Blockade", February 15) was excellent. The economic blockade of innocent people is meaningless and will surely not yield the result the Sri Lankan Government hopes for. It is time India took a stronger stand by stopping exports to Sri Lanka and persuading other friendly countries to do so. Only steps like this might bring some sense to the Sri Lankan Government which uses diplomacy as a cover for its brutal attack on innocent Tamils.
Ramachandrapuram S.R. RAMAN

NOT OUT OF TURN

Your item in Capitalook ("Loose Mouth", February 15) was a gross distortion of facts. It made two points: first, that I spoke out of turn at a conference of state ministers of power on Januray 15 at which the prime minister was supposed to be the first speaker, and I was therefore responsible for a breach of protocol; second, that I to use your own words, "sprang up" to speak at a session of the Indira Gandhi Memorial Conference (Towards New Beginnings), without being specifically invited by the organisers to do so.

The truth is that I spoke according to schedule at the ministerial conference and did not in any way attempt to upstage the prime minister. Similarly, I was invited to attend the Indira Gandhi Conference as an observer by the prime minister's adviser, Sri Sharada Prasad. And at the conference I had sought written permission from the chairman of the afternoon session to read a paper after the main speakers had finished. I was, very graciously, given the required permission to do so. I am therefore pained to see how your respected magazine could have drawn such uncharitable and uncalled for references. I do not mind a considered criticism of my views, as indeed, should be in a proper dialogue. But in this case you resorted to gratuitously sarcastic comment.
New Delhi VASANT SATHE
Union minister of energy

■ It is true that on both occasions Mr Sathe spoke according to the official plans and did not breach protocol. No ridicule was intended; the error is regretted.
—Editor

DEPRESSING STATE

Your article ("Facing the Facts", February 15) clearly brought to light the weaknesses in Indian sports. In spite of such a large population, India has failed to produce sportsmen of international repute. In hockey, even small countries like South Korea have overtaken us. Politicking, lack of seriousness among sportsmen, use of old techniques, lack of practice as also funds, and the poor quality of equipment has played havoc in the field of sports. Only a fundamental restructuring can improve the situation.
New Delhi R. BHASKARAN

■ The Indian Olympic Association, probably for the first time, has made a realistic appraisal of a debacle. The whole nation is electrified when a P.T. Usha or a Padukone or for that matter an Indian team, becomes a world beater. Indeed, even if a fraction of the funds frittered away in superficial propaganda on national unity is diverted towards sport, we may have men and women who will do the nation proud.
Lonavla P.H. KAPADI

KILLING CRICKET

Thanks for the statistical analysis ("Way of the Wicket", February 15). The regal charm of Test cricket is already on the wane as more people prefer one-day matches. It is the dead Indian pitches which are responsible.
Darjeeling TANMOY CHAKRABORTY

GOOD SHOW

Your report ("Changing Panorama", February 15) made interesting reading. A short resume of the major Indian films made it even more enjoyable. The language was excellent.
Allahabad SAHID AMIR

POOR QUALITY

After paying a high-price, everybody expects that the indigenous toys function properly ("In High-Tech Land", February 15). It is surprising that some of the toys have won awards. It seems that prizes are given either due to its looks or because of the company's brand name, not due to its performance. It is essential that the standard of Indian toys improve.
Delhi R.R. CHAWLA

DIFFERING ASSESSMENT

Your story ("Ghosts of the Past", February 15) is misleading. There is no anti-Marwari or anti-Bengali feeling in Assam. Views of this kind only lower the image of the Assamese people.
Guwahati K. DUTTA

PROVING A POINT

Your report ("A Contentious Call", January 31) was nothing but an attempt to malign Shahabuddin. The peaceful bandh observed by the Muslims on February 1 proves whether Shahabuddin is a nonentity and the Babri mosque question a non-issue.
Bombay NAUSHAD ASLAM KHAN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

COMMENT
THE ECONOMY

Need To Aim Higher

THERE is little doubt that, in a fundamental sense, the Indian economy has entered an era of faster growth, and that it is at a distinctly different state of development than was the case even a decade ago. This has been evident to the discerning eye for some time, but it is only now that the Government's statistics fully reflect the new reality. India may or may not have reached what a theorist once called the 'take-off stage', but an average annual economic growth rate of 5 per cent in the 1980s is a quantum improvement over the 3.5 per cent growth rate that prevailed till the mid-1970s. And now, the Government's figures say that Indian industry has, in fact, been growing at nearly 8 per cent annually, and not at under 6 per cent as was thought earlier.

Illustration by AJIT NINAN

Certainly, the signs of development are everywhere, as also of better economic management. Food shortages have been banished, and even repeated failures of the monsoons have not led to the national crises that would have been automatic not so long ago. There hasn't been a single year of double-digit inflation throughout this decade. And the economy shows every sign of moving from a shortage-oriented system to a surplus-oriented one, as also from rigid controls to flexible policy stances. The entrepreneurial base has been broadened, while savings and investment rates (which help build for the future) remain high. Even internationally, the country's image has changed from being a basket case to one where economic successes have been scored.

This is not to say that there are no problems. Indeed, the task of economic development has barely begun in a country that still ranks near the bottom in any international ranking of socio-economic indices like per capita income, infant mortality, literacy and unemployment. In addition, there is further cause for worry about the large foreign trade deficit, the modest foreign exchange reserves, the growing industrial sickness, and the imminent threat of environmental disaster because of widespread deforestation, the rapid spread of wastelands as well as the growing incidence of droughts and floods. Finally, the employment challenge remains unmet.

Nevertheless, it is important that a consciousness of the achievements of the past permeate thinking and decision-making, and that those who have a role in economic planning do not stay in a mind-set that belongs to an earlier age and another situation. The Rajiv Gandhi Government has done well to change the focus of national economic debate in at least some ways—stressing the need for efficiency, economies of scale, international competitiveness, modernisation and freedom for entrepreneurship. But the action on the ground has been less impressive than the high-sounding objectives, and some of the economic policy liberalisation that has been attempted amounts to little more than tinkering. In some ways it would seem that the more things change, the more they remain the same. Besides, there is now the real danger that, as the prime minister's graph of political popularity dips, he will lose the initiative on the economic front as well. For instance, with public sector employees up in arms it seems unlikely that an embattled prime minister will try to trim flabby public sector organisations that have surplus labour.

That will be a pity, because the new economic situation presents an opportunity that no previous prime minister has had. And it will be a pity if, having attained take-off speed, the economy continues to remain grounded in the mire because the Government couldn't get its act together. In a country endowed with plentiful natural resources, agricultural strength and an intelligent, enterprising people, failure to perform can only be because the right environment was just not created.

There is still plenty of scope for freeing the economy from regulatory controls that inhibit productive activity. The challenge of replacing the 'babu culture' with one that places a premium on enterprise and purposeful action still remains. On the industrial front, good money continues to be thrown after bad because the problem of industrial sickness is not being confronted head on. In agriculture, the green revolution could spread much faster if the potential created by irrigation schemes did not lie half unused. While foreign exchange is a problem, the Government must realise that there is something fundamentally wrong with its policies if Indians stash away large sums of dollars abroad. And, a tremendous amount of surpluses generated by the economy ends up as wasteful government expenditure—at a time when the pressures on government finances are all too evident. All Government expenditure should not only be audited but the justification for it evaluated in detail. Finally, programmes in family planning, rural development and literacy need to be made far more effective, because the return on outlays in these sectors is pretty dismal.

The Government has taken the first steps towards reform in many of these areas but seems now to be losing steam when it should be pushing still harder for change and improvement. The prime minister needs to ask much tougher questions than he has so far, and ensure change in areas that cry out for change. Rajiv Gandhi's greatest strength is his pragmatism, and he should show some boldness on the economic front. Instead of getting caught in the cobewebs of worn out shibboleths like the Industrial Policy Resolution of 1956, his buzzwords should be productivity, profits and surpluses. After all, his record in office will be judged in terms of whether he recognised an opportunity to build on past successes, and whether he capitalised on it to reach for a vision of a more prosperous country.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

It's the exception that proves the rule!

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The rule of thumb in choosing a copier is features and price. But what takes the chance out of your choice is the secret of the Modi Xerox difference – the difference between buying just a box and getting the best out of it.

Not that features and price are unimportant. In fact, you're likely to look at them first. That's fine. Go ahead. Convince yourself.

"Do you have a copier to match my requirements and suit my budget?"

Yes we do. Since customers have different needs, we have different copiers–2 models and 6 configurations–the largest range in India.

Our feature-rich range includes Reduction, Enlargement, Fixed Platen etc., and with high-productivity add-ons such as the Sorter and Semi Automatic Document Feeder – we have the best solution to your copying needs.

In terms of price, the range starts with the 1025 1:1 – the lowest priced A-3 Size-to-Size copier in India.

"How do I know you're not selling me an outdated machine?"

Because the '10' Series of copiers is the current range marketed by Xerox Corporation worldwide. Indeed, Modi Xerox introduced the 1025 only 6 months after its international launch, making it the most modern copier available in India today.

Check the facts about how modern some of the 'latest' competitive models are!

"So much for features and price.... how about running costs?"

A leading question, which usually produces misleading answers. Running costs should be low and guaranteed so that you can afford and control what you spend. Under our Full Service Maintenance Agreement that is precisely what you get. You pay nothing more than a fixed all-inclusive cost per copy.

Competitive rates–despite excluding high-cost spares–are frequently higher!

So if it is features and price that you are looking for, Modi Xerox sets the standard. But should you be satisfied so easily? We don't think so. After all what you are really looking for is value for money.

Any one can sell you a box. Only Modi Xerox can help you get the best out of it.

That's the Modi Xerox difference!

Getting the best from your copier means getting the most from your investment. That means maximising and enhancing copier usage.

"How on earth do you enhance copier usage?"

By using a range of unique and powerful tools developed by Modi Xerox.

The first of these is Copier Software.

"Computer Software I know, but Copier Software?"

Copier Software does for copiers what computer software does for computers. It extends the usefulness of the copier, thereby increasing its value to your organisation.

The current range of Modi Xerox Copier Software Packages include :

- Document/Form Creation Systems
- Inland Mailing System
- Film Overlay System

These packages enable your copier to :

– cut down paperwork

– speed up information flow.

The Modi Xerox Duplicating Price Plan is another innovative enhancement tool.

"What is this Duplicating Price Plan?"

It is a unique scheme which combines the convenience, speed and copy quality of the Modi Xerox 1045 with the economy of more traditional methods of duplicating, such as stencils. Under this Plan the more copies you take from one original, the cheaper each copy becomes!

"But what if I can't afford to buy a copier right now?"

Modi Xerox takes the waiting out of wanting. Our Rental Plans enable you to use a copier without buying it. All you pay is a fixed monthly rental and an economic cost per copy.

"Fine. How do I maximise copier usage?"

- Maximising copier usage means that your copier must work when you want and for as long as you want. Modi Xerox has the largest service force in the industry, to ensure the highest possible uptime on your copier.
- Maximising usage means assured long term availability of spares and consumables. Modi Xerox have the only fully integrated manufacturing facility in India, producing the complete range of consumables and critical spares. So both your source and assurance of supplies are right here and not thousands of miles away in the Land of the Rising Sun!

The sum total of all this is four simple words – commitment to the customer.

At Modi Xerox customer commitment is a Rs.37 crore investment. Our investment ensures maximum return on your investment. This reflects the philosophy of our collaborators, Xerox Corporation, to customer service worldwide. That is why Xerox are the undisputed world leaders of the industry–why every second copy in the world rolls off a Xerox machine.

In India, only Modi Xerox bring you the genuine Xerox copier and the Xerox commitment to the customer.

That's the Modi Xerox difference!

Send this coupon to : Marketing Division, Modi Xerox Ltd., 33 Community Centre, New Friends Colony, New Delhi-110 065.

Yes, I would like to know more about buying a copier that ensures maximum return on my investment.

Name : _____

Designation : _____

Company : _____

Address : _____

_____

Call Team Xerox today!

OBM/10619/B

Setting the standards for others to copy!

Xerox is a registered trademark of Rank Xerox Limited, U.K., and Xerox Corporation, U.S.A.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Mysterious Mission

● What was Minister of State for Finance Brahm Dutt doing for a whole week in Italy when by all logic he should have been the one person whose presence in New Delhi was most urgently required? Dutt had just joined the Finance Ministry after the latest cabinet shake-up in late January. Moreover, the finance minister was also new to the job. And, most important, the details of the annual budget were in the process of being finalised. Yet, instead of familiarising himself with his new charge and the budget exercise, Dutt was visiting Milano, Florence and Rome and talking to Italian oil explorarion companies while files piled up in his North Block office in New Delhi. His absence from the capital led to rumours that he was sent on a mission to further strengthen the crucial Indo-Italian business connection—a connection which had substantially weakened during V.P. Singh's stay at the Finance Ministry. (It was during Singh's tenure that Italian companies lost the Rs 900-crore Hazira pipeline contract).

But Dutt insists that he had committed himself to the visit at the invitation of the chairman of the ENI group, the state-owned consortium that includes companies like Snamprogetti. Says Dutt: "I had accepted the invitation when I didn't know that I would be given this additional charge (of finance)." But officials in the Finance Ministry say that they expect some major deals to be signed with Italian companies following the Dutt visit.

Raids Reinforced

● The prime minister's office is desperately keen to dispel the general impression that the transfer of former finance minister V.P.Singh was not under pressure from industrialists upset with Singh's 'raid raj'. Last fortnight, special instructions went out from the prime minister's office to the revenue department of the finance minister ordering them to not only continue with raids on prominent business houses but also to publicise them as widely as possible. The directive to the Finance Ministry clearly stated that special briefings should be held for the media on the raids and publicity should also be given to them on Doordarshan. Ironically, it was the prime minister's office which had earlier directed the Finance Ministry to refrain from publicising the raids till a formal chargesheet was filed against the businessmen involved. The instructions had been issued after the arrest of L.M. Thapar, chairman of the Thapar Group of Industries, was given very wide media publicity.

Cartoons by AJIT NINAN

Calling Quits

● One major gripe of IAS officials is that while there is lateral movement in the service, upward mobility gets choked off because senior positions continue to be occupied after they should have fallen vacant—often because senior retirees manage to secure extensions or re-employment with their perks and powers intact.

Younger IAS officials want a change. Some recently made a recommendation to the IAS Officers Association asking for a special meeting at which they will seek a pledge from colleagues to abstain from seeking—and to turn down if offered—any new job with the Government after retirement. While it is not binding, the proposal will make senior IAS-wallahs on the brink of retirement and angling for slots, a little uncomfortable. Also, about-to-retire officials on the lookout for new assignments curry favour with ministerial bosses by bending over backwards. "Our proposal," said one official, "will not only clear the logjam at the top but also introduce more integrity."

Stormy Minutes

● The last thing Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi expected is that somebody was keeping minutes of last month's stormy meeting in which he flared up at two secretaries—D. Bandhopadhayay of rural development, and C.S. Sastry of agriculture—for unsatisfactory audio-visual programmes. But somebody did.

A few days later the officials present asked Serla Grewal, principal secretary to Rajiv, whether minutes of the meeting were going to be circulated. Grewal promptly shot down the idea. But sure enough, a Department of Science and Technology official had kept detailed notes, and the minutes were duly circulated to all concerned.

Grewal later received a gleeful call from an official, saying that he had got the minutes, after all. These contained specific references to Rajiv warning that more secretarial heads would roll; that Bandhopadhayay and Sastry be transferred to their home states by 4 o' clock that afternoon; and other unsavoury utterances. An angry Grewal had all the copies recalled. So when the history of the Government under Rajiv is written, some saucy details will be missing.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

NEW

One reason to start planning your future home today . . . .

A LOW INTEREST HOUSING LOAN.

NEW

There's every reason to believe your ration card could soon have an address you own. If you join the Home Savings Plan. And get one of the lowest interest loans available in housing today.

The Home Savings Plan starts as a saving and ends as a low interest loan. What's more, it's made for you. Because, it's up to you to decide how much to save every month. And for how long.

I am interested in HDFC's Home Savings Plan.
Please send me a free brochure.

Name _____

Address _____

_____

_____

HSP/IT

(A minimum of two years is what we ask).
And you earn interest too.

Once you save the minimum sum needed, you are eligible for a low interest loan.
With 12 years to repay it, in equated monthly instalments.

Act soon. Join the Home Savings Plan now. After all, it's your future home we are talking about.

HDFC. When you're planning your future home.

HOME SAVINGS PLAN

HOUSING DEVELOPMENT FINANCE CORPORATION LIMITED

REGISTERED OFFICE BOMBAY: Ramon House, 169 Backbay Reclamation, Bombay 400 020. Phone: 220265, 220282.
BRANCHES IN: Ahmedabad, Bangalore, Bhubaneswar, Bombay (Parel), Calcutta, Cochin, Guwahati, Hyderabad, Indore, Jaipur, Lucknow, Madras, New Delhi, Pune.

SPEER 452 86

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

INDIA TODAY
INTERNATIONAL EDITION

GIFT INDIA TO SOMEONE YOU CARE FOR...

GIFT FOR
ADDRESS
CITY CODE
COUNTRY

Please send one year's subscription of INDIA TODAY, International Edition and my gift card to the person named above. Enclosed is my cheque/DD/M.O. for Rs_____ payable to Living Media India Pvt. Ltd.

MY NAME
ADDRESS
CITY CODE
COUNTRY

Send this advertisement and payment to:
Living Media India Pvt. Ltd.
Subscription Department
P.B. No. 69, Delhi-Mathura Road
Faridabad 121007, Haryana, India

Annual Airmail Subscription Rates

Rs 585
ABU DHABI, AFGHANISTHAN, ANTIGUA, AUSTRALIA, BAHRAIN, BAHAMAS, BARBADOS, BELGIUM, BRAZIL, BULGARIA, BURMA, CANADA, CHINA, CHILE, COLOMBIA, DENMARK, EGYPT, ETHIOPIA, FIJI, FRANCE, W. GERMANY, GHANA, GIBRALTAR, GREECE, GUYANA, HAWAI, HONG KONG, HUNGARY, INDONESIA, IRAN, IRAQ, IRELAND, ITALY, JAMAICA, JAPAN, JORDON, KAMPUCHEA, KENYA, KUWAIT, S. KOREA, LAOS, LEBANON, MALAYSIA, MALAWI, MALDIVES, MEXICO, MORROCO, NETHERLANDS, NEW ZEALAND, NORWAY, OMAN, PAKISTAN, PANAMA, PHILIPPINES, POLAND, QATAR, ROMANIA, SAUDI ARABIA, SEYCHELLES, SHARJAH, SIERRA LEONE, SINGAPORE, SOUTH AFRICA, SPAIN, SRI LANKA, SUDAN, SWITZERLAND, SYRIA, TAIWAN, TANZANIA, THAILAND, UAE, UGANDA, UK, USA, VENEZUELA, YUGOSLAVIA, YEMEN, ZAMBIA, ZIMBABWE

Rs 185
BANGLADESH, BHUTAN, NEPAL

NH 943

Times of India

● I thought I had been isolated because I am an outcaste. But thousands of people who come here to see me say I am a true Sikh.

■ S.S. BARNALA, Punjab chief minister, after his excommunication.

● One can deal with a problem in two ways—using the soft or the hard approach. I think the Centre and Barnala have used the first option for quite some time.

■ RACHHPAL SINGH, of the Akali Dal (Master Tara Singh group) in Sunday Observer

● The historic peace accord (has) proved how far the Congress(I) can rise above partisan considerations in the greater interest of the nation.

■ RAJIV GANDHI while campaigning for the Mizoram Assembly polls

● If I bear arms I will bear them for the integrity of India.

■ LALDENGA on whether he would go underground if his party lost the elections, in Patriot

● No state, no vote.

■ SUBHAS GHISING announcing boycott of the West Bengal polls, in The Telegraph

● The Left Front's failure to persuade the Election Commission to accept a date of its choice is evidence that some are more equal than others.

■ Editorial in The Statesman

● Call them permanent civil servants. Bureaucrat has become a pejorative term. If you want to denigrate somebody you say he is a bureaucrat.

■ B.K.NEHRU in Sunday Mail

● Rajiv has to manage a council of ministers with largely undistinguished men and women. It is an irony that the Congress(I) with its elephantine majority in Parliament does not yield talent that is the size of even a mouse.

■ RGK in The Week

● My best all round performance in Tests and I really thought that I would not be playing.

■ ROGER BINNY after his first-inning six-wicket haul in the second Test, in Indian Express ● Naseeruddin Shah fits the ape category—he totally conforms to the character he plays.

■ H.R.F. KEATING, author of A Perfect Murder being filmed in India and starring Shah

● When I have a face and a body why shouldn't I exhibit it? Other actresses have not been able to do (this) because they are not so gifted.

■ JAYAPRADA in Current

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

You don't become an acknowledged success like Satish Mehta without recognising a good business deal when you see one. That's why he lost no time signing on the dotted line for his Diners Club card. For frequent travelling in India and abroad and checking in and out of hotels, Satish finds it makes perfect business sense.

But what really clinched the deal was the package of extras that went with the card: Free flight insurance, commission-free travellers' cheques, attractive discounts at hotels abroad, personal cheque cashing facility, a generous purchase bonus. And something that has special value in his Book — a consolidated statement of account every month.

Satish Mehta has succeeded in business by putting his cards on the table. That goes particularly for his Diners Club card!

Enterprising businessman Satish Mehta puts his Card on the table

Diners Club
Welcome to our world

Diners Club India Pvt. Ltd.
Raheja Chambers,
213 Nariman Point,
Bombay-400 021.

LINTAS DC 131 2417

For details contact The Sales Division: □ Bombay Tel: 244949 □ Delhi Tel: 602565 □ Madras Tel: 475112
□ Bangalore Tel 563982 □ Hyderabad Tel: 822674 □ Calcutta Tel: 447280.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

LET'S TAKE H
LET'S TAKE AIR C

Hi-tech that brought the first Airbus into India from Toulouse, France. With tyres made in India. By Dunlop.

Hi-tech that makes Dunlop the one and only aircraft tyre manufacturer in the country.

Hi-tech that has resulted from four major collaborations. Sumitomo Rubber Industries Ltd., Japan; BTR Belting Limited, U.K.; Mitsuboshi Belting Ltd., Japan and Dunlop Aerospace, U.K.

Hi-tech that gives you superior tyres for every type of vehicle on the road, as well as sophisticated industrial rubber products. And now, only from Dunlop, steel cord belting.

Dunlop hi-tech. You can't get higher.

DUNLOP

E HI-TECH
R CRAFT TYRES

Dunlop is Dunlop. Always ahead.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Comfort [Kʌmfət] a. state of physical or mental well-being or contentment; things that allow ease or well-being in life. The spacious rooms and suites create the true meaning of comfort with fine furnishings, charming, subtle colours and carefully chosen fabrics. And of course, it wouldn't be complete without personal butler service to attend to your every need. At The Oberoi, Delhi, you will find absolute comfort — because you deserve the best the world has to offer.

The Oberoi

NEW DELHI

For reservations please contact your travel agent, the hotel direct Telephone 699571, Telex 63222 and 3829 OBDL IN or call Ahmedabad 464451 Bangalore 573444 • Bombay 2024343 • Calcutta 292323 • Madras 478156

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Cartoons by AJIT NINAN

NAKED DEFIANCE

■ The ideal aim of a custodian of law is to uncover various—and nefarious—criminal plans before they actually happen. But, one plot that the Bhind police did succeed in uncovering, only caused them acute embarrassment.

The episode began with a cop ordering a prisoner he was escorting to court, to uncover his face. When the prisoner refused, the policeman lost his shirt and prodded the unfortunate in the ribs. The prisoner was not tickled. To display his displeasure he decided to bare all—quite literally.

Before his dumbfounded escort could react, he had shed everything save his handcuffs. But worse was to come. In a chain reaction, his fellow inmates followed suit by staging a show of naked defiance. Soon, the court compound looked like a colony of nudists at a rag sale—on one side, a row of chained males in their birthday suits, on the other, a pile of discarded garments. Jail officials were hastily summoned. But despite threats, the prisoners refused to reattire. The officers finally had to discard their pride and beg their wards to reconsider. Having made their point, the prisoners relented and law and order was restored to Bhind.

FIGHTING BACK

■ In Calcutta, the oldest profession's world is one of exploitation and misery. The city's prolific prostitute community exists under the iron-fisted control of local toughs, or mastans, who strip them off all dignity—and most of their earnings. Having been pushed to the wall in more ways than one, they proved there is unity in depravity. They have formed 'defence committees' in the red-light areas to fight "the extortion of money, harassment and sexual exploitation" by the mastans.

The sisterhood of 1,000 prostitutes plan to organise various panels to coordinate the movement. Recently, they put the ball in the state Government's court. An appeal signed by 500 prostitutes was despatched to the chief minister to save them from the mastans. Meanwhile, they have been turning the screws on their self-appointed protectors by refusing to hand over their earnings as before. Committee spokeswomen say they are determined to wriggle out of the mastans' clutches and if they try and involve their traditional partners—the police, the committees still have a trick or two up their sleeves to deal with that eventuality.

THIEVING MATTER

■ Burglars are generally regarded as the dregs of criminal society—desperate people who will stoop to any level in pursuit of worldly gain. Which is precisely what Krishna, a Bangalore burglar did, and paid the price.

Krishna was undoubtedly a cut above his colleagues, as any of his many unlucky victims would gladly testify. But the Bangalore police were equally well aware of his reputation and kept a strict eye on his activities till a few months ago when Krishna went underground.

But the spate of thefts that carried his unmistakable stamp continued and the cops were completely baffled, having searched all his usual haunts. It was pure chance that they finally stumbled across the missing thief. A cop, responding to the call of nature near a deep excavation, accidentally dropped his rifle. Clambering down to retrieve it, he found himself face-to-face with a familiar face, framed in one of the large drainpipes littering the area. It was Krishna who had literally gone underground in a drain-pipe. He had cosily ensconsed himself, surrounded by an assortment of carpets, radios, ornaments and even kitchen utensils for cooking his ill-gotten meals.

ODD BEDMATES

■ Politics produces the odd bedfellows. Take the curious case of the two MLAs from Rajasthan who decided to take a brief holiday from their exertions. Both left within a day of each other, wives in tow, and went their respective ways, sure that their positions would get them accommodation wherever they halted. All went well, till the inevitable happened. Their paths met at a rural backwater which had only one rest-house with just two bedrooms, one already occupied by a prominent Jaipur journalist and his family.

Having arrived unannounced, and just minutes apart, both demanded the vacant room. The poor retainer of the rest-house was caught between the two. Since there was no phone, their respective godfathers couldn't be called upon to decide who was the weightier. The amused journalist suggested that the two wives use the large double bed while the two gents spread out on the floor. But political gamesmanship ruled that out. Finally, a compromise was reached. The two MLAs, their political pride intact, shared the bed while the wives had exclusive use of the floor.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

bajaj

brings you an elegant range of low-cost Decorative Luminaires.

BJML -420

BJM - 120

BJGL - 240

BJL - 240

BJP - 240

BJML - 240

Versatile lighting systems designed for universal indoor applications, created to harmonise with any architectural feature and interior decor in offices, banks, show rooms, etc.

Bajaj offers a total integrated lighting service from the designing to the electrification and installation of lighting fittings on a turnkey basis for any indoor/outdoor location.

For details write to:
Lighting Project Services
Bajaj Electricals Limited
45-47 Veer Nariman Road
Bombay 400 023.

Heros' BE-778 B

bajaj

The lighting people since 1938.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Thums Up makes it great!

Artificially flavoured. Contains no fruit juice or fruit pulp.

The refreshing Cola

Thums Up

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

PUNJAB

Advantage Barnala

THE Sikhs love a fighter. And last fortnight they found one in the unlikely personage of Surjit Singh Barnala, the embattled Punjab chief minister who had decided to go it alone, if necessary, against the extremist-supported high priests of the Akal Takht. And almost overnight it seemed, Barnala was metamorphosed from a weak, vacillating and rudderless stooge of the Dilli Durbar into a national hero capable of mobilising moderate Sikh opinion and sentiment against terrorism and communally inspired secessionism.

They came in trucks, they came on tractors, they marched barefoot to Longowal village, about 20 km from Sangroor. They came from all over India—from Patna, from Kanpur, from Khatima, from Bareilly. And they came from all over Punjab, from the terrorist-infested areas of Ferozepur, Gurdaspur, Abohar, and from the moderate strongholds of Sangrur and Bhatinda. And by the time Barnala rose to address the Sikh convention on February 20, some four hours after it began, more than 2.5 lakh Sikhs had gathered peacefully in a maidan near the village gurudwara—the same maidan where the bhog ceremony for Sant Harchand Singh Longowal was held—and rejected the edict of the five high priests excommunicating Barnala.

The participants walked a thin line between rejecting the authority of the high priests as individuals and that of the Akal Takht as an institution. Not to accept the supremacy of the Takht would have been blasphemous. But there was a discernible and significant shift. Among the Sikhs, religion and politics have been inextricably intertwined. The convention, for the first time, challenged this tradition and opened it up to debate. Said Professor H.S. Mehta of Chandigarh University: "This is the first time in more than a year that the Sikhs have spoken out. They ignored terrorist threats and stood

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Photographs by PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

Sikh convention rejects priests' edict (right) Barnala addressing the gathering up to be counted."

In orderly lines, they walked shoulder to shoulder down a six-km dirt road from make-shift parking areas near Sangroor and filed into their seating areas after going through gates equipped with metal detectors. About 1,000 policemen from the Central Reserve Police Force (CRPF) and Punjab Police enforced security, politely but firmly.

A random sampling of opinion, from those who attended, strongly suggested that the Sikhs wanted to show their distaste for terrorism. They believed that Head Priest Darshan Singh Ragi was a captive of terrorists, and that the Akal Takht had acted unfairly with Barnala by not giving him a proper hearing before excommunicating him, and that Barnala had restored his honour by fighting back.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

PHILIPS

Slim is beautiful

Here's a tubelight to reduce your electricity bills

The beauty of the slim 'TL'D lies in the fact that it consumes upto 10% less electricity while giving you the same quantity of light. So a 36W 'TL'D gives you the brightness of a regular 40W tube.

In fact, when you count the rupees you're saving on your beautifully slim bills, you'll find the slim 'TL'D is ultimately paying for itself. What's more the Philips 'TL'D fits your existing luminaire beautifully.

Philips 'TL'D

Fits your existing luminaire beautifully

Slim tube • Slim bills • Bright light

Philips – the trusted Indian household name for over fifty years

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"The 'unified' Akali Dal has been produced through the barrel of a gun."

BALWANT SINGH
Punjab finance minister

"At last the Sikhs have spoken out and have stood up to be counted."

H.S. MEHTA
professor, Punjab University

"The political lines in Punjab are more clearly defined than ever before."

KANWALJIT SINGH
Punjab home minister

As for the Sikhs who had come from outside Punjab, this was also their chance to express their revulsion against extremism with which the Takht is now so firmly linked. As Roshan Singh, pradhan of Nakatpura, a village in the Terai region of Uttar Pradesh, put it: "This hukumnama is against the panth. Barnala has spoken for all of us and he has spoken with courage. If I have to come here every month and demonstrate as a true Sikh, I will do so."

The message that Sikhs should start thinking afresh about the admixture of religion and politics had begun to penetrate even among the youth. As Gurmit Singh, 18, a student from Lokhra village near Bhatinda, put it: "The Akal Takht belongs to all Sikhs. There should be no political interference from it. I think Barnala was wrongly excommunicated because the priests are acting under pressure from terrorists." Added Harminder Singh, 19, a student from Sunam: "The Akal Takht has been unfair. Ragi Singh Sahib is acting under pressure from guns."

The ruling party also used the convention to demonstrate its strength and to dispel any notion that 19 MLAs had deserted the Akali Dal(L) and sworn allegiance to the new 'unified' Akali Dal. All ministers, except for Major Singh Uboke, were present, as were both Akali MPs, Balwant Singh Ramoowalia and Teja Singh Dardi. Altogether, 40 MLAs were present and participated actively in repeated shouting of Jo Bole So Nihal Sat Sri Akal. Among the Singh Sahibans present were Bhai Daya Singh, head priest, Sri Huzoor Sahib; Bhai Man Singh of Sri Patna Sahib; and Baba Lakha Singh, the former jathedar of Takht Sri Damdama Sahib. Besides, about 50 sants and jathedars from all over Punjab attended the convention. The speakers, a mixture of ministers and jathedars, were absolutely uncompromising in their tirade against the "injustice of the hukumnama" and the interference of the high priests in political matters.

JEEVAN Singh Umranagal, a jathedar from the Beas region and former vice-president of the Shiromani Gurudwara Prabandhak Committee (SGPC), was all brim and fire as he charged that the high priests of the Akal Takht "are part and parcel of an extremist conspiracy to throw out Barnala". "They are a bunch of politicians," he alleged. Then Kabul Singh, the ex-president of the SGPC, firmly vowed to "make history from here and take the fight against extremism into all of Punjab". Perhaps the most hard-hitting speech was delivered by Finance Minister Balwant Singh who said that the new "'unified' Akali Dal has been produced through the barrel of a gun". He said that the Akal Takht jathedar is the spiritual head of the Sikh community and not the political head of the Akali Dal. And he directly attacked Darshan Singh Ragi for "behaving as if he is the president of the Akali Dal by directly appointing a new general secretary of that party to replace Manjit Singh Calcutta, who is now under detention".

And Barnala minced no words in saying that some of the actions emanating from the Golden Temple "are the work of people who support Khalistan. The Shiromani Akali Dal has never and will never support Khalistan because this would be harmful to the interests of all Sikhs." The resolution opposing the hukumnama was formally proposed, ironically, by Baldev Singh Khiala, the development minister, who, according to several accounts, had defected to the 'unified' Akali Dal along with 19 MLAs the previous day. In blunt language, the resolution "condemned the activities of the extremists and secessionist forces and of those forces which are working against the interests of Punjab and the nation and pledges to fight unitedly against these forces".

The convention was clearly one more turning point in Punjab politics with the momentum—for the time being—passing into the hands of the moderates. It was the first, long-awaited peaceful jatha organised by the ruling Akali party with the help of other parties and the government machinery. It also showed that Barnala had suddenly found a grip over the Government and administration. Besides, most of those who attended did so despite widespread threats from terrorist organisations that they would be put on hit lists and that their buses and trucks would be blown up. Many of them openly admitted that they were afraid. Yet they came.

In fact, barely 20 km away, in Bhawanigarh, another convention was being held simultaneously. This convention, called the Shaheedi Samagam, had been organised by the Gurjeet Singh faction of the All-India Sikh Students Federation (AISSF) and it was attended by

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Four ministers from Barnala group offer allegiance to Ragi (seated) three jathedars—Savinder Singh, Jaswant Singh, and Kashmir Singh. Here the emphasis was on the formation of Khalistan and the issuance of dire warnings to Barnala and others who dared defy the Takht. In attendance were about 200 people. But as Harinder Singh, 19, at the Barnala rally said: "The whole nation thinks that all Sikhs are terrorists. We have to demonstrate otherwise."

The defiance of the Akal Takht and simultaneously that of terrorism was more than symbolic. The convention had gathered to rub shoulders with Barnala, an excommunicated man. For an amritdhari Sikh, excommunication is a terrible psychological burden. As the saying goes Innan de nal roti aur beti da rishta nahin hona chaida (you can neither eat with nor offer your daughter in marriage to an excommunicated Sikh). Yet it was to the side of the excommunicated Barnala that lakhs of Sikhs flocked that day. "All of us who have come here," noted Home Minister Kanwaljit Singh, "are prepared to be excommunicated. This is our assertion that things have not been done fairly."

"The political lines in Punjab are more clearly defined than ever before," says Kanwaljit Singh. One group, backed by the Taksal and AISSF and represented by the new, 'unified' Akali Dal supports violence and secession. Even though the constitution of this new group, drafted by the Taksal as well as the high priests, does not overtly call for Khalistan, a key clause in its preamble makes it mandatory for the party to provide constitutional, legal and other types of aid to the AISSF whenever called upon to do so. "In other words," says Singh "the federation makes the demand and the Akali Dal becomes subservient to it." Both factions of the AISSF have made the declaration of Khalistan their political goal.

The defiance of the Akal Takht and of terrorism was more than symbolic. For, Sikhs had gathered to rub shoulders with Barnala, an excommunicated man.

The other group—moderate and nationalist—headed by Barnala has as its aim the achievement of greater autonomy within India and the speedy implementation of the Punjab accord. In between these two groups, Singh says, "there can be no third force or alternative. The group represented by Badal and Amarinder Singh has now been rendered irrelevant". In fact one of the radical student groups has just issued a warning to members of the Badal group, including Amarinder Singh, that it will not tolerate their using the Akal Takht and the new party as vehicles to form a government by drawing extremist groups into the political process, because the only aim of the new party should be that of creating Khalistan. People in the new party supporting anything less as a goal, the message declared, will be treated as expendable.

It would be an exaggeration to say that the Barnala convention has radically altered Punjab politics overnight or that Barnala has turned the tide against the extremists. But what it does signify is that the chief minister has taken an overwhelmingly successful step in drawing the silent majority of mainstream Sikhs into a political process which has begun once again to roll after a long period of

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Amarinder Singh addressing delegates of newly formed 'united' Akali Dal uncertainty and stagnation. It is in a sense a continuation of the peace process that started after the Rajiv-Longowal accord, in which masses of Sikhs placed their faith during the 1985 elections when they ignored terrorist threats as well as Baba Joginder Singh's call for a boycott and cast their votes in droves.

In between the 1985 elections and last fortnight's convention the extremists had resorted to almost every tool available in their armamentarium—bombs, guns, the slaughter of innocents, selective killings of informers, policemen, judges, jail officials, members of the Communist Party. Bullets went hand-in-hand with religious blackmail. And ultimately the extremists tried to hijack the political organisation of the Sikhs—the Akali Dal—and use it for their own purposes. But the terrorist arithmetic made one grave miscalculation—it did not gauge correctly the resilience and the inner strength of Barnala to tough it out. They had figured that, following the hukumnama, Barnala would capitulate or that most of his 45 MLAs, whose only loyalty to Barnala stems from their being ministers and job holders, would ditch him. The fall of Barnala would most certainly have led to President's rule and a situation in which perhaps the army would once again have been pitted against the Akal Takht.

The softening of the extremist stand is aimed at buying time to regroup their forces in the face of several successful rounds of the police against them.

And they chose to hit Barnala when everything was going against him. He was not certain of the role his own MLAs—including his Finance Minister Balwant Singh—would play. Punjab Governor S.S. Ray had already sent three notes to the prime minister recommending dismissal of the Barnala Ministry. The law and order problem remained intractable. And the pressure on Balwant Singh was immense. He received several threatening messages that the baraat accompanying his son for his soon-to-be-held wedding would be massacred. But what seriously jarred both Balwant Singh and Barnala was a PCC(I) meeting, attended by party President Beant Singh on January 27 at which it was decided to recommend withdrawing support of the 31 Congress(I) state legislators from Barnala. A two-page memo issued by the PCC(I) severely attacked Barnala's performance.

What stunned Akali circles was the fact that on January 16, the prime minister had personally assured Barnala of his support. And on January 20 he had stated that he was against declaring President's rule in Punjab. A week later, in an apparent disregard for the prime minister's position, his own state party recommended withdrawing support. Akali circles were unsure whether such an important resolution had the backing of Rajiv Gandhi. Several prominent Punjab politicians said that the move appeared to have the backing of Home Minister Buta Singh, who commands considerable influence over Beant Singh and has privately supported imposing Central rule in Punjab.

Akali leaders have been distrustful of past moves by the Home Ministry, particularly its alleged role in influencing several out-of-Punjab delegates to vote against the Barnala candidate during the recent SGPC elections in which Gurcharan Singh Tohra won and was able to set the stage for the appointment of the new extremist-backed high priests. Buta Singh has vehemently denied that he played any role in influencing the SGPC elections. But Barnala personally took up this matter with the prime minister and also bitterly complained about it in a letter that he sent to him.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Once again, it seemed, the signals from Delhi were unclear, and the ruling Akalis were uncertain whether the PCC(I) resolution reflected Rajiv's own thinking. By the time the February 3 hukumnama was issued dissolving all factions of the Akali Dal, Barnala's MLAs were teetering on the brink of physical and political collapse. In fact, Jathedar Tota Singh of Faridkot, chairman of the agriculture marketing board, and a close Barnala confidant reflected the thinking of a large section of the ruling Akalis when, under the continued threats of excommunication emanating from the Akal Takht, he begged Barnala to capitulate with the words: Assi ta khatm ho gaye. Sannu kicchar khana payega (We are finished. We will have to eat dirt). But some of the younger MLAs, in particular Kanwaljit Singh, continued to urge Barnala not to buckle under. "We all went through hell," he said. "I told Barnala: 'I know this is a terrible decision you have to make, but are we to be judged by history for not fighting for what we hold dear?'"

Ultimately what shored up Barnala was a personal assurance from Rajiv Gandhi during two one-hour meetings, as well as from Arjun Singh, who is still handling Punjab affairs on behalf of the prime minister, that the Congress Party would continue to support Barnala even if 19 of his MLAs—who were rumoured to have given pledges to join the 'unified' Akali Dal—deserted him. "But what kept me fighting was also my deep faith in God. I prayed continuously and appealed to God to give me wisdom in those days."

Barnala is a man slow in reflexes but honest in instinct. The crisis he recently weathered, he says, was similar to the one last year when he sent the police into the Golden Temple after extremists had declared Khalistan from there and caused a split in his own party. "I was tormented about what to do. But I knew if I did not take any action I would be dubbed a Khalistani and every Sikh in the nation would be treated as a traitor."

Meanwhile, in the Golden Temple, the press secretary of the Akali Dal(L), S.S. Sokhi, and three former ministers of the Barnala Government—Harbhajan Singh Sandhu, Harbans Singh Ghuman and Beasant Singh Khalsa—were formally pledging their allegiance to the new Akali Dal at a convention of party delegates. People gathered there were unwilling to take Barnala's show of strength in Longowal seriously. It was being dismissed by the spokesmen for the various extremist groups headquartered there as a meeting of "Hindus and excommunicated Sikhs". Amarinder Singh dismissed the Longowal gathering as a Congress-inspired show representing not even 1 per cent of the Sikhs. He is convinced that "Delhi must stop supporting Barnala because (in the mind of most Sikhs) he is like a red rag to a bull".

An indication of how much separates what happened in the village of Longowal on February 20 from events in the Golden Temple was a funeral prayer service in the temple that same day for Manjit Singh Khajala, believed to be one of the main killers in the massacre of the 24 bus passengers near Khuda last November. Speeches, between prayers, extolled Khajala's virtues and described him as a man who had died in the service of the "panth".

Although the Khalistan Commando Force, the Khalistan Liberation Force and the Babbar Khalsa which are the main terrorist groups operating in the state do not have their own offices at the Golden Temple complex they work in conjunction with the Damdami Taksal and the two factions of the AISSF (Gurjeet and Manjit) which do have offices. In the past, the AISSF has attempted to conceal its links with the extremists but now they have no qualms in admitting openly what the links are.

The two main leaders of the Gurjeet faction are Gurjeet himself, who is Bhindranwale's nephew and is believed to have spent some time in Pakistan after Operation Bluestar, and 'General' Labh Singh of the Khalistan Commando Force. Labh Singh, a dismissed policeman and believed to be among the most committed Khalistanis, is at the top of the list of wanted terrorists. The AISSF (Gurjeet) also considers the Panthic Committee, the underground terrorist organisation, consisting of Bhai Gurbachan Singh Manochahal, Bhai Wassan Singh, Bhai Gurdev Singh Asmanpura, Bhai Uday Singh and Bhai Shabeg Singh, as a leader. At the moment it speaks also for the Damdami Taksal, most of whose members have vanished underground because of 'police persecution'.

The convention signifies that Barnala has taken a successful step in drawing the silent majority of mainstream Sikhs into the political process.

Politically, of the two AISSF factions (Gurjeet and Manjit), the Manjit faction is more open about its links with the newly formed Akali Dal, accepts Simranjit Singh Mann as a leader, and also recognises the authority of the Akal Takht jathedar. While the Gurjeet faction disclaims links with the new party, it recognises the authority of Professor Darshan Singh Ragi and states that he is doing a good

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

MLAs and jathedars gather at Barnala's residence: show of unity thing by trying "to get the panth together". One of the more vocal members of the group, Harcharan Singh Randhawa, however, stated: "We accept the authority of the jathedar of the Akal Takht only as long as we feel that he is doing genuine work for the panth but if we feel that he isn't then the Panthic Committee has the right to choose new jathedars."

According to high level police sources in Amritsar a noticeable softening—no matter how slight—in the extremist stand, as evidenced by their recent offer of a ceasefire, and their association with the new Akali party could be motivated by their desire to buy time to regroup their forces in the face of several successful rounds the police has scored against them in the last month or so. Several major terrorists have been either killed or arrested in the past few weeks.

In this situation extremist groups have sought the backing of the new Akali Dal. In addition to being able to conduct their own propaganda from the gurudwaras they control through the SGPC, the extremists now also have the new Akali Dal to do this for them. At the delegates' session that the new party called in the Golden Temple on January 22—and at a meeting later the same day of the party's MPs and MLAs—most speakers pleaded the extremist cause. Throughout the meetings there were references to those who had died for Sikhism. Said Surjit Singh Sokhi, the party's new press secretary: "There are some people who want to bow before the rulers of Delhi even when young Sikhs are being killed in false encounters."

Amarinder Singh goes a step further than merely defending them. According to him the demand for Khalistan has arisen only out of anger and bitterness on the part of the youth. If his party comes to power in Punjab, he says, it will try and draw the extremists into the political mainstream by starting an upper house in the state and nominating representatives of the various groups to it.

But right now the political mainstream appears to be in Barnala's camp. If the momentum generated by his peace initiative can be maintained it will continue—hand-in-glove with the successes of the police—to put pressure on the extremists. Barnala is unlikely to take any precipitous action to rid the Golden Temple of extremist elements but rather will keep sending them messages, and show-cause notices to clarify their position on matters such as sedition and anti-national activities. The main battle, however, will continue to be waged in the arena of public opinion. The extremist groups have already drawn up elaborate plans for amrit prachar ceremonies at which they will preach their gospel from village to village. To counter this, the Barnala Government is determined to organise small and large rallies throughout the state, starting with one in Hindu-dominated Ludhiana to draw more and more people into his peace offensive.

Meanwhile he has received a clear message from the prime minister that notwithstanding confusing signals from within the Congress(I), he will stand staunchly by Barnala and ensure that all Punjab initiatives are not imposed by the Centre but rather are backed by it. In order to demonstrate that the spirit of the Punjab accord is not dead, New Delhi has already agreed to follow up the Mishra Commission, and inquire into the dereliction of duty by the police during the November anti-Sikh riots in the capital. And the Centre is soon expected to announce a timetable for the transfer of Chandigarh as well as the orderly release of innocent Sikhs detained in the Jodhpur jail, two of the Sikhs' main demands. Only then will Barnala be able to say convincingly to the Sikh masses he is trying to mobilise through his jathas, that he has been able to achieve through negotiations what the terrorists could not attain through violence. Barnala has already taken a giant step but this new chance for peace still hangs by a slender thread. A new and brutal massacre by the terrorists could again revive demands for President's rule and sending in the army. Public opinion has once again begun to crystallise in Punjab and now, more than ever before, the situation demands patience, perseverance and restraint.

—INDERJIT BADHWAR with TAVLEEN SINGH in Punjab

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ASSEMBLY ELECTIONS

Crucial Contests

THE approaching state elections in Kerala, West Bengal and Jammu & Kashmir are viewed as the first major political test for Rajiv Gandhi and the ruling party. Over four crore voters will go to the polls to elect 510 MLAs out of over 3,000 candidates. In addition, the electorate of Uttar Pradesh, Andhra Pradesh, Gujarat and Pondicherry will choose three Lok Sabha and eight assembly members.

The ruling party is not taking any chances. It has dropped every second sitting MLA in all the three states to give the party a new look, has selected younger people as candidates and also nominated Chief Minister S.B. Chavan's son Ashok Chavan for the Nanded Lok Sabha seat in Maharashtra and AICC(I) general secretary T. Anjiah's widow, Mannamma Anjiah, for the Secundrabad Lok Sabha seat in Andhra Pradesh. On the eve of the polls, however, the ruling party was engaged in battling rebels in its ranks while its opponents were clearly more united. To gauge the pre-poll scenario PRABHU CHAWLA, SREEDHAR PILLAI and INDRANIL BANERJIE report:

JAMMU & KASHMIR

Allies on Trial

THE end of winter heralds for Jammu & Kashmir not just warmer weather but hotter politics. In preparation for the upcoming elections, a staggering 600 candidates had filed their nominations for the state's 76 assembly seats by last fortnight. It is now abundantly clear that each constituency is going to witness multicornered battles. The centre stage, however, is occupied by the coalition between the National Conference (NC) of Farooq Abdullah and the Congress(I). Even though these two parties have run coalition governments in the past, this is the first time that they are preparing for a major election as allies.

The J&K elections will be the testing ground to decide whether Rajiv's politics of accords with regional parties can be carried to its logical culmination. Of the four accords he has signed—including J&K—three (Assam, Mizoram and Punjab) have disintegrated into political animosities in which the Congress(I) has found itself at electoral loggerheads with the very regional parties with which the accords were signed. And in each case the Congress(I) lost the elections. But in J&K, the election scenario seems to favour the NC(F)-Congress(I) coalition.

The thorny question of the distribution of seats between both parties was resolved amicably and Rajiv and Farooq have decided to campaign together. Said Najma Heptullah, the AICC(I) general secretary incharge of the state: "The entire issue was sorted out on the basis of mutual accommodation. Both of us have decided to fight for national integrity." While the NC(F) will contest 45 seats—eight in Jammu, 36 in the valley and one in Leh, the Congress(I) will fight for 31 seats including seven in the valley.

But, typically for the Congress(I), it struggled for an intra-party consensus on the 31 candidates till the last minute. Factional fights between Kashmir Congress(I) leaders at the Centre and at the state level held up the finalisation of the list. Finally, 11 of the sitting MLAs including the leader of the Congress(I) Legislature Party, Maulvi Iftiquar Hussain Ansari, were dropped. The party's emphasis was on fielding candiates with a clean image so that it could ward off the BJP's formidable challenge in Jammu. The Congress(I) had won 23 of the 32 seats in the Jammu region in 1982.

Rajiv with Farooq: coalition politics

YOG JOY

The issues in the election have also been clearly delineated. The Opposition, particularly the BJP, is seeking votes by attacking the accord which it alleges is based on opportunism. The Congress(I)-NC(F) alliance is determined to blunt this thrust by firmly stating that the accord will ensure the unity of the country. Said Farooq: "By contesting the election as partners we are determined to prove that not only can we retain our own Kashmir identity but be part of the national mainstream as well."

But the selection of candidates by Farooq raises some troubling questions about the future stability of the coalition. Among those he has nominated are P.L. Handoo, Mohammad Shafi and Abdul Rahim, all former ministers, who were dropped from the state cabinet by Farooq himself because they were considered to be hawks and against any accord with the Centre.

At the same time Farooq has annoyed a section of the Congress Party by withdrawing most of the development and reform schemes initiated by Governor

> The J&K elections will be the testing ground to decide whether Rajiv's politics of accords with regional parties can be carried to its logical culmination.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Jagmohan during the period of Central rule in the state. Many of these programmes had benefitted Congress(I)-held constituencies. In addition, Farooq has reappointed the ad hoc district recruitment panels which are the primary vehicles for providing jobs and patronage for NC workers. These actions have revived the age-old charge from Congressmen that the NC programme is essentially a communal scheme to help the majority community in the valley. The coalition may be a stable one in the short run but the danger signals for trouble ahead have already begun manifesting themselves.

WEST BENGAL

Odds on Left

BENGALIS appreciate a closely-fought election as much as they do a good football match. But this year, with the Congress(I) still to put its act together, the odds appear to heavily favour the CPI(M)-led Left Front team for the March 23 Assembly clash.

The nomination process last fortnight was punctuated by allegations of blatant partisanship against state Congress(I) President Priya Ranjan Das Munshi. Over 3,000 prospective candidates submitted applications and a third of them were interviewed in Calcutta by a four-member All-India Congress Committee(I) team.

But most Congressmen dismissed the procedure as a farce. Das Munshi, backed by four lieutenants in the 11-member state election committee, reportedly pushed in about 170 candidates of his own choice into the 294-member Congress(I) poll list. The bulk of the remaining seats went to supporters of Union Information and Broadcasting Minister Ajit Panja and Union Law Minister Asoke Sen. Other party bigwigs secured barely half-a-dozen tickets each for their supporters.

The first to revolt were Congress(I) councillors of the Calcutta Municipal Corporation, who had learnt that Das Munshi did not intend giving tickets to any of them. They protested by voting against the party candidate for mayor's post and the Left Front candidate Kamal Basu—who had been forced to resign from the mayoral post due to the defection of a key councillor to the Congress(I) fold—was re-elected. Ultimately, Das Munshi had to nominate a few of them.

Many Congress(I) leaders claim that the chief reason for the growing indiscipline is the preferential treatment Das Munshi gives to his former Congress(S) cronies. Indeed, even a number of safe Congress(I) seats with sitting MLAs have been transferred to them.

"It is going to be difficult to get our party machinery to start functioning again to catch the floating votes," admits the state organisational chief Subrata Mukherjee. As it is, the party is very far behind the Left Front in election campaigning. And with Das Munshi's obvious favouritism, several resentful party workers may well work against the official candidates.

Decisions like the dropping of veteran Congressman Rauf Ansari and the fact that the Congress(I) has fielded only 46 Muslim candidates—against the expected 60—will also put the party at a serious disadvantage with the Muslims who constitute more than 20 per cent of the state's population. Moreover, the Left Front is already suggesting that the Centre, despite passing the Muslim Personal Law Bill, is now trying to nullify it by initiating a debate on a uniform civil code. The collapse of faith in the party's state leadership therefore comes at a time when, according to Central intelligence agencies, there is swelling support for the Congress(I) in rural areas—for years considered a left preserve.

The Left Front's advantages are still its excellent organisation, composed of ideologically oriented cadres. Former finance minister Pranab Mukherjee's Rashtriya Samajbadi Congress, flooded with disgruntled Congressmen, could wreck the Congress(I)'s prospects, if it were to wean away even 5 per cent of its traditional votes.

On the debit side, the Left Front has a number of MLAs and ministers, whose arrogance and inaccessibility has alienated not merely left voters but lower-level party workers as well. But at least the Front, which had submitted its poll list way back in September last year, is prepared for the election match. If the Congress(I) can't get on with the game, it will receive as many brickbats as it will lose votes.

PRASHANT PANJIAR

Discontent in the state Congress(I) over Das Munshi's obvious favouritism may benefit the Left Front.

KERALA

Front Politics

AS Kerala readied for the start of electioneering, the rival camps could hardly have appeared more different. On the one hand was the ruling United Democratic Front (UDF), a Congress(I)-headed ragtag band of communal and casteist parties, riddled with infighting. On the other, was the CPI(M)-led Left Democratic Front (LDF), bereft of all sectarian parties for the first time, its seat-distribution producing barely a ripple and its image refurbished by a substantial allocation for youthful candidates. As least 25 of the CPI(M)'s 79 candidates are youth and student leaders. For the chief ministership, the Front is projecting K.R. Gowri, an able administrator, hailing from the Ezhava community, the single largest in the state.

A virtual mutiny gripped the Congress(I) after it decided to deny tickets to three ministers including Thachady Prabhakaran—Kerala's V.P. Singh—and M.P. Gangadharan, the controversial former irrigation minister. Particularly shocking was the dumping of Prabhakaran, who, after getting election posters printed, was ready to set off for his home constituency of Kayangulam in Alleppey district, when he was given the news. Said a deeply-hurt Prabhakaran: "They should have warned me at least a day before the list was announced so that I could have told my followers that I would not be contesting. It would have saved me much embarrassment."

Prabhakaran's case is instructive: he was a victim of intra-caste rivalry. He is an Ezhava who alarmed all other important

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Ezhava leaders in the Congress(I) by acquiring an enviable public image for himself in the short time that he was finance minister. Former home minister Vyalar Ravi, Speaker V.M. Sudheeran, state party chief C.V. Padmarajan and M.K. Raghavan, the president of the Ezhavas' social organisation, all have varied loyalties within the Congress(I) but with Prabhakaran emerging as a possible Ezhava claimant for the chief ministership, they all agreed that he had to go.

Now Prabhakaran's irate supporters have vowed to defeat Gopinath and Vyalar Ravi in Shertallai. Similarly, Gangadharan, who is still fighting court cases over his minor daughter's marriage, is known to be behind 10 rebel candidates in Malappuram district, though he naturally denies it. Also upset, the office-bearers of the state unit of the Youth Congress(I), resigned en masse to register their protest against the seat allocation. Grumbled Cheriyan Philip, general secretary: "The old men in the CPI(M) have given nearly 33 per cent of the seats to the youth while our party has been given hardly five seats."

RANJAN PODUVAL

Mani, Karunakaran and Jacob

The Kerala voter has, for the first time, a clear-cut choice: Congress(I)-led group of parties or CPI(M)-led front.

Meanwhile, the Kerala Congress, a UDF partner, split between the factions of Irrigation Minister K.M. Mani and that of Revenue Minister P.J. Joseph over the question of the allotment of 24 seats, the party's share. The issue exploded when Joseph unilaterally announced the names of 15 candidates. Mani accused him of disregarding an earlier formula under which each of the factions was to share the allotted number of seats equally and said his group would fight in a dozen constituencies. Though soon after the break came, both claimed they would continue in the UDF, the bad blood between the two does not augur well for the ruling front.

In the last elections in May 1982, there was a bare difference of 1 per cent in the votes polled by the two fronts—48.23 per cent for the UDF against 47.24 for the LDF. The elections due to be held on March 23 may well prove that the UDF list—finely tuned by the Congress(I) to meet communal and caste considerations—shows greater sensitivity to ground conditions but at least one thing is definite: the Kerala voter has been presented with a clear choice.

PREM NAZIR

Star Power

TAKE a star on the decline, clothe him in khadi, and watch the crowds come. The Congress(I) used this simple logic twice last month in inducting film stars Rajesh Khanna and Prem Nazir into the party.

Nazir's induction is striking, more so, considering the forthcoming elections in Kerala, to which he belongs. Chief Minister K. Karunakaran's camp obviously feels that his screen fame spanning many years can be translated into votes. Nazir alias Abdul Khadar, 57, has starred in 636 Malyalam films, something that has brought him mention in the Guinness Book.

The ageing star is out to ensure that he can't be accused of not trying to grow into his new role. Gone were his flashy clothes and fancy dark glasses, to be replaced by a khadi safari suit and spectacles with a simple frame. The dialogue too changed after meeting Rajiv in New Delhi. Nazir, who says he is "not crazy about assuming power"—he won't be contesting himself—now talks of "being a spokesman of the poor" and of getting "a chance to serve them". Though he is going to campaign for the Congress(I) in politically aware Kerala, he isn't even sure of party ideology: he feels it stands for "growth through scientific methods".

RANJAN BASU

Nazir: vote gathering

Ideology or not, Nazir's inclusion has much to do with the Congress(I)'s current reliance on the Indian Union Muslim League (IUML), a coalition partner in the ruling United Democratic Front (UDF). In Kerala, the Congress(I) is seen as granting too many concessions to the IUML at the cost of other allies. On this score, the National Democratic Front (NDF) had recently, briefly walked out from the UDF on the reservation issue. Party bosses hope Nazir will be able to draw a sizeable number of Muslim votes. If the ploy works, it could lead to the party cutting the IUML down to size.

But will it? Nazir himself admits that he was advised against floating an independent party: "Kerala is not Tamil Nadu or Andhra Pradesh where people lap up film stars." Kerala's Agriculture Minister Ramesh Chennithala symbolises one view point: "He is an evergreen hero and will be a great crowd puller." But others have severe doubts. Says former home minister Vyalar Ravi: "He's a nice man and there is nothing wrong if he joins our party. But if we use Nazir in a Kerala election campaign, it will backfire on us." This time Nazir's performance won't be judged by critics. It will show when election results are announced in less than a month's time.

—PRABHU CHAWLA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Meeting your needs. All under one roof.

Special steels; seamless tubes; commercial and precision welded tubes; ball and roller bearings. And, of course, the usual mild steel sections... we have all you need at Tata Steel. The one-stop shop that caters to diverse needs. Smoothly. Efficiently.

A Company with the comprehensive capability it takes to serve industries as diverse as Transport and Mining. Oil and Defence. Construction and Power.

Where marketing does not end with the sale of its many products.

Where scientists constantly develop newer grades of special steels to meet sophisticated demands.

And design custom-tailored products that save valuable foreign exchange.

Tata Steel. A multi-product Company with a single aim. Your satisfaction.

TATA STEEL

The first and still the foreme

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

GENERAL ZIA-UL-HAQ

Playing to the Gallery

HE accepted the invitation in a jiffy. Twenty two days after being invited by the Board of Cricket Control for India (BCCI) to come and see a Test match, he was in India. Oblivious of the cold glares of his reticent hosts, President Mohammad Zia-ul-Haq of Pakistan came to Jaipur, saw some cricket and conquered the media. As an exercise in public relations his whirlwind, unofficial, "cricket for peace" tour paid rich dividends. By the time he left Jaipur's Sanganer Airport for Islamabad, newspaper headlines had for three days emblazoned his claim that he had come to restore communications and defuse tension. In protocol terms, the reception and hospitality he received from his Indian hosts, including the prime minister, was cool but correct. But after a 40-minute exchange on bilateral issues at a dinner by Rajiv Gandhi at Delhi's palatial Hyderabad House, Zia went over the heads of his hosts and sought a larger audience through the press. As he told INDIA TODAY in an interview (see box): "Peace is not a button you can press....It has to be pursued at all levels....If you take on the level that is up to you, half the problem will be resolved." And the External Affairs Ministry mandarins, told to downplay the visit, were left sulking in churlish annoyance as Zia side-stepped their plans to insulate him from the media.

The Government's motives

With Kapil Dev; and (below) being received at airport: different strokes

Photographs by PRASHANT PANJIAR

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

were transparent the day the Pakistani President arrived at Delhi. At the airport the press was herded into a glass-paned lounge; Zia acknowledged their presence with a wave before driving to Rashtrapati Bhawan for a hugginglycordial meeting with President Zail Singh. But from the moment he touched down at Jaipur the next morning, Zia played the game his way. Whether at the airport or at the cricket ground, he welcomed pressmen, met them in groups and individually as officials complained that though he was here to watch cricket, Zia had spent over one-and-a-half hours out of two practising PR. Newsmen emerging from a meeting with Zia were reminded that tension had been defused and the date set for the followup, the foreign secretaries meeting in Islamabad, well before Zia arrived in Jaipur.

The city had prepared for Zia a grand reception. Colourfully-caparisoned elephants and camels were brought in to line the drive of the Rambagh Palace Hotel and shehnai players wearing baandhni saafas had been stationed on the terrace to serenade the arriving President. But the evening before Zia arrived, the state authorities instructed the hotel management to make it a low-key reception. The camels and elephants were sent packing and five pretty girls in richly-embroidered Rajasthani ghaghras received Zia as shehnai walas played Damadam mast kalandar. No officials of the Rajasthan Cricket Association (RCA) or the BCCI accompanied him to the hotel, despite receiving him at the airport. Later, Doordarshan used Mickey Mouse and Donald Duck to upstage Zia; it showed the cartoons as he was meeting the cricket teams at the Sawai Man Singh Stadium. And just then, the second channel transmitter at Jaipur went dead briefly due to power failure. But Zia was unfazed. He called in the BBC and Voice of America correspondents and aired his views.

Even the elements conspired

Praying at Ajmer; and (below) with shehnai player: exercise in public relations

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CUMI's Winning Solutions – 1

When hard work didn't give an edge, CUMI provided a wheel of fortune.

"Hard work pays dividends". Not always. Sometimes the problem lies in not how you work, but in the tools you work with. Opportunities and savings could lie in areas you've overlooked.

As proof, take a look at some of CUMI's winning solutions.

At a large tractor plant, they were plunge-grinding pins in crankshafts. Despite using a diamond dresser, the fillet radius did not form properly. It led to a host of problems – frequent dressing of the wheel, poor wheel life, increased cost of diamond dressers and longer cycle times.

Then CUMI stepped in with its solution and gave them a wheel of fortune. It had the name V-2018. It gave better form-retention ability. The results: correct fillet radius, reduced dressing frequency, lower re-work and rejection.

The dressing frequency used to be once per pin. With the new wheel, it changed to once every 3 pins. The life of the previous wheel was 700 crankshafts. With the new CUMI wheel it was 910 crankshafts.

Crankshaft grinding unit of a tractor manufacturer

Today, companies everywhere count on CUMI expertise to improve the efficiency of their abrasive wheels and increase productivity. Answering people's needs has also helped CUMI pioneer several products. So however small or large your business, if you have a grinding problem do consult CUMI. If there isn't a ready solution, CUMI can work with you to create one – just for you.

CARBORUNDUM UNIVERSAL LTD.

The Wheels of productivity

28 Rajaji Road, Madras 600 001

OBM 9950

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

against the visiting dignitary. The Rambagh Palace had made elaborate arrangements for an outdoor banquet in Zia's honour hosted by the RCA, but they were washed out by the rain which came pouring down an hour before the banquet. The guests were accommodated in the verandah as the harried staff cleared the large dining hall of tourists. The fare was regal and the meat tender: nearly 40 baby lambs had been slaughtered the previous day to provide fresh meat for Chef Arvind Bhargava's carefully marinated main dishes—Akbari Raan and Safed Mans which competed with Saute Chicken Basquaise and Murg Musallam to tickle the palate of the guests—at a mere Rs 150 per head. But though the downpour doused the preparations, the banquet served to unite many old cricketers. Zia had brought veteran pace bowler Fazal Mehmood and former wicket keeper Imtiaz with him. Fazal warmly greeted Lala Amarnath. "His was the first wicket I took in the Ranji trophy in 1943," he recalled. Zia enveloped Bishen Singh Bedi in a bear-hug while other cricketers, past and present, mingled in bonhomie. "The President has agreed to open up the Wagah border for unrestricted entry during the World Cup matches in Pakistan. Its now up to India to reciprocate," said the president of the Pakistan Cricket Control Board Lt-General G. Safdar Butt.

No snafus affected the splendour of the Rs 3,000-a-day Maharani Suite that the President occupied with his wife, Begum Shafiq Zia. The ornate oval bathroom, twice the size of a five-star hotel room, featured heated towel racks and a marble shower stall with multi-directional shower jets that smother one from five directions, rather like being caught in the enveloping spray of a waterfall.

Zia at banquet: playing friends

Senior hotel staff had spent a whole day scouring the city's masjids to borrow used copies of the Quran to place in the President's room. Others procured small Kashmiri carpets to serve as prayer mats for the visitors. No pork entered the hotel kitchens 24 hours prior to Zia's arrival. A devout Muslim, Zia recites namaaz five times a day. What would the hotel do with the prayer mats later? "They can take them if they want," said General Manager Vikram Singh. Zia didn't.

The visit wasn't all cricket. There were pleasant contacts to renew: Bhawani Singh of the Jaipur royal house called on Zia and the following day Rajmata Gayatri Devi strolled with Begum Zia in the garden. To emphasize the cricket connection, the last visitor to call on Zia before he left was the athletic Imran Khan. On Rajiv Gandhi's advice, Zia altered his plans to fit in a visit to the Amber Fort, Jaipur's main tourist attraction. And later he went to pay his respects at the Ajmer Dargah of Sufi saint Moinuddin Chishti. There too he came to the rescue of press photographers being pushed around by the police. On the morning of his departure Zia expressed a desire to see the city palace museum but he was told that the schedule of the governor and the chief minister who had to attend the inaugural sitting of the state assembly's budget session would be upset if he delayed his departure. Zia left on schedule, "sadly and with mixed feelings". And in departing too, he scored a cheeky single: he said he hoped to come back and revisit "in a much better atmosphere, the kind of atmosphere an idealist like me looks forward to". —RAMINDAR SINGH in Jaipur

INTERVIEW

"I have no inhibitions"

HE came to cheer the Pakistani cricketers but ended up applauding Mohammed Azharuddin's superb batting. His proclaimed mission was "cricket for peace", and while fiery Pakistani paceman Imran Khan hurled bouncer after bouncer at the Indian batsmen, "peaceman" Zia lobbed some rather friendly over(ture)s to Rajiv Gandhi and to India. He admitted he could not tell a googly from an off-spinner, but then he could spot a good player. Zia himself turned out to be the best player on view though he played mainly to the gallery. Indian officials fretted and fumed while the visiting Pakistani President extracted full media mileage from his unofficial, unscheduled tour. President Mohammad Zia-ul-Haq of Pakistan, in between watching the third India-Pakistan Test at Jaipur's Sawai Man Singh Stadium, managed to give a relaxed 20-minute interview to INDIA TODAY Special Correspondent RAMINDAR SINGH. Excerpts from the interview:

Q. Have you managed to ease the situation on the border in your talks with Mr Rajiv Gandhi?

A. The credit must go to him and Prime Minister Junejo for having broken the ice on the telephone on January 26, as a result of which the two delegations met and were able to arrive on February 4 at a very useful agreement on de-escalation and withdrawal of troops. I am sure the spirit which has been inculcated will now move along to the rest of the area and also (help) in reducing the tension.

Q. How would you assess your talks with the prime minister. Did you break any new ground after what Mr Junejo had started?

A. Yes I took it from there. It was heartening to see that feelings on both sides were the same. We were both keen to find out how the tension built up. The success of the mission is not only in identifying it but in preventing it from happening again. In this the two leaders must get the tribute. Otherwise I wouldn't have been sitting here watching the match today.

Q. What causes did you identify and what steps have you thought of to prevent a recurrence?

A. We didn't go into the background. I thought it wasn't worthwhile doing a post-mortem. But we certainly shared a common perception that both sides must do something more in order to reduce the tension. After de-escalation, when the troops go back the environment must be so conducive that a repetition should not occur.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Q. What do you expect will happen after your meeting with the prime minister?

A. My meeting with the prime minister is only a link in the chain. I won't grade it as a breaking of the ice or as something so significant.

Q. Is there going to be another meeting soon, like the prime minister's visit to Pakistan?

A. I have renewed my invitation. No, he has not set a date and I have not insisted. From myself, the prime minister, the people and Government of Pakistan, I have renewed the invitation to both President Zail Singh and Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi.

Q. Do you expect it to happen this year?

A. We hope so.The visit of the Indian prime minister to Pakistan must bring in some concrete results. It's different with me. I will come 12 times more to India. I have no inhibitions. I do not wait for invitations, I look for an opportunity for any renewed contact, or even, if nothing else, to come and watch cricket. From my point of view, this is also important.

Q. You have been invited for the World Cup matches and for the finals. Are you planning to come again?

A. I hear so. Oh yes. If I get the invitation... or as I said I don't need an invitation. I hope we can invite some dignitaries to Pakistan also to watch cricket, or hockey or anything like that. Because inhibitions must be removed , and reservations.... Those who are in positions of importance on both sides should have less reservations about visiting each other's country. It is the generation, between 40 and 50 which must be exposed (to each other).

Q. When you take such a step as coming on your own, do you find the reception cordial, warm?

A. Most heartwarming. I wish I could convey this spirit to the people of Pakistan. Which I will. I am sure they are watching television today. I will tell them how I felt and how people appreciate the visit of the President of Pakistan.

Q. Apart from showing your interest in sporting ties, there have been reports that your visit may have something to do with your talks with the Soviet Union on Afghanistan. Did this come up during your exchange with the prime minister?

A. I explained it in passing but that was not the main purpose of this visit. We have always kept India informed, we have always shared our views on Afghanistan and on our relationship with the Soviet Union. The last time the two prime ministers discussed it was at the SAARC summit at Bangalore. We have always had political support from India except that India has not come out openly, boldly, and we understand the reasons. We now expect India to play a bolder and more vital role.

Zia and daughter: cricket diplomacy

"Can't we close the chapter of our animosity?....Peace is not a button you can press and the light will come on. It has to be pursued at all levels."

Q. Such as what?

A. The Soviet Union has taken a very bold step, a positive step. But they want some reassurance. If Pakistan gives that reassurance, the Soviet Union can misread it, but if India gives it—I have not suggested it as yet—but if India does it the Soviet Union will be reassured.

Q. What kind of a reassurance would the Soviet Union expect which would be acceptable to Pakistan as well?

A. The solution must resolve the problems of the people of Afghanistan. Withdrawal of troops, return of refugees (3 million) and returning Afghanistan's status as a non-aligned, independent, neutral state.

Q. Do you expect that to happen in the next few months as a result of the talks?

A. If not in the next few months then at least in the near future. I am a very optimistic man.

Q. You had said Afghanistan was not the main purpose of your visit. What was the main purpose?

A. To encourage cricket and in the process, to bring the people of the country (together). Because I think communication, dialogue is the most important thing. Once that breaks down everything breaks down.

Q. Will you visit only for cricket?

A. I have never played cricket. I am a football player.

Q. So next we can expect you at a football match?

A. Maybe not so soon. But if ever there's a good match I will be there.

Q. How would you sum up the result of your visit?

A. My visit has been very useful both in the field of cricket and in the field of diplomacy. The people have goodwill. The leadership wants to make it up. Who is in between? If Germany and France and many nations which have fought for centuries can do it, can't we also close the chapter of our animosity? We are only 40 years old: I think it can be done. Peace is not a button which you can press and a light will come on. It has to be (pursued) at all levels—at my level, at your level and the common man's level. If you take on the level that is up to you, half of the problem will be resolved.

Q. Do you see any external influence?

A. If we are determined and we have our own house in order nothing outside can influence us. I speak from 10 years experience. You can have all the goodwill externally but if you are weak internally you can't do a thing.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CONGRESS (I)

The Old Hold

IT IS a resurrection that, in political terms, could well compare with a biblical miracle. A month ago, he was just another octogenarian politician pasturing in oblivion, content in peaceful retirement. His last period of active political life was almost a decade ago and his last sinecure was as governor of West Bengal—a post from which he sought voluntary retirement because, as he said at that time: "I wanted to spend the most part of my old age with my son and daughter-in-law in Delhi."

But miracles, under the new dispensation, never cease. To the stunned surprise of political observers, Uma Shanker Dixit, 86, was yanked out from the wilderness and appointed member of the Congress(I) Working Committee and chairman of the three-member panel to scrutinise party membership lists. He has also been asked to suggest changes in the party constitution.

The objective of Rajiv's exercise is quite baffling, specially at a time when the party needs strong and vigorous leaders at the helm to stem the internal rot—and the growing dissidence. Dixit's advanced age is bound to be a major handicap. Yet, such is the Congress culture that he is suddenly the new political lodestar. His residence in New Delhi's Diplomatic Enclave where he lives with daughter-in-law, Shiela Dixit, Union minister of state for parliamentary affairs, is now the new Mecca for party workers who view him as the latest conduit to Rajiv.

The veteran politician has returned to the centre-stage of politics after almost a decade. In the past he has held important party and government posts. But the manner and timing of his resurrection would seem to indicate that it was another of Rajiv's impulsive, off-the-cuff moves. According to a section of the Congress(I), Rajiv had gone to visit Dixit to console him on the recent death of his son, Vinod Dixit, a senior IAS officer when he asked Rajiv to give him 'some' political work. Dixit's statements seem to indicate that the job he was offered came as much as a surprise to him as to anybody else. He admits: "I am not a full-time politician. I have neither the time nor the capacity to do that. But I want to be and do whatever job is given to me."

Whether he can—and effectively enough—is quite another matter. In fact, one of Dixit's first assignments was to travel to Orissa to prepare a report on dissident activities against Chief Minister Janaki Ballabh Patnaik. He returned without having resolved the issue either way. In conversation, Dixit still seems to have his wits about him. He speaks haltingly and carefully but his words fail to carry conviction and he seems confused on crucial issues concerning the party or on his own political philosophy.

While admitting that the party is full of various groups who are trying to weaken the Congress at this crucial stage he glosses over the problem by saying that "in a democratic party it is bound to happen". His indecisiveness is reflected in his attitude towards the question of bogus membership, the thorny issue which almost led to a minor revolt. He admits that within the existing constitution it is not possible to hold fair elections: "There are some defects in the Congress constitution which create problems like bogus membership. In the absence of any previous records it is difficult to find whether a member is bogus or genuine." But he also refuses to concede Kamalapati Tripathi's allegation about bogus membership. "Tripathi is both right and wrong," he says, not elaborating further. Significantly, six weeks after his appointment, he has not made even a preliminary study of the problem. Dixit dodges the issue by saying: "The committee is too small to handle such a tall order. I have requested the prime minister to give me the power to nominate more members who may not necessarily be from the Congress."

PRASHANT PANJIAR

Octagenarian Uma Shanker Dixit's political resurrection is a baffling move at a time when strong leaders are needed to stem the growing internal dissidence.

Dixit is trying hard to project himself as an independent Congressman committed to Rajiv's leadership. But while he insists that he is "a great admirer of Rajiv Gandhi", when pressed, he says that the prime minister's policies are "neither bad nor better" (than Mrs Gandhi's) and adds: "Rajiv is after all a human being. He has both good and not-so-good qualities."

Rajiv's decision to induct Dixit may have been due to caste considerations—he needed a veteran Brahmin to balance the ouster of Tripathi and placate the Brahmin lobby. Dixit insists that he hates the existence of casteism in the party but admits that the Thakurs and the Brahmins are feeling threatened, saying: "As the roots of democracy are being strengthened, the Thakurs and Brahmins are losing out and they want to retain power."

But in trying to avoid a direct confrontation with any of the major caste groups, Dixit has already made some clumsy gaffes. While seeking expansion of the committee on bogus membership, he said that neither of the two other members K.N. Joshi and M. Chandrashekher were representative enough to deal with the question. He opposed Joshi because he was too junior in the party hierarchy and Chandrashekher, he felt, was not a true representative of the south. This led to a minor revolt and he had to hastily retract his earlier stand. Says Dixit: "I now realise that I should not have made that statement. I told the prime minister also."

He is also out of tune with the changes the party has gone through. As he says: "During independence our party was a sort of umbrella organisation. We did not discriminate between a mill-owner and a worker, between a maharaja and an ordinary person. But the dilemma in which I find myself is that the Congress is no more a broad national front. It has undergone changes." But whether he will be able to adapt to the changes—or introduce any of his own—is quite debatable. —PRABHU CHAWLA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

MIZORAM

The Rebel's Rule

FOR former insurgent and Mizo National Front (MNF) strongman, Laldenga, the ballot has proved more powerful than the barrel of a gun. At the end of his first essay in electoral politics, he found himself holding a prize he has coveted for more than three decades: command of the rugged 21,081 sq km territory of Mizoram and its six lakh people. Laldenga is not just Mizoram's fourth chief minister; for his supporters he is the "Hnampa" (father of the nation). For them, the significance of his victory lies in the fact that 15 years after Mizoram was separated from Assam, it will finally be ruled by a truly Mizo leadership. "Mizos have finally won and we will rule," shouted a bright-eyed Mizo youth, Thangliana, echoing the sentiments of his youthful compatriots, standing with sky-blue MNF banners near Aizawl Club, where votes from Aizawl district were being counted on the night after the elections.

Lending stature to Laldenga's victory was Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi's visit to Aizawl, even though the Congress(I) lost, for officially installing Laldenga as the leader of the country's 23rd state. Laldenga reciprocated by conferring on the prime minister the title of "Thangchhuah", the highest Mizo honour granted only to persons of exceptional courage.

But getting there wasn't easy for Laldenga. And neither was the victory of the MNF quite as impressive as suggested by its tally of 24 in the state's Assembly of 40. It won largely because its rivals split their votes: it totalled a bare 36.5 per cent of the votes polled. The average number of voters in each Mizoram constituency was 8,000 and in most cases its candidates won by margins of around 500.

The greatest help to the MNF was rendered by the two regional parties—the newly-formed Mizo National Union (MNU) and the People's Conference. They fared poorly themselves but by taking away the crucial 500 to 1,000 votes in various constituencies, made the difference between the Congress(I) and the MNF.

The MNU robbed the Congress(I) of a crucial few hundred votes in at least two Aizawl constituencies even though it did not win a single seat and its candidates lost their security deposits in most contests. Similarly, Brigadier Thenphunga Sailo's People's Conference saw its own strength dwindle from eight to three but by drawing 23.7 per cent votes, it managed to thwart Congress(I) prospects in several constituencies. Lamented Congress(I) state party chief Lalthanhawla: "We knew the votes would be divided but poll alliances proved impossible as every other party was opposed to us."

The strength of the Congress(I), which had won 20 seats in the 30-member Assembly in 1984, was reduced to 13 this time though the percentage of votes polled by the Congress(I) was a bare 3.5 per cent less than the MNF's. Even compared to the last poll, the swing away was not too much—from 40 per cent in 1984 to 33 per cent this time—considering that the MNF was not in the fray the last time.

Yet, the election had its humiliating moments for the Congress(I). With the exception of Lalthanhawla, every other major Congress(I) leader, including stalwarts like Saighaka, R. Thangliana and Vaivenga, lost his seat. Moreover, the prime minister's campaign appears to have boomeranged badly: the party candidate lost in every constituency visited by him during his two-day campaign.

Essentially, the split in votes worked in Laldenga's favour because of two factors. One, enough Mizos wanted a change and felt that the charismatic Laldenga deserved a chance. And two, Laldenga was successful in wooing the crucial youth vote. Margaret Ruayalpa, a state govern-

Jubilant MNF supporters; and (right) Laldenga casting vote: sweet victory

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ment clerk, typified the MNF supporters reasoning when she said: "The MNF are different. They may not be educated but they have got practical degrees and they will show how to take Mizoram to an advanced stage."

For Laldenga, as he repeatedly reminded voters, the battle of the ballot does not mean a total jettisoning of the original ideals that had forced Mizos to take to arms. The aim, as the MNF strongman assured voters, remained similar to what the insurgents had stood for: a Mizoram for the Mizos: for their culture, religion, language, and, most important, for political power without Central strings attached. The state Congress(I) stands for the intensely-disliked vai (plains people), MNF leaders reiterated, whereas the MNF stands for zoram (the local name for Mizoram) and self-rule.

The other two regional parties, the People's Conference and the MNU, played a similar tune but unlike the MNF, failed to mobilise the support of the state's 47 per cent youth. Laldenga went about this in a methodical manner. In early January, the Mizoram Government issued an order allowing unregistered voters to get their names included in the voters' list by simply paying 10 paisa. Between January 2 and 15, the MNF helped register thousands of young girls and boys. When this process of summary revision of electoral rolls was completed, it was found that the number of voters had registered a dramatic 28.2 per cent rise in three years—from about 2.5 lakh voters to 3.22 lakh.

Considering that Mizoram's population is estimated at about 5.9 lakh, an electorate of 3.22 lakh implies that 54.6 per cent of the population is of voting age—easily a national record. Moreover, according to census figures, only 47 per cent of the population should be of voting age. Revealed a state Home Department official: "Other political parties did not complain about underage voters because most of them were busy trying to get their own supporters in."

EVENTUALLY, Laldenga proved to be the pied piper luring the young to his camp. "Most youngsters had never seen Laldenga before and from the stories they had heard, he was a legend," explains young businessman Patrick Houhnar. To a generation weaned on western movies, fast music and motor-cycles, Laldenga was a hero they could identify with, unlike the stuffy Congress(I) or People's Conference leaders.

Some Congressmen suggest that intimidation by uniformed MNF guerrillas had kept away many of their supporters, chiefly non-Mizos, from polling booths. Yet, even Mizos opposed to Laldenga concede that the election results reflect the people's mood. Said Lalthanhawla: "I have to accept the MNF victory since it appears that the people of Mizoram wanted change and wanted to give Laldenga a chance to rule."

But Laldenga will have problems enough. The first will be to resolve the contradiction in his own stance. He has made it a point to stress that Mizos will have to learn to be self-reliant. "We don't want any vai money," he stated during the campaign but the fact is that Mizoram continues to be hopelessly dependent on Central aid. As long as it was a Union territory, its plan was more or less entirely funded by the Centre. This may have to change now: a state's plan outlays depend directly on the level of the state's own resource generation. But so far, the only tax Mizos pay is land revenue. Laldenga's Government may well have to introduce many new taxes.

Laldenga realises the importance of continued Central munificence and has spared no effort in ingratiating himself with Rajiv. Yet, if the Centre decides to tighten the financial screws, the MNF will not be in a position to complain as Laldenga himself has been decrying how the Congress(I) has made "beggars" out of the Mizos by making them dependent on Central funds.

Intelligence officials point to another danger: Laldenga's electioneering promise to get money and rice from the United Nations and foreign companies if the Centre proves pusillanimous. These statements—which Laldenga dismisses as being "childish" accusations—nevertheless constitute a veiled hint, as even MNF supporters acknowledge that their leader had repeatedly made such statements.

Laldenga's crucial test, however, will be the challenge posed by the 20 leading Mizo families who control the levers of the state's economy. They are behind most businesses, agencies and contracts and many relatives of these families are in key positions in the state bureaucracy. And since they have fattened on the Centre's largesse, they are fiercely loyal to the Congress(I). In fact, one from among the families—Rokhamlowa—even won on the Congress(I) ticket from an Aizawl constituency.

The question is: will Laldenga take them on or will he join them? He has promised to wage a war on corruption but should he resile and make peace with the powerful 20, then nothing much will change in Mizoram. But if he decides to oppose them, he could alienate the bureaucracy. Said an Aizawl businessman: "This is the last chance for Mizos. If Laldenga fails, they will lose hope for a better future. Mizos will have to accept anything that comes their way." —INDRANIL BANERJIE

Rajiv campaigning: another debacle

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Tribals rally in Guwahati: growing militancy

ASSAM

Warning Signs

IT was hardly a fortnight that Assam Chief Minister Prafulla Kumar Mahanta would want to remember. For the first time since the Asom Gana Parishad (AGP) came to power, there were massive rallies in Guwahati aimed directly against his party and its policies. Just over a year since the AGP stormed into power amidst scenes of state-wide jubilation, it was under serious and sustained siege.

The rallies were easily the biggest held in Assam in recent times, clearly indicating that fear and anger among various sections in the state—predominantly the minorities—was on the rise. Organised by tribals and farmers' organisations and the CPI, the demonstrators sounded a warning to the Mahanta Government against the recent large-scale evictions ordered by it, rendering about 60,000 people from 12,000 families homeless in the state.

The evictions have caused much resentment among farmers who have been tilling the fertile riverine land of the Brahmaputra for decades. The land, locally known as "char", is mainly cultivated by immigrant Muslims, Bengalis and tribals. Alleged A.F. Golam Osmani, United Minorities Front (UMF) secretary: "Assamese chauvinism has started harassing the minorities."

The farmers rally last fortnight demanded that land could not be taken away from the tribals without alternate provisions being made. It also called for land reforms designed to benefit poor peasants and agricultural labour and said that in the name of implementing the Assam accord, legitimate residents who have been living in the state for many years should not be harassed.

The UMF, a party born out of the insecurity among minorities, stated at its Goalpara conference last fortnight that the AGP was uprooting the religious, ethnic and linguistic minorities in the name of eviction. It also wanted the Assam accord annulled as it was not in the interests of the minorities.

Clearly, the UMF was making political capital out of the current situation. It is commonly known that thousands of people who have settled on the dry Brahmaputra bed are Bangladeshis who have come after 1971, the cut-off year in the accord. Said Pramode Gogoi, general secretary of the state unit of the CPI: "The UMF does not want to stop the inflow of Bangladeshis into Assam." State Home Minister Bhrigu Phukan says his government is determined to evict encroachers and would not shy away from the policy though some groups were trying to politicise the issue.

But the UMF was not the only party storming the AGP citadel. CPI leaders have been openly critical of the delays in the implementation of the Assam accord. At a rally of party workers drawn from all over the state, they accused both the Centre and the state of lack of sincerity. Now, the Congress(I) has also jumped on the bandwagon. Last fortnight, the party gave memorandums to each district collector in the state pointing out the deteriorating law and order situation. The fact that there have been 10 political murders in the last 13 months in which the victims have been arch-rivals or critics of the AGP, has thrown up an embarrassing situation for the ruling party. The state Congress(I) unit is now busy preparing a list of names of party activists who have been assaulted in the last few months.

Communal attacks against non-Assamese have also shown a dangerous rise. Antisocials last fortnight forcefully evicted 137 Muslim families from Darrang district in Mangaldoi subdivision. Most of them had settled in Assam almost three decades ago after migrating from the erstwhile East Pakistan. The terrified Muslims have fled leaving standing crops behind. Pointed out Golok Rajvanshi, leader of the Opposition in the Assembly: "We cannot alienate the non-Assamese. After all, they also contributed in building the state."

The UMF also came out with the allegation that many legitimate Indians were being struck off the electoral rolls. This, they feared, would halt any attempt at bringing different communities in the state together and create even greater divides. One of the names which had been struck off was of Foyjan Nessa, wife of Idris Ali, a former MLA. Says Ali: "This is a deliberate attempt, with obvious intentions, to ensure that the Muslims do not vote."

One thing is certain. The euphoria that Mahanta and his team had aroused 13 months ago is fading, and fading fast. If the AGP lets communal forces take the upper hand just to placate regional sentiments, the state may return to the same bloody path it traversed in 1983.

—RAMESH MENON in Guwahati

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

UTTAR PRADESH

Student Games

ARSON and violence cut a swathe through a dozen districts of Uttar Pradesh last month as militant students took to the streets. Even as beleagured administrations and the police slowly brought the situation under control, the question uppermost on everybody's minds was: why? While the mayhem had apparently spread in sympathy for the ongoing agitation at the Benaras Hindu University (BHU)—over the suspension of the students' union—by the fortnight's end, the state Government claimed to have specific information about the political involvement of Congressmen in aiding it.

The scale and ferocity of the violence took the authorities totally by surprise. Students in Varanasi turned the 14 sq-km BHU campus into a virtual battlefield: more than 25 bombs exploded, vehicles were set ablaze and academic life was paralysed for over a week. Lucknow, Allahabad, Ballia, Azamgarh, Deoria, Kanpur, Faizabad, Jaunpur—the list was long—saw students halting trains, pelting stones at the police, and testing the resources of the local administrations to their limits. And late last fortnight, students in Lucknow stoned to death Deputy Police Superintendent V.S. Sirohi. Confessed Home Minister Gopinath Dixit: "The violence was so spontaneous and mindless that we were kept guessing. But we finally controlled the situation."

By the time the fires died down, government officials claimed to have definite information about the involvement of supporters of the Congress(I) former working president Kamalapati Tripathi. A statement by Chandra Tripathi, MP, justifying the students' stance and asking for the fulfilment of their demands only served to strengthen the Government's argument. Chandra is Kamalapati's daughter-in-law and wife of state Health Minister Lokpati Tripathi. Interestingly, Varanasi Congress(I) MP Shyam Lal Yadav followed suit—and the silence on the part of Kamalapati himself spoke volumes. Said a district official bluntly: "Even if this group did not light the spark, it has certainly added fuel to a volatile situation."

The agitation took off when police prevented BHU students from holding a parallel celebration of the university's foundation day—boycotting the official function—on February 3, Basant Panchami. The students had been boycotting official functions since last year to press their demand for elections to the students union, which should have been held on February 14, 1986, but had to be postponed following communal riots that day. And there had been clashes with the police ever since.

But the police lathicharge on unruly students and the arrest of 23 of them on February 3 was infinitely more serious. Bombs were found adjacent to the Malviya Hall on the campus where the function was going on and the brickbatting became intense, forcing the police to act. District officials, in fact, had harboured apprehensions of a breach of peace since the chief guest at the celebrations was former vice-chancellor Dr Karan Singh, a detractor of Kamalapati. "We had well-substantiated information that the students might pose a security risk to the chief guest and Vice-Chancellor Dr R.P. Rastogi," said an official. More important, Anil Kumar Srivastava, president of the suspended union, was a known confidant of Chandra Tripathi and the move to hold a parallel function was reportedly backed by Kamalapati's student followers.

Srivastava and Janata Party youth leader O.P. Singh, who is also general secretary of the union, vehemently deny any political motivation. Argued Srivastava: "We had decided to boycott the official function and hold our own as a protest. The district and university administrations are trying to give a political colour to create misunderstandings among the student leaders as we have varying political leanings."

But the tinder had been well and truly lit, notwithstanding a purge of the campus carried out in December last by the university authorities: illegal occupants and criminal elements residing in the four BHU hostels had been evicted. Within hours, the 1.25 lakh student population of the three universities in Varanasi—BHU, Kashi Vidyapeeth and Sanskrit University—were on the rampage, with the virus quickly spreading to other districts. Aiding and abetting the mayhem were other Tripathi backers: Prabhakar Bhatt, general secretary of the Allahabad students union and Saroj Tiwari of the Lucknow union. The students predictably claim innocence, pointing an accusing finger at the police, but it did little to hide the fact that student activists from Varanasi were succeeding in keeping matters on the boil.

Chief Minister Bir Bahadur Singh

Police beating students and (inset) Rastogi: political nexus

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

summoned a meeting on February 10, attended by among others, Dr Rastogi and Union Minister of State for Education Krishna Sahi. A reluctant Rastogi was forced to announce student elections in May but in a drastically different manner. Following amendments to the constitution of the BHU union, Rastogi first wants elections to the various faculties, and the representatives chosen will in turn elect office-bearers to the students union. The students have rejected this formula outright and, following a convention of leaders from across Uttar Pradesh, have now threatened a state-level agitation.

Though peace has returned, politics was uppermost on everyone's mind. Varanasi Police Superintendent Himmat Singh was transferred in an effort to placate the students who, sensing weakness, have demanded Rastogi's removal and a magisterial inquiry into BHU's affairs. None of the student leaders has been arrested, however, and many of them continue to hold meetings in the union office. Some teachers and university employees have now thrown their weight behind the students. A senior official reflected the feelings of a demoralised administration and police when he sarcastically asked: "What are we expected to do in a law and order situation? Prevent it or think about political considerations?" But his question went abegging.

—DILIP AWASTHI

PM'S SECRETARIAT

Power Pack

IT has always been known that there are several advantages to being posted in the Prime Minister's Secretariat. But to the traditional list of pluses—power, perquisites and patronage—must now be added a fourth 'p': promotions.

When the Government announced three promotions of senior officials to the rank of secretary last fortnight, two of them turned out to be in the Prime Minister's Secretariat. And, coincidentally, both of them got the plum assignments (G.K. Arora staying on in South Block as special secretary to the prime minister and Otima Bordia getting the prize post of industry secretary). The third promotee—B.B. Mahajan—was shunted off to the inconsequential Department of Official Languages.

The last official in the Government to be promoted to the post of secretary before this was the short, dapper P. Murari, who too is now connected with the prime minister as he is the secretary of the committee set up to celebrate the 40th anniversary of Independence as well as Jawaharlal Nehru's birth centenary.

These promotions might have passed without comment in bureaucratic circles were it not for the fact that all four officials have superseded officials senior to them in the 'civil list'. All of them belong to the 1957 batch of the Indian Administrative Service (IAS), and they leave behind as additional secretaries people of the 1956 batch or of their own 1957 batch who were senior to them, men like Suresh Mathur (director-general of All India Radio), B.J. Hirjee of the Department of Justice, Naresh Chandra (till recently adviser to Jammu & Kashmir Governor Jagmohan) and P.N. Abi of the Department of Coal.

Another official in the promotional stakes, R.K. Tikkoo, was shunted out of the Department of Personnel and reverted to his state cadre, Madhya Pradesh. But Arora, who too was due to be posted back to Uttar Pradesh following the completion of his tenure at the Centre, overstayed briefly before he got his promotion. If the South Block grape-vine is to be believed, Arora is the most indispensable official in the Prime Minister's Secretariat and is tipped to succeed Serla Grewal, whose term as secretary to the prime minister is due to expire in a few months.

With the latest round of promotions, the Prime Minister's Secretariat now has three secretaries for the first time. In addition, there is now the post of cultural adviser (Pupul Jayakar), carrying the rank of minister of state.

In fact, the prime minister's office has been growing so rapidly and getting so top-heavy that it has, in the last two years of Rajiv Gandhi's rule, occupied an extra 12,000 sq ft of office space occupied earlier by the neighbouring Ministry of External Affairs, which has been forced to move out partially to a former hotel.

Some of the officials superseded in the latest round may, however, be accommodated in the near future. The problem at the moment is said to be a shortage of secretary-level posts. But even in the next round, some officials due for promotion are likely to be passed over because their ministers do not look on them very kindly. Law Minister A.K. Sen for instance refused to recommend Hirjee's name, though why the two of them don't see eye to eye remains a mystery. In Abi's case, what may have gone against him is the perception that he is close to the President Giani Zail Singh, under whom he had worked in the Home Ministry. As for Mathur, his minister Ajit Panja was unable to press his case firmly enough.

Bureaucracy-bashing, it would seem, will continue in the Government in different ways.

—PRABHU CHAWLA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The Hero Honda CD 100 gives a fantastic 80 km./litre.*

Just think, in terms of cost, a mileage of 80 km./litre* works out to under 10 paise a kilometer.

Or in terms of distance—a full 720 kilometers* on a tank full of fuel.

This phenomenal economy is due to the latest 4-stroke engine from Honda—the world leader in motorcycle technology.

And apart from being the most fuel efficient motorcycle in the country, Hero Honda CD 100 offers you much more—total comfort, total power and total reliability. In short—a total performance motorcycle.

Also, there is a nationwide network of 150 dealers and service points, for prompt, efficient service.

So fill it, shut it, forget it—for the next 720 km*.

*At 40 kmph with a load of 130 kg.

HERO HONDA

Committed to total customer satisfaction

ULKA-D-HH-539

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The distant song of water soothed their hearts, while misted hills awoke poignant memories of home.

Year after year, nostalgic civil servants of the British Raj left the heat and dust of the plains for the green hills of Shillong. Gentle, rolling hills dotted with sunwashed cottages that brought back vivid memories of home. A land of mists and scented pinewoods, which transported them to another time and place altogether. No wonder, Shillong was once called "Scotland of the East". Come, see for yourself whether it was aptly named.

ACCESSIBILITY

Daily Vayudoot flights connect Shillong with Calcutta. The nearest airport for Indian Airlines flights is Guwahati (127 km). This is also the nearest railhead (104 km). Taxis and buses are available here.

ACCOMMODATION

MTDC runs the Shillong Tourist Hotel, Tel: 24933 and ITDC runs Pinewood Ashok, Tel: 23116. For reservations, you can also contact the Meghalaya Tourist Information Offices at 9, Aurangzeb Road, New Delhi-110 011, Tel: 3014417, or at Police Bazar, Shillong, Tel: 6054.

TOURS

Package tours from Calcutta in season conducted by Vayudoot, along with MTDC. MTDC also conducts sightseeing tours in and around Shillong.

SEASONS

Throughout the year, except in the monsoons from July to September.

SHILLONG

Discover India

Discover yourself

Department of Tourism
Government of India

In India you'll see the world.

Rediffusion/DT/5256

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

You make me wonder Jacaranda

Jacaranda will grow on you ! And Shalimar Superlac has more in store. 46 designer shades to combine and contrast. Romantic Blue Moon. Blooming Wild Lilac. Fresh Light Cream.

Perfected by one of India's leading paint companies, Superlac Acrylic Emulsion will bring your walls to life. And so easy to maintain.

Superlac Acrylic Emulsion—the mix 'n' match collection for your walls.

Shalimar Paints
Wall time favourites

SUPERLAC
The mix 'n' match collection

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

CC-0. Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Someday all cameras will be like the Minolta 7000.

MINOLTA

The Minolta 7000 has changed SLR photography forever with an astonishing standard of technical innovation. It gives you Minolta's Hi-Tech autofocus with computer controlled accuracy, so fast and precise that it becomes an extension of your eye, even in flash photography. Automatic Multi-Program Selection so intelligent that it automatically makes all exposure decisions and settings for you, even selecting the right program for the Minolta AF lens you're using. Fully automatic film control that ends film loading, winding and rewinding worries. Touch control operation that assures quick, precise settings for all camera functions. And the world's widest array of AF lenses, from 24mm to 600mm. All in all, the Minolta 7000 lets you capture the split-second experiences of life as they happen, instantly, accurately and exactly the way you see them. Someday all cameras will be like the Minolta 7000. But for now, this is the one to own.

The Hi-Tech Autofocus SLR

7000

Minolta Camera Co., Ltd. 30, 2-Chome, Azuchi-Machi, Higashi-Ku, Osaka 541, Japan

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

UTTAR PRADESH

House Grouse

HOMESICKNESS is developing into a particularly serious disease in Uttar Pradesh—and the reasons are neither psychological nor medical. The source of trouble is the state housing board which has failed to provide homes to 1.89 lakh applicants, many of whom have been in the queue for years. That the Uttar Pradesh Housing and Development Board (UPHDB) hasn't learnt its lessons is evident from the fact that it will go in for fresh registrations this month in 124 cities and towns although it has not honoured its commitment to aspiring householders who date back to 1972.

It is not as if the authorities are unaware of the backlog. Admits Housing Commissioner Chandrapal: "There has been no perspective planning or monitoring for the implementation of schemes." But the lessons of the past appear to be lost in the board's bureaucratic maze.

So complete is the mess that the board has even lost track of the identities and addresses of people who have registered with it. It has, therefore, been forced to abandon the procedure of informing people by registered post about their allotments and has resorted instead to advertising in local newspapers. Over the last 15 years since it opened registration in 115 towns, till end-1986, the board has been able to provide houses and plots to only 1.10 lakh people.

In the past, it has taken the board three to five years—because of legal complications—to acquire land. The uncertainty of allotment that results has been disastrous for people like Lal Bahadur, a Kanpur clerk: he is still trying to find out about a home he booked 15 years ago. Says the frustrated clerk: "One of the TV ads is so apt for the board: 'Fill it (the form), submit it, and forget it'." Yet, the UPHDB is going ahead merrily with its current registrations although it still has to acquire land in 52 towns. Not that the pace of construction after land becomes available is encouraging: it takes the board six years to build a house and construction is currently taking place on less than 50 per cent of the 10,450 acres already acquired.

Major towns and cities offer conclusive evidence of the disorganised manner in which the board has functioned. Sixteen schemes were announced for the state capital, Lucknow, and 61,675 people registered but it has been able to implement only four schemes. Over half the people are still waiting, and these include large numbers from the weaker sections and the lower income groups.

But the situation in Lucknow looks positively cheerful compared to elsewhere. In Agra, only 27 per cent of 24,626 applicants have been successful while in Allahabad the percentage is 26.41 for the 17,500 hopefuls. Kanpur and Ghaziabad can only be regarded as a bad joke. Just 987 applicants out of 27,467 in Kanpur—or 3.59 per cent—have secured possession and in Ghaziabad the percentage is a negligible 1.39—merely 400 out of 28,668 have tasted success.

"Taking up registrations without having the land for the scheme has been a major defect," concedes Chandrapal but adds that there is "no other way to gauge demand". This argument sounds unconvincing, especially when the price the applicant has to pay is considered—in terms of not only higher price tags but also smaller houses.

Data provided by the board indicates that cost escalations have been phenomenal. Indeed, the poorest have been the worst hit: a one-room home which cost Rs 15,000 in 1975, now goes for Rs 35,000. Not surprisingly, several of the needy have either been compelled to withdraw applications or take on huge loans. Laments a frustrated applicant Adarsh Kumar of Lucknow: "This trick of registering houses before having any land was the practice of private developers. But now the housing board is adopting it."

S. PREMI

The Uttar Pradesh Housing Development Board is asking for fresh registrations despite the fact that it has not honoured its earlier commitment to aspiring householders since 1972.

A housing board colony in Lucknow: homesickness

The UPHDB has gone a step further: it has been arbitrarily reducing plot and house sizes. Middle income group houses built in 1975 had a plinth area of 100 sq metres in a total plot size of 250 sq metres. The board is now constructing flats for the higher income groups on plots measuring 181 sq metres with a plinth area of just 71 sq metres.

The process of taking possession too is exhausting. Recalls Ram Sagar, a resident of Indira Nagar in Lucknow: "I was given the allotment letter for an LIG flat last August, was able to get the house only in January and the board's engineering staff still has to do the finishing job." The UPHDB seems determined to establish that house-making is anything but a pleasant exercise.

—DILIP AWASTHI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

MADHYA PRADESH

Scandal Sheet

ALL the signs of a scandal are there: documents missing from safe deposit vaults, important papers destroyed just before they were required and rules in small print conveniently forgotten. The intended beneficiary: a VIP's daughter who became remarkably bright after her father became the education minister.

As the details of the episode—reminiscent of the Nilangekar affair in Maharashtra—started unfolding last fortnight, Madhya Pradesh's Minister for Higher Education Chitrakant Jayaswal, 63, appeared to be sinking deep into trouble. The minister stood accused of misusing his post and influence to manipulate the results of his daughter, Jaya, who not only topped in M.A. (Economics) in Bhopal University but also secured a record 84 per cent in one of the papers—International Economics.

Ironically enough, the charge was first raised by the Bhopal University's unit of National Students' Union of India (NSUI), the Congress(I)'s students wing, which wanted Chief Minister Motilal Vora to remove Jayaswal. "He has no moral right to continue," says state NSUI Vice-President Abdul Shafeeq Khan. The governor later instituted a probe.

But the petite Jaya, 20, remains unfazed. "Is it a crime for a minister's daughter to top in an examination?" she asks. Jayaswal himself believed that his daughter had become victim of a conspiracy hatched by those who had suffered because of his efforts to clean up the mess in higher education.

Nonetheless several points in Jaya's case remain intriguing. She was a good student—securing around 60 per cent marks—but in 1985, when her father became the education minister, she was awarded an impressive 90 per cent in the internal assessment for M.A. (Previous) Economics carried out by the Government Girls Post-graduate College, Bilaspur. However, the external assessment done by Bilaspur University for the same examination yielded only 59 per cent marks—a yawning gap of 31 per cent. As the final percentage is tabulated on the basis of both internal and external assessments, with internal assessment given only 10 per cent weightage, her overall percentage fell to 62.

Dissatisfied, Jaya applied for revaluation of her statistics paper. Her percentage rose to 64 and she finished second on the merit list. For her M.A. Final, she shifted to Bhopal University, where she displayed a flash of brilliance aggregating 77 per cent marks to top the merit list. In one paper, International Economics, she got 84 per cent, breaking all previous records. It was then that inconvenient questions started being asked and revealing facts were unearthed, much to the embarrassment of the minister.

Bhopal's Nutan College, where Jaya was admitted, did not have written permission from university authorities—as required under the rules—permitting her to shift. It was found that she never appeared in one of the compulsory papers: Indian Economic Problems. Her M.A. (Previous) mark-sheet was also found missing from Bhopal University records. And finally, even the controversial answer book which was revaluated, couldn't be found. It was sold as waste paper recently, claimed Bilaspur University Vice-chancellor S.C. Behar.

Denying charges of manipulation, Behar said: "There is quite a rigorous procedure for revaluation and it seems all the rules were followed in her case." Vora also skirted the issue. Asked if he had taken any steps to inquire into the affair, he said: "It's the minister's daughter who is involved and I believe that the university authorities are already looking into the charges."

The inquiry ordered by the governor cannot be expected to reveal much though Jaya's M.A. (Final) answer books have been seized by Bhopal University authorities. Teachers claim that revaluation is a regular racket where answer sheets of favoured students are sent to sympathetic examiners. Clearly, the charge is impossible to prove. What is certain is that, despite official disclaimers, most people feel this is another instance of charity beginning at home.

—N.K. SINGH

Photographs by R.C. Sahu

(Above) Students of Bhopal University take out a rally demanding removal of Jayaswal (left): marked man

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Europe's signpost.

Lufthansa shows the way to Frankfurt and Frankfurt is showing the way to Europe. With excellent connections to 72 European destinations and to 17 destinations in North America.

Lufthansa
German Airlines

LH 1036-1 IND

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

For the man who recognises value.

THE BUSINESS CLASS COLLECTION

Rich polyester blended suitings.

S.Kumars®

"Niranjan", 99 Marine Drive, Bombay 400 002.

Seen here is 'Rival' (left) and 'Davis Cup' (right) from the Business Class Collection. Made with the latest technology.

The Business Class COLLECTION

INCENTIVE

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Scratch-proof Sungloss SuperShield

Sungloss has the unique SuperShield against scratches, heat and stains

he SuperShield, a unique protection treatment, gives the ungloss surface greater esistance against scratches, eat and stains.

Do worrying about everyday ncidents and accidents. ust wipe... and presto! he laminate is beautiful as new. Almost forever!

You can choose from a wide selection of exquisite shades and designs. In Gloss, Matt, Woodtex and Textures.

So the next time you get laminated furniture, insist on Sungloss SuperShield. You'll be glad you did.

SunGLOSS
SuperShield

Decorative Laminate

Looks great, acts tough

capriha

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CALCUTTA

Stealing from the Mother

IT was literally like stealing candy from a baby. But in this case, the crooks had picked the wrong baby, or rather, babies—the homeless waifs under the care of Mother Teresa and her Missionaries of Charity. Last fortnight, the Calcutta police were poised to nab the kingpin behind a gang of international cheats who have been steadily siphoning off thousands of dollars, sent as donations to Mother Teresa.

Operating from Calcutta, Dhaka, Singapore and Hong Kong, the gang had been intercepting cheques bound for the care of the dying, the destitutes and orphans. "It is a terrible thing," remarked Mother Teresa. "Many of the senders are small children, they save and send their love to feed hungry children." But the postal thieves were obviously immune to all such moral restrictions and would have continued to drain the dollars had it not been for the Calcutta police detective department, which after three years of arduous investigations, is finally succeeding in its crackdown on the culprits.

So far, the police have managed to recover cheques worth US $ 1,50,000 (Rs 19.5 lakh). Several suspects have been arrested and their houses raided. Hopefully, once they are successfully prosecuted, the money from the recovered cheques will be sent on to Mother Teresa. "Investigations are still on, but we will get the evidence to round up the gang soon," says the detective department's chief H.A. Sawfi.

But it was pure chance that provided the first clue. An American donor took the trouble of writing to Mother Teresa asking for an acknowledgement of his cheque. When Mother Teresa failed to find any record of the cheque, she lodged a complaint with the Calcutta police in late 1983. "We did not for a moment suspect that some people might steal our cheques," says a nun of the Missionaries, in charge of postal deliveries.

Inspector P.K. Lahiri, head of the detective department's fraud squad, who was handed the case, made the first breakthrough when enquiries with banks revealed that the cheque had indeed been cashed, but not by Mother Teresa's organisation. Bank records showed that the cheque had been cashed by a Singapore-based firm, Amar Brothers Private Limited. Intrigued by this "Singapore connection", Lahiri made his way to Calcutta airport's mail section.

Police are poised to nab the kingpin behind a gang of international cheats who have been steadily siphoning off thousands of dollars, sent as donations to Mother Teresa.

RAGHU RAI

Mother Teresa with a baby: robbed

"It is a terrible thing. Many of the senders are small children, they save and send their love to feed hungry children."

MOTHER TERESA

Each day, sackloads of mail—letters, money orders and parcels—arrive at the airport for Mother Teresa, and it was the obvious place to start. After keeping the section under watch for a few months, the police early last year gathered enough evidence to arrest the air mail head sorter, who had been opening all mail addressed to Mother Teresa and pilfering the envelopes containing cheques, cash or bank drafts. He would pass these on to two Calcutta-based businessmen, who would in turn send them to Singapore through Bangladeshi couriers. With the modus operandi established after interrogating the two businessmen and the sorter, the Calcutta detectives were ready for their next coup.

Travelling to Singapore in late January, Inspector Lahiri and another detective, Gautam Chakraborty, teamed up with the local police. Aided by a suo moto arrest warrant issued by the Singapore police, the detectives sprang a trap for the Bangladeshi couriers who were finally arrested on February 3 this year. The couriers revealed that they were acting under orders from the man running Amar Brothers. A raid on the firm drew a blank, but the police is convinced that the company boss is their man. So far, they have refused to divulge his name as he has not been charge-sheeted.

But it's known that he

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

hails from Kanpur, had emigrated to Dhaka in 1958, and after Bangladesh's independence in 1971, had moved to Singapore where he set up his company. The Singapore police found the firm's operations vague and centred around small-time trading. Yet the company's proprietor does very well for himself, living in style in a palatial house.

The police claim to have strong circumstantial evidence against this emigre businessman. While the Singapore police is keeping close tabs on him, the Calcutta police is digging up crucial bank documents that it says will tie up the case. Already, the Calcutta detectives have xerox copies of cheques that have been cashed by Amar Brothers. The cheques, involving sums ranging from US $ 5 to $ 5,000, show Mother Teresa's signature, obviously false, instructing the concerned banks to transfer the funds to the company's Singapore bank account.

Meanwhile, even as the Singapore end of the affair is being wrapped up, interrogation of the arrested couriers suggests the existence of a parallel operation in Hong Kong which also diverts Mother Teresa's cheques. Though investigations by Calcutta detectives who travelled to Hong Kong show that a Sindhi businessman heads the racket there, progress has been stalled because of banking regulations in the British colony. Hong Kong bankers promise clients absolute privacy and have turned down the sleuths' request to study the suspect's accounts. But Lahiri is hopeful that pressure from Hong Kong's police bosses will ultimately make the bankers more cooperative.

"We should have the case wrapped up in the next few months," assures Sawfi. Meanwhile, postal authorities have by special order, appointed two officers, in Bombay and New Delhi, to sort mail bound for Mother Teresa and send it to the organisation's Calcutta headquarters by special courier. "We have received no further complaint from our donors and we believe that the postal thieves will not dare steal our cheques any more," says a nun. But already, money that could have saved so many more hundreds of destitutes and dying, has been drained away—perhaps irretrievably. While the police have unearthed some cheques, in all probability, this is only a fraction of the actual money that has been diverted. A handful of people have obviously struck it rich—at the cost of the poorest of the poor.

—INDRANIL BANERJIE

LAST WORD/RAJINDER PURI

Cool Cabinet

THE Congress under Rajiv Gandhi is changing so rapidly that there is no saying how things will be in the 21st century. But we can guess how things will be next year, say around the same time. As I see it, this is how a typical cabinet meeting would go in 1988.

All the ministers are present, waiting for the prime minister. Rajesh Khanna leans over and whispers to Sunil Dutt: "Is the prime minister always late?"

"Don't ask me," Sunil whispers back. "I joined the Cabinet recently myself, in the 29th reshuffle. Ask Amitabh, he was inducted in the 17th reshuffle, he ought to know...."

Just then the prime minister walks in and takes his chair. "Well, let's get down to business," Rajiv says briskly. "What's the first item on the agenda?"

Narasimha Rao shuffles some papers and says: "The first item is the acute financial crisis, sir—we have a terrible problem of resource mobilisation!"

"Well, what does the finance minister have to say?" Rajiv turns his head and asks.

Amitabh clears his throat. "As finance minister, I have only one thing to say," he mutters, and then breaks out into a song:

Swiss bank ka paisa, jab kaho laa den,
Hum voh hain, jo do aur do paanch banaa den...."

Rajiv listens to him very attentively, then says: "Hmm! I see what you mean. More NRI investment along with a good dose of deficit financing, eh? Jolly good strategy, what? Okay, let's move on to the next item!"

"But...but sir," V.P. Singh stutters.

"No buts, man—let's have the next item," Rajiv snaps sternly.

"The next item relates to our fluctuating relations with Pakistan, sir," Narasimha Rao says hastily. "Our foreign office is quite confused about Pakistan's intentions, which is demoralising our armed forces. We have to formulate clear directions for the army, sir."

"What does the defence minister have to say?" Rajiv asks. All eyes turn towards Sunil Dutt. Sunil looks up at the ceiling, and melodiously starts to sing:

"Akhiyaan milaa ke,
Zia sharma ke,
Chale nahi jaana
Ho-ho-ooh,
Chale nahi jaana...."

Rajiv gives a satisfied smile. "There, gentlemen," he says. "We have our answer. Even if President Zia shies away from confrontation today, our boys at the front are ready for anything tomorrow! Anything else?"

Narasimha Rao clears his throat. "One last item, prime minister," he says. "Eleven months in the year you are travelling abroad. Your long absences from home while problems mount are causing great concern. There are so many problems about which you are silent—do you have nothing to say?"

"Of course I have something to say," the prime minister replies. "I have something very important to say to you all."

"What?" ask the ministers, suddenly sitting up.

Rajiv solemnly looks around the room, then softly starts singing:

"Awara hoon, hoo-hoo-hoo, Awara hoon...."

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"In these Modern Times I'd love to be in your shoes!"

Wouldn't any gentleman?
Shoes in subtle, startling, scintillating shades.
All kept shining with Cherry Blossom Neutral.

Cherry Blossom Neutral—because there are classics in colour too.

CHERRY BLOSSOM NEUTRAL The perfect shine–for every shade.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

LINTAS(C)/CBN/1/2417

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

'It's funny how every time we set up the Barbecute a party just happens!'

INTRODUCING

Prestige

Barbecute

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

MAA (S) PBE 1 A 86

Anywhere, anytime, it's great times with Prestige Barbecute.

It's strange how every man who loves good food and good company turns out to be a terrific barbecue chef. He may have never seen the inside of a kitchen before but Prestige Barbecute brings out the creative cook in him.

Prestige Barbecute. It does wonderful things. Set it up some place and a party just grows around it. Neighbours drop by. Friends get wind of it and come calling. The children call up their friends. And before you can say seekh kabab, a full blown party is under way.

And as the glowing coal slow grills the chicken tangri and the corn-a-cob gets browner, the tantalizing aroma of food makes everyone hungrier, livelier, then the stampede for food begins!

Discover how to put the sizzle in a party, even an instant party, with new Prestige Barbecute. Light and conveniently portable, it can be set up in minutes on a terrace, in a backyard, on the beach, even a traffic island!

Next time you are in the mood for fun, set up the Prestige Barbecute.

And watch a party evolve. A party where everyone is a great chef. Everyone wants to grab the juiciest morsels. Everyone gets hungrier every minute. And everyone has a simply marvellous time.

Portable barbecue- 5 minutes to assemble.

Rs.495/=
Local taxes extra.

Designed by Prestige of London

A Product

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Give the devil his due.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

A truly envied TV doesn't happen just by magic. It takes even black magic. That's why, when your neighbour envies your pride as an ONIDA owner, don't be too proud to discuss the reasons. You can begin by telling him about ONIDA's world-famous Japanese pedigree. And that itself will explain some of the features that you can then show him.

When he's floored by the mind-blowing clarity and sharpness of the picture, give him a helping hand by mentioning that the secret lies in ONIDA's much higher resolution than that of any other brand, and in the direct processing of signals within the TV.

Then when he's moved by the great sound, show him the sound features that make it possible. The novel Triple Speaker function where the tweeter lets you clearly hear all frequencies. And the unique adjustable ear flaps that invite you right within the acoustic field of the TV!

All this talk, mind you, is not merely to give credit where it's due. You have a major motive. Because, only when all your neighbours buy their ONIDA, can you stop worrying about their envy, and relax.

ONIDA with cordless remote. Neighbours' envy. Owners' pride.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

TAMIL NADU

The Militant Menace

KANDASAMY Durairaja, 49, a Jaffna Tamil and formerly a prosperous merchant from Trincomalee, took refuge with his family in Madras about two years ago. Last month, Durairaja was returning to his flat in Mylapore in the heart of Madras, when he was abducted by armed youths. The kidnappers demanded Rs 6 lakh as ransom for his release. Durairaja was forced to write letters to his wife imploring her to somehow raise the money and give it to the boys, otherwise he would be killed.

Three weeks earlier, a gang of revolver and sub-machine-gun wielding militants had stormed their way into the posh Anna Nagar residence of Thamodharam Manivasagam, a rich businessman hailing from coastal Valvettithurai town in the Jaffna peninsula, now a director in a Singapore shipping company, and spirited him away. The boys demanded a ransom of Rs 25 lakh from his family. His wife paid up Rs 3.5 lakh.

Kadirvelu Mohandas

Yet another bunch of armed Tamil youths whisked away another rich Jaffna businessman, Sinniah Kadirvelu Mohandas, from the same Anna Nagar locality, and demanded Rs 5 lakh for his release. Mohandas was tortured by his kidnappers, and left to spend his nights in a mosquito-infested toilet. In yet another similar incident around the same time, Suryakumar, a Sri Lankan Tamil travel agent operating now from Madras, was also kidnapped from his Arumbakkam residence on the outskirts of the city.

The families of these kidnapped Jaffna businessmen preferred not to lodge formal police complaints. The reason adduced was that they had been warned of militant reprisals in case they chose to do so. But top police officials had been privately informed and the cops had spread their dragnet.

Thamodharam Manivasagam

Photographs by SHYAM TEKWANI

Tamil militants are now kidnapping rich Jaffna businessmen—who have taken refuge in Madras—to acquire much needed funds.

On the morning of February 16, events came to a head. Durairaja's captors had told his wife that they were prepared to show her husband to their 11-year-old son, Mayuran, if the boy was brought to a prominent hotel in central Madras. There was an unofficial police trap laid for the militants at the hotel. As Mayuran was picked up and taken in a car by the kidnappers, a plainclothes policeman got into an autorickshaw with Durairaja's wife and gave chase. Luckily, the speeding car hit a scooter in west Madras, and as the public closed in on the car Mayuran shouted that he was being kidnapped.

Two of the four kidnappers managed to escape while the public caught the others. Police subsequently identified them as Selvam, 24, and Subramaniam, 25, belonging to the Peoples Liberation Organisation of Tamil Eelam (PLOTE), headed by Uma Maheshwaran.

Based on the information extorted from the two PLOTE militants, police parties fanned out into different areas of west Madras and rounded up 40 PLOTE members of the Uma Maheshwaran group. The same night Manivasagam was released by his gaolers. Subsequently, the shipping company director's relative who had handed over Rs 3.5 lakh to his kidnappers was able to identify the recipient, another PLOTE member. And, thanks to the large-scale round-ups, Durairaja was also set at liberty the following morning.

But Mohandas had yet to be traced. The police crackdown on the PLOTE did not bring about his release, so it was obviously another group that was holding him captive. Luckily, a couple of days later, an anonymous telephone caller ordered Mohandas' wife Bhagavathi to produce Rs 5 lakh in half-an-hour, and hand the money over to her husband's kidnappers near the Ayyappa Temple at Anna Nagar. Policemen, who had tapped her telephone, asked her to plead for a little more time, which was granted.

Kandasamy Durairaja

Well before the appointed hour, over 25 policemen in disguise had surrounded the rendezvous, some as Ayyappa devotees and others as vegetable vendors. At the scheduled time four men appeared on the scene. As the money changed hands, policemen pounced on the four, all of whom turned out to be important members of the Tamil Eelam Liberation Organisation (TELO). Following the arrests, the police were able to free Mohandas that night from a hut in Koyambedu on the fringes of Madras city. Forty-five TELO members were also taken into custody.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The police have concluded, after all their investigations, that groups like PLOTE and TELO, which have started disintegrating as a result of serious internal factional quarrels, are facing an acute shortage of funds and are getting increasingly tempted to resort to kidnappings for ransom. In November last year, Point Pedro (in Jaffna) businessman K.T. Rajasinghamand and travel agent K. Jeyarathinam were kidnapped by Tamil militants and released only after realisation of the demanded ransoms. After the Liberation Tigers proved their domination of the militant struggle, donations from expatriate and other Sri Lankan Tamils to the other militant groups started thinning down and they are now struggling to even sustain themselves. Corroborated Durairaja: "I found that my kidnappers were having only bread for breakfast, lunch and dinner on most days."

The latest series of kidnappings and the fact that desperate Tamil militants belonging to the smaller groups have begun to openly come out in the streets of Madras toting guns has come as the proverbial last straw for the people of Tamil Nadu. Said Madras Police Commissioner Walter Dewaram: "Sri Lankan Tamil refugees here should realise that they are our guests and have to behave themselves to continue to enjoy our hospitality." PLOTE spokesman A.S. Skanda says blandly: "We did not kidnap Durairaja. We arrested him because we had given him money for safe-keeping and he has not returned it." While Srikant, the TELO spokesman, says that certain irresponsible members of the group were responsible for the Mohandas kidnapping and they have been expelled. But the militants are now under considerable public pressure.

However, the militarily-most powerful militant group, the LTTE, and the Eelam revolutionary organisers who have recently been working in close cooperation with the Tigers still enjoy public support. Otherwise Tamil Nadu's sympathy for the cause of the Tamils of Sri Lanka would have by now been drowned in disenchantment with militant misbehaviour.

—S.H. VENKATRAMANI

ORISSA

Siege of Balasore

THE battleground is familiar: the shores of the Bay of Bengal in the lush Baliapal and Bhograi blocks of Balasore district—abode of Lord Shiva—where the Defence Ministry had been trying for the past four years to set up a National Test Range (NTR)—estimated cost: Rs 3,000 crore—to test newly-developed missiles, rockets and pilotless target aircraft.

But the battle strategy has changed. Everyday, at dawn and dusk, women and children gather in their lush green fields blowing conch-shells and beating brass utensils each time they spot a stranger in the area, while the men block village roads to reiterate their resolve to fight the creation of the NTR which they believe will bring economic disaster. Village youth instead of working in the fields, vie with each other to enroll themselves as members of the Marna Sena (suicide squad) and guard entry points preventing government officials and their vehicles from entering the area. "We will not surrender even an inch of our land come what may," declared Sena volunteer Saroj Kumar Kar.

The battle has now escalated with villagers imposing a ban on the movement of government personnel and vehicles. The Orissa Government on the other hand has clamped an undeclared "economic sanction" on the area, denying the villagers essential commodities and agriculture credits for the past three months in a bid to force them to leave their homes and surrender their rich fertile lands.

But that has only made the villagers more determined. Village dwellings and shop walls are littered with slogans in Oriya, Yudhanahi Shanti Chauhun, Ghati Nahi Mati Chauhun (We don't want war, we want our soil). The slogans at the peoples' checkgates are more direct: "Warning: stop! the land is ours, the sea is ours." With the battle lines drawn, observers fear that a bloody confrontation

Map by B.K. SHARMA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Photographs by EASTERN PRESS AGENCY

Villagers enforcing blockade (left); and slogan against test range: defiant mood between the administration and members of the suicide squad is inevitable. Last fortnight, Janata Party leader Samarendra Kundu, the former minister of state for external affairs, sent a memorandum to Defence Minister V.P. Singh saying: "The people are determined not to leave the area. If the Government uses force, it will spill innocent blood." Opposition leaders have asked the Defence Ministry to locate the NTR in a place like the Andaman Islands, where it would affect less people, but Minister of State for Defence Arun Singh has insisted that the Andamans would cost much more. The Government also maintained that apart from the cost factor, the Andamans had far more rainy days, and testing required at least 200 clear days, a theory the opposition leaders refuted, saying that Baliapal had more rainy days than the Andamans. Still, with government officials claiming that there is no alternative site to build the NTR, the situation seems to be a stand-off.

The administration has now taken the extreme step of imposing an unofficial economic blockade by stopping the supply of essential commodities and refusing to ply buses to lift local farming products. Said Bansidhar Dey, a retail shop owner: "The Government has stopped supplying sugar, kerosene and other foodgrains since December as a result of which people are buying kerosene in black at the rate of Rs 9 a litre and sugar at the rate of Rs 7 a kg." Added another retailer Gauranga Bebarta: "Before the economic blockade was imposed, each centre was allotted 4.5 quintals of sugar and 416 litres of kerosene besides other commodities, but now our shops are empty." Collector of Balasore Priyabarta Patnaik denied that the administration had imposed any economic blockade but added that since government vehicles and personnel were not permitted to enter the villages, they were unable to monitor the supply.

For farmers, the area, spread over 400 sq km along the seashore and comprising 132 villages, is a virtual goldmine with cash crops like betel-vines, coconuts and cashew besides profitable fishing in the shallow waters. Farmers earn an estimated Rs 20 crore a year from betel-vines alone. Local farmers say that the NTR project would not only destroy vast paddy land but also over 30,000 betel-vines, thousands of coconut trees and cashew plants worth over Rs 750 crore.

Saroj Kar: ready to die

Said Sanatan Shee of village Tahalia and a member of the Pratirodh Committee: "Even the landless and poor here are richer than their counterparts in any industrial area. Even a child earns not less than Rs 20 a day." Said Collector Patnaik: "It was natural for the villagers to oppose such a project when they found that valuable land and houses would be taken away and the administration instead of provoking a confrontation was trying to ensure normalcy through negotiations. But the fear and panic had created a big gap between the administration and the people." That was amply illustrated recently when the Government, unable to meet village leaders, airdropped pamphlets explaining the Government's rehabilitation plans.

The Centre has announced a Rs 127-crore rehabilitation package which envisages paying the villagers Rs 50,000 per acre of land, a chain of industries to absorb all persons to be rendered jobless and even compensation for government land under occupation of the villagers. Chief Minister Patnaik has stated that the Government will not acquire land until all affected persons are completely rehabilitated. Village leaders, however, disbelieve the rehabilitation package and feel that once they move they will be denied compensation. The Government, under pressure, has now agreed to reduce the area for the project, thus affecting only 68 villages. The Government has also proposed the setting up of a model village by the end of the year so that at least 3,000 villagers can be accommodated in the first batch.

But the villagers are adamant and have received support from many opposition parties. Members from the affected villages are running a parallel state and peoples' courts, setting up a network to bring in essential commodities and sending local products outside. Last month, they turned down a Rs 15-lakh offer of the NTR development fund for their local college. "We know how to manage our own affairs," said a Pratirodh spokesman.

The area is being compared to Jaffna, with the Government resorting to blockades and the locals defiantly resisting. But by last fortnight, it was clear that tension here is rising to dangerous levels and the Balasore test range could well echo with the sound of gun-fire even before it is built.

—FARZAND AHMED in Baliapal

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

PRASHANT PANJIAR

Sethia with wife Laxmi after being granted bail: long wait

RAJINDER SETHIA

To Jail and Back

IN the elegant ambience of his five-star hotel suite, he could easily pass for an expatriate millionaire on a visit to the old country. The faded jeans and windcheater could be a deliberately cultivated air of casualty, offset by the expensively elegant sari and jewellery adorning the wife by his side. But for the last two years, his home has been a 10 × 12 feet cell in Delhi's notorious, top-security Tihar Jail.

Last fortnight Rajinder Singh Sethia, 39, the man who made international headlines as the world's biggest bankrupt, was savouring the half-forgotten fruit of his old life-style as the Indian courts finally granted him bail. In those two years, his world has been turned on its head. The flamboyant, jet-set millionaire who owned a fleet of ships and limousines, a private Boeing airliner, casinos and dozens of trading companies had been reduced to the ranks of a common criminal, unable to even rustle up the Rs 10 lakh in cash for his bail.

In a span of just 30 months, the Rs 750-crore Sethia empire had collapsed like a house of cards, his flagship, Esal Commodities, liquidated and its creditors, including three Indian banks, were baying for his blood to recover the approximate US$ 150 million (Rs 200 crore) they had loaned him three years ago.

But the exaggerated hype that surrounds the Sethia story has somehow contrived to obscure the bizarre nature of the case and the actual charges against him. Perhaps the most bizarre aspect is that he has spent two years in jail even though the banks he has allegedly defrauded have still not filed any charges against him. Even the false passport case carries a maximum sentence of six months. Punjab National Bank (PNB), the only bank that has given some details of the money owed to them, has admitted that it holds securities that are in excess of their loans to Sethia.

In fact, the complex nature of Sethia's business activities and his dealings with the banks, seem to have entangled the case in a complex and confusing ball of financial wool that will take some unravelling. The initial impression created was that Sethia, at the time of his bankruptcy, had swindled the banks of over $1,000 million. The banks also claimed that his securities were either fake or doubtful. But what they conveniently forgot to mention was that between 1984 and 1985, Sethia had borrowed over $1,000 million from them and repayments had been made in full and within the stipulated time. But despite that, during the arguments on his numerous bail applications, none of the banks clearly stated that their loans were not fully secured. The total oustanding debt is around Rs 145 crore of which about Rs 70 crore is tied up in the Sudanese and Nigerian bills of lading while the rest is fully secured.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Further, the banks have not made any serious attempts to sell off the securities they were holding against the loans. Neither has any attempt been made to recover the payments due from the Nigerian and Sudanese governments. After numerous trips made to London by Indian investigators, the final chargesheet mentions the figure of only $7 million allegedly involved in the fraud case. As Sethia asserts: "I never intended to play mischief with the banks. I am not a criminal. I was guilty of some bad business judgements."

Sethia's spell in Tihar has obviously mellowed the man. He now chooses his words carefully and judiciously. "Where is the money right now to repay every one of the banks? My immediate goal is to clear all my debts outstanding in India. I have to somehow get back my reputation of a successful businessman," he says soberly.

That will be no easy task. His future is tenuously linked with the final outcome of the three criminal cases pending against him in the Delhi and Calcutta courts and one in London (see box). The fact that it took his battery of lawyers, including the celebrated Ram Jethmalani, a dozen attempts before his bail request was finally granted indicates that the cases could drag on for years.

In fact, Sethia's 715-day journey from custody to temporary freedom has been a bitterly-fought legal battle, every step of the way. In early March 1985, he was arrested from his New Delhi hotel and two cases relating to bank fraud and possessing a forged passport were registered against him by the Central Bureau of Investigation (CBI). He was sent to Tihar Jail on March 13. While still battling to defend himself against the charges, he was implicated in yet another major criminal case. In April 1986, he was one of the 14 people accused of collaborating in the sensational Charles Sobhraj jailbreak.

TRAIL TO TIHAR

Founds Esal Commodities in London in 1977. Company's turnover in 1978: Rs 1 crore. Establishes commercial relations with Indian banks in London in 1979. Raises loans from the banks for trading with Sudan and Nigeria.

Esal turnover rises to Rs 100 crore in 1981 and bank advances to Rs 100 crore. Sethia goes on a property and assets buying spree worth Rs 50 crore in 1982. By 1983, outstanding bank advances to Esal rise to over Rs 100 crore.

Esal's turnover rises to Rs 600 crore in 1983. The same year, a coup in Nigeria poses a major setback for Esal. Bank advances against Esal start rising without repayment. Esal's creditors start demanding money.

In January 1984, the Allied Arab Bank files a criminal case for recovery of outstanding loans. A London court freezes Esal's bank account. In February, arrest warrants against Sethia issued. He leaves UK and moves to Spain.

Esal's creditors meet in Copenhagen in February 1984. By August, they approve a Rs 50 crore rescue plan which is sent to Reserve Bank of India (RBI). Rescue Plan approved by the RBI and all the creditors on September 6, 1984.

Rescue Plan presented to London court for approval on November 6, 1984. On November 7, the British Government opposes the plan in public interest. Court liquidates the company and appoints Cork Gully as receivers.

Sethia returns to India in November 1984 for negotiations with the main offices of the three banks. Subsequently, he travels to the US and other western countries to arrange additional money. He returns to India in December, 1984.

Sethia arrives in Delhi on February 28, 1985. On March 1, he is arrested by the CBI on charges of fraud and possession of false passport. Released on bail by Delhi High Court on February 13, 1987, after 715 days in Tihar jail under judicial custody.

Overnight, his plans of getting out on bail receded into the darkness of solitary confinement where he found himself stripped of visitors' rights and unable to even meet his immediate family. His attractive wife Laxmi returned to London without meeting him and his nephew Daljeet Bhalla, who was handling his legal affairs, was also arrested in the jailbreak case. Says Laxmi: "It was hell. We thought we were finished."

What obviously landed him in the soup is his track record and his high-flying manner of doing business. The Sethia family consists of three brothers, all living in London who branched out from their father's jute business in Calcutta to set up a world-wide commodity trading network. But it was Rajinder who was always the high-flyer. He had the knack of locating the right contacts, specially in Africa where he had established a personal rapport with leaders of many African states. It was through his connections that Esal got orders for supplying everything, from sugar to potatoes, to customers all over the world. In the span of just five years, the 37-year-old magnate had taken Esal's turnover from Rs 1 crore to a staggering Rs 600 crore.

But it was self-evident that the high-risk element in Sethia's business dealings would someday land him in hot water. In January 1984, a coup took place in Nigeria, a country with which Esal conducted over 40 per cent of its annual business. Sethia, in his high-flying fashion, had been borrowing millions from banks and other financial sources on the basis of documents and pledges. And as the payments from Nigeria suddenly dried up, the pressure from his creditors started building up. The Allied Arab Bank demanded payment of £10 million (Rs 15 crore) that was owed to them by Esal and

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SOBHRAJ

Charlie's Angle

ONE of the most intriguing elements in the Rajinder Sethia case is his relationship with the most celebrated inmate in Tihar Jail, Charles Sobhraj. The Delhi police had tried to implicate Sethia in the Sobhraj jailbreak last year. But so far they have been unable to produce solid evidence.

Just how well did Sethia and Sobhraj know each other? According to Sethia, not very well. The fact that the two were kept in separate wards of Tihar made frequent meetings impossible. But even so, Sethia confirms that 'Charlie', as Sobhraj is known in Tihar, was monarch of all he surveyed and lived like one; a man before whom even jail officials would bow and scrape, who had limitless resources and contacts.

Says Sethia: "Charlie and I were never great friends. I only came in close contact with him during our routine meetings with our respective visitors in the jail's lobby." Sethia confirms that despite his notoriety, Sobhraj was easily the most popular inmate amongst the prisoners. "Charlie is both respected and feared by all. He is respected for his command over the rules of the prison and has succeeded in securing many benefits for the prisoners which were, in fact, denied by the jail staff," says Sethia.

But Sobhraj is also greatly feared. "The overall impression in Tihar is that he is one of the most hardened criminals and can go to the extent of killing people if he so decides. In Tihar everybody, including the top officials, are overawed by Charlie. He is a bit of a blackmailer and a bully."

But Sobhraj is also a man of taste. His life-style inside the jail speaks for the money power at his command. He spends lavishly and jail officials share his luxurious life. Says Sethia: "I have been told that he has at least half-a-dozen bank accounts abroad and he receives regular money through his contacts. In Tihar, if someone knows Charlie, jail will become like home for him. Charlie has both the means and the methods to import into the jail whatever anybody wants." Moreover, prisoners look up to him for legal advice. He counsels them on bail matters and on hiring the right kind of advocates and has become a sort of resident advocate.

Sobhraj, according to Sethia, keeps himself fit and reads a lot inside the jail. Sethia also feels that Sobhraj is a man of considerable courage: "When he was brought back to Delhi after his arrest in Goa he was beaten black and blue to extract information. But he did not give in. Instead he challenged them to take off his handcuffs and he would kill them with his bare hands. He's a tough man."

Charlie is best known in Tihar for being a schemer. Says Sethia: "He is always thinking in terms of his future strategy. After his acquittal in a murder case in Karnataka, he feared that the Indian Government would send him to Thailand where he was to be hanged. I feel his entire energy was being spent to postpone that day and it will not be a surprise if this escape was part of his plans. He knew that he would be convicted at least for two years in the jailbreak case and seven years for drugging the jail staff. Till he completes that term he cannot be sent to Thailand." Even inside Tihar, it is obvious that the Sobhraj saga grows larger with every passing day.

Sobhraj: monarch of Tihar

finally filed a criminal case alleging that Sethia had taken loans on forged documents.

That was the signal for other banks to panic. The London branches of PNB, Central Bank of India and the Union Bank of India, which had together advanced Sethia over $200 million (Rs 250 crore) against bills of lading, demanded payments. As the pressure mounted, Sethia quietly left London in January and headed for Spain from where he tried to recover from what appeared to be a temporary setback. Two of the three banks were, in fact, quite willing to bail him out by loaning him additional money.

Accordingly, the Indian banks cobbled together a rescue package of $45 million which was duly approved by the Reserve Bank of India. But the British Government refused to accept the bail-out deal and Esal was finally brought under liquidation on November 7, 1985.

Now with Sethia out on bail, the question being debated is whether he has enough assets to repay the loans. For over two years, none of the banks have made public the amount Sethia owes them. Even in court, the PNB took almost 18 months to provide the actual amount debited in Sethia's account. Till then, figures ranging between Rs 100 crore and Rs 200 crore were being bandied about. Surprisingly, the issue is now restricted to the charge that Sethia had defrauded the PNB to the tune of only Rs 10 crore. None of the other banks have even lodged a formal complaint against Sethia or launched civil or criminal proceedings.

Moreover, Cork Gully, the official receivers, stated in June 1985 that the total advances of the Indian banks were: PNB $92,500,000 (Rs 110 crore), the Central Bank about $21 million (Rs 25 crore) and the Union Bank about $14 million (Rs 16 crore) raising the total to Rs 151 crore. Against this, the receivers confirmed that the value of the securities held by the PNB were in excess of the loans. In the case of the other two banks, investigations were still pending.

But the PNB gave a revised amount in its letter to the CBI dated July 8, 1986, which stated that the total outstanding in Esal's account was $81,869 million (Rs 90 crore) and included the accumulated interest of over Rs 20 crore on the loans. This means that the bank has recovered a considerable amount of money after Esal's liquidation. PNB admits that it is holding securities against all advances but feels that all of them may not be enforceable due to legal complications. Of the $81 million, over $48 million is due on account of Sudanese and Nigerian bills, most of which are secured by Lloyds of London. It is only in the case of certain Hong Kong bills that Sethia has no security to offer.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

According to PNB, even the prestigious security of Jokai Tea Estate is disputed and cannot be sold off to recover the loans. Sethia's brother, according to the bank, has claimed a share in the company which is currently worth over Rs 35 crore. The PNB is even doubtful about the recovery of Nigerian and Sudanese bills because a criminal case against one of Sethia's companies has been registered and the Nigerian Government is not fulfilling its commitment. But Sethia asserts that he will be able to recover the money from Nigeria and Sudan. Says he: "It can be done only if all of us get together and fight diplomatically and legally. My securities are not in doubt. Why aren't they selling them off? If they are facing any problem let them tell me. I am available for corrective action."

While the PNB seems likely to recover its money, the Central Bank and Union Bank will find it difficult as the value of the securities with them is far less than the advances given. According to bank sources, the value is short by over 50 per cent in both the cases.

But despite the odds, Sethia seems determined to stage a comeback. "I have a long life to go. I can't live like a bankrupt. If I get the right environment and support I will not only clear all my debts but bring back to India much more." Sethia, however, is hamstrung by the fact that his passport has been impounded and his movements are further restricted as he has to report weekly to the offices of the CBI. He may have managed to get out of Tihar but that might eventually be a holiday compared to the financial bind he has yet to extricate himself from.

—PRABHU CHAWLA

CHARGES

Loan Mela

RAJINDER Sethia is involved by the police in three criminal cases. He was originally arrested by the Central Bureau of Investigation (CBI) on March 1, 1985 for defrauding Indian banks in London "of millions of rupees". At the same time he was also charged with possessing a forged passport. While these two cases were still in the preliminary stage he was rearrested for allegedly being part of a conspiracy to help Charles Sobhraj in escaping from Tihar in April 1986.

Sethia in handcuffs: tangled web

He was released on bail last fortnight in all the three cases. In addition, Sethia is facing a criminal case in London for cheating a bank. Two of his directors were earlier arrested by the London police but both have since been acquitted by the courts. Since Sethia was not present to defend himself no judgement has been passed on his personal involvement. Says his London solicitor M.R. Laddie: "There are no specific charges against Raj Sethia though there is a warrant outstanding against him. This warrant is similar to the three directors of the company who were acquitted. All I can say at this stage is that the police here would probably want to interview him should he return."

However, it is the bank fraud case which remains the most serious one. The CBI filed a first information report against Sethia on March 1, 1985 stating that Sethia "entered into a criminal conspiracy with his own employees as well as certain officials of the Punjab National Bank (PNB), Central Bank of India, Union Bank of India and other institutions based at UK, the object of which was to defraud those institutions and banks to the tune of millions of pounds sterling."

But as the investigations progressed the CBI finally came down to a figure of $10.40 million (Rs 13 crore) as compared to the earlier $33 million (Rs 42 crore). Though the CBI charged Sethia with fraud and conspiracy the trial court did not accept this and dropped the charges against him. He was, however, charged with cheating the banks.

The prosecution case is that Sethia submitted false bills of lading worth over Rs 13 crore to PNB in December 1983. After presenting these bills, which stated that sugar worth that amount had actually been despatched to Nigeria, Sethia requested the PNB to reduce the outstanding amount against his account by over Rs 13 crore, which the bank did. The CBI, during its investigations, discovered that sugar was never sent to Nigeria as claimed by Sethia. The CBI also accused Sethia of replacing the original documents with new ones to cover up the fraud.

Sethia's company claimed that the 25,000 tonnes of sugar was shipped and submitted documents in support of its claim. But the CBI established that the tonnage capacity of the ship named by Sethia as the carrier could carry only 12,500 tonnes and not 25,000 tonnes as claimed by him. In fact, the CBI has been able to lay its hands on what looks like irrefutable evidence to prove that the sugar was never shipped. However, Sethia sticks to his position and says that he never took any money against this shipment though the PNB did reduce his outstanding loans by the amount of the shipped sugar's value. But this entry has also been reversed and the bank loans remain at the original amount.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Final Bow

ITS long list of contributors, over a span of 63 years, reads like a who's who of Telugu writers, poets, historians, epigraphists, other scholars and social reformers in Andhra Pradesh during this century. Yet, even they could not save the prestigious monthly Bharathi from making its final bow with the January 1987 issue. Lamented owner-editor S. Radhakrishna: "It is sad but the accountant's decision mattered most. We were spending Rs 50,000 on a journal which brought in only Rs 40,000." The closure of Bharathi marks the end of an era of periodical journalism which pioneered the renaissance in Telugu culture this century.

NAGENDER RAO

Bharathi: last issue

The founders of the oldest Telugu daily, Andhra Patrika, brought out the journal at eight annas a copy, 63 years ago, to promote literary criticism, and studies on the history, social and cultural movements of the Telugu-speaking people. Its circulation never rose beyond 4,000 but contributors prized their names appearing on the authors' list of Bharathi. Radhakrishna is now planning to push it as a special section with the daily Andhra Patrika once a fortnight. Telugu afficionados will be happy enough with that.

Counter Moves

IT is now clear that Madhya Pradesh Chief Minister Motilal Vora is trying to build up Minister of State for Railways Madhavrao Scindia at Arjun Singh's cost. Last month, when Scindia was in Bhopal for some railway work, Vora raised quite a few eyebrows by convening a high-level meeting to discuss the "development of Gwalior division". State cabinet ministers present in the city were asked to attend the meeting, senior officials were summoned from the four districts of Gwalior division and top bureaucrats in the state secretariat had to do proper homework for the meeting. Earlier, the chief minister's special assistant, Iqbal Ahmed, had shot off a terse memo to a number of officials asking them to send notes about their departments.

DIP

Scindia with Vora (left) at the meeting: breach of protocol

The meeting, held to humour a minister of state, created history of sorts and triggered off murmurs of dissent. Many ministers felt that it was a flagrant and quite surprising breach of protocol. But, an unfazed Vora maintains that the meeting, jointly addressed by him and Scindia, was nothing new: "Such meetings have been held in the past." Records, however, don't confirm the claim.

Capital Connection

PARLIAMENTARIAN 'Raja' Dinesh Singh, 62, minister in the External Affairs Ministry for half a dozen years in the '60s, is rising from what seemed his political grave. Speculation on this count has been fuelled by a prime ministerial visit to Singh's Kala Kanker estate in Uttar Pradesh's Pratapgarh district.

It was an odd function that took Rajiv there: he spent two and a half hours, first for tea at Singh's palace, and later participating in the centenary celebrations of a newspaper that folded up 79 years ago. In any case, the event should have been noted about a year and a half ago, because Singh's great grandfather, Raja Rampal Singh, had launched the Hindusthan—of which Madan Mohan Malviya was editor—on November 1, 1885. It closed shop in 1908 after Rampal Singh's death, when it was incurring an annual loss of Rs 50,000.

Rajiv with Singh (right) at Hindusthan centenary: speculation

The incident received particular attention in Congress(I) circles also because Rajiv has visited the state on few occasions since he came to power. Such is the nature of ruling party politics that, soon after Rajiv's visit, the rumour mills went immediately into top gear and Singh is being talked of as an alternative Thakur leader to the present crop of Defence Minister V.P. Singh, Union Communications Minister Arjun Singh and Uttar Pradesh Chief Minister Bir Bahadur Singh. That Rajiv, as an MP, visited Kala Kanker at least thrice with his wife Sonia, is also being counted as an important factor that favours Singh's comeback.

There seems little else to Singh except for his personal familiarity with the country's most powerful family—he was not only a Union minister but once a confidant of Indira Gandhi. But he deserted the Congress for the Janata Party just before the 1980 elections and lost the seat. He was taken back into the fold by Mrs Gandhi and Rajiv, who gave him the Pratapgarh ticket in the 1984 elections. How much he can capitalise on his family connections will continue to be a point of speculation in coming months.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

SONY

Sony just made good times a lot more fun.

Introducing the Handycam. At just one kilogram, it's the world's smallest, lightest, video camera recorder. So you can take it anywhere. In a coat pocket. Or a handbag. It's the world's easiest to use, too. Which means everyone in the family can take beautiful moving pictures with sound. Any time, any place. So years from now, when photos are just a faded memory, you'll still have the good times. And they'll still be a lot of fun.

With a Handycam, everyone can.

Handycam

Video 8

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Import your Mercedes-Benz through Telco

A Mercedes-Benz hardly needs an introduction

Few can match its combination of visual appeal and advanced technology. Refined handling and efficiency, comfort and safety features.

Its wide range of models come both in petrol and diesel versions with many optional accessories.

Small wonder then that the Mercedes-Benz car commands prestige and a high re-sale value.

If you're eligible for import of a car, let Telco take away the bother

As the exclusive selling concessionaires of Daimler-Benz in India and Bhutan, Telco will help you get your Mercedes-Benz quickly, at no extra cost.

Pre-sales service

We'll advise you on the models and accessories best suited to Indian conditions, keeping in view your specific needs. Give guidance regarding import formalities, furnish proforma invoice, register your order and follow up with M/s. Daimler-Benz on your behalf.

After-sales service

Among imported cars, Mercedes-Benz has, through Telco, the largest network of dealer support, and a chain of workshops. Staffed by Daimler-Benz trained professionals, and equipped with special tools to service Mercedes-Benz cars. Why, Telco even settles the warranty claims promptly on Mercedes-Benz cars.

Write to us for details. Mail this coupon today.

Please send me more information regarding import of a Mercedes-Benz car.

Name: _____

_____

Address: _____

_____

_____

16

Tata Engineering & Locomotive Co. Ltd.,
148, Mahatma Gandhi Road,
Bombay 400 001, India.

Mercedes-Benz
the car engineered like no other in the world

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Joy Ride

THERE is no love lost between Balakrishnan Pillai, the controversial Kerala electricity minister, and the journalist fraternity. But Pillai and Trivandrum Press Club President V.P. Madhavan Nair, 65, both from Kottarakara, get along famously. So it came as no surprise when Nair recently arranged a junket tour sponsored by the Kerala State Electricity Board (KSEB) to visit hydel projects all over India. In 1982, when the CPI(M) led-E.K. Nayanar ministry was about to fall, Pillai, who was in charge of the same portfolio then, had organised a similar tour. Some journalists had had to abandon the trip midway in order to cover the fall of the ministry. Now, as the state prepares for the polls, the selected Trivandrum press may be earnestly "studying" hydel projects again.

C. RATHEESH KUMAR

Pillai: press treat

Nair's tour has created enough bad blood with the state press. Several reporters have withdrawn to cover the polls. But, says Nair: "Tell me one journalist who has not curried favour with ministers. Pillai is not bribing us with this tour, he only wants to see the hydel projects in other states." The tour in a special first class railway compartment will cost the KSEB a whopping Rs 3 lakh. As one journalist humourously said: "It's a Pillai treat for the pressmen following his legal victories in the high court which have almost exonerated him from his famous seditious speech in Cochin."

Customs' Coup

BOMBAY customs unearthed what amounted to a virtual gold-mine at the city port last month. Successive raids within a week on four country craft and a ship that was coming from the Gulf brought in 225 kg of gold, worth more than Rs 8 crore—half the value of the gold seized during all of 1986 in the city. In the process, Bombay customs also broke open another ingenious modus operandi that was employed by gold smugglers.

Most of the gold was seized from country craft which were returning from Dubai with cargoes of onions, dates and waste paper. What was unusual, however, was the fact that the gold biscuits were not hidden in the cargo or in secret compartments but were slipped into special cavities in the boats' wooden planks after being neatly wrapped in cellophane and cloth. After unloading the cargo at the port, the boats were to be taken to a repair yard, where the glittering biscuits would have been taken out by the carriers and handed over to the smuggler's agents in the city.

The raids, which were organised by the new Additional Collector L.D. Aurora, had an immediate impact on the price of gold in the market, which suddenly shot up to more than Rs 2,600 per 10 gram. And immediately afterwards, the customs, along with the Directorate of Revenue Intelligence and the Economic Intelligence Bureau, raided 20 establishments of gold dealers and seized piles of documents relating to illegal gold transactions. After a long time, it seemed that the pressure was being increased on both the transporters and dealers of smuggled gold.

Problem Prisoner

SUDDENLY, all attention is once again focused on the historic Bhagalpur central jail and on inmate Simranjeet Singh Mann, the former IPS officer who was recently named president of the United Shiromani Akali Dal. Mann has been always considered a high-security risk, and though kept under what officials claim is "foolproof" security—"even a fly cannot enter his cell undetected"—the Union Home Ministry and the state administration turned panicky after the mysterious visit of one Darshan Singh from Calcutta. Intelligence Bureau sleuths investigating the case felt that Darshan Singh collected Mann's "resignation" letter from the party presidentship through Mann's father or his lawyers but the visit caused a flutter.

Mann: high-security risk

Part of the reason for this was the fact that Singh's visit came after a study by a three-member Union Home Ministry team suggested that there could be a possibility of an escape bid when Mann is taken to court every fortnight. Mann is lodged in the vast two-acre Juvenile Ward, enclosed by seven-foot high walls on all sides. The ward has three large halls with a verandah. Mann is housed in the middle hall. The state Government is spending Rs 30,000 a day on his security. Now the Union Home Ministry has suggested that the trial should take place in the jail itself.

Shocking Tale

DESPITE the inconvenience, Calcuttans have been bearing the nearly six-week-long suspension of telephone services in the city with a touch of gleeful malice. For, claim lady telephone operators at the city's Telephone Bhavan, that they have been getting a jolt—literally 50-volt electric shocks—while answering incoming calls. Significantly, these shocks have been received only by persons manning incoming calls from electronic exchanges and all those "shocked" belong to the employees' union that has been resisting the entry of computers and electronic exchanges into the telephone scene.

JYANTA SHAW

Operators: selective shocks

While Calcutta Telephone's General Manager Jyotirmoy Bose suspects sabotage, the shocking episode brought not only two officers from the Telecom Research Centre in Delhi but also Dr B. Hockings from Australia to study this new "occupational hazard". A satisfactory explanation is awaited. Quipped a telephone subscriber, convinced of "God's hand" in the shocks: "Perhaps it was God's reminder to the operators that they ought to perform their duties towards the public."

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Anyone toiling day-long with a computer deserves a little help from a friend.

AMIGO

The friendly software that performs useful little things to save you time and effort.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

A friend in need

Everyone can do with a little help from a friend.

Especially people who work with computers. These people often need a little something to tidy up their work, even protect it, and to generally hang around and be useful.

Enter Amigo.

What this clever little software package does is this.

It gives you ready access to DOS commands. And you don't have to leave your application program.

Also, Amigo saves you those agonising moments of waiting. You know the feeling if you've reached confidently for a fresh floppy while storing, and found it – unformatted!

With Amigo, there are no hard feelings. Stay on with your program and Amigo does the formatting – promptly!

We call this feature POP-DOS. And for it alone, Amigo is worth your money.

Relax! Take a coffee-break

Besides, Amigo is useful even when you're away from your computer. Amigo stands guard and protects your work from intruders. The Coffee-time facility allows you to lock away your work and take a break. No accidental erasures, ever again.

Scratch pad, alarm, calendar ...

But Amigo has a few more friendly little features.

Stow away your own phone directory and reach for it by touching a key or two. Bring on your scratch pad on screen and make notes. Avail of the alarm facility, to remind you of appointments.

Use Amigo's calendar to keep track of important days and dates.

Avail of the video-off feature which automatically turns off the screen at your pre-set time. Protecting the valuable phosphor on the screen and preventing its needless burn-out.

A good friend stays in your memory!

Amigo is fully memory-resident. Load Amigo just once in the morning – and just forget about it.

Through the day, Amigo will appear at your bidding. Ready to perform. Amigo works with virtually all application programs. Without affecting or interfering with them.

That's pretty nice, isn't it? And, as you'll find out, that's pretty useful too!

Amigo from Sonata.

Price: Rs. 850 Taxes extra

SONATA

Software Division of Indian Organics
43, Dickenson Road, Bangalore 560 042

Your computer needs us.

Sonata software available at: Computer Point

BANGALORE 43, Dickenson Road (Road Opp. Webb's Garage), Bangalore 560 042 Tel: 578718/578452 Open: Mon-Sat 10.30 am - 1 pm & 2.30 pm - 7.30 pm
BOMBAY 227, Dr. Annie Besant Road, Worli, Bombay 400 025 Tel: 4936716/4930543 Open: Mon-Sat 10.30 am - 1 pm & 2 pm - 7 pm
MADRAS 92, G.N. Chetty Road (Opp. Vani Mahal), T. Nagar, Madras 600 017 Tel: 441192 Open: Mon-Sat 10 am - 1 pm & 2.30 pm - 7.30 pm
NEW DELHI F-41, South Extension Part I, New Delhi 110 049 Tel: 624370/698548 Open: Tue-Sun 10 am - 1 pm & 2 pm - 7 pm

Sisin's-1410

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CHAKMAS

Shattered Lives

FOR the past nine months, Chakma refugees have been fleeing Bangladesh terrorised by the Bangladesh Army. Last fortnight, the Buddhist tribals came in waves into Tripura swelling to over 45,000, haunted by memories of their women raped, houses burnt and people mercilessly shot or hacked to death. Senior Correspondent RAMESH MENON with Photographer PRASHANT PANJIAR visited the makeshift camps in Tripura set up by the state Government, where anger and tragedy punctuated the atmosphere. His report on the atrocities and the problems the new refugees pose.

EXACTLY 16 years ago, the jungles were swarming with thousands of terrified refugees fleeing from the barbaric atrocities of the Pakistan Army. That influx led to one of the bloodiest births in modern history—the creation of Bangladesh. And now, the wheel of tragedy has come full circle. Last fortnight, the same jungles along the borders of Tripura were once again alive with a steadily growing flood of refugees fleeing in terror from the atrocities of the Bangladesh armed forces.

They are history's least-known refugees and the tragic dimensions of their situation have largely gone unnoticed, and unreported. But the tales of horror brought by the Chakmas, the Buddhist tribes living in the Chittagong Hill Tracts, are vocal witness to the nightmare they are escaping from, and to the only sanctuary they can find—India.

Each day, as dusk drops its shroud of darkness over the dense forests, entire families of Chakmas, many barefooted and carrying their meagre belongings, slip across the border to India. The influx started nine months ago and by last fortnight there were around 45,000 Chakmas in the overcrowded, makeshift refugee camps set up by the Tripura Government.

From the Indian point of view, the steady influx of a growing number of refugees is a serious problem with alarming ramifications. But on humanitarian grounds, there is no way the state Government can put a stop to it. The stories of brutalities brought by each family point to a human tragedy of massive proportions—another genocide. Anil Chakma from Pablakhali village in the hill tracts, entered India with his wife and four children on February 9. They had walked barefoot through the jungles surviving on bamboo shoots and wild roots. They had decided to flee after the Bangladesh Army unleashed an orgy of violence—attacked their village, beat up Chakma men, raped their women and burnt and looted their houses.

Map by B.K. SHARMA

The litany of horror is repeated with each arrival. Annai Marma, 32, from Khagracherri district sobs as she recounts how six armymen beat up her husband and then gang-raped her in front of him. Nundibala Chakma, 39, saw her husband being shot dead before being dragged to an army camp and gang-raped for two days. Tanyajuri Chakma, who came into Tripura last fortnight, still nurses festering wounds on her breasts where her nipples were bitten off by Bangladesh army personnel. Says she tonelessly: "The army jawans usually encircle a Chakma village, segregrate men and then rape the women. The younger and beautiful ones are taken to army camps and kept for many days." Lambracha Murmal, a pretty 16-year-old girl, is still in a state of shock. In mid-December, she was raped by three jawans who took her into a forest and kept her there for a few days. She managed to escape from their clutches and join other Chakmas seeking sanctuary in India.

It is hardly surprising that none of the Chakma refugees are prepared to return to Bangladesh. Specially now that the

Chakma refugees in a Tripura camp: borderline existence

Bangladesh military offensive against the Chakma tribals has been stepped up to crush the insurgent operations of the Shanti Bahini guerrillas, led by young Chakmas who are demanding autonomy.

The insurgency has been going on for at least a decade and has claimed thousands of lives on both sides. Bangladesh President H.M. Ershad told newly-elected parliament members in mid-July of 1986 that in the last 10 years about 1,000 people had been killed. Shanti Bahini sources put the figure at least ten times

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Photographs by PRASHANT PANJIAR

The plight of thousands of Chakmas, who prefer to huddle in the discomfort of makeshift refugee camps rather than return to their homes across the border, underscores the enormous human dimensions of the tragedy.

more. Whatever the truth, the Chakmas pouring into India believe that returning to Bangladesh means certain death. According to figures released by the respected human rights organisation Amnesty International, over 800 Chakmas have been killed in the last eight months in the hill tracts following army operations.

The Bangladesh Government had agreed to take back 24,000 refugees beginning from January 15, but the Chakmas refused to leave. When Indian security forces tried to collect them together to send them back to Bangladesh, many of them fled into the nearby forests while others flatly refused to budge from the relief camps. Their argument was simple and spoke volumes for what they had undergone—that if they crossed over to the hill tracts, they would be killed. And if they were going to die, they would rather die in India than in Bangladesh. Says Bhagat Singh, CRPF commandant: "We were helpless. The Chakmas just sat tight saying that we could shoot them but they would not go back."

The fact that more refugees are pouring in every day with fresh stories of the genocide in the hill tracts, has only strengthened their resolve to stay in India.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BLUE STAR

The only guarantee you'll ever need

A 2-minute quiz for Managers thinking of a cool drink on a hot day.

Full marks if you answered: "Blue Star", and "Blue Star's Aquarius Water Cooler." Blue Star has been the leader in Water Coolers for more than 40 years. It has supplied more Water Coolers than all the other Indian manufacturers put together. Blue Star Aquarius Water Coolers have a field-tested, perfectly balanced refrigeration system, designed to operate under the most demanding conditions.

Small wonder then, that Blue Star Water Coolers have been quenching the thirst of millions around the world.

Select models available on DGS & D Rate Contract
ME-6 RC-1646 WC 06 11/87-88 BS COAB/1473 Dated 20-1-1987

BLUE STAR Aquarius

The rugged Indian Water Cooler with a world-wide reputation.

ATTN: DDOs & GOVERNMENT BUYERS: You can place your order for Water Coolers mentioning the above DGS & D Rate Contract No.

For more information, please contact: Blue Star Limited, Appliances Division, Shiva-e-Numh, Dr. Annie Besant Road, Worli, Bombay 400 018. Tel: 493 3165.

FSA/BSL/1/86/M

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Said Sujata Chakma, 13: "We will go back only after we get independence." The memory of the atrocities which she witnessed, including her friends being gang-raped by Bangladesh army jawans, is graphically engraved in her young mind.

With the refugee flow increasing each day, the Tripura Government is faced with an unenviable task. Strapped for resources, it has already spent over Rs 2.25 crore on the Chakmas in the last nine months. But money is not the only problem. The major concern centres around the fact that a few hundred Chakmas have left the refugee camps and infiltrated into the interior, taken up local jobs and show every sign of settling down permanently. Intelligence sources fear that Tribal National Volunteer (TNV) extremists might also infiltrate into India from Bangladesh in the guise of refugees.

Tripura Chief Minister Nripen Chakraborthy has tried to draw the attention of the Centre to the need to stop what he termed as "the sea of humanity flowing into Tripura", but with little success so far. Chief Secretary N.P. Navani feels that though the state is being saddled with a problem of complex dimensions, they cannot ignore it either because of the humanitarian issues involved.

Lambracha Murma, 16, was kidnapped by army jawans, taken to a jungle and gang-raped. She escaped to join refugees fleeing to India. Many young Chakma girls are reportedly being sexually abused in army camps.

THE camps at Silacheri, Kathalcheri, Korbook and Takumbari—all close to the Bangladesh border—are as Chakraborthy says, a sea of humanity, with hundreds of displaced families attempting to stitch together the bits of their shattered lives. On some days, the state Government finds it difficult to accommodate the refugees as they come in hundreds and are forced to sit out in the open, huddling together for warmth during the chilly nights.

The Chakma crisis is essentially one of identity. During partition, the Chakmas were angered when the British granted the 5,138 square miles of the Chittagong Hill Tracts to erstwhile east Pakistan. Chakma leader Snehkumar Chakma rushed to New Delhi to beg that the area be allowed to remain part of India. But nothing came of it. Gopal Chakma, one of the tribal leaders who has been living in India for the last decade, feels that India was not concerned since the Chakmas who occupied the hill tracts were politically unorganised.

Soon after the creation of Bangladesh in 1971, another Chakma leader Manobendra Narayan Larma, led a delegation to Dhaka to ask the late prime minister Sheikh Mujibur Rehman, if the Chakmas living in the hill tracts could be given autonomy and a ban imposed on the entry of non-tribals into the area. Mujibur would have none of it, as he said: "Bangladesh will never recognise any dual identity."

Realising that there was no political solution, the Shanti Bahini was formed with the idea of gaining autonomy through an armed struggle. But an added problem arose in 1974 when an economic crisis forced Dhaka to encourage poor Muslim Bengalis to settle in the hill tracts. This was partially to meet the demands of Tanyajuri Chakma was not only raped by jawans, but her nipples were bitten off. The festering wounds on her breasts tell an ugly tale. For many Chakmas, tears have dried out. Years of genocide have desensitised them.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Thibijya Chakma, 80, was made to witness the gruesome gunning down of his aged wife by army jawans and was beaten up brutally permanently damaging his jaw. Memories of torture haunt most of the refugees.

land-hungry peasants in the heavily-populated plains. But more important, the resettlement was a device to ensure alteration of the demographic position of the hill tracts which were dominated by the Chakmas. Almost overnight, the Chakma population in the hill tracts was reduced from 98 per cent to around 70 per cent.

MOREOVER, most of the resettled Muslim peasants were ex-servicemen. This was a deliberate ploy to dampen the Chakma insurgency and also ensure that the Chakma villagers, who are basically simple people, would be prevented from giving shelter to Shanti Bahini guerrillas. Inevitably, the target of the insurgents became the Muslim resettlers. Last fortnight, over 200 casualties were recorded in the hill tracts as the Shanti Bahini raided army camps and Muslim settlements. The Bahini fields over 7,000 guerrillas, 2,000 of whom are armed, and the recent renewal of atrocities has ensured that their number will increase. Says Jorna Chakma whose husband, Chandrakanta, was killed last year: "More youngsters will join the Shanti Bahini now. We just cannot be wiped out."

The continuing ethnic and communal strife in the hill tracts have left the Chakmas bitter and revengeful. Says Shantibikas Chakma, a high school teacher: "Our only hope now is armed combat. After all these years of oppression, there can be no short cuts." Triptimoy Chakma, 21, whose father was killed before his eyes when he was just six years old, says defiantly: "If our future generations are to live like human beings, we have to take the guns on our shoulders." Most Chakma youngsters feel the same way.

But there are dangerous implications in this for the Indian Government. As with the Tamil militants from Sri Lanka, India could be caught in a diplomatic fix if the Chakmas decide to carry on their armed struggle from Tripura. Despite this, New Delhi seems to be surprisingly complacent about the issue and no effort has been made to put pressure on Dhaka to stop the brutalities across the border. Chakma leaders say that they will only go back if a tripartite meeting between representatives of Bangladesh, India and the Chakmas themselves produces an assurance that the persecutions will definitely stop.

But there is little likelihood of that happening. The general feeling among government officials is that Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi has chosen to play down the Chakma issue during his leadership of the South Asian Association for Regional Cooperation.

Admittedly, there are no easy solutions. But New Delhi's current complacency may cost the country heavily. Tripura is already affected by TNV extremism. The influx of thousands of tribals from Bangladesh, who obviously intend to settle down in the state, will only increase ethnic pressures—and give TNV extremists added leverage and scope. The Chakmas may have been Dhaka's problem but they are increasingly becoming India's as well now.

Triptimoy Chakma at the age of six saw his father gunned down by passing jawans. Many Buddhists have met a similar fate. Most youngsters feel that armed combat is the only way out if future generations of Chakmas are to live like humans.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

IT'S Time FOR THE INTERNATIONAL TREND

ALLWYN QUARTZ

An exclusive creation in the latest international style. A sensational fusion of hi-tech and hi-fashion, the very latest from the pioneering Japanese time-keeping technology in quartz.

A class that shows through its uncanny accuracy. Unmatched reliability. And no maintenance.

Now catch up with the latest international trend. With an Allwyn Quartz ... Everything about it is extraordinary – except the price.

Available in a wide range.

3-year guarantee

Time FOR THE NEW GENERATION ALLWYN

Manufactured under licence from SEIKO

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

The business day in shades of grey

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

A Product of VXL India Ltd
WE EXCEL

CC-0. In Public Domain

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Meet the three year old who is a big name in computers.

OMC

The thrust, the drive, the aspirations have earned OMC a big name in computers.

The key to this success is a conscious and continuous effort in offering the most appropriate products to various user needs. All this is evident from the many firsts the Company already holds.

The 58000, DRAFTSMAN and now ... OMEGA DESIGNER in CAD.
BANKMAN, SUPERBANKMAN and now ... BANKSTAR in Banking.

Deriving its strength from the wealth and expertise of its talented manpower, OMC consolidates all efforts to result oriented activities. A fact, proven by the Company's high performance in doubling turnovers year after year.

In just three years OMC has attained an enviable position.
An impressive and exhaustive customer profile comprising public — private sectors, defence, educational institutions, R&D labs — The largest installed CAD base — well organised customer education and training facility —And a nation wide support network establishing a unique rapport with the customer.

OMC strives ... to give you the edge.

OMC COMPUTERS LIMITED

5th Floor, Chenoy Trade Centre, 116 Parklane, SECUNDERABAD 500 003
Phone: 70556/823175/825178/824375

Phone Nos.: Bombay 2028360/2026212, Bangalore 568211, Calcutta 467126, Delhi 665408, Madras 471034, Pune 26342.

OMC — One with the user.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Musical Award

PARAM Vir, the 34-year-old music composer well known in Delhi for his pioneering work in children's music theatre, has been awarded the coveted Benjamin Britten Composers' prize for 1987, for his string orchestral work, Before Krishna. Besides the £500 (Rs 10,010) prize-money, Param Vir is now scheduled to present his award-winning work, to be performed by the Britten-Pears orchestra this summer, at the prestigious Aldeburgh Festival on the Suffolk coast in eastern England. A former music teacher at St Xavier's School, Delhi, Param Vir has initiated several experimental projects, choirs and musicals for children. The best-known amongst his works include Kidstuff, the fantasy musical The Demons of Bara Tooti and the anti-nuclear musical Fall-out.

Param Vir: pioneering work

Winning awards has become something of a habit with the gifted composer. After being awarded an Inlaks Foundation scholarship in 1984 to study composing under his boyhood hero, Oliver Knussen, Param Vir won three major composition prizes in five months—the Boston-based Kucyna International Composition prize, with his concert for chamber orchestra entitled Pragati, the Tippet Foundation award, which will be performed at the Dartington International Summer School, where he hopes to put up a cantata on Krishna, and now, the Benjamin Britten award. People instantly tend to assume his works are an east-west mix. "Not so," says the composer. "Indo-western music, I feel, is a trap. The results are never entirely satisfying. In writing concert music, I am not interested in a career as such. I am interested in the musical ideas for their own sake." Param Vir, who now hopes to divide his time between Delhi and London, has several rather ambitious projects ahead of him. They include a sprawling children's opera entitled Childhood of Krishna, and also a full-scale opera on what he describes as the "most popular of Indian gods"—Krishna again.

Asian Treat

A treat is in store for Asian viewers in Britain and Europe. By the end of the year, viewers in Oslo, Paris and Manchester can watch Hindi films, Indian 'soaps', chat shows, current affairs programmes, and even cricket Tests in their living-rooms, by courtesy of the "Asian satellite channel". It is the brainchild of two experienced cable TV experts, John Seddon and John Wilde.

Seddon

The Asian Television Service will be broadcast four hours a night, and delivered to cable TV networks and individual satellite aerial owners. Says Seddon: "This will be a unique TV channel which will be presented by Asians, for Asians. It will be transmitted in scrambled form, and will require the viewer to subscribe." Besides possibly buying programmes from India or Pakistan, most of the programmes are expected to be new and specially devised for the satellite channel.

Arts Gallery

AFTER years of painstaking effort, the Indian Arts Council in the UK now has a home at last. The Horizon Gallery, which opened last fortnight in central London, will henceforth aim to show the best of contemporary art and artists from the Indian subcontinent. The gallery, which is the first serious and sustained endeavour to provide a permanent place to artists from this region to show their work, will attempt to host 10 exhibitions each year, apart from seminars, workshops and other cultural events.

In his resounding inaugural speech, Balraj Khanna, the writer-painter, while requesting generous support for the gallery, said: "We call upon you all, we need you to become our sugar daddies, for we believe the Horizon Gallery has something to offer the world." The first artists to be featured by the gallery were the Switzerland-based painter, Prafull Dave and the sculptor Avatarjeet S. Dhanjal.

Prized Photo

A young Southall-based Gujarati girl is among the winners, announced last fortnight, of the highly-publicised Kodak black and white photograph awards for 1986. Twenty-two-year-old Godavri Gandhi won £1,000 (Rs 20,020), for the best printing award in the commercial-industrial category, for a picture taken by photographer Graham Slough.

Gandhi, who works for a photographic lab in west London, was the only Asian girl in the running for an award, and also the only woman photographic printer whose work was commended for its technical excellence. Other categories of awards included news, royalty, sports and advertising as well as fine art. The award-winners featured dailies like The Mail on Sunday, The Daily Mail and The Sun, and the panel of judges included, apart from well-known photographers, picture editors of some prominent newspapers. Gandhi, who is also quite a keen photographer, says she plans to invest her prize money in a better camera.

Gandhi (inset) and award-winning picture

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THE DIRTY DOZEN

The Laws of Government Waste

The sums are staggering. Every third rupee spent in the country is spent by some government department or the other. That's Rs 100,000 crore a year. And every fifth rupee out of that goes waste: Rs 20,000 crore a year, Rs 4 lakh down the drain every minute.

This is not a journalistic exaggeration but a figure suggested by the seniormost civil servants and the heads of some of the largest public sector corporations in the country. Indeed, some secretaries to the Government put the figure still higher. And though there is no way of arriving at a 'verifiable' figure, there is little doubt that the loss and waste are colossal. When governments in other countries take up 35 per cent or 40 per cent of the GNP, they provide efficient public services and admirable social security systems. In India, the Government has tried to take the lead in developmental tasks, but the commanding heights of the economy have become the demanding heights. And what is inescapable to even the untrained eye is the profligacy, the unnecessary proliferation of government offices, the bloated ranks of government servants (17 million—including public sector staff), and the corruption.

Cartoons by AJIT NINAN

All this constitutes waste: Rs 4,000 crore paid out as subsidies because of inefficiencies in the food, fertiliser and export sectors, the flab in manpower (Rs 4,000 crore would be saved if the Government and public sector could do with 10 per cent fewer employees), the cost over-runs on projects (Rs 25,000 crore so far on 264 major projects, which must mean an annual loss of Rs 2,500 crore), the Rs 2,500 crore losses incurred by Central and state public sector companies, plus the 'opportunity cost' of getting virtually no return on the Rs 50,000 crore invested in them (another Rs 5,000 crore), the fact that half to two-thirds of some categories of bank loans are never repaid, the hidden waste that must be there in the Rs 10,000 crore defence bill, the cream built into hardware contracts—the list can go on.

So when government expenditure seems out of control, it is time to take a hard look at the flab. Each item of waste cannot be listed, but there are some seemingly immutable 'laws' which offer an insight into the numerous ways in which public money is wasted.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Some departments are born wasteful, some achieve wastefulness, and some have waste thrust upon them.

LAW 1

1 COMMUNITY singing is a worthwhile objective, but should the Government promote it? Someone in the Government decided three years ago that it should. So tape recorders and recorded tapes were supplied to schools across the country. The objective: make community singing a mass movement, starting with schoolchildren. The Plan budget: Rs 25 lakh.

That's not a very large sum, especially when the governments in the country—at the Centre and in the states—spend as much virtually every minute. But every little bit adds up to make for the large deficits and large waste: like Rs 30 lakh spent on promoting scientific interest in youth, or Rs 90 lakh for promoting national integration, or Rs 6 crore spent on administrative tribunals that are non-functional, or Rs 50 crore supposedly spent on providing mini-kits to farmers to raise their productivity.

The Finance Ministry has spotted 150 such schemes in the budget that it feels need to be axed—including one for teaching farmers how to drive and use tractors. This may have had some relevance when tractors were first being introduced, but today?

The saving on these 150 schemes will be Rs 1,000 crore. But even that large sum is less than 2 per cent of the Central Government's annual expenditure. And even the Finance Ministry may not have cared to ask the kind of basic questions that—surprisingly enough—civil servants are prepared to consider. "Why should there be a large Agriculture Ministry at the Centre when agriculture is a state subject under the Constitution?", a senior secretary to the Government asked last fortnight. "Or somebody in Delhi monitoring a cotton crop programme that is being handled by the states?" Said another senior official: "Education is primarily the responsibility of the state governments, but the Centre has begun to take increasing charge of this, its bureaucracy goes as a result, but the bureaucracies in the states will continue unquestioned." The moral of the story: you can keep adding and multiplying departments one on top of the other at various levels, and each will do little more than create work for the other.

Or, for that matter, why should there be even a Department of Defence Supplies, which was created in 1965 to speed up the process of indigenising defence supplies? Last April, this is what Parliament's Public Accounts Committee (PAC) had to say about the department's labours: "The committee has reached the firm conclusion that the department....has not been able to achieve what was expected of it. Despite the fact that the department has been functioning for the past 20 years, it does not appear yet to have succeeded in establishing many reliable producers of defence stores and equipment....The failure is all the more disappointing in as much as the Government appears to have followed a liberal policy with regard to development expenses."

Logically, then, the PAC should have recommended that the department be wound up. Instead, it did something entirely predictable: it recommended that a 'high-level' committee be set up "to go into the entire question of indigenisation and production of defence stores".

Without any doubt, the committee—if it is ever set up—will be born wasteful in the same manner that the Department of Defence Supplies has acquired wastefulness, and in the same manner as the steel industry has the Government's waste thrust upon it. After all, flourishing steel industries in other countries make do without an Iron and Steel Controller's Office, a Joint Plant Committee (JPC), a Mineral Development Board, and in many cases even without a Department of Steel. But India must have them all, and more.

The Mineral Development Board is supposed to keep an eye on the country's mineral resources, but serves primarily as a burial ground for unwanted officials (two steel secretaries were shunted there, for instance).

The JPC is supposed to be a mechanism for fixing prices, and should have been an independent agent after steel prices were decontrolled five years ago. But it still proposes for the Government to dispose—which can as well be done by the producing companies without the JPC's involvement. But the JPC exists and collects Rs 5 per tonne of steel as a cess. Most of this money is not required, of course: the annual revenue of Rs 3 crore is more than twice the expenditure. So the JPC has invested over Rs 5 crore this year in the purchase of office buildings, flats and guest-houses—whose primary customers are government officials.

As for the Iron and Steel Controller's Office, it is based in Calcutta with six regional offices across the country, each headed by a senior officer belonging to the Indian Administrative Service and a total staff strength that runs into a few hundreds. There was a time when this office served a purpose: steel was in short supply and had to be rationed. But the situation in the market has changed, and it should be possible for producers and consumers of steel to deal with each other directly. Nevertheless the controller's office survives, and no new consumer can begin to claim steel from a producer without first getting its steel requirements vetted by the controller's office. But, of course, sanction from the controller's office for a certain amount of steel does not make the steel available if there is a shortage!

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

As for the Steel Ministry itself, it spends most of its time monitoring Steel Authority of India Ltd (SAIL), which spends most of its time monitoring the producing plants. The ministry—once a small, lean team—now has a secretary, an additional secretary, four joint secretaries, five directors, as many deputy secretaries and over a dozen under secretaries, plus a large collection of desk officers, section officers and supporting staff. Although the Steel Secretary, R.P. Khosla, reacted in mild surprise when asked why his department should not be wound up (saying it was a question of economic philosophy and calling the proposal 'Reaganite'), the general view in both SAIL and Tata Iron and Steel Company is that the industry will do better without the ministry.

The Government too can do without wasteful departments, equally unnecessary 'associated offices' and hair-brained schemes to promote community singing.

But the truth of the matter also is that the Government doesn't make the job easy. An exporter of fruit products listed last fortnight the various clearances he has to obtain from the Government, and the various forms he has to submit, before he can export a tin of mango pulp. And the list made impressive reading.

There was, to start with, the fruit products order certificate, followed by the invoice and the packing list. Then came something called the GR1 form, and a drawback statement (for claiming a refund of duty that may have been paid). After this came the B1 excise exemption bond, a Form N (for octroi exemption) and a Form H (for sales tax exemption). Then there was a declaration that had to be submitted on quality, value and specifications, followed by another declaration called DEEC: duty exemption entitlement certificate (which presumably means what it says). Finally, coming down the home straight, there was a declaration which had to be made stating that no separate duty rebate had been claimed. Altogether, there are 10 forms and filling them would test the stamina of any middle-distance runner.

The test for the marathon runner is the procedure for opening a hotel, because here there are 43 clearances to be obtained from 25 different authorities: urban land ceiling clearance, covered area and height clearance (from two separate authorities), drawing approval, water and electricity clearances plus a separate tubewell clearance, clearance from the inspector of lifts, clearance for boiler operation, clearance on weights and measures, liquor excise licence, permission for food production and so on.

Even the obtaining of a birth certificate can often mean endless running around, from the corporation authorities to the city magistrate and back. And often it seems that the Government is determined to use the taxpayer's money to harass the taxpayer in a series of very imaginative ways, so that the taxpayer then has to spend more time and money tackling the harassment.

It need hardly be said that at each point some money may have to change hands. Indeed, this may well be the objective in asking for so many clearances to be obtained.

At the end of it all, of course, the Government takes no responsibility for any of the clearances it has given. The exporter of fruit, for instance, has his quality attested by an inspector in Madras even though the fruit is being shipped from Bangalore via Bombay port. And if something goes wrong, the entire blame is on the exporter, not the inspector (who is merely doing his job, after all).

A programme expands to make complete use of the money available.

Forget the goal, it's the paperwork that counts.

LAW 2

2 WHEN Pranab Mukherjee was commerce minister and Abid Hussain commerce secretary, the minister suggested to his secretary that the country should be given the slogan 'Export or perish'. Hussain replied: "If you give Indians the choice, they would rather perish."

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

C. Northcote Parkinson discovered long ago that work expands to fill the time available. The Government has its own variation of Parkinson's law: its programmes expand to make full use of the money available.

Over a year ago, Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi was suddenly struck by his conscience, and decided to increase sharply the outlay on rural development programmes. Promptly, the Department of Rural Development opted for coloured, art-paper booklets—each costing close to Rs 500 though you would never have guessed it—chalking out the progress of various programmes; when the agriculture minister made an important speech on rural development, thousands of copies were promptly printed and distributed to all and sundry (the budget, after all, could accommodate all this). And hopefully, at the end of it all, the rural poor got some extra benefit.

Spending money is clearly not a problem for people in the Government, and during the Sixth Five Year Plan (1980-85), the joke in the Planning Commission was that if you wanted money for any project, the safest thing to do was to keep it out of the plan framework—because if it was in the plan there were serious financial constraints.

Thus, money was effortlessly provided for Maruti Udyog's investment of over Rs 200 crore, and for the Asian Games, which resulted in hundreds of crores being spent. Neither, of course, was a plan project.

As things turned out, however, the Asian Games was a major exercise in wasteful spending, freed as it was from the usual system of checks and balances that are supposed to regulate financial outlays. The audit report on the games project is replete with tales of financial misdemeanour and is strongly recommended for bedside reading. Even four years after the games, several of the flats in the Asiad Village complex are still lying vacant—with no tenants and no buyers—while a Rs 4.2 crore players' hostel that was to be converted into a five-star hotel was never finished in time and still lies unfinished. Already Rs 5.3 crore have been spent on it, another Rs 8.5 crore need to be spent, and no hotel chain wants to take charge of the complex as it is considered unviable. Now the proposal is to make the might-have-been hotel into a hospital to be run by a private company.

If these are examples of programmes rapidly expanding to make full use of funds that may or may not be there, there are also examples of funds disappearing into hidden pockets when the spenders are not able to spend enough. Thus, the financial year-end is traditionally a period of reckless spending in virtually every government department—because if the money is not spent by March 31 it lapses, and next year the department will be given less to spend.

This results in departments furiously ordering jeeps (because they are easily available) or, as in the case of a Rajasthan Government department once, some 45 motor-cycles. In Madhya Pradesh, departmental officials simply issue and encash cheques on March 31. In 1983, such transactions totalled Rs 45 crore on the last day of the financial year. The next year, when payments after March 15 were banned in order to prevent a recurrence, officials got around the problem by issuing bank drafts in advance and keeping them in their desk drawers—for pulling out and paying later, when the money was actually needed.

So whether the money is surplus, or the outlay has been suddenly increased, or even if the programme is outside the plan—spending the money is obviously not difficult. Spending someone else's money seldom is.

When in doubt, set up a committee.

Committees of 20 deliberate plenty Committees of 10 act now and then
But most jobs are done by committees of one (old rhyme).

Anyone who began counting the committees set up by the Government would have lost count ages ago. There are committees of 20, committees of 10 and committees of one (and some in between)—and most seem to do pretty little.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

There is, for instance, the Committee for Implementing Legal Aid Schemes under the Law Ministry, a Committee for Scientific and Technical Terminology, a Committee for Implementation of Hindi under the Railway Ministry besides a Committee on Official languages in the Home Ministry, a National Commission on Urbanisation separate from the Charles Correa-led committee to advise on urban development, a Major Ports Reforms Committee, and a joint communications and electronics committee. In energy there's the Energy Advisory Board, plus K.L. Puri (ex-chairman, Bharat Heavy Electricals) as a special officer to go into energy conservation, and also a conservation wing in the Energy Ministry.

The list can go on: Rajiv has an Economic Advisory Council apart from a Scientific Advisory Committee, a committee to celebrate Nehru's birth centenary and the 40th anniversary of Independence, and many others. Till recently he also had as an adviser L.K. Jha—who sometimes seems like a permanent one-man committee. The Programme Implementation Ministry has set up a committee of businessmen to advise on programme implementation, and the Planning Commission has a steering committee for transport planning.

Several committees and commissions, of course, get nowhere. For example, the Kudal Commission spent Rs 7 crore and five years to come up with inconsequential titbits on the Gandhi Peace Foundation. The committee to go into the affairs of the Bharat Sevak Samaj still continues, but the Sarkar Commission formed to look into the affairs of the Birla group was finally wound up after nine fruitless years. As for the various commissions of inquiry appointed with monotonous regularity to inquire into communal riots, no one has ever been convicted on the basis of the commissions' reports.

Sometimes committees are asked to look into commission reports (as is now the case with the Misra Commission).

No one knows how much these various commissions and committees have cost the Government, and whether the cost-benefit ratio works out at all reasonable. But it might be a good idea to set up a committee to find out.

Every bureaucrat rises beyond his level of incompetence.

LAW 5

5 LAURENCE J. Peter wrote some years ago: "In a hierarchy every employee tends to rise to his level of incompetence"—the Peter principle. But the Government is a special case: since seniority is the over-riding consideration, most employees tend to rise well beyond their level of incompetence.

The Government is a special case due to other factors as well. To start with, there is no stick or carrot. Whether the man works or not, he will get his increment at the year end. And he can't be fired; about the worst that can be done is to transfer someone, but even this is rare.

The confidential reports on individual performance that are prepared annually are, as a matter of fairness, shown to the official concerned if there are any adverse comments against him—so that he can defend himself. The result: few officers care to make adverse comments.

Finally, routine transfers are so frequent that an officer is rarely in place long enough to be identified as the culprit due to whom things went wrong. At the Vishakhapatnam steel plant, for instance, there have already been four managing directors.

It is a system tailor-made for mediocrity. With no proper checks and balances, everyone heads slowly for the top, and questions about levels of competence and incompetence fade into the background. The decisive factor, more often than not, is which service you belong to: some ensure a faster climb to the top, others stop short.

But whichever service it is, there is usually little mid-career training. The result: bankers talk of officials in the Finance Ministry sitting in judgement on projects without understanding concepts like discounted cash flow. And history students try to sit in judgement on the suitability of medical equipment being offered. And, most important, no one is penalised for sitting on his hands.

If a thing is worth doing, it is worth doing wastefully.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

LAW 6

When things go wrong, stonewall.

6 OCCASIONALLY, the Government gets caught, or is found out. A Kuo oil deal surfaces, or an Antulay's bluff about a private trust being a government trust is called. These and other cases of the Government losing money or being mulcted in different ways invariably end up with bureaucrats deciding to hang together in the face of external enquiry. Parliament is given obfuscating replies to questions, or fobbed off with the statement that information is being collected; and the Official Secrets Act is very conveniently thrown at the press.

Irregular bank loans are now said to total Rs 5,000 crore, but any information sought on the subject comes up against the standard response that a bank's relationship with its customers is confidential and that details cannot be disclosed. In another classic example, no final figure is available even today on how much was spent on the 1982 Asian Games and related activity; indeed, unsold tickets to the various sporting arenas were destroyed before a tally could be taken of how many tickets were in fact unsold.

LAW 7

7 GOVERNMENT money—public money—can be (and is) wasted in a hundred ingenious ways. A corporate headquarters is built at Rs 700 per sq.feet by the State Trading Corporation (more than double the normal cost), 12 irrigation projects in Uttar Pradesh's Sharda Sahayak canal system are modernised but achieve only 5 per cent of the irrigation potential, and 5,000 employees of the Hindustan Steelworks Construction Corporation have been idle for five years but nothing is being done about them.

There are some quaint examples too. Arunachal Pradesh, for instance, was carved out as a separate Union Territory in the early '70s. But although a new capital was built (Itanagar), part of the Arunachal Pradesh secretariat is still housed in a building in faraway Shillong, Meghalaya. And every morning, a mini-bus shuttles between Shillong and Itanagar, a distance of some 500 km, ferrying files and people.

Such examples can be multiplied. The director of education in Allahabad bought 22 bus chassis between 1980-81 and 1983-84 to ship girls to their schools and back. But no money was provided for fabricating bus bodies on the chassis, which therefore lay out in the open, in a state of disuse. Some money was eventually provided, starting from 1982-83, and 14 of the 22 chassis acquired bodies till 1985-86. One chassis bought in 1980-81 did not have a body fabricated till 1985-86, five years later.

Further afield, at Naraini in Banda district, a small women's hospital was sanctioned in 1979, a building hired and supporting staff posted in 1980. Till the end of 1981, however, no doctor was posted there, and the hospital was finally 'closed'. But the building and staff were retained.

On somewhat similar lines, a national fitness corps was once set up, with an annual recurring expenditure of Rs 6.43 crore. The corps was mercifully wound up, but the people in it were absorbed by the various state governments—and till today the Centre is paying for their costs.

Back in New Delhi, at the Indian Institute of Technology (IIT), the careful auditor will find dozens of expensive research equipment lying in their packing cases for years together. There is the case of Rs 2 crore worth of equipment that was paid for with Norwegian aid, bought five years ago and still unused—with a committee now investigating the matter. A commercial photon corelator (worth Rs 8 lakh), acquired with British aid, has been non-operational for five years.

If the situation in the IITs is bad, that in hospitals is worse. Estimates vary of the amount of medical equipment lying unused in government hospitals across the country: one says this alone is enough to fully equip 10 large, brand new hospitals, another says that 60 per cent of all the medical equipment in the country is not being serviced or is unserviceable, and a third estimates the value of unused equipment at Rs 100 crore.

The Karnataka health minister admitted once in the Assembly that several X-ray machines in the state were not being used as there were no trained technicians, while the 318 mobile dispensaries imported from Britain in 1980 for use in the National Rural Health Service are mostly not being used for the intended purpose. Their cost: Rs 19.3 crore.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

But the best example of its kind comes from Lucknow, where the economic intelligence and statistics division of the State Planning Institute decided it needed a computer to minimise the time needed for collecting data. The hiring of a computer was ordered in March 1973, but the supply firm failed to deliver for two years. The Department of Electronics in New Delhi then declared that this particular computer was obsolete, and in 1977 the import of a fresh computer was approved.

Time is money; more time is more money.

LAW 8

A tender was floated, none of the 15 applicants was found suitable and another tender was floated in 1979. In 1980 a Burroughs system was approved for Rs 49 lakh, but the boss of the statistics division could not agree with Burroughs on the terms of the contract. So in 1981 a Univac system was chosen instead, the agreements were signed in 1982 and delivery was to be in six months—with the installation site to be ready in advance. The computer arrived in 1983, and lay in Lucknow for 18 months, waiting for site modifications to be carried out.

The site building had, in fact, been cleared in 1975, and the building (with 3,000 square feet of space) and air-conditioning plant were handed over in 1978. Both lay unused till 1984, during which period Rs 30 lakh were spent on maintenance. And at installation time it was found that the building needed modification, which was done for Rs 14 lakh. But then the temperature and humidity control were not good enough, and the building—which by now had cost Rs 80 lakh—was found unsuitable.

Finally, the computer was installed. It was supposed to run for 22 hours a day, in three shifts. But till August 1985 (when the audit people took a look at the rigmarole), it was running just one shift, the cost of doing this was almost 20 times the revenue, and the data of only one government department was being fed into the computer.

TWO years ago, at his first press conference after becoming the prime minister, Rajiv Gandhi said that he would like his government to be known as the 'Government that works faster'. A Ministry for Programme Implementation was set up to monitor government projects—and timeliness seemed to count at last.

But now, the newly-created ministry reports that in the last 17 months alone 40 major public sector projects have "incurred additional delays up to 24 months". That seems an impossible feat, but the public sector is obviously on its own time machine.

The result: all 13 large projects in the steel sector are now delayed, two out of every three power projects are behind schedule, and more than half the petroleum and coal projects are also late. One coal project is late by 17 years (the prestigious Moonidih underground project), two steel projects are late by 11 years each (Bokaro and Bhilai expansion), the Haldia fertiliser project by 10 years, and a railway project by 12 years.

Time over-runs mean cost over-runs. A single day's delay in a super-thermal power project can mean a total loss of Rs 40 crore, and a day's delay in something like the Rs 6,000 crore Vishakhapatnam steel project can mean a loss of Rs 10 crore. So when large projects are delayed by many years, at a stretch, the cost is often incalculable.

Fertiliser and railway projects have ended up costing five times their projected cost, coal projects have seen a 750 per cent cost over-run, and power projects have multiplied tenfold in cost.

Such delays also lock up huge amounts of capital for long periods—without any return in terms of production. The total money locked up in 264 government projects is now a staggering Rs 65,000 crore, more than the total Seventh Plan allocation for the entire organised sector of industry. Of this, Rs 25,000 crore could have been saved if it were not for cost over-runs: enough to fully refund all the income-tax paid to the Government for the last 15 years.

Often, when the project is finally ready, the capital cost has gone so high that the company can never make money. In the case of the Vishakhapatnam steel project, the investment per tonne of production capacity will be more than Rs 20,000. Assuming that capacity utilisation will be around 65 per cent, the cost of interest charges, depreciation and other basic overheads alone will be Rs 7,000 per tonne—close to the price of steel. So whatever production costs the company incurs is a loss.

In short, the Government already knows that the Rs 6,000 crore invested in this 16-year-old project will be a financial write-off, that the plant cannot hope to make a profit, and that more public money will have to be spent every year to pay for the inevitable losses.

And Vishakhapatnam is not alone.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Five Reasons why customers in over 25 Countries trust Paharpur

Paharpur has become a name to be trusted in the fields of cooling towers, air cooled heat exchangers and woven plastic bags. Here are some of the reasons more and more people are seeking us out.

Innovation

A strong commitment to high technology and research & development has given us the ability to innovate when required.

Dynamism

A highly professional management, combined with strong leadership and respect for the individual, keeps us ahead of competition.

Excellence

Having the best and most integrated cooling tower manfacturing facilities in India or, for that matter, anywhere in the world (outside the United States) makes it easy for us to produce excellent cooling towers. The same excellence goes into our other products.

Culture

Integrity and shared values are reflected in the reputation we enjoy today. A culture which has taken almost 40 years to acquire and consolidate.

Reliability

Financial strength and an obsession for accuracy, quality and service make us a reliable company to deal with. One which will be around when many other have been forgotten.

All very simple. But very difficult to duplicate.

JETSETTERS/PCT/44/86

PAHARPUR MARLEY ©

The Best Value Cooling Tower Company

PAHARPUR COOLING TOWERS PVT. LTD.

8/1/B, Diamond Harbour Road, Calcutta—700 027, India
Phone 45-8956 (3 lines) Telex 21-3293 PCTC IN 21-3367 PCTS IN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

MR. KUNAL GHOSHAL OF ITC LTD. IS OVERJOYED WITH HIS COMPANY'S NEW UPTRON ELECTRONIC PABX.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

He looks quite delirious with joy, doesn't he? But before you jump to the wrong conclusions, we'd better explain how it happened.

One fine morning...

Uptron's Talkman II Electronic PABX made its debut at ITC Ltd., Virginia House, Calcutta (which is where Mr. Ghoshal works).

And nothing was the same again.

Calls came through like lightning. The operator was seen smiling and patting the console affectionately. People devised new ways of cradling the lightweight handset between their ear and shoulder while they used their hands to bend paper clips.

Before long, word spread like wildfire. Everyone, but everyone, wanted to know about this amazing new electronic PABX at ITC. And whenever anyone asked, they were told . . . .

"Ask Mr. Ghoshal. He chose Uptron."

The poor chap. He was inundated by calls—which were put through instantly by Talkman II. And each caller demanded everything they ever wanted to know about Talkman II—and were not afraid to ask. (Mr. Ghoshal wishes they were!).

Soon, Mr. Ghoshal was reduced to a sorry state. He'd shudder from head to toe at every gentle beep of the Talkman II. But the callers were most persistent. In desperation, Mr. Ghoshal contacted us. Although he swears undying allegiance to Talkman II, he wanted us to put this appeal in this ad. . .

If you want to know about the Talkman II, don't call Mr. Ghoshal. Ask Uptron.

Unlike the callers who harrassed Mr. Ghoshal, we will be brief. Here then, are the major features of the Talkman II Electronic PABX Systems:

- Line capacity of 24 to 240
- Direct outward dialling
- Call transfer
- Abbreviated dialling
- Conference facility
- Automatic call back
- Call forwarding
- Consultation hold
- Flexible station numbering
- Cost saving through the call monitoring system
- Conforms to P&T technical specifications

Uptron has entered into a technical collaboration with Jeumont Schneider—a leading international name in the field of telecommunications—for the manufacture of EPABX systems of a higher capacity, up to 5000 lines.

As of now, Uptron has already installed over 5,000 lines of the Talkman II in offices, hotels, hospitals and other institutions all over India. Backed up by Uptron's nationwide network of Service Centres and its years of expertise in the field of telecommunications. And those are only a few reasons why you should choose Talkman II. To know the whole story, get in touch with Uptron. And leave Mr. Ghoshal in peace !

UPTRON

Corporate Office, 10, Ashok Marg, Lucknow 226 001
Tel: 31371, 48131, 33964. Telex: 0535-320 UPLC IN

Sales Offices:
Bombay • Bangalore • Calcutta • Hyderabad • Lucknow • New Delhi • Madras

UPTRON'S ELECTRONIC PABX. INDIA'S MOST TALKED ABOUT COMMUNICATION SYSTEM.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

A reflection of your taste in excellence...
Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri
HINDON RIVER fabrics

Trendsetters in suitings and shirtings

Available at over 590 DCM retail stores around the country

DCM
TEXTILES

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THE trick is to make the grand announcement: a 5 or 10 per cent cut in all non-plan expenditure. It's been done in three of the last four years. Each time, the expenditure has gone up although endless questions are asked about travel bills, the fresh employment of peons is banned and circulars go around requesting people to switch the lights off when they are not in their rooms. Conscientious officials start using the flip side of used paper, and limits are placed on petrol consumption.

None of this, of course, will achieve very much—because it's like a housewife trying to save on cooking oil while the husband is at the race course. Besides, while peons may not be appointed on a permanent basis, they are often brought in as daily wagers. And attempts at curbing travel bills often impede efficiency—telephones, cars and travel are after all necessary to do one's work.

Rajiv has tried to improve on this. He set up the Kaul committee to locate surplus staff, and some 12,000 have thus been weeded out (which must rank as a considerable achievement). And now there is to be zero-based budgeting, which means every department must justify every programme each year.

But even now no economy drive has ever touched the spots where large savings are possible—which is not on the non-plan side but very much a part of five-year plan spending. All the effort that goes into a 5 per cent saving in non-plan administrative expenditure can be avoided and the same amount of money saved if one large industrial, power or irrigation project is handled well and completed on time, or if fertiliser is imported when prices are in a trough and not at their peak. And, of course, no questions are ever asked about defence, which swallows Rs 10,000 crore: every sixth rupee spent by the Central Government.

10 MILOVAN Djilas called them the 'New Class'—ministers and bureaucrats thrown up by a system of state capitalism, people who became more equal than others. They don't serve the system, the system serves them. Their salaries must go up faster than prices, indeed in some states (as in Kerala) their salary bill eats up virtually the state's entire tax revenue.

Yet the work they do is of another order altogether, as in the case of the tribal project officer at Manikpur in Uttar Pradesh's Banda district, who was charged with helping to rehabilitate freed bonded labourers. In the first two years (1979-80 and 1980-81), although close to Rs 2 lakh was spent on the project office, not a single bonded labourer was rehabilitated. And after three years of intermittent activity, once again no one was rehabilitated in 1984-85. Altogether, some 300 bonded labourers were rehabilitated during these six years (roughly one every week). And the administrative cost of doing this was Rs 6 lakh. The initial limit fixed for the assistance that could be given to each bonded labourer was Rs 2,000, and the administrative cost of the exercise also worked out to nearly Rs 2,000 per head. The programme, it might seem, existed for the project officer at Manikpur, not the project officer for the programme.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Such examples abound across the country: the Calcutta State Road Transport Corporation employs 25 people for every bus that it has on the road, the Calcutta Corporation spends 60 per cent of the revenue it collects paying the salaries of 36,000 employees, who are all part of the self-welfare state.

The state of the electricity boards is no better, provoking N. Tata Rao, chairman of the Andhra Pradesh State Electricity Board, to remark on one occasion to a particularly obtuse power minister that "power stations are not meant to provide employment, they are meant to provide power."

A former principal secretary in the Andhra Pradesh Government once calculated the cost to his government of getting one sheet of paper typed by a government typist. The figure worked out to around Rs 4.00—not counting the cost of the typewriter, office space and paper. Officials in New Delhi do similar sums and point out that a typist who gets paid Rs 1,500 a month and types six pages in a day (apparently the average in some offices) costs the Government Rs 10 per sheet of paper typed.

Higher up the bureaucratic ladder in Delhi, of course, the name of the game is not employment or typing sinecures but perquisites and forbidden fruit. In Udyog Bhavan—the massive government monolith that houses various ministries in New Delhi—almost every civil servant worth his salt has got some hapless public sector company to pay for his creature comforts: an air-conditioner in the office, or fancy carpeting, or a car for the memsahib. Some ministers get two private taxis on a daily basis, on a monthly cost of Rs 10,000, or Rs 1.2 lakh a year.

At the top of the hierarchy in the New Class, even officials' houses are furnished and fitted out by public sector companies. In one case a couple of years ago, the secretary in-charge of a ministry had his house furnished by a public sector company for Rs 80,000. When the official was transferred to another ministry, an administrative officer from the company had the temerity to ask the official for the return of the furniture. Promptly the official called the chairman of the undertaking and upbraided him, adding the warning that his minions should not misbehave with secretaries to the Government of India. The furniture was allowed to remain where it was.

Chief ministers are on their own trip, of course, as in the case of Madhya Pradesh's Motilal Vora, for whose benefit the state Government maintains a fleet of aircraft and helicopters. The expenditure on this has climbed 40 per cent in the last four years (from Rs 35 lakh to Rs 50 lakh), so that the daily cost to the exchequer of keeping Vora in the air is Rs 13,700.

rates, but a recent enquiry found that the approved rates for drinking water pipes were 30 to 40 per cent higher than the ruling market rates, and that the Government stood to lose Rs 10 crore. In the Delhi Development Authority contractors build four-storeyed buildings without any foundation—as in Kishenganj some time ago. The estimated fraud: Rs 10 crore.

In yet another notable case recently, the chairman and member (engineering) of the International Airports Authority of India were removed following detection of sub-standard work at the new Indira Gandhi International Airport terminal in New Delhi; the project cost went up from Rs 60 crore to Rs 110 crore.

The Central Bureau of Investigation (CBI) raids officials regularly, and last year it seized assets worth Rs 7 crore from 135 officials. As for the state electricity boards, while, on the one hand, they generate power at 30 to 40 per cent of capacity (and sometimes even less), on the other, their

If government money can be misappropriated, it will.

LAW 11

11 IT happens in practically every government department that one can think of: customs and excise, the income-tax office, the police, jails, the public works department, irrigation, the public sector banks, the Directorate-general of Supplies and Disposals (DGS&D)—any place where decisions of officials can make or mar fortunes.

The DGS&D is supposed to procure supplies at lower than normal market employees sell copper wiring in the market, or hold farmers to ransom by refusing power to their tubewells unless they are paid off. In parts of West Bengal, whole transmission towers disappear overnight.

None of this is new, and no reliable estimate exists of how much public money is misappropriated by malfeasant officials. Neither the CBI nor the vigilance outfit has managed to do anything more than scratch the surface. And neither the comptroller and auditor general nor the PAC has the time or the ability to go into anything other than a thin sampling of cases. As PAC Chairman E. Ayyapu Reddy says: "We leave a margin for lack of morality, what we are really concerned with is the ineffectiveness of government expenditure."

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

But the fact remains that corruption is the rule rather than the exception in several large areas of government functioning; and if the Government doesn't know it, those who deal with these departments do. Whether it is the beat constable's hafta or the chief engineer's cut on the contract, people are happier paying up rather than fighting it. In the process, if the Government is robbed of revenue or forced to spend additional money, so be it.

12 THE public sector makes money, a great deal of it. But that is because the Arab sheikhs have taken oil prices so high that the Government of India's numerous oil companies can also profit from these price levels. Indeed, it is the petro-rupee that keeps India's public sector somewhat shakily afloat. Without the oil, it would sink in a sea of red ink.

The Central Government alone has invested Rs 50,000 crore in the public sector, and the various state governments probably as much again. And great things are achieved with this money. Scooters India, for instance, manages to produce a scooter that costs Rs 22,000 and then sells it for Rs 10,500. The Uttar Pradesh Government undertaking Auto Tractors makes a tractor for Rs 2.25 lakh and sells it for Rs 64,000: it is cheaper not to produce anything at all. On a bus belonging to the Delhi Transport Corporation—whose entire share capital has been eaten up by losses—the fare will have to be raised to 250 per cent of its present level if the company is to stop losing Rs 190 crore a year. In the case of the Uttar Pradesh State Electricity Board, of course, the power tariff has already been raised thrice since January 1986 last year so as to cut the board's losses, but the losses remain.

Of some 100 companies run by the Central Government, roughly half lose money (over Rs 1,000 crore every year). And in the state Government sector, the figures are impossible to put together because dozens of companies have not finalised their accounts for years. Yet, the state electricity boards habitually lose money where the private sector doesn't, public sector transport corporations are perenially in the red while private operators do well, coal companies made a profit before nationalisation but have been incurring losses after take-over, and even trading outfits in the public sector manage to lose money.

The losses occur for a variety of reasons. The private sector Great Eastern Shipping Company has bought bulk carriers at a fraction of the cost that the public sector Shipping Corporation did. In the case of Cochin Shipyard, capacity utilisation was between 23 per cent and 35 per cent in the early '80s, so that idle man-hours remained high. Yet, overtime payments came to as much as 43 per cent of the salary bill in one year—proving the truth of the old maxim that time is money, especially overtime.

The moral of the story:

The Government is too big, and Big Government is inevitably wasteful. The Government must be trimmed, and things brought down to manageable size. And the Government must stop trying to do everything.

- Programmes must be self-limiting, and periodically reviewed to see if they still serve any purpose.
- Rules and regulations must be framed so that permission does not constantly have to be sought from the Government; if violators are promptly punished, the vast majority will automatically do what is expected of them—without the need for permits and paperwork.
- The economy has become too complex for physical control of economic activity to be effective. Such controls should be replaced with automatic fiscal controls.
- Project management must be improved, the right amount of money provided at the right time, and political compulsions in picking foreign collaborators, project sites and so on over-ridden by commercial factors.
- Sick industrial units must be closed, and severence benefits improved to make this politically feasible.
- There has to be a modicum of accountability at every step, and penalties for even delaying files.
- Government audit must be made more effective. At the moment thousands of audit objections go unanswered. Officials must be made to indemnify losses they have caused, or jailed (as in France) for extreme misdemeanour.

—T.N. NINAN with PALAKUNNATHU G. MATHAI and PRABHU CHAWLA
Reports were filed for this story from Lucknow, Bhopal, Calcutta and Delhi.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

CANARA BANK

Head Office : 112, J.C. Road, Bangalore-560 002

BALANCE SHEET AS AT 31ST DECEMBER, 1986
CONDENSED VERSION

AS AT 31-12-1985 Rs. in Crs.	CAPITAL & LIABILITIES	Rs. in Crs.
29.50	1. Capital	41.50
70.50	2. Reserve Fund & Other Reserves	120.00
5628.22	3. Deposits & Other Accounts	6818.39
530.72	4. Borrowings from Other Banking Companies, Agents etc.	597.19
84.98	5. Bills Payable	294.07
304.13	6. Bills for collection being bills receivable – As per Contra	341.84
324.16	7. Other Liabilities	301.21
644.53	8. Acceptances, endorsements & Other obligations per Contra	799.27
1.01	9. Profit & Loss Account	4.66
7617.75		9318.13

AS AT 31-12-1985 Rs. in Crs.	PROPERTY & ASSETS	Rs. in Crs.
679.67	1. Cash	921.54
259.43	2. Balances with Other Banks	115.98
10.00	3. Money at Call & short notice	–
1498.48	4. Investments	2153.52
3560.23	5. Advances	4168.40
304.13	6. Bills receivable being bills for collection – As per Contra	341.84
644.53	7. Constituent's liabilities for Acceptances, endorsements & other obligations per Contra	799.27
26.30	8. Premises less Depreciation (including Lease-holds)	37.81
31.00	9. Furniture and Fixtures less Depreciation	40.04
603.98	10. Other Assets	739.73
Negligible	11. Non Banking Assets acquired in satisfaction of claims	Negligible
7617.75		9318.13

PROFIT & LOSS ACCOUNT FOR THE YEAR ENDED 31ST DECEMBER, 1986

YEAR ENDED 31-12-1985 Rs. in Crs.	EXPENDITURE	Rs. in Crs.
391.01	1. Interest paid on Deposits, Borrowings etc.	493.34
124.51	2. Salaries and allowances, PF & Gratuity	137.04
0.01	3. Directors' & Local Committee Members' Fees & allowances	Negligible
17.17	4. Rent, Taxes, Insurance, Lighting etc.	21.93
0.11	5. Law charges	0.19
4.15	6. Postage, Telegrams and Stamps	4.27
0.48	7. Auditors' Fees & Travelling Expenses	0.68
6.58	8. Depreciation on and repairs to Bank's property	9.23
3.86	9. Stationery, Printing, Advertisements etc.	5.25
25.09	10. Other Expenditure	33.38
11.01	11. Balance of Profit	18.16
583.98		723.47

YEAR ENDED 31-12-1985 Rs. in Crs.	INCOME*	Rs. in Crs.
550.21	1. Interest and Discount	677.14
33.36	2. Commission, Exchange & Brokerage	45.86
0.03	3. Rents	0.03
0.01	4. Net Profit on sale of Investments, Gold & Silver, Land, Premises and Other Assets	0.03
–	5. Net profit on revaluation of Investments, Gold & Silver, Land, premises & Other Assets
Negligible	6. Income from Non Banking Assets
0.37	7. Other Receipts	0.41
583.98		723.47

* (Less : Provision made during the year for Bad & Doubtful Debts and other usual or necessary provisions)

PERFORMANCE HIGHLIGHTS

1. Gross profit increased by 32.72%. Net profit increased to Rs. 18.16 Crores from Rs. 11.01 Crores –
   THE HIGHEST AMONG ALL NATIONALISED BANKS.
2. Dividend paid to the Government of India rose from Rs. One Crore to Rs. 4.66 Crores –
   HIGHEST EVER PAID BY ANY OF THE 20 NATIONALISED BANKS
3. RESERVES – Rs. 120 Crores in 1986
   Increase in Reserves since nationalisation :
   Rs. 15 Crores in 13 Years (1969-1982)
   Rs. 55.5 Crores in 3 years (1982-1985)
   Rs. 49.5 Crores in 1 year (1986)
4. Growth in Aggregate Deposits – 21.1%
5. Growth in Advances – 17.06%

R K SWAMY/CB/2576 R

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SPARKLING ROW

THE international brouhaha over the Government's indirect partnership with South Africa's De Beers to promote diamond exports from India is now producing unexpected results. The controversy had been over the fact that the Bombay-based Hindustan Diamond Corporation (HDC) was a joint venture between the Government and the Bank of Bermuda, which is commonly believed to be a front organisation for De Beers, and that this partnership survived despite the Government's international campaign to economically isolate South Africa for its apartheid policies. Now the Bank of Bermuda has decided to pull out of HDC, and has informally sounded the Government out on the possibility of selling its shareholding in the company to a suitable party (which too could have indirect links with De Beers). Somewhat enigmatically, the Government of India has asked the bank to submit a formal proposal to that effect.

SHOPPING VENTURE

FOR those enchanted by the large shopping plazas and department stores of the west, there is now good news back home. Inter-Shoppe, armed with investment plans totalling Rs 5 crore, is planning to open modest versions of the original thing: Inter-Shoppe plazas in Delhi, Bombay and Madras. These will be places with a mini-environment of their own and provide a range of shopping items, eateries and relaxation areas. In order to get the project going, the Delhi-based clothing and export outfit is negotiating with a series of fast food chains, electronics goods manufacturers, jewellers, beauticians and leading vendors of sarees and cosmetics to come together under one roof, the first of which will be coming up fairly soon in Delhi. Discussions are already under way with Nirula's, Vichitra sarees, Ushnak Mal and Vijay Mallya, among others. Construction work has begun at posh Vasant Vihar in prestigious south Delhi and the four-storeyed structure, spread over 10,000 square feet, is expected to be complete by November.

SHAVING SWISH

THE Government has flatly turned down an application forwarded by Peico Electronics and Electricals, formerly Phillips India, to manufacture two lakh electric shavers annually. The Rs 1.02-crore venture was to have been established in a backward district in the Union territory of Goa. The Government has, however, ruled against the project on two accounts: electric shavers, they pointed out, are not open to companies that are covered by the Monopolies and Restrictive Trade Practices Act. And besides this, the import content is unacceptably high.

BRANCHING OUT

GRINDLAYS Bank is trying to furiously expand its area of operation. For one, the bank is readying to launch an ambitious $15 million (roughly Rs 19 crore) capital fund for non-resident Indians. The fund, which will be based in the Channel Islands, is slated to get off the ground in the next few months. After quickly building up a portfolio of close to Rs 100 crore, the bank has virtually kicked off a market for debentures by buying and selling them. The margins in the business hinge on the volumes, but the bank hopes to turn around funds more speedily in the process.

STRIKING CHANGE

THE last calendar year has turned out to be one of the most peaceful on the industrial front. The total number of man-days lost during 1986 on account of strikes and lock-outs was down by more than 30 per cent to 20 million. In fact, the loss on account of industrial strife has been falling steadily since 1982, when the figure reached 88 million because of the textile strike in Bombay. There was another hiccup in 1984 when 55 million man-days were lost. And there could well be trouble ahead, irrespective of the peace in 1986. The public sector trade unions are getting restive, and a fresh round of wage bargaining is round the corner.

Chart by B.K. SHARMA

TAKING STOCK

SWEEPING changes are in the offing for those who invest in shares. Apart from the much-promised watchdog agency to police the stock-markets, the Government has an "over-the-counter" (OTC) share market on its drawing-boards. OTC markets exist in several other countries, and are meant to provide a forum for trading in the stocks of companies that are not listed on the stock exchanges. Initially, they evolved abroad as informal arrangements, but a more formal structure is envisioned here. The Ministry of Finance has still to work out the details, but what seems likely is a subsidiary market to trade in the shares of listed companies.

Last year, new companies without proven track records rushed to enlist on the share markets because this offered them a tax advantage, but investors who bought their shares have found them quoting at or below par. The OTC market could offer one solution, especially if new firms are required to graduate from them to the regular stock exchanges.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

INDUSTRY

Shaken by Competition

MOVE over oligopoly, competition is here. Witness the signs. Markets as diverse as fertilisers and two-wheelers are in the throes of an unprecedented shake-out. Amidst a glut, cement, synthetic fibre, computer and copier companies have either cut prices or are offering discounts even as a host of television set, two-wheeler, car and light commercial vehicle manufacturers struggle to stay afloat.

And in some industries at least, small manufacturers are tumbling down like ninepins while the profit margins of the big boys have been pared. Reports S.R. Jiwarajka, president of the Indian Television Manufacturers' Association: "About 30 to 40 small television manufacturers have closed down, and the profitability of even large units has dropped to half that of last year's levels." So, after being at the receiving end for years in a seller's market, the consumer has got a look in for the first time.

The well-spring of the turmoil in the market-place is the Government's liberal approach to licensing production capacities. A few years ago, several big and small Indian businessmen feverishly applied for letters of intent, industrial licences and the other formalities of setting up shop. But the big rush is over. Today, unwilling to be corporate lemmings in a more competitive environment, many of them have developed cold feet. Official figures show that of the 7,442 letters of intent issued between 1980 and last October, firms have converted only 2,234 into industrial licences. As many as 1,324 have lapsed and a formidable 3,884 remain in limbo. The batting average is a very poor 31 per cent.

"If industry isn't implementing letters of intent, that's fine. Competition is here, and there's going to be sickness and mergers," says a cheerful Tarun Das, director-general of the Confederation of Engineering Industry, the engineering industry's apex representative body. But not everyone shares his happiness. Industrialists like Jiwarajka complain that the Government in its eagerness to open out the economy has gone overboard, and that the new ventures may have to be put in sick bay. But industry itself is divided on this. Says Blowplast Chairman Dilip Piramal: "The Indian industrialist does not like competition. Now that he has got a taste of it, he is clamouring for a return to the regulated Raj."

Both viewpoints have something going for them. The Government has been sanctioning production capacities in excess of the officially projected demand for products. In nylon filament yarn, for instance, capacities totalling 1.17 lakh tonnes have been permitted, against the seventh plan capacity target of 0.7 lakh tonnes. The story is repeated in other synthetic textiles (see chart). Licences to manufacture 40 million TV sets have been given to big and small alike, even though the demand by 1990 is officially pegged at six million. And the Industrial Development Bank of India said in a report to the Government last year that it had granted more than 50 licences for nearly 10 million electronic push-button phones: the demand at the end of the seventh plan is estimated at a mere two million.

Now, there are signs that officialdom has realised that it has dialled the wrong number. It has cancelled 15 licences for phone instruments. Last month, the Government also decided not to renew unimplemented letters of intent for TV sets.

But Piramal has a point when he suggests that some industrialists would prefer a protected regime. And the protection is sought under a variety of guises. Sections of the drug industry, for instance, aver that the Government's open door policy of 1985 on basic drugs will hit Indian companies in the industry. They want 143 items reserved for them. Television manufacturers too had led a long and finally abortive battle to prevent big business from entering the fray.

If nascent industries are feeling the pinch, the situation may well be worse in long-established sectors where the considerable investments involved make it difficult to cut losses and quit. In tyres, for example, manufacturers are hollering about over-capacity. Inevitably, many who had tyre projects on the anvil have either pulled out or have reconsidered. Reliance clinched a tyre project in Andhra Pradesh, only to pull out later. Larsen & Toubro has yet to implement a licence it has for tyres. "We will seriously consider not investing in expanding our capacity except to protect our existing investments to achieve economies of scale," says the vice-president of a major tyre company. He blames the Government for the crisis: "Who is going to buy all the tyres we make? What happened to all the official projections? The demand for light commercial vehicles was supposed to grow by "Premier Automobiles is not alone. The whole car industry is going through a bleak time."

VINOD DOSHI
chairman and managing director, Premier Automobiles Limited

"Nearly 40 small units have closed down, and the profits of large units have dropped to half of last year's levels."

S.R. JIWARAJKA
president, Indian Television Manufacturers' Association

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

15.7 per cent in the seventh plan. It is barely 8 per cent. In passenger cars, except Maruti there has been no growth."

The automobile sector has indeed come in for some battering. The commercial vehicles industry has hit a rough patch, especially the new entrants, and with Maruti king of the road, the other car outfits have been edged into the sidelanes. Premier Automobiles Limited (PAL) alone has witnessed a 50 per cent drop in demand over the past few months. Says the company's Chairman and Managing Director Vinod Doshi: "Premier is not alone. The whole industry is going through a bleak time." Indeed, a few months ago Premier launched a subsidiary called PAL Hire Purchase and is offering its vehicles in instalments to buyers.

Two-wheelers are in an equal mess. Market leader Bajaj Auto has seen the waiting list for its vehicles dwindle from three years, some years ago, to a bare three months now. And industry sources claim that some of the new stars, such as TVS Ind-Suzuki, have found the demand for their vehicles levelling off. Many of the smaller among the 40-odd units are already on their last legs, having failed to cope with the front-runners in quality. "The numbers will get whittled down soon," predicts Rahul Bajaj.

The small-will-perish motif is being repeated in the drug industry too. The delicensing announced in 1985 could take a toll of the Indian small sector. Reason: whopping capacities have been created and prices have dipped. The figures tell the story eloquently. An astonishing 1,674 tonnes capacity exists in ampicillin as against the seventh plan target of 580 tonnes. So against a government-ordained maximum price of Rs 1,850 per kg of ampicillin, the going market rate is Rs 1,600. Forecasts Indian Drug Manufacturers' Association General Secretary G.G. Nair: "Only the big will survive in the end."

BUT being big is not an automatic passport to success. Many cement companies, long kept in the doldrums by the artificially low prices set by the Government, are now facing a further crunch after a brief period of prosperity following the 1982 dual pricing policy. The Government had revised prices, but the industry claims that inflation has eaten into profit margins yet again. Whatever premiums existed in the market have disappeared and cement is now available off the shelf. The result: entrepreneurs are simply not investing more money in the industry.

But, most cement and fertiliser men reckon that demand will burgeon in the years ahead. So, in a sense, both the industries are the odd men out in the overall dim scenario. Still, imports and two successive droughts have combined to bring about a fertiliser glut. "There are severe glut conditions in the market forcing manufacturers to offer margins (discounts) much in excess of allowable limits," notes the Fertiliser Association of India.

Chart by B.K. SHARMA

In man-made fibres too, units have been producing much below capacity or allowing stocks to pile up. In 1985 there were only five units producing polyester staple fibre with a total capacity of 54,000 tonnes. This year, the figure is expected to climb to 2.14 lakh tonnes, more than double the demand, and to a further 3.1 lakh tonnes by 1990. This is mirrored in other synthetic fibre sectors too, and the not unexpected upshot is price drops. Partially oriented yarn prices, for instance, were quoted at Rs 182 in March 1985 but are a bare Rs 154 today.

So the evidence of competition in the market is compelling. But there are sceptics too who point out that the competition has not been sweeping, and that price-tags have not been cut for products like television sets and two-wheelers. They are only too right, but in several cases this is due to products depending on imported components, the bill for which has soared along with foreign currencies.

Many other questions beg answers here. For one, why did firms leap into markets without noting the competition? More to the point, why did the Government clear such hefty production capacities? The answer to the first may well be that the signals were not as clear then as they are now. And, as Piramal argues: "Companies are often just keeping their options open."

Equally clearly, the Government suspects that much of the capacities will not eventually be translated into factories on the ground. "Such a large number of unimplemented letters of intent makes me wonder whether they are obtained for the purpose of setting up projects or for pre-empting competitors from entering the field," Industry Minister J. Vengala Rao told his counterparts in the states at a recent meeting in the capital. Last fortnight, a senior government official echoed the argument: "There are over 40 licencees for two-wheelers but effectively there are only eight or nine of them." He also privately conceded that the official demand figures could be wrong, and contended that supply creates its own demand. "The demand for polyester is going up. No one thought that there would be such a demand for man-made fabrics." But the official case rests on one simple clinching argument: "Over-capacity is good. The consumer has a choice."

He may be right—in the long run. Over the short haul, more upheavals and a painful restructuring of the market seem inevitable.

—PALAKUNNATHU G. MATHAI
and PARTHASARATHI SWAMI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

RELIANCE

Excess Trouble

THE Reliance Industries management must have known that the bad news was coming. In late December, customs officials accompanied by technical experts had come calling at the company's polyester yarn plant at Patalganga, in Maharashtra, and had then come calling a second time three days later. The Reliance project manager knew what the officials had said in their report—they had made him countersign their findings (though he put in a note of protest).

So when the bad news finally came on February 10—in the form of a show cause notice demanding a staggering Rs 120 crore as customs duty—the Reliance management couldn't have been surprised. Asked to present its side of the case within 15 days, the company promptly submitted a detailed rebuttal charging the customs authorities with confusing technical issues and pointing out that the Industry Ministry itself had earlier cleared the company of the charges contained in the customs show cause notice.

The notice virtually takes off from a charge aired six months ago in the Indian Express—that Reliance had 'smuggled' in a plant worth Rs 100 crore, evading customs duty and violating licensing norms. But it remained unclear whether the company and its promoters, the Ambani family, were in serious trouble or whether overzealous officials had misread the situation and were pressing with a charge that could not be unsubstantiated. In a worst case scenario (as some publications suggested), the Ambanis could be arrested and the company's machinery could be impounded (as the show cause notice threatens to do). Industrialists have been arrested for smaller misdemeanours. But the mood in the Reliance camp showed little worry on either score.

Before the customs officials got into the act, the Government had put together a technical committee of experts drawn from three public sector companies. This team had inspected the Reliance plant for evidence of what Indian Express had charged, and come to the conclusion that the number of spinning machines was not the licensed eight but 12. The company denied this, and the Industry Ministry seemed to go along with this denial when it decided, after going through the technical committee's report and other papers, that Reliance was not guilty of either installing excess capacity or of smuggling anything into the country without the knowledge of the customs department. But the Finance Ministry apparently remained undeterred, and its officials even went abroad to ask questions of Reliance's collaborators, E.I. du Pont De Nemours. Informed sources said last fortnight that the officials drew a blank.

Patalganga plant: a question of capacity

The essence of the customs case is that Reliance imported equipment well in excess of what it had been permitted to, and that instead of having eight spinning machines with a total capacity to manufacture 25,000 tonnes of polyester yarn, the company had 12 machines with at least 55,000 tonnes capacity. The customs department, in fact, used three different methods to work out the production capacity, and all three came to more than 55,000 tonnes. The polymerisation capacity, for instance, is worked out to be 55,440 tonnes—using polymer production rates recorded in the factory log book.

The Industry Ministry, in contrast, had concluded that the capacity could not be in excess of 29,000 tonnes, that higher tonnage could be achieved by producing yarn of higher deniers and that all yarn manufacturers in fact did precisely this. It concluded that this practice did not mean any violation of licensing norms. The company in turn has maintained that four of its eight machines have been split "to suit layout requirements", thus making for 12 units. It contends that some of these machines had been declared as components (because they formed part of used machinery bought on an 'as is where is' basis) and that customs duty had been paid on them.

Mukesh

Dhirubhai

Anil

If the customs facts stand, the notice for evasion of a Rs 120-crore duty in importing the Patalganga plant can land the Ambanis in trouble.

Nevertheless, the customs show cause notice concludes: "Reliance appears to have unauthorisedly imported four additional spinning machines...in a clandestine manner and without payment of customs duty on these machines." The four machines are valued at Rs 53.02 crore, and the total customs duty demand is for Rs 119.64 crore.

Inevitably, the Reliance share, which had been climbing steadily after bottoming out in late November, took a sudden dip ,once again. And the key question was whether both the share and the company would recover from the shock treatment meted out last fortnight by the customs department.

—T.N. NINAN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

If this uniform material stands the strain of marching, everyday

It has to have the best quality yarn.
It has to be

Entyce®

Reflects good taste. At affordable prices.

'Entyce' fabrics include a variety of uniform material. In cotton, blends and polyester.
'Entyce' uniform fabrics are produced on the most modern machinery with sophisticated technology and rigorous quality tests at every stage.
'Entyce' is the most used uniform fabric by quality conscious users like Defence Services, Transport Corporations, Police, P & T, Air India, Indian Airlines, BHEL, IOC, BPCL, ONGC, IPCL, BEL and several industries and almost all leading educational institutions, specially in Polyester blended fabrics.

However small the requirement may be, 'Entyce' offers a choice of fabrics and material.

MCA/NTC/119

national textile corporation (TAMIL NADU & PONDICHERRY) LTD.
A GOVERNMENT OF INDIA ENTERPRISE

10/64 SOMASUNDARAM MILLS RD, COIMBATORE 641009
TELEPHONE: 37665 (5 LINES) TELEX: ENTYCE-CB 345

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Fashion forecast is now being broadcast.
Dinesh Suitings.
In comfortable high-quality wool and blends.
From pin-stripes to weaves,
from subtle checks to herringbones,
the focus is on the textures, shades
and the fall of the fabric.
So while Tejeshwar Singh reads the news
Dinesh designs make the headlines!

dinesh
Worsted Suitings

Woolmark
Pure New Wool Suitings

everest/86/SDM/519 R

Designs programmed for fashion.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SUCCESSFULLY HYATT.

At Hyatt Regency Delhi, the clock ticks to the rhythm of quiet efficiency. You could synchronise your plans to the precision of its facilities, ready to work at your fingertips.

Push button contact with the Hyatt Business Centre. An impressive portfolio of conference services. The luxury of well-appointed rooms and suites. And satisfying conclusions to every business meet.

It's the reassurance of knowing that time has been productive. And it's Hyatt's successful touch you'll want to come back for, again.

Don't you WISH YOU WERE HERE℠

HYATT REGENCY DELHI

INDIA

Reservations: Call the hotel 609911. Telex: 031-62779, 031-61512 HYT IN
Or Sales & Reservation office at Bombay. Telephone: 244578, 244579
Telex: 011-2818 SUBH IN

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Modern Times from CITIZEN

MEN'S DRESS CIRCLE TIMEPIECES FROM CITIZEN'S QUARTZ TECHNOLOGY

Futuristic cities gleaming in steel and glass. Highways stretching endlessly. These are modern times. Dynamic times that drive men to ever greater heights of achievement.

It's a spirit boldly captured by our Citizen quartz timepieces. Only the world's first quartz movement less than 1mm thin can give you such streamlined bodies. Such handsome faces. And an accuracy within seconds a month.

Dress Circle by Citizen for men. Style in keeping with these modern times.

CITIZEN

CITIZEN IS A REGISTERED TRADEMARK OF CITIZEN WATCH CO., JAPAN

Available at Duty Free Shops in India (Delhi, Bombay, Calcutta, Madras and Trivandrum).

Supported by the largest number of service centres in India:

■ Bombay: Crown Watch Corporation, 98 Heera Panna Shopping Centre, Haji Ali, Bombay 400 026. • 16/18 Abdul Rehman Street, Bombay 400 003. ■ New Delhi: Amarson Watch Co., 10-C Connaught Place, New Delhi 110 001. • 71 Janpath, New Delhi 110 001. ■ Cochin: Cochin Kiosk, Cochin Harbour, P.B. No. 2582, Broadway, Ernakuram, Cochin 682 031. ■ Madras: Doshi & Doshi, 3 Blackers Road, Next to Casino Theatre, Mount Road, Madras 600 002. • 28 Devaraja Mudali Street, Park Town, Madras 600 003. • 116 Royapettah, High Road, Mylapore, Madras 600 004.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

For information only

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

DRUG POLICY

Ill Winds

FOR almost four years, the industry had waited for a new drug policy. It was finally unveiled two months ago. Today the industry still waits for the policy.

Weeks after the Government wrote out a liberal new prescription for the pharmaceutical industry, companies round the country still don't know where they stand because so many loose ends remain to be tied. And contradictory interpretations of key aspects of the policy abound. Drug prices will rise, but by how much? Which drugs will come under price control, and which will be set free? Nobody has clear answers.

As Harish Chawla, Cipla's director for corporate affairs, puts it: "This is not a policy but a declaration of intent. A number of things have not been spelled out." Even those who back the new policy join the chorus of criticism. Says J.S. Khambata, president and managing director of Glaxo: "A number of aspects have not been touched upon and clarification is required."

This is a sorry finale to four years of effort that saw one committee after another being appointed in the attempt to rewrite the last drug policy, finalised in 1978. More than two years ago, a committee set up by the now defunct National Drugs and Pharmaceuticals Development Council cobbled together a set of controversial recommendations (INDIA TODAY, October 15, 1984). When a storm followed, the committee's report was quietly buried. This was followed by yet another expert committee to work on alternative proposals. It came up with a policy draft which the Cabinet sent back at least four times. Finally, a broad-sweep policy statement was hastily issued to the press last December.

But this has only sparked off a fresh round of questions and committees. For instance, a seven-member committee is now looking into the key question of which drugs should be on the price-control list. Argued an exasperated Dilip Shah, director of Pfizer: "There is no need for the committee. A lot of the hard work has already been done."

About the only thing that anyone agrees on is that a new drug policy was needed: the 1978 policy was just not achieving the intended results. Priority drugs were sought to be made cheap, so mark-ups (which include trade margins, promotional costs and manufacturers' profits) were kept low. The result: companies concentrated on the more profitable non-priority end of the market. In the five years between 1978-79 and 1983-84, industry sales of drugs with the lowest price mark-up actually dipped (see chart), while sales of drugs for which the Government permits higher mark-ups grew by between 25 and 30 per cent.

The industry's profitability also nose-dived, and many started diversifying out of pharmaceuticals. Said Chandrakant I. Gandhi, till recently president of the Indian Drug Manufacturers Association (IDMA), which represents fully Indian-owned firms: "The profitability of companies producing only drugs without diversifying into other areas has been going down consistently." Finally, officialdom simply could not police the prices of the 347 bulk drugs and over 4,000 formulations that now fall in the price-control basket.

The Government's remedy for all this is the new policy. Its highlights include promises of a slimmer price control list; fatter incentives to produce price-controlled drugs; a National Drug and Pharmaceutical Authority to oversee the industry; tighter norms on exactly how much of the downstream formulations companies can manufacture in proportion to the upstream bulk drugs; and virtual permission to manufacture new drugs without seeking a licence, subject to certain conditions.

All this only raises several unsettling questions. For instance, will the National Drug and Pharmaceutical Authority have teeth or will it, like a similar high-powered body in the Health Ministry, remain a paper tiger? Since drugs used to treat common diseases—diarrhoea, malaria, and the like—will be under price control, does it mean that most antibiotics will be affected? Everyone has his own theory. Manufacturers are equally in the dark on how the new mark-ups will be calculated. Complains Pfizer's Shah: "The policy is totally silent on trade margins (which can run up to a hefty 23 per cent)."

Small units with turnovers of under Rs 50 lakh are currently exempt from price control, but the

"This is not a policy but a declaration of intent. A number of things have not been spelled out."

HARISH CHAWLA
director, corporate affairs, Cipla

"The committee could perhaps have been set up earlier, but the announcement of the measures would have been delayed."

K.R. JAICHANDRA SINGH minister of state chemicals and petrochemicals

Chart by B.K. SHARMA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

new policy does not say whether they will continue to enjoy this advantage. Small-scale drug companies are also worried by the implications of some other steps proposed, which might result in big companies ceasing to buy bulk drugs from them. Charged Lalit Kumar Jain, vice-president of the Indian Small Scale Manufacturers' Association (Bulk Drugs): "The Government has forgotten that some 800 small units in the country produce only bulk drugs. They will be wiped out."

Then, cost data are vital for implementing some aspects of the policy. But with price decontrol on the cards, there could be problems in getting accurate data. Argues Cipla's Chawla: "The Government is expanding the price decontrol basket. How can it determine the ex-factory cost of a decontrolled drug? Companies do not have to report cost data for these and can inflate their ex-factory cost." For good measure, some of the 94 drugs which the Government delicensed in 1985 don't meet the new norms for delicensing.

Why then did the Government not foresee this daunting array of questions before releasing its policy statement? Minister of State for Chemicals and Petrochemicals K.R. Jaichandra Singh, under whose jurisdiction the industry falls, however insists that the policy has all the answers. Says the minister: "We have mentioned everything in the policy. The committee to draw up the list of essential drugs could perhaps have been set up earlier, but the announcement of the new measures would have been delayed further."

Singh clarifies that some of the details relating to the new drug authority have yet to be worked out, that the new mark-ups will include trade margins although packaging costs may be judged by fresh standards, and that small firms will continue to be exempt from price control. Moreover, he says, the list of delicensed drugs is flexible, and the Government will trust the industry for cost data on amounts up to Rs 10 crore. "We feel that the time has come to leave it to the manufacturers. If companies don't behave we will come down heavily on them," warns Singh.

The industry may welcome that approach, but whether the new prescriptions will work is the big question. Last fortnight, there were no clear answers because the prescriptions themselves seemed indecipherable.

—PALAKUNNATHU G. MATHAI with PARTHASARATHI SWAMI

DOORDARSHAN

Ad Matter

WHEN a Rs 100-crore monopoly business decides to up the ante sharply, you can expect its customers to scream. And if the screams are loud enough, even a monopoly outfit might deign to listen.

Doordarshan listened last fortnight: Two months after announcing a hike in advertisement rates of between 50 and 100 per cent, the Government-run monopoly house finally yielded ground and rolled the tariff rates back by about 20 per cent for all but prime-time slots.

The advertisers are somewhat mollified. But the new rates have forced a revision of calculations throughout a shaken advertising world. Under the new rates, 10 second spots will now cost Rs 70,000, instead of the old Rs 40,000.

Doordarshan has its arguments clear. The number of televisions in India has risen from 6 million to 9 million in less than two years, and the viewing public is estimated at 45 million. No other advertising medium can obviously hope to rival this reach.

Advertising agencies have known this perfectly well and calculated that TV was the cheapest medium on the basis of 'cost per contact'. Advertising bosses like Sam Balsara of Mudra feel that the hike was justified and, based on likely viewership, remained cost-effective.

Doordarshan Director-General Bhaskar Ghose says there were other compulsions: "There was inhuman pressure for prime-time slots. So we decided to make the national network and prime-time less attractive, and divert advertisers to other kendras and areas which are not doing so well." Result: the new rates have been tailored to make the regional networks more attractive. Also, the telecast price for each sponsored programme has been doubled (to Rs 1.5 lakh), and the amount of free advertising on a half-hour sponsored programme slashed from 90 seconds to 60 seconds. Finally, since ad agencies book time and then hawk this to genuine advertisers, bookings can now on be made only for brand names, not for ad agencies.

But the ones who will be hit by the changes will be the Davids of the commercial world. Says Vishwanath Iyer, director of Creative Unit: "Like Indian Airlines, Doordarshan too will be creating two classes of advertisers: those who can afford executive class, and those who must settle for economy."

The print media is the most likely to benefit as some advertising shifts away from the tube. Advertising chiefs like Arun Nanda of Rediffusion say that they are now re-examining the cost efficacy of TV as opposed to other media. And advertisers are doing the same. Ernest Fernandes, general manager (marketing) of Tata Oil Mills says that over half the company's budget in 1985 was on TV, but this "will naturally go down and the print budget will go up 10 to 15 per cent." Adds Parle boss Ramesh Chauhan: "TV will remain important, but we will have to diversify." Firms are also considering shorter ads—10-or-20 second spots instead of the standard 30 second ones.

Chart by B.K. SHARMA

But Doordarshan may finally succeed in pushing advertising to the regional kendras. Agencies like Clarion are already taking a new look at regional television with the idea of producing regional programmes.

For good measure, Doordarshan is also putting an end to the sponsorship of sports and film-based programmes—both commercial jackpots. Ghose says this is because a few big advertisers grab such sponsorships, and Doordarshan would like to be more than a commissioning agent for time, and to produce more programmes of its own. Nevertheless some things are not likely to change. Doordarshan, for instance, will almost certainly remain the biggest merchant of soap.

—MADHU JAIN and PARTHASARATHI SWAMI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

We'll deliver. Wherever on earth. SKYPAK The worldwide couriers.
Skypak House, Off M. Vasanji Road, Marol Naka, Andheri (E), Bombay 400 059.

Avenues SC 323.81

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

LET'S TAKEF
LET'S TAKE SER

-6518

Tyre Service Centres. Once a concept. Now a burgeoning reality. A unique marketing innovation. Service that says "We Care". A first from Dunlop.

Hardly surprising from a Company that has a plethora of firsts to its name.

Dunlop. First tyre and rubber company to establish operations in India in 1898.

First to make tyres for aircraft, and still the only one. First to manufacture extra-large earthmover tyres in India. First to manufacture hi-tech steel cord belting in India.

First to get a radial tyre approved for fitment on the Maruti. And the Standard 2000. First to introduce nylon two-wheeler tyres. The list goes on.... Dunlop the largest tyre and rubber company. Where innovation is a way of life.

Dunlop. Started first. Remains first.

DUNLOP

DUNLOP TYRE SERVICE CENTRE

KEFIRSTS SERVICE CENTRES

Dunlop is Dunlop. Always ahead.

Wear a work of art.

1200 of the world's latest styles; each a limited edition. Formals, casuals, party shirts... all at NEWMAN

NEWMAN

NEWMAN
SHIRTS AND TROUSERS

1200 originals in the next 12 months

Available only in New Delhi at Newman's exclusive showrooms:
278 Patiala Bazar, Connaught Place • Mahajan House, South Extension Part II • 2404 Hardhyan Singh Road, Karol Bagh.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

TELEPHONES

Wrong Number

IN 1979, the public sector Indian Telephone Industries (ITI) drew up a grand plan to modernise India's telephone instruments and signed a deal to produce, every year, a million modern, light-weight, cost-effective telephone instruments. Now, eight years later, the Rs 24-crore deal with Face Standard—the Italian subsidiary of American telecom giant, International Telephone and Telegraph Corporation (ITT)—has yet to result in a single instrument being added to the national network. Instead, there have been fundamental problems of quality that threatened at one stage, to blow up in everyone's face.

For the last 10 months, 1.05 lakh instrument kits imported from Face Standard for assembly in India, have been lying with ITI, fully paid for but unusable, because samples taken for testing have failed to meet the stipulated quality requirements. Another 95,000 kits are lying in customs warehouses at Bombay and Madras, with ITI refusing to clear them because of the quality deadlock. The kits, worth Rs 6 crore, may finally be salvaged following a last-minute deal with ITT last fortnight, but it provides a cautionary tale.

The instruments were rejected by the Telecommunication Research Centre (TRC), the research arm of the Department of Telecommunications, on three counts: the 'drop test', poor voice transmission efficiency, and no proper rubber shoes that are meant to help grip the surface on which the instrument rests.

In the first of these tests, an instrument is dropped nine times from a height of one metre, to see whether it breaks and whether components get dislodged. But the mould chipped on a corner, and the performance parameters changed.

The general level of transmission efficiency of the Face instrument was also not up to the required standard. A second attempt to pass the quality standards also failed, and the Department of Telecommunications dug in its feet.

ITI tried somewhat desperately, to get the department to relax the specifications on a one-time basis. And ITI Chairman K.P.P. Nambiar explained last fortnight, that Indian standards and quality tests were either too stringent or not the same as those used abroad. Says he: "These same instruments have been sold all over Europe, and there isn't a problem. And they are better than anything currently manufactured here." Added another technical expert: "Nowhere in the world is an instrument dropped from a height of one metre to check its strength. The quality standard tests are far too stringent."

But the department refused to yield. "Initially, any manufacturer will try to press for the sale of his product. It is for the customer to be firm," said V.M. Sundaram, member (technical development) of the department. "We will not relent on the quality criteria. We cannot accept the instrument in that form." Added another senior official: "If we had relaxed the conditions, we would have had two lakh subscribers complaining of poor instruments." Other department officials explained: "We are not asking for design modifications. We only want an improvement in the technique of quality control in production."

Face Standard Telephone: rejected

Though eight years have gone by since the signing of the Rs 24-crore deal with Face Standard, not a single telephone instrument has been added to the country's national network.

Eventually, Face Standard has agreed to make amends. The company—recently acquired by the French group Alcatel—has agreed to reinforce the mould of the instrument, but is not willing to change the transmission capsule, as this will not be an economically viable proposition. But Nambiar claimed that even the transducers would be changed so that the transmission problem was taken care of, and that all this was being done free of cost. "I don't know what the fuss is about. This is a normal commercial problem, and it has been sorted out," he added.

This amazing telephone tale has ended up with other wrong numbers too. The initial contract was for rotary dial instruments that were not fully electronic. Indeed, the argument was that a fully electronic instrument was unsuited for India. The battle over this issue raged between the departments of telecommunications and electronics for four years, so that the deal was finally approved by the Government only in 1983.

That is when the TRC chose to revise the specifications of the instrument desired. The ITT model did not conform to the new requirements. In 1984, it was decided that there was no point in continuing with the rotary dial alone, so ITI would now split the annual production of a million instruments into two equal halves: five lakh push-button, and as many rotary. In 1985, the earlier contract with ITT was extended to electronic telephone instruments as well.

Then the Department of Telecommunications—which had at one stage resisted the move to introduce push-button instruments—decided to make these 75 per cent of the total production. And now, using the impasse over quality, the rotary dial instrument is being given up so that only push-button, electronic instruments will be produced.

But at the end of an eight-year-old story, there will still be doubting Thomases who will wait till the instruments are actually delivered to the customer.

—TANIA MIDHA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

TAX RAIDS

Smoke and Fire

THERE is life—and raids—after V.P. Singh. Last fortnight, the Government pounded home that message to the cigarette industry. In a headline-grabbing raid, nearly 500 tax officials swooped down on the offices and factories of tobacco giant ITC and 90 of the company's wholesale dealers, and hauled away some 5,000 files and documents.

Simultaneously, the Finance Ministry's Department of Revenue Intelligence (DRI), has served a notice to the Sanjay Dalmia-owned GTC Industries, alleging excise evasion of over Rs 40 crore and an evasion of Rs 91 crore by New Tobacco Company. Both denied the allegations, but the latest offensive clearly signals a hardening of official suspicions that tax evasion is rampant in the industry—one official even put the figure at over Rs 300 crore annually, and by the official count, ITC's tax dues right now, could total Rs 116 crore.

ITC was the biggest target, and local tax officials came to know of their targets only on the morning of the raid: over 20 sealed envelopes containing a list of company premises to be raided, and a 34-point check list, were despatched by air from Delhi to Calcutta, Bangalore, Patna, Bombay and Hyderabad.

So ITC executives who arrived for work at Virginia House in Calcutta, found the excise men waiting for them. Company Chairman Jagdish Sapru himself was questioned about ITC's cigarette division. The files of the division were impounded, and the 10-member ITC board had to cancel a scheduled trip to the company's factory in Bihar. Sapru soon flew to the capital to meet Finance Ministry officials.

The tax men claimed to have struck paydirt. Affirms B.V. Kumar, director-general of revenue intelligence: "Our preliminary reports and investigations have confirmed that we were right on the mark." Specifically, the Finance Ministry's investigative wing maintained that ITC had encouraged its dealers to charge smokers more than the price printed on cigarette packets, and that it circulated a separate "effective price list" for this purpose.

Moreover, claimed the DRI, the difference between the two prices was funnelled back to the company, through a complicated system of compulsory deposits that wholesalers had to maintain with the company, and dealers had admitted as much. Alleged a tax official: "If a stockist bought cigarettes worth Rs 1 lakh, Rs 80,000 was credited to the deposit. Only Rs 20,000 was shown as payment." Dealers were charged 18 per cent interest on their outstandings, while they were paid 9 per cent on their deposits. The deposits now total Rs 42.9 crore. Finally, the company allegedly charged wholesalers an unincurred administrative expense to help explain money flowbacks. Indeed, when the DRI charged ITC's Bihar unit with tax evasion last year, the company promptly agreed to Rs 2.5 crore.

Sapru however, denies any wrong doing, insisting instead that the tax men have incorrectly understood the three issues. He says they had been discussed threadbare with the Government and a senior official had adjudicated in the dispute. In step with his order, ITC began forking out Rs 32 crore in instalments since around last October, and the last one of Rs 4.5 crore is due in March. "There has been no deliberate effort to try and defraud the exchequer. We've been in discussion with the Government and were under the impression that the matter had been resolved," he declares.

As he tells it, retailers have been charging more than the printed price ever since the Government introduced a new excise structure, almost two years ago, simply because tobacco companies began squeezing trade margins once it became clear that the new tax rules left manufacturers with meagre profit margins. The effective price list was therefore meant to internally assess consumer spending in the industry.

On the second charge, Sapru says that ITC had been collecting security deposits from its dealers, a practice common to other companies. "There is nothing surreptitious or sinister about this. The industry's turnover has shot up from Rs 80 crore in 1961-62 to Rs 2,300 crore now. The turnovers are large. If someone defaults, you need cover."

On the third count, he says that the company had been shipping its products to dealers and charging them both freight and the indirect administrative expenses it incurred on this.

Why then the raid? Sapru says he doesn't know. The DRI maintains that its suspicions were bolstered when Harish Rawat, Congress(I) MP from Uttar Pradesh, wrote to the Finance Ministry last year, claiming that the Government was losing revenue on ITC cigarettes. The DRI alleges that the company had attached another price list to the one it circulated to dealers last July.

The truth is difficult to determine. The only thing the two sides agree on is that the current excise structure leaves tobacco companies with unreasonably thin margins. ITC may not go to court on its latest dispute with the Government. Nevertheless, the skirmishes between the Government and cigarette manufacturers is unlikely to end with the peace pipe being smoked, for quite some time to come.

—PRABHU CHAWLA with bureau reports

"Our preliminary reports and investigations have confirmed that we were right on the mark."

B.V. KUMAR
director-general, Department of Revenue Intelligence

"There has been no deliberate effort to try and defraud the exchequer. We have done nothing surreptitious or sinister."

JAGDISH SAPRU
chairman, ITC

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Transatlantic business travellers...

I like it. Flying the Atlantic in TWA's Ambassador Class.

It makes flying on business a real pleasure.

Just look at the business of getting on the plane. TWA make it as effortless as possible. Boarding cards and seat reservations settled before you even leave the office! Think of the time and trouble that saves.

Of course I enjoy it. Who couldn't. In that Ambassador Class cabin comfort is the thing. Ah, peace! It's wonderful.

There you are, sitting comfortably in the widest business class seat across the Atlantic. The TWA Business Lounger. Plenty of space around you. Plenty of space to stow carry-on-luggage. Room to stretch and wiggle your toes.

Then the attention you get. This lovely girl offers you a selection of drinks, when you want them.

Brings you an interesting menu, with excellent cuisine to back it up. It's real, TWA American, friendly service.

Well, I say to myself, I'm on business. I deserve this sort of quiet comfort. All business travellers do.

Great thing is TWA flies to over 100 cities in the US. That makes it easy to get where you want to go. And to enjoy the Ambassador Class comfort that makes business travel such a pleasure.

For further details contact your favourite Travel Agent or call TWA (Bombay) at 223081.

...deserve the quiet comfort of TWA's Ambassador Class.

Leading the way to the USA.

TWA-417/86 R

TWA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Siddhanta eGangotri

GN IN FUJI CHIFFON SAREES

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Leonard for a lifetime.

All refrigerators are not the same. Only LEONARD is backed by Blue Star. No. 1 in refrigeration and air conditioning.

What does the Blue Star name guarantee you?

1. Lifetime Reliability. That's the Blue Star promise. Leonard has the lowest failure rate among Indian refrigerators.

2. Unmatched Blue Star service, just a phone call away, anywhere in India. Even though you may never need it.

3. Absolute assurance in the fact that Blue Star – for over 40 years, leaders in refrigeration and air-conditioning – backs the Leonard in your home.

Look for the Blue Star seal on every Leonard fridge and freezer.

The only guarantee you'll ever need.

FSA/BSL/5/86

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THE Government should carefully and very judiciously watch its spending. The gain as a result of increased revenues from taxes has been largely and unfortunately frittered away, and defence spending in particular is causing a very acute haemorrhage. The precious yellow metal, gold, has been on a roller-coaster climb; is it time for a drop?

All data are seasonally adjusted. Current trends are computed on the basis of six months' (weekly data) or two years' (monthly data) figures.

The danger of high inflation has temporarily passed. But it will reappear unless the Government begins to mend its profligacy.

The sharp price upswing in October and November has flattened out in December, and may have levelled off further in January.

Money supply growth remains at a high level, and has, in fact, accelerated through the month of January.

The divergence between bank credit growth and money supply is unhealthy. The private sector is paying for the dealings of the Government.

The October spurt in exports was not sustained in November. Imports, however, seem to be under control.

The protestations of a basket of currencies notwithstanding, the rupee seems fixed to the dollar. The short-term trend is not different from zero.

With Budget time approaching, the share markets have picked up, climbing out of the trough after the first week of February.

Whether it is smuggling or the lures of the exchange rate, the gold train keeps rumbling along. This indicates anticipated inflation.

WHOLESALE PRICES

Growth of items in January, 1987

	% Growth
Silk Raw	29.56
Logs Timber Bamboo	25.76
Wheat	15.35
Gingelly Seed	14.16
Groundnut Oilcake	13.34
Raw Cotton	11.85
Coir Fibre	10.72
Arhar	9.77
Linseed	8.64
Butter	7.98
Mustard Oilcake	7.48
Mustard Oil	6.29
Gingelly Oil	6.14
Linseed Oil	5.18
Rape & Mustard Seed	4.83
Khandsari	4.77
Groundnut Seeds	4.75
Sugar	3.23
Jawar	3.19
Onions	3.05
Groundnut Oil	3.04
Coffee	2.9
Cotton Yarn	2.53
Turmeric	2.47
Tapioca	2.42
Fish	2.32
Copra	2.3
Trucks	2.24
Milk	2.04
Mining Machinery	1.98
Urad	1.91
Aluminium	1.8
Ragi	1.72
Zinc	1.69
Vanaspati	1.68
Woollen Cloth & Woollen Khadi	1.53
Solvent Extracted Oil	1.49
Jute Textiles	1.46
Ceramic Tiles	1.45
Gur	1.36
Soda Ash	1.15
Utensils	1.06
Tyres	.96
Bars & Rods	.95
Pig Iron	.95
Rails	.93
Moong	.93

Of the 139 series considered, 92 of them with a total weight of 59.858 had a positive growth and 47 of them with a total weight of 26.768 had a negative growth.

SELECTED INDICATORS

	1987	1986
Crude Petroleum Thousand Tonnes, January	2519	2749
Petroleum Refinery Products Thousand Tonnes, January	4142	3773
Letters of Intent Issued Numbers, January	50	42
Industrial Licences Issued Numbers, January	50	58
Call Money Rate Percent, January	9.8	10.0

Compiled by THE POLICY GROUP/ICIM

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Make a 250 flight network an integral part of your marketing department.

Speed – that will make the vital difference to the efficiency of your operations. Giving you a keen edge over competition by providing a greater market reach while decreasing warehousing and inventory costs. Earn more profits.

Please contact your nearest Indian Airlines Office/Cargo Agents for your cargo movement.

Indian Airlines
CARGO

Better economy in the long run.

CLARION D 216

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THE MARKETS

Hopeful Mood

THE stock-markets were in a very hopeful mood last fortnight, with expectations of a favourable budget building up to almost fever pitch. Share prices, in fact, began moving up in early February, and by the close of last fortnight had gained 6 per cent in just three weeks. Some of the optimism was almost certainly based on the stray budget indications given by the prime minister himself, and it now remained to be seen whether the optimism would prove justified.

Meanwhile, several leading scrips scored handsome gains. Garware Polyester was up by 30 per cent, Century Enka by 21 per cent, Mukand Iron by 17 per cent and Tata Chemicals by 16 per cent. Several drug companies—Boots, Eskayef and Richardson Hindustan—also recorded impressive gains, perhaps because of the new drug policy details that are being worked out.

The widespread gains are difficult to understand when several leading industries face problems of insufficient demand. Whether it is cement, polyester or trucks, demand is sluggish. Perhaps the market has already discounted for this factor, and perhaps investors expect the prime minister to offer incentives in the budget for reviving the problem-ridden industries. Whatever the case, the fact that even cash shares notched up widespread gains suggests that investors are finally flocking back to the market in sizeable numbers.

The market must also have taken note of the promise of large-scale institutional buying in the coming weeks, with the Unit Trust having substantial funds waiting to be deployed. On the other hand, however, if several new public issues of shares and debentures are floated in the coming months, investors are likely to sell their existing holdings in order to gain liquidity and invest in the new offerings. This will almost certainly depress the market.

Meanwhile, Tata Steel experienced a hiccup following the reports of a steel price hike being turned down by the Finance Ministry, but subsequent reports spoke of a price increase still being on the cards.

The other development was the slight slump in Reliance Industries after several weeks of sustained rise. This followed reports of a heavy tax demand having been levied on the company and an application for an industrial licence having been turned down. Also, the company is still to announce its results for 1986, suggesting that profits may have taken a dip.

With pulls and pressures acting both ways on the market, the trend of the future will be determined by the market's reading of the budget. March is going to be an eventful month in the trading ring.

Chart by B.K. SHARMA

ACTIVE STOCKS

	1987 HIGH	LOW	CLOSE 20.2.87	Change in Fortnight
Ashok Leyland	33.00	29.00	30.00	0.75 –
Asian Paints	247.50	207.50	243.75	22.50 +
Associated Cement	236.00	207.00	227.00	15.00 –
Atlas Copco	139.00	112.00	138.00	16.00 +
Avery India	166.00	150.00	164.00	9.00 +
Bajaj Auto	4600.00	3950.00	4525.00	300.00 +
Baroda Rayon	232.50	215.00	225.00	2.50 +
Bata India	150.00	128.50	150.00	13.50 +
Bayer	760.00	620.00	750.00	120.00 +
Bharat Forge	74.00	66.00	70.00	2.00 +
Birla Jute	49.50	47.00	48.75	1.25 +
Blow Plast	126.00	92.50	118.00	2.00 –
Bombay Dyeing	59.50	40.50	56.50	4.50 +
Brooke Bond	86.00	77.00	84.50	6.50 +
Ceat Tyres	565.00	480.00	565.00	35.00 +
Century Spinning	810.00	670.00	755.00	20.00 +
Chloride India	148.00	89.00	91.25	1.25 +
Colgate	377.50	327.50	367.50	10.00 +
DCM	39.00	32.25	33.00	0.50 –
Dunlop	75.25	71.25	74.50	1.50 +
Elecon	107.50	88.75	100.00	5.00 +
E.I. Hotels	56.00	44.50	46.50	nil
Escorts	84.00	76.00	78.00	1.00 +
Eskayef	231.25	171.25	226.25	40.00 –
Finolex Cables	155.00	114.00	149.00	16.00 +
Food Specialities	187.00	165.00	185.00	11.00 +
Garware Polyester	94.50	69.50	90.00	17.00 +
G.E. Shipping	22.50	18.00	19.00	3.00 –
Gujarat St. Fertilisers	183.50	140.00	168.00	nil
Grasim Ind.	94.00	80.00	92.00	6.00 +
Hind. Cocoa	262.50	223.75	250.00	15.00 +
Hindustan Lever	188.00	167.00	180.00	3.00 +
Hindustan Motors	35.35	29.70	32.00	0.20 +
Hind. Dorr	332.50	295.00	325.00	27.50 +
IEL	61.50	54.50	58.75	4.25 +
Indian Organic	78.00	67.00	75.00	6.00 +
Indian Rayon	76.00	68.00	73.50	2.50 +
Indrol	510.00	260.75	328.75	66.25 +
Ingersoll-Rand	305.00	272.50	302.50	25.00 +
ITC	78.00	63.00	64.00	5.00 –
J.K. Synthetics	93.50	70.00	81.00	6.50 –
Kinetic Engineering	312.50	255.00	285.00	25.00 +
Kirloskar Cummins	755.00	670.00	745.00	45.00 +
Larson & Toubro	100.00	82.00	97.50	11.00 +
Lipton	74.00	60.00	74.00	10.00 +
Lohia Machines	28.00	22.50	27.50	nil
Madura Coats	70.50	66.00	68.25	1.25 +
Mahindra & Mahindra	46.00	38.00	42.00	3.00 +
Motor Industries	385.00	357.50	382.50	13.75 +
National Organic	577.50	517.50	557.50	20.00 +
Nirlon	22.50	18.00	22.00	0.50 +
Otis Elevator	185.00	155.00	175.00	10.00 +
Orkay Silk Mills	115.00	86.00	98.00	6.00 +
Peico Electronics	57.25	45.00	47.50	1.50 –
Ponds	370.00	335.00	367.50	27.50 +
Premier Auto	29.50	21.00	26.00	2.50 –
Ranbaxy	135.00	111.00	125.00	10.00 +
Raymond	79.00	68.00	79.00	8.00 +
Reckitt & Colman	200.00	174.00	186.00	7.00 +
Reliance Industries	277.00	202.00	243.00	25.00 –
Shriram Fibres	36.00	30.75	32.00	nil
Sandoz	140.00	87.50	107.50	11.25 +
SPIC	53.50	43.50	43.50	3.25 –
Tata Steel	1207.50	1025.00	1145.00	10.00 +
Telco	665.00	550.00	625.00	10.00 +
Vulcan Laval	52.50	45.00	52.50	2.50 +

WORLD VALUE OF RUPEE

COUNTRY	CURRENCY	UNIT	Selling Rates Rs	TT Buying Rates Rs
Australia	Dollar	1	8.7950	8.7148
Austria	Schilling	100	101.6212	100.6764
Bahrain	Dinar	1	34.8500	34.0000
Bangladesh	Taka	100	43.2998	43.2766
Canada	Dollar	1	9.8965	9.8197
Denmark	Kroner	1	1.9018	1.8872
Egypt	Pound	1	9.5580	9.5220
France	Franc	1	2.1551	2.1413
Hong Kong	Dollar	1	1.7181	1.6792
Indonesia	Rupiah	100	0.0780	0.0700
Iran	Rial	100	17.1730	17.1280
Italy	Lira	100	0.9400	0.9200
Japan	Yen	100	8.6000	8.5000
Kenya	Shilling	1	0.8000	0.7899
Kuwait	Dinar	1	44.6400	44.5900
Malaysia	Dollar	1	5.1634	5.1177
Mauritius	Rupee	1	0.9700	0.9601
Nepal	Rupee	1	0.5899	0.5760
Netherlands	Guilder	1	6.3483	6.2984
Pakistan	Rupee	1	0.7499	0.7300
Singapore	Dollar	1	6.1464	6.0907
Spain	Peseta	1	0.0960	0.0948
Sri Lanka	Rupee	1	0.4499	0.4330
Sweden	Kroner	1	2.0176	2.0020
Switzerland	Franc	1	8.4666	8.3957
Tanzania	Shilling	1	0.2800	0.2700
Thailand	Baht	100	50.0000	49.0000
UK	Pound	1	20.0702	19.9440
USA	Dollar	1	13.1500	13.0625
UAE	Dirham	1	3.3100	3.2900
USSR	Rouble	1	9.4998	9.3998
W. Germany	Deutschmark	1	7.1787	7.6555

These rates were supplied by The Bank of Tokyo Limited, New Delhi and quoted between the banks on 21.2.87.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ISMAIL MERCHANT

The Merchant from Bombay

WHO is that crazy Merchant from Bombay?" Over the years, it was a common question asked in the film world in London and New York. They are not asking any more. They know the man they called crazy is laughing all the way, as the saying goes, not only to one bank but to banks all over the world. Film producer Ismail Merchant is now known as the legendary fund-raiser who, without any studio backing, has created financial packages that break all traditional film making concepts.

Merchant is being talked about today because despite his mom-and-pop store method of film making, his latest venture A Room With A View has grossed over $50 million (Rs 65 crore) since release. It has also been nominated for eight academy awards, including the most prestigious best picture award. The elegant film, based on the E.M. Forster novel, is the first picture to bring such commercial success to the 26-year-old production team. "We grossed Rs 1 crore in one cinema in the first 16 weeks," chortles Merchant with unabashed glee.

More than 100,000 records have been sold of the hauntingly exquisite soundtrack and book sales have shot up to 80,000. The film has defied traditional business trends and set new house records in small cities in mid-west America where "art" films are unheard of.

The news coverage they have received could well be called a media blitz. Seventy four newspapers and maga zines have independently chosen the film as one of the best of the year. Retrospectives of Merchant-Ivory films have been held in major museums in New York, Los Angeles, London and Paris. Merchant was named one of the top producers of the year by Millimeter, a major film magazine. A book about the production team, called The Wandering Company was published last year. And a film based on the book itself, highlighting their unique method of work accompanied by acerbic and hilarious interviews with people who have worked with them, was shown on channel 13. As if that is not enough, the American Film Institute in Washington will honour the team at the premiere of their newest film Maurice, also based on a novel by Forster.

Merchant and (left) A Room With A View: making good

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

In 1973, critic John Gillet wrote about director James Ivory and Merchant in Sight and Sound: "Whatever the outcome, these two resilient international optimists continue to plan and organise in the firm belief that the best is yet to come. Ivory suggests, half-jokingly, that Merchant is bound some day to have a really big financial success. Anything less would seem a betrayal of destiny." Fourteen years later, destiny has caught up with them and dealt them the "best". "What all this money and success says to me is, all these years, what you've been doing has been right, and you have achieved what you wanted on your own terms. And, that," says Merchant, "is the reward".

Carefully avoiding Hollywood, the team has prodigiously made low-budget, artistically superior films over the years. It was in 1963 that pristine and refined American director James Ivory teamed with the joyously egotistical hustler Merchant and the reclusive Polish-German writer Ruth Prawer Jhabvala to produce a gem of a film, The Householder, starring Leela Naidu and Shashi Kapoor. Although Merchant has good reason to gloat now, out of 20 films they have produced, only six showed a profit, two flopped completely and the others just covered expenses.

Despite the financial losses, the Merchant-Ivory team have had few critical failures. In an age where violence-gorged, sexually devouring, expletive-filled escapist films are pulling in jaded audiences, whose appetite for instant-thrill films seems insatiable, a market for graceful, low-key movies would seem unlikely. The biggest successes in recent years have been films like Rambo that plays cheaply on a crude and falsified notion of patriotism. Merchant-Ivory films, on the other hand, are unashamedly literary in choice, visually enthralling with authentic locations and though passionate, it is always passion with great civility, irony or humour. Their films are pointedly timeless and would superficially seem to belong to another age. But with a marked resurgence in post-modernism in art, music (David Byrne), architecture (Phillip Johnson), fashion (Ralph Lauren), clearly there is an audience which has simply tired of the "quickie" film.

The trio; and (right) still from The Householder: timeless classics

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

INTERVIEW

"We're successful on our terms"

BUSTLING between appointments, producer Ismail Merchant met with INDIA TODAY Correspondent MADHU P.TREHAN and spoke expansively about his life and work. Excerpts:

Q. When did your involvement with films start?

A. It started when I became enamoured with the actress Nimmi and her first film Barsaat. She became my idol and ideal. I went to the premiere of Barsaat with her. I was shaking with excitement. Those adoring crowds.... when you see the adoration of the masses, you can either become a guru, or a politician or get in the motion picture business.

Q. What did you connect with when you met James Ivory in 1960 other than the fact he was interested in India?

A. It was like knowing somebody who knew India like no other westerner. He was the first westerner that I met who saw Indians as human beings and as people. Not maharajas and snake charmers.

Q. You have not done anything overtly dishonest, yet many people who have worked with you call you a con man. Ruth Jhabvala went as far as to say she did not know where the money came from and didn't want to know. She said: "I have a persistent vision of visiting Ismail in jail." People find you exasperating and irresistible. Why do people say all these things about you?

A. Well, I say a film will make a lot of money but who is to know that it will. Ruth doesn't want to be involved in anything financial. For example, when we were about to start shooting The Europeans the financier backed out at the last minute. The second financier would not put his money in unless I showed him a cheque from the first investor. So I borrowed the money and put the money in and then they did too. I juggle. I do acrobatics. Jim and Ruth don't want to know anything about it.

Q. Why are so many people responding to A Room With A View when there are many other good films?

A. It is because we have gotten commercial success on our terms. To have a writer, director and producer produce something consistently so good has just never been heard. I am the first Indian to have made a name in the world market in cinema. Satyajit Ray is a genius but how many Indian producers have made $50 million (Rs 65 crore) from one film?

Q. You have used your cooking as a seduction tool with financiers, actors and actresses, haven't you?

A. Yes, sure. How many producers actually cook for their crew or their actors? I cook for 70-80 people. People bring their friends. People bring wine and all inhibitions are lost.

Q. How do you take all the rejections that come with looking for financiers?

A. Not seriously. Somebody described me as a huge elephant standing by the door, swaying until somebody notices. How can you not notice an elephant?

Q. So what angers the great optimist Ismail?

A. I get upset when somebody is cheating me. That's right. I don't cheat anyone. Even if I pay little. It's a very sad thing that 90 per cent of the people in this business are rogues. If you are involved with people on that level, you have to have a sort of sixth sense to be on top of them. Ruth and Jim don't want to be a part of that. But I certainly am a fighter.

Q. People have called you a hustler, wheeler-dealer, rascal, all kinds of things. How do you describe yourself?

A. I take all this as sheer admiration or sheer jealousy or whatever it is. I take it in my stride.

Q. So how do you see yourself?

A. I see myself as really hard-working. You can do anything if you have an aim in life or you have something which you believe in. I want to do things nobody else can do.

A Room With A View has clicked because it appeared at a time when people are looking to the past, culturally, when things of beauty were savoured, not used as cheap thrills.

Shot in Italy, A Room With A View is visually splendid, the soundtrack is post-modernism at its best, classic Puccini opera with contemporary composer Richard Robbins. The technical quality could not be more modern but in theme and rhythm, it is pure Forster. A Room With A View is unintentionally a film of the times.

Though Ivory may have a special talent for visionary direction and Jhabvala an unmatched eye for characters and

Merchant: deals over meals an uncanny ear for dialogue, it is Ismail Merchant who glues the projects together and makes it all possible. But how did an ordinary boy from a middle class, Muslim Bombay family end up criss-crossing three continents to tie up million-dollar deals, acquire an estate in Hudson Valley, New York, apartments in Manhattan and London and all the other accoutrements of success? The answer is clear when Merchant appears on the scene. His delight in his own success is infectious. In his exuberance, Merchant is not above displaying fan mail and headlines from a British paper, "Gentle English Conquering America, Even Stallone Is No Match For Them". He demands: "Who would get a headline like this but us?"

Merchant's interest was fired when, at the age of seven, he gave a 14-page

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

oration on Islam to a congregation of 10,000. The effect he had on those people convinced him of a career that would deal with audiences. "Anyone who, at seven, can draw the attention of 10,000 people, has a charismatic personality," he says. "If you can convince 10,000 people of what you believe in, you can convince a handful of financiers to invest in your film. If you can sell your ideas to 10,000, you can sell them to 10 million."

Never has a man enjoyed his self more that Merchant has, much of it clearly stemming from being the only son in a family of six daughters. At St Xavier's College, Bombay, he spent more time organising shows and acting in student productions than in studying. The foundation for his financial modus operandi was built in those early student days. "We used to sell space in the programme to finance them. I'd get two beautiful girls and we would go to big companies. I'd charm the secretary till she opened the door to the managing director. Out of hundreds of doors you knocked on, maybe 20 or 30 would buy space," he recalls. His approach to potential investors is the same today.

Merchant's father, a businessman in textiles, was apprehensive about his son's interest in films and would have preferred Ismail to go into medicine or law. But the show-biz bug had already bitten Ismail, when he headed for New York University in 1958, to gain a degree in Business Administration. Merchant worked part-time as a messenger at the United Nations, where he brashly invited financiers to lunch at the exclusive Delegates Dining Room. "There was a Brazilian woman in charge at the entrance and she would call me an Indian delegate. You know what Indian delegates look like and I had something special about me," he says.

Apparently, Merchant managed to impress financier Charles Schweppe enough to invest in his first short film, Creation of Woman. Typically, Merchant took off for Hollywood with the film, self-billed as a Mogul producer. It gained him an Oscar nomination but little else.

The turning point came when he met James Ivory in New York after he saw Ivory's film The Sword and the Flute. They both saw something in each other that resulted in their first film together, The Householder. The author, Ruth Prawer Jhabvala, shy and reclusive, wanted nothing to do with them until Ismail chased and wore her down. This rather odd triumvirate, Ismail with his hedonistic self-confidence, James with his careful sensitivity and Ruth with her zealous, literary industriousness have a yin-yang balance in their work that extends into their lives and relationships. As Ivory says: "Our great subject is our love-hate about India, our love-hate about America, or our love-hate about each other."

Jaffrey in Autobiography of a Princess

Their early projects centered around India. Ruth, married to an Indian, lived there, Ismail's family home drew him and Jim's fascination with a special culture attracted him to the country. The classic Shakespeare Wallah, the commercial flop The Guru and Bombay Talkie were all films about people who this team would be exposed to in their own lives. Satyajit Ray exposed India's poverty as no other film maker had done. But Merchant-Ivory films had the courage to make films about the middle class, the arty and yes, even the elite—a definite no-no in Indian "intellectual" circles. Their films grow out of an idea one of them might have had or a book read and Ruth is asked to spin a screen-play out of it. The input is definitely threefold in all aspects of the product, which does not mean things go smoothly. "None of us is particularly restrained," confesses Ivory. "There's a bit of shouting and screaming in the editing room." "Of course we quarrel and violently disagree about things," Merchant counters smoothly, "because we are all so emotionally committed and we want everything to be right".

So committed, in fact, that there seems to be a thin line between their work and personal lives. Ismail and Jim share apartments in London and New York, with Ruth in the apartment below them in New York. Ruth more often than not joins them in their 14-room Hudson Valley manor in upstate New York, when they are not in the city. The corners of their triangular kaleidoscope puzzle seem to fit perfectly, juxtaposing when necessary and slipping away when required. All three have a common larger perspective of the end result, but a tunnel vision in their role to achieve it.

Unlike other film makers, Merchant-Ivory productions do not have big studios backing them. The trio first puts the project together, the idea stemming from a book, a house or place they have visited. Then Ismail gets into his act of raising funds from the most improbable of investors. Usually they are admirers, people who are attracted to the glamour of the film industry but know nothing of it and sometimes even the British Film Institute. "Hollywood is full of lawyers and accountants with no personal commitment to cinema," Merchant points out. "I could never make a mindless film. They are only interested in how much money they are going to make."

Their "we-are-a-family" method of film making has been a point of much puzzlement. Other film producers rarely show up on the sets but for Merchant his producer's presence is not only welcome but essential. Collaborators report that Merchant will do anything and everything on the set to keep the shooting going. He will not only cook for the whole crew (to keep production costs to the minimum), gain entry to impossible locations (like convincing the mayor of Florence to allow them to film in the Piazza Della Signoria), and run around fixing seemingly impossible problems.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Merchant's role has been self-defined from the start. He is an obsessive fund-raiser. Although he is notorious for being a skinflint and most who have worked for him complain about his stinginess, he is also known for being there when the chips are down for one of his "family". Shashi Kapoor recalls: "When Jennifer was in hospital, Ismail knew I was in trouble. He showed up at the hospital with money. He was there to help."

Stars work with them for a fraction of their usual fee and it is a common occurrence, in the middle of filming, for money to run out and salaries to be put on hold. This happened on the set of Heat and Dust and Madhur Jaffrey, who acted in the film, recalls that as the money began to disappear the crew began to get restless. Sensing this, Merchant wangled a visit for all of them to a stunning palace with a beautiful picnic thrown in. Madhur laughs: "You don't want to forget how he is conning you, but you do. This rascal has done it again, you say. Again he's charmed us."

Madhur adds: "An actor wants to work with good directors and you know that their work will be seen." She recalls that at the Cannes Film Festival this year, Merchant typically invited 70 people for dinner. "So we all did the shopping and cooking. It's just not Ismail's style to get it catered. And he was out there serving everyone." Madhur smiles, adding: "There is great method to all this. Not only is he saving on waiters, but he's also making sure nobody eats too much."

So how much does he pay his actors? "It is so negligible, I'd be embarrassed to tell you." Merchant himself is not embarrassed at all. Now that his latest project has earned him enough, will he pay his actors a little better? "Not at all," he says indignantly. "We just made Maurice the way we always did." As Madhur points out: "Merchant prides himself in getting a lot for nothing."

Why do they work for him, in spite of all these problems? "Because it is a privilege to work with us," claims Merchant blithely. And there is no doubt. The best of them do. As Madhur says: "Even though you suspect you are being used, we always have so much fun filming with them, one tends to forget."

Merchant in 1958: brash confidence

Some years ago, Merchant was invited to the Harvard Club to show his film Shakespeare Wallah and give a speech. After he spoke, Merchant says somebody asked him: "How do you get people to invest in your films?" Ismail says he answered: "After seeing this film, wouldn't you contribute?" As he elaborated: "You don't have to be shy over anything. If you want anything, you knock at God's door and say 'I want this'. God has to think about billions of people and unless you express yourself forcefully you can't get anything."

Indisputably, he does have charm. One of Merchant's tools has been his cooking. He has been known to appear in an unstocked kitchen and create dishes out of nowhere. He has convinced many an investor and plenty of stars, including Vanessa Redgrave, after pumping them with a good Indian meal. His cookbook published last year, though not very professional, is adventurous. Recipes are thrown together and invented with whatever is there in the kitchen and have snappy titles—"Omlette fine herbs/Sookhi patyoon ka aam-late".

Merchant has lived the better part of his life abroad, but his roots in India are still strong. Why then does he not make films in India? "There are no good script-writers, no good directors. Visual beauty is not even considered in Bombay films. They are just copying Hollywood. The masses are totally controlled by the trash and because of the absurd Government of India policy on the import of foreign films, the Indian public sees only Hollywood trash, like Cave Girl. None of the great films are brought in," says Merchant. "It has brought the public's standard to such a low ebb."

However, his next project will be filmed in India where he will direct Anita Desai's In Custody. The team has just completed filming Maurice which will be released in September. Also in the works is Naseeruddin Shah in The Perfect Murder based on the book by Harry Keating. Merchant is also contemplating films based on the books The Innocent Millionaire as well as In Praise of Older Women.

It is doubtful whether money or investors will be a problem this time around. But even if they were, then as the old joke goes: If dauntless Ismail was put in a room full of horse manure, he'd start digging, saying: "There's got to be a financier here somewhere."

—MADHU P. TREHAN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

ndation Chennai and eGangotri

You've got it made with Graviera.

Graviera has it made for you.
For your shirts.
For your trousers.
For your safaris.
For her.

The newest weaves.
The latest textures.
The last word in design and style.

Graviera.
Great value for money.
Always.

GRAVIERA
FASHION FABRICS GR®
BHIWANI TEXTILE MILLS, Bhiwani, Haryana.
(A unit of Grasim Industries Ltd.)

Karishma/BTM/5/2720

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Shoes

NORTH STAR®

It's a great feeling!

CC-0. Panini Kanya Maha Vidyalaya Collection. Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ENJOY A DAY & NIGHT IN EUROPE'S MOST FUNLOVING CAPITAL FOR ONLY RS. 00. 00

Madrid is well worth a stop-over. Filled with gaiety, vivacity, activity, friendliness, hospitality. The city of lights, modern and traditional at the same time. Madrid is the entertainment capital of Europe! Now you have a chance to discover Madrid during your stop-over — absolutely free! Fly Iberia, stay for 24 hours in Madrid in transit. Then catch a connecting flight, to anywhere in the world. While in Madrid you will be the honoured guest of the Tourist Promotion Board. This invitation includes a first class hotel, a car with or without chauffeur, lunch, dinner and /or an entertainment show. All absolutely free!

Because, in Madrid every visitor is a friend! And one day and night is a good way to discover just how friendly the people of Madrid can be. Madrid Amigo (my friend) is an experience you'll never forget!

For more details contact your IATA Travel Agency or the Iberia Office.

Come, Madrid waits, amigo!

MADRID AMIGO

IBERIA
AIRLINES OF SPAIN

TOURIST PROMOTION BOARD

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BUDDHISM

Revolt of the Nuns

IN Buddhist tradition, the wheel holds a special significance, symbolising as it does, the advent of a new era or a new society. And last fortnight it was obvious that the wheel of Buddhism had come full circle. In Bodh Gaya, at the same spot where, 2,500 years ago, a village girl offered a cup of porridge to a fasting Gautama, leading to the birth of a new revolutionary religious order, a large gathering of Buddhist nuns staged the closest thing to a revolt against male-dominance in Buddhist tradition.

The international conference, the first of its kind in the religion's history, established the formation of Sakyadhita (daughters of Sakya), a world-wide Buddhist women's organisation to fight for their reinstatement and, in the words of Sister Ayya Khema, conference coordinator and internationally-known meditation teacher, to "work out ways to reintroduce the bhikshuni tradition which is no longer in existence".

The 150 Buddhist nuns and laypersons displayed a fierce determination to uplift their religious status and give new life to the bhikshuni tradition of ordaining women, which is all but extinct although it survives in different forms. Their call, apart from throwing an open challenge to the dominant position of the monks and theologians in the Buddhist order, also opened up a Pandora's box of disturbing questions.

But even as the Buddhist clergy and scholars debated the implications of the move, the presence of Dalai Lama—spiritual head of the Buddhist world—at the international conference of Buddhist nuns lent an element of legitimacy to the purpose of the exercise. His Holiness applauded the women's fight for equal status admitting that women all over the world were striving for equality and "Buddhists cannot be isolated". That set the trend for the rest of the conference, evident in the decision to set up the Sakyadhita and the final resolution which established 16 goals for Buddhist women to achieve equal status.

One of these included the formation of an international bhikshuni samgha, which, the nuns claim, the monks had always resisted since "Buddhist tradition has always been taken to be the sphere of men". The nuns are serenely confident of achieving their objective. "This is a turning point in the Buddhist order," claimed Sister Khema.

But some observers read a deeper meaning into the conference. To them it amounts to a call for making basic changes in the Buddhist order, a system that has stood unchanged for the last 2,500 years. Argued prominent Buddhist C.K. Pandey: "Women within the order can preach and render service but they cannot be bhikshunis as Lord Buddha had never sanctioned it."

History, in fact, records that Buddha's foster-mother Mahaprajapati Gautami, had urged him several times to accept her as a bhikshuni and admit other women to the order but to no avail. It was only when Ananda, Buddha's cousin and closest disciple intervened, that Buddha hesitantly relented. But Chatsumarn Kabilsingh, professor of Asian religion and philosophy at the Thammasat University in Bangkok, states that Buddha's hesitation was based not on his objection to women but the social problems likely to stem from their admission.

However, Buddhist monks have always remained firmly opposed to the idea of women joining the order. In fact, nobody is sure of how many bhikshunis are left. "The figure may be around 1,50,000 but this is just guesswork," says Khema.

Whatever their number, their plight is unenviable. Staunchly Buddhist Thailand has never encouraged bhikshunis and the 20,000-odd Ji's or female ascetics are actually lay-workers. There are no historical records of the ordination of Ji's and they enjoy no social recognition.

On the cards is a proposal to establish an educational institution in India to provide religious and general education to Buddhist women from all countries, and a training programme for nuns contemplating ordination to the highest level. The mood was summed up by Kusuma Devendra, a Sri Lankan nun: "If the Buddha had broken stark and rigid social barriers to enable women to enter the order, why is it not possible for these bhikshus, who are now custodians of dharma, to merely accept an older order which was fully approved by the Buddha?"

Whether the male-dominated Buddhist order accepts the resolution or not, the wheel has been set in motion. And if the decision to organise another international conference in Sri Lanka to recapture the spirit of Sanghamitra, devout Buddhist daughter of Emperor Asoka, is any guide, the bhikshunis will not be denied their saffron robes much longer.

—FARZAND AHMED in Gaya

Bodh Gaya conference: open challenge

K.M. KISHAN

The conference of Buddhist nuns at Bodh Gaya not only challenged the dominant position of male monks but opened up a Pandora's box of disturbing questions.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Discover a land where industry and society
are in equilibrium, keeping pace with each other...
factories juxtaposed with training schools, hospitals,
housing colonies.
A land where a skilled labour force is guided by a dynamic work culture.
Technical skills are honed, assembly lines
streamlined,
to make each man-hour
more productive.

SICOM

THE STATE INDUSTRIAL AND INVESTMENT
CORPORATION OF MAHARASHTRA LIMITED
Nirmal, 1st floor, Nariman Point, Bombay 400 021

Come Discover SICOM's Maharashtra
India's Premier Industrial State.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CLARION/B/SM/37/238

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

DR B.G. RANCHOD

"Apartheid will not go by force"

DR Bhadhra Galu Ranchod's stylishly designed office in downtown Brussels is studded with personal memorabilia: photos of his law school and research days in Cape Town, Cambridge and Leiden University (the Netherlands) and family portraits. But on the wall facing his gleaming desk are two daunting framed photographs: those of President P.W. Botha and Foreign Minister Pik Botha. As South Africa's first-ever non-white ambassador appointed by the apartheid regime, and moreover, of Indian origin, Dr Ranchod has caused a considerable stir in diplomatic circles throughout the world. The post, which he assumed last month, is regarded as one of South Africa's key appointments, next only to that of the parallel post in Washington.

The dapper and suave Dr Ranchod, 42, enjoys an enviable reputation in legal circles. After graduating in law from the University of Cape Town, he did his research from Queen's College, Cambridge and obtained a senior scholarship from the Dutch Government where he completed his thesis. After practising briefly at the South African Supreme Court, he was appointed a senior lecturer in private law at the University of Durban-Westville in Natal, where he became its dean. He is a visiting scholar at Columbia Law School in New York and a guest lecturer at the law schools of Harvard, Yale, Princeton as well as the law schools of Edinburgh, Glasgow, Aberdeen and London Universities.

At first impression, it almost seems like a nimble move by the artful Pretoria Government in having found a convenient brown face to carry the can for its odious policies and interpret them as "reasonable" to hostile audiences. Instead, Dr Ranchod, as an articulate academic heavyweight, does an efficient job of explaining South Africa in its "totality" and forcefully argues that he is a stern opponent of apartheid: "I am a proponent of effecting changes through constitutional methods, not by force," he says.

His case is unique since he represents a government under which, on grounds of skin colour alone, he can neither vote for nor belong to the ruling party. Dr Ranchod, now glutted with requests for interviews from the western media, granted his first interview to the Indian press to London Correspondent, RAMESH CHANDRAN. Excerpts:

Q. Your appointment seems to have been cannily timed by the Pretoria Government, just prior to the EEC foreign ministers debating economic sanctions.

A. I had been approached by the Government several months earlier. I don't believe the announcement had anything to do with the fact that the EEC were debating sanctions. It was a coincidence.

Q. Were you surprised that you had been chosen as the first non-white to represent South Africa as ambassador?

A. The signals were there. In March last year there was a very positive spirit in South Africa. The Government had committed itself to repealing some of the apartheid laws, the pass laws for example, laws affecting Indian immigration. Th was a limit on the freedom of movement Indians within South Africa. In the pro ince of Orange Free State, there was a to ban on Indians owning property. Th law has been repealed as well as t prohibition on Indians living in the nort ern districts of Natal. In terms of freedo of movement, these were significa changes and was a hopeful period for u

Q. But these were cosmetic change Racial segregation still di tinguishes official policy.

A. Yes, in residential se regation, the Governme has had difficulty in relaxi them, primarily due to th pressure from the growi right-wing elements. But t changes have been ma gradually.

Q. There has been fier criticism in certain quarte in South Africa about yo accepting the ambassado ship. They have branded y a "collaborator" and a "st oge" of the apartheid regim Did you not experience an moral pangs?

A. Well, one must expe in a society so highly pola sed as in South Africa whe people are intensely em tional about issues that if o does accept a position with that society which lends cr dence to the reform proce one will face a degree of cri cism. It applies to all leve On the one hand we say th system needs to be chang and the whites are co pletely in control. I think o can anticipate that whoev breaks the barrier is going to encoun criticism.

Q. But don't you see South Africa an abnormal case? After all, you are n say for instance, a critic of a normal go ernment who has been offered a post b in a normal democratic country. T charges levelled against you are, fir that the appointment smacks of 'tok ism' while the majority of the populati is firmly under the heel of a racist regim And second, that when you represent t Government as its ambassador, you in fact defending or even endorsing its policies—literally an "ambassador of apartheid".

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

A. Look, I am a South African. It is my country. But I feel very strongly about apartheid and I have made no bones about it. My views are known within the country since they have been voiced on South African media. My views have not changed because of this appointment. In South Africa, I was a member of an independent commission which did 17 separate studies over four years examining the whole aspect of race relations in the country. I chaired the legal working committee of this commission. Its findings were unequivocal: that apartheid provided no solutions to South Africa, instead it provoked a great deal of conflict which impinged on human dignity and human rights. The Government accepted the findings and it has proceeded gradually towards dismantling the structures of apartheid. You made allusions to my endorsing the system. Instead I wish to work towards a free and democratic society in South Africa. There is, of course, a body of opinion that believes with deep conviction that the only way to achieve the ideal change is through the use of force. I certainly do not belong to that school of thought. But at the same time, I have firm views on racial discrimination.

Q. Firm views are fine but what can you hope to achieve in changing an entrenched system?

A. We could—through legal and constitutional means for instance. My inaugural address as a professor tried to portray how Indians in South Africa through Gandhiji's efforts and encouragement used the courts to challenge apartheid laws. And we Indians have in fact contributed substantially to the jurisprudence of South Africa and many of the landmark cases in the human rights fields affected Indians. I ended my address by calling for a "bill of rights"—which is rather controversial—because underlying the notion of a "bill of rights" is the principle of equality.

Q. Didn't your own students at Durban-Westville campus criticise your decision and burn your effigy?

A. That is not correct. In fact numerous students in my class stood up to congratulate me. I do not intend to get into an argument to see who is right or wrong. I am confident that there is some means as a diplomat that I can explore to accelerate the process of reform. I am committed to using the law rather than the gun. It is a question of one's ideology. At the end of the day, we all would like to see a peaceful and democratic society within South Africa.

Q. This "bill of rights" which is so much after your heart and which you have consistently espoused in your career, is it actually feasible? Why should the South African Parliament ratify it?

A. I believe the best way to effect transition in South Africa is through the courts. If the courts could have a little more muscle since it is the one institution that is respected even by the radical groups. You can turn to the Supreme Court in South Africa. Even during this emergency period, the court has taken a tough line on the behaviour of the police and even governmental decisions.

Q. We are surely not assuming that a "bill of rights" and apartheid can coexist. Shouldn't one give way to another?

> "Sanctions have led to a slowdown in the economy, to a growth of the right-wing. There is a misconception that in replacing the present government, one is going to get a nice, liberal one."

A. Indeed. It does not mix since one of the principal elements in the "bill of rights" is equal treatment. There is a commission now working hard on examining the issue. As a law professor, I have constantly propagated federalism in South Africa so that it may cater to the needs of groups who may wish to maintain their language and cultural rights.

Q. Of course, all this is in theory.

A. Yes, it is. The mechanics of how to get there is problematical because of the polarisation in our society.

Q. You have not been a great admirer of the tricameral parliamentary system where Indians and coloured participate. What is your objection?

A. You are placing me in a difficult position now. As a university professor I can go to great lengths criticising the system but as a diplomat obviously I have limitations. However I might say the major difficulty with it is really a transitional arrangement. What we need is a constitutional arrangement which will reflect what South Africa is.

Q. You mean include the blacks in the process of governing the country?

A. Yes. A constitution in which all South Africans will be able to participate.

Q. The Indians in South Africa who form 3 per cent of the total population seem divided on many issues. Especially when it comes to the question of the black majority and the question of whether to cooperate with the white Government.

A. There is a twofold reaction when it comes to our people. One of which is the real one. We must recognise that we are all South Africans and must not do anything that antagonises the majority. In other words, for 3 per cent of the population to play boss over the blacks is foolish. What many Indians would have liked is a transitional arrangement that catered to all sections of our society. It puts us in a very vulnerable position when you belong to a minority group and you are seen to be enjoying some advantages. Although the reality is different. Until 1961, Indians were not even citizens of South Africa.

Q. You must be aware that South Africa is suddenly very high on the Indian Government's agenda, especially under Rajiv Gandhi, who has been a strident advocate for implementing economic sanctions against your country. How has this been received among the Indians there?

A. Now look, what is the purpose of sanctions? You are trying to change the methods adopted by the South African Government. But changes have not caused faster reforms. They have led to a slowdown in the economy. It has led to the most vulnerable sections, those who are unskilled or semi-skilled, losing their jobs. It has also led to a growth in the right-wing. And there is perhaps a misconception that if one succeeds in replacing the present government in South Africa, one is going to get a nice, multiracial, liberal, democratic government. But whoever takes over will have to enjoy the support of the police and the army in South Africa. So the scenario could be a more negative and hardline one. Besides South Africa is not a colony. It is a country of considerable wealth, the 12th industrial power in the world and has the resilience to withstand sanctions for some time. As far India's efforts are concerned, its intentions may be good but the methods are wrong.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

When a feeble heart whispers SOS will you get to hear it?

BPL medical electronic equipment... for life-saving reliability.

Bedside Monitors from BPL. For round-the-clock surveillance, minute by minute monitoring. With a quality reassurance in every rise and fall, an R&D edge in every recording. BPL Bedside Monitors. One step closer to a heart's recovery.

As leaders in medical electronics, BPL offer you a self-contained solid trace monitoring system that can be used as a stand-alone unit or can be hooked onto a Central Nursing Station. Among its pluses are freeze and expansion of wave forms for detailed analysis, high and low rate alarm settings, instantaneous display recovery after defibrillation and a provision for attaching an automatic ECG recorder. A battery-low warning indicator, audio-visual QRS beeper and choice of 3 leads go with each system.

Prestigious technical tie-ups. Constant product development. A comprehensive manufacturing infrastructure. Rigorous research. And around two decades of invaluable experience. That is BPL's contribution to coronary care. That is BPL's commitment to life-saving reliability.

Also from BPL

- Cardiart ECGs
- Central Nursing Stations
- Cardiac Resuscitation Systems
- Supplies and Accessories

For more information, contact any of our Sales Offices.

BPL-INDIA

In pursuit of perfection

CENTRAL MARKETING ORGANISATION: BANGALORE: Phone: 572321/2/6
SALES OFFICES: • BANGALORE: Phone: 561598/574787 • BOMBAY: Phone: 4938704/4938392
• CALCUTTA: Phone: 431658/448566 • COCHIN: Phone: 361619 • COIMBATORE: Phone: 34921 • HYDERABAD: Phone: 231091
• MADRAS: Phone: 474309/471378/476770/479420 • NEW DELHI: Phone: 6433689/6433865/6431886 • PALGHAT: Phone: 3241

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

WORLD TABLE TENNIS

China Rules

IT was like a sports festival inside a spaceship. In the cavernous, futuristic Indira Gandhi Indoor Stadium at New Delhi, bright arc lights hung high up from the ceiling, sharing the space with hundreds of balloons. Colourful flags of several dozen nations dwarfed the tables below. And in an arena circled by 25,000 orange and brown plastic bucket seats, men and women from every corner of the world played with total devotion. But by the end of the first week of the 39th World Table Tennis Championships, it had become evident that the festival was Chinese.

In the all-important team championships—they provide the best indication of a nation's standing because individual events can have many upsets—Chinese men brushed aside Sweden 5-0 while their women had to work a little harder to dispose of South Korea 3-0 in the finals. Their total domination showed in the fact that the Chinese men dropped just one match—to England—on their way to their fourth consecutive title. The women were bested in only two doubles matches—by Japan and Yugoslavia—while claiming their seventh consecutive team title in a run that began in Calcutta in 1975. They were faster, had a more deadly variety of spin, and were simply mentally and physically more agile than the competition.

It was a frustrating experience for the Swedish men who ended as runners-up for the third time running. In 1983 at Tokyo and in 1985 at Gothenburg they had been put in their place in the finals with the same ease. Worse, it was the strongest team that Sweden had fielded in recent years: Jan-Ove Waldner is ranked fifth in the world; Erik Lindh, Mikael Appelgreen and Jorgen Persson are seeded 8th, 9th and 10th. But it just wasn't good enough against a country that—in Jiang Jialiang, Chen Longcan, Teng Yi and Chen Xinhua—has the top four players in the game today. China's huge base of players—running into many millions—and elaborate coaching system won the day again.

But the tournament went beyond just winning the title. What makes this championship different is that instead of being knocked out and dismissed, teams keep playing each other to decide standings right down to the very last—a privilege that went this time to the Isle of Man among men and Ecuador among women. The primary aim for most nations, therefore, is at most to create an upset or two and move a few ranks up the ladder in this fiercely competitive game.

B MATHUR/PATRIOT

(Top) The China-Sweden tie and China's Jiao Zhimin in the finals: easy wins

This meet also provided a better chance to create upsets because there was a new format. In the past, the top 16 teams formed an exclusive group in which they played one another. This time, following complaints from many members of the International Table Tennis Federation (ITTF), the game plan was altered so that the weaker teams would have a chance to play the top teams.

And that upsets are possible was proved by a number of teams. But the most striking was undoubtedly the progress of West German (from 17th to 7th place) and Taiwan men (from 18th to 8th). The Germans even came close to beating the Swedes, but went down 4-5. Georg Bohm, who doesn't figure in the world's top 50, won all his three matches against the Swedes—a fine indication of how big names can go tumbling.

Unheralded and tiny Taiwan (population: 20 million), playing in only its second world tournament, should also be a country to watch in the coming years. Says coach Lin Chung Hsiung: "We are a little surprised ourselves—we had come here aiming only to get into the last 16." But the Taiwanese teams are young—most of them are students—and should do even better after more international exposure. The women almost upset Asiad winners, South Korea.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The disappointment of the tournament were the South Korean men who, after their upset win over the Chinese in the Seoul Asiad last year, were widely tipped as the team most likely to trouble the Chinese, but only succeeded in retaining their ninth position. The schedule of the championship can be extremely gruelling—players can end up playing up to 18 games at full stretch on a single day. And it was this that spelt their doom, although they had in their side Kim Wan and Kim Ki Taek, seeded 12th and 13th, and the redoubtable Yoo Nam Kyu, seeded 21st but the hero of Seoul.

South Korea went all out against Sweden at the league stage matches so as to avoid meeting China before the finals. It developed into the tie of the tournament—with the Swedes pulling back from a 2-4 deficit to win at 5-4 in four-and-a-half hours of tense and acrobatic table tennis—but the exertion, and the weight of the loss, left the Asiad champions drained. Back at table after a cruelly short gap of two-and-a-half hours, the Koreans proved easy meat for the unfancied Taiwanese, who swamped them 5-0.

The holding of a championship at home obviously doesn't seem to do the Indians much good. In Calcutta in 1975, their performance had been average, and this time the men slipped from 12th to 16th place and the women from 19th to 26th, the lowest they have gone in more than 20 years. Oddly, the Table Tennis Federation of India (TTFI), which went to such great lengths to organise the tourney, did no more than arrange for foreign coaches for the Indians for a totally inadequate period of just a few weeks.

Both teams exhibited their total dependence on one player to deliver the goods. In the past, the burden for women had been borne by Indu Puri, and with her exit, it was left to Monalisa Barua from Assam to salvage some prestige on the way downhill. The new national title-holder Varsha Chulani obviously has much to learn.

Among men, national champion Kamlesh Mehta was the only redeeming feature. In the early stage, against lowly Egypt, Palestine and Finland, the other Indians seemed to do well but the moment they entered the big-boy league, they were totally at sea and couldn't win so much as a single match. Against North Korea, Mehta was the only winner, beating 44th seed Gun Sang Li.

Mehta: one-man opposition

Against Japan, Mehta alone beat 19th seed Kiyoshi Saito and Hiroshi Shibutani. Against both Austria and Hungary, Mehta won one of his two matches though he did fail against the USSR. Says Mehta: "Being the main player in the side means learning to bear the tension of people's expectations." Mehta says he can't see India's standing improving dramatically unless the coaching system—like China—learns to pick players at an early age. Says he: "I, for instance, came to know what coaching meant only after I turned 20."

The tournament was important also for events away from the table. It signalled the first serious challenge to ITTF President Roy Evans, who has held the post for 20 years. Evans, who is seen by many Asian members as not only too old but also dictatorial, is up against Japan's Ichiro Ogimura, a former world champion and one of the best coaches in the game today. The election can prove important to table tennis which, over the last few years, has seen a serious discussion on the standardisation of bat surfaces to prevent any player from gaining an unfair advantage.

The crowd turnout on most days was dismaying, except during the important matches, when a few thousand people were present. But says I.S. Bindra, TTFI president for over four years: "I am not disappointed because Delhi doesn't have any sports culture. But we decided on the capital instead of Calcutta—where the crowds would have been big—because this is part of the process of popularising the game."

What did upset Bindra, however, was Doordarshan's attitude. Although television coverage of the championships was spread over 56 hours, Doordarshan refused to pay any money to the organisers for the coverage. Bindra says the TTFI wanted Rs 35 lakh, an amount equivalent to what organisers in the last two championships at Tokyo and Guthenburg had received from their domestic networks for TV rights. Doordarshan's argument, according to Bindra, was that their coverage had already meant that the TTFI could collect more from advertisers within the arena, hence there was no need for them to pay for TV rights as well. Says Bindra: "Across the world, TV companies pay organisers for rights for televising any sport. Doordarshan can get away with it because we can't even haul them before the Monopolies Commission. If it carries on like this, Doordarshan will successfully kill not just table tennis, but even a popular game like cricket within the next decade." The state of Indian sport is bad enough without television jumping in to ruin the finances of the already poor sports associations.

—SREEKANT KHANDEKAR

FORM IV (See Rule 8)

1. PLACE OF PUBLICATION	:	NEW DELHI
2. PERIODICITY OF ITS PUBLICATION	:	FORTNIGHTLY
3. PRINTER'S NAME	:	CHANDER M. RAI
WHETHER CITIZEN OF INDIA?	:	YES
IF FOREIGNER, STATE THE COUNTRY OF ORIGIN	:	DOES NOT APPLY
4. PUBLISHER'S NAME	:	CHANDER M. RAI
WHETHER CITIZEN OF INDIA?	:	YES
IF FOREIGNER, STATE THE COUNTRY OF ORIGIN	:	DOES NOT APPLY
ADDRESS	:	LIVING MEDIA INDIA PRIVATE LIMITED, K-BLOCK, CONNAUGHT CIRCUS, NEW DELHI-110001.
5. EDITOR'S NAME	:	AROON PURIE
WHETHER CITIZEN OF INDIA?	:	YES
IF FOREIGNER, STATE THE COUNTRY OF ORIGIN	:	DOES NOT APPLY
ADDRESS	:	K-BLOCK, CONNAUGHT CIRCUS, NEW DELHI-110001.
6. NAMES AND ADDRESSES OF INDIVIDUALS WHO OWN THE NEWSPAPER AND PARTNERS AND SHAREHOLDERS HOLDING MORE THAN ONE PER CENT OF THE TOTAL CAPITAL.	:	OWNER LIVING MEDIA INDIA PRIVATE LIMITED, K-BLOCK, CONNAUGHT CIRCUS, NEW DELHI-110001.

SHAREHOLDERS HOLDING MORE THAN ONE PER CENT OF THE TOTAL CAPITAL:

1. MR AROON PURIE, A-6, PALAM MARG, VASANT VIHAR, NEW DELHI.
2. MR AROON PURIE, (HUF), A-6, PALAM MARG, VASANT VIHAR, NEW DELHI.
3. MRS REKHA PURIE, A-6, PALAM MARG, VASANT VIHAR NEW DELHI.
4. MASTER ANKOOR PURIE, (MINOR), A-6, PALAM MARG, VASANT VIHAR, NEW DELHI.
5. MRS MANDIRA PURIE FAWCETT, 5, CARLOW AVENUE, NEPEAN, ONTARIO K2 G O P 9, CANADA.
6. MRS MADHU P. TREHAN, APARTMENT-11 K, 20 EAST, 9TH STREET, NEW YORK, N.Y. 10003, USA.
7. THE ALL INDIA INVESTMENT CORPN. PVT. LTD., K-BLOCK, CONNAUGHT CIRCUS, NEW DELHI.

I, CHANDER M. RAI, HEREBY DECLARE THAT THE PARTICULARS GIVEN ABOVE ARE TRUE TO THE BEST OF MY KNOWLEDGE AND BELIEF.

DATED: 1ST MARCH, 1987

sd/- CHANDER M. RAI
SIGNATURE OF PUBLISHER

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Gone are the days when you had to compromise on insulation specifications

Glass wool insulating mats, conforming to latest International standards and years ahead of existing Indian technology, is now brought to you by Twiga.

Only Twiga Insul gives you better than ever before thermal properties because of low resin content as also a completely resin-free alternative: advantage of technical collaboration with Mehr & Held of West Germany.

Cut back your energy expenses by specifying Twiga Insul Glass Wool or stitched White Wool to reduce heat loss or heat gain. Cost effective, highly resilient, compression packed to minimise handling and transportation charges Twiga Insul is available in a wide range of density, width and thickness to suit all requirement.

TWIGA INSUL

Excellence in Insulation

U.P. TWIGA FIBERGLASS LIMITED

NEW DELHI: 3, Community Centre, East of Kailash, Tel: 6432738, 6415865, Telex: 31-66326 TWGA IN AHMEDABAD: 5, Shreeji Ware Housing Estate, Sarkhej Road, Narol. Tel: 446873 BANGALORE: 539, 16th Cross, Indira Nagar IInd Stage, Tel: 562444 BOMBAY: 502, Tulsiani Chambers, Plot No. 212, Block III, Backbay Reclamation, Nariman Point, Tel: 233951, 233075, Telex: 11-2190 TWGA IN. CALCUTTA: Flat No. 16, 6th Floor, Shantiniketan, 8, Camac Street, Tel: 449295, Telex: 21-2972 TWGA IN MADRAS: 5/B, Lakshmi Bhavan, 609, Mount Road. Tel: 478418. Telex: 41-6735 TWGA IN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

IMAGES–UPTFL/87/001

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"Our one day internationals have 5 Rasna intervals."

Mudra:A:PI: 3353

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Rasna

SO ORANGIE-ORANGIE!

INDIA'S LARGEST SELLING SOFT DRINK CONCENTRATE

Manufactured by: Pioneer Industries, Kadi, Ahmedabad-382 01X

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

SEMI CASUALS BY TSF

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Your feet deserve 'em!

The above diagram shows the anatomy of the human foot and various stress points during natural walking motions.

TSF shoes are a combination of workmanship and German technology to give you the comfort not only today but year after year. Because they improve with age. Our Genuine Leathers are so soft and supple that they serve as your second skin. They breathe and sweat the way you do. Designed after careful analysis of the foot anatomy and stress points, they are made to fit the way you are. And flexibility—you can roll them over but they will still remain in shape.

Finally, Polyurethane soles formed by Direct injection Moulding technique are not only resistant to abrasion but also add a little spring in your step. Above all, we defy you to separate them. The result-Sheer magic. You will never feel you were on your feet all day.

TSF

TEJ INTERNATIONAL PVT. LTD.
E-393, Greater Kailash-II
New Delhi-110 048 Ph.: 6444614

CC-0. [illegible] ain. Gurukul [illegible] Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"Why is Qantas the best airline for the business traveller?"

"I can see you don't travel much."

Qantas was the first airline to offer the businessman priority treatment and superior service. And we still do.

Which is why businessmen choose from our 3 non-stop flights from Bombay each week to London or Sydney.

Whether you fly First Class or Business Class you'll enjoy a separate check-in and use of the Captains Club Lounge which will smooth the way before you board our comfortable 747's.

After enjoying your meal you can snooze in the fully reclining First Class Sleeper Chair or put your feet up on the built-in legrest in Business Class. (Of course, vegetarian meals are available. Please advise at time of booking.)

Choose Qantas for your next business trip and call your travel agent or nearest Qantas office at Bombay Tel: 2020410, Calcutta Tel: 440718, Madras Tel: 478649, New Delhi Tel: 351434.

QANTAS
THE AUSTRALIAN AIRLINE

QF 68/MDA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

PRASHANT PANJIAR

Stony cinder track: poorly maintained

U.P. SPORTS COLLEGE

On the Wrong Track

FOR months on end now, sports has taken a back seat at the prestigious Uttar Pradesh Sports College, Lucknow, one of five such institutions in the country. Activity at the college—which has given rise to several international players—has been crippled by a prolonged agitation by the school's 75-odd teachers. Their main target is Anand Shukla, a former Bihar cricketer and principal since 18 months. The school—mistakenly called a college—imparts free education to a selected lot from class nine to the plus two stage and provides them specialised training in cricket, football, hockey, volleyball and athletics.

Since the agitation began last September, the teachers have submitted four memorandums to Chief Minister Bir Bahadur Singh. In one of these they even said that they had been threatened by the henchmen of a known mafia don who knew Shukla. And early last month, the teachers decided to boycott the school's sports day functions and wore black badges in protest.

Caught in the mess are 227 students, who sympathise with their teachers but can afford to say nothing. Apart from the hockey team, which continues to win laurels, the teams in the other disciplines have been doing disastrously in tournaments across the country. The school's seven permanent coaches have a long list of successes under their caps. But there has been little to add after 1985.

Inevitably, the issue has also been politicised. Singh was all set to act against Shukla—on the basis of the report of a committee set up by him—when he realised that at least four of his ministers backed the principal. But pressure against Shukla continues to mount too. The state units of the Youth Congress(I) and the party's students wing—the National Students Union of India—have also entered the fray and Singh has now hastened to assure them of action soon.

Shukla: under attack

The trouble began last August when a dozen opposition MLAs submitted a memorandum to the chief minister alleging gross irregularities in the school's finances. But Singh took note only after the school employees came out with their list of charges against Shukla and Office Superintendent, Zahid Husain. The major ones among them are:

► Illegal awarding of work contracts worth over Rs 50 lakh in the last two years to a single contractor. This, when there is a board resolution against getting work done on a contract-basis.

► Large-scale bungling in mess funds. According to the school's Medical Officer, Jai Singh, though government funds provide for a daily diet expenditure of Rs 12.50 per student, the diet provided is worth only Rs 8. While the students' daily intake should be 4,500 calories, it is actually only 3,000 calories.

► Unscientific and faulty purchase of equipment, against the coaches' advice. This explains the purchase of a brand of football banned by the All India Football Federation.

Shukla says that he has the authority to award contracts, that the diet is not substandard and that the coaches' recommendations have been followed in all cases, except where the brand demanded was not available. He claims the coaches have turned against him because he wanted to discipline them and because he has increased their workload. The head also claims that he has substantially improved the state of the school's playgrounds.

But Shukla's claim is doubted by the school groundsman, Sheo Dan Singh, who says that but for the hockey ground, "the others are in a bad way and not even fit for practising." Students also substantiate the allegations about poor ground conditions, substandard equipment and poor diet. The school has the only cinder athletic track in Uttar Pradesh but the track has too many big pebbles and is as hard as a rock. Said Shri Shanker Uttam, an 18-year-old student: "Running on this track is ruining my career. I have developed a bone injury near the foot and swelling of my calf muscles by practising on it."

The state Government spends more than Rs 30 lakh every year on the institution. That should be good enough reason for it to intervene and bring an end to the mess. For starters, the Government should ensure that a regular accounts officer is appointed for the school. Right now, Husain is doubling as the accounts officer-cum-head clerk-cum-office superintendent. More importantly, only state intervention can save the students' careers from being ruined for no fault of theirs.

—DILIP AWASTHI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

If tones of grey can say it all,
nature would have never created colour.
Indu understands.

HPF brings you colour.
Perfectly true to life colour.
With Indu Colour Film IR 100 and Indu Colour Paper FP 8.

INDU

Hindustan Photo Films Mfg. Co. Ltd.,
(A Government of India Enterprise)
Indunagar, Udhagamandalam 643 005.
Marketing Headquarters : Subramanian Buildings,
Post Box No. 2771, No. 1, Club House Road, Madras - 600 002

Sista's

LET'S TAK

LET'S TAKE TH

SIZ

NU

DU

That's right. Dunlop's turnover from tyre operations is the largest in India. The undisputed No.1. And rapidly growing.

Take the international scene. Take the published list of the world's top 30 tyre and rubber companies. It has only one Indian company listed. Dunlop India. No small achievement. No.1 in India—the world says so.

Take range. No.1 again. Farmer or Jet fighter. Car tyres or Earthmover tyres. It's Dunlop all the way.

Take Industrial Products. No.1 in its field. And planning to stay that way. The first to manufacture hi-tech steel cord belting in India.

Dunlop. Started No.1. Remains No.1.

DUNLOP

SIZE
NUMBER ONE

Dunlop is Dunlop. Always ahead.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

NEROLAC

BEAUTY

NEROLAC

PROTECTION

Exquisite colours to drape your home in beauty. With the added assurance of Nerolac protection. To keep your walls safe from the corroding effects of weather and time.

NEROLAC
ACRYLIC EMULSION
Always a shade better

everest/86/GNP/393

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

TEHRI DAM

Under Fire

THE Tehri valley in the Garwhal Himalayas has for decades been the ideal advertisement for peace and rustic tranquility. But the valley, and its inhabitants, are now hostage to progress, trapped in the all-too-familiar cross-fire between doomsayer ecologists and officials in charge of the ambitious Tehri Dam Project (TDP).

Located at the confluence of the Bhagirathi and Bhilangana in Uttar Pradesh, the valley has been engulfed in controversy as the proposed Rs 2,200-crore project, mooted back in the '60s, became a reality after the Soviet agreement to provide financial aid. After commissioning, the dam is expected to generate approximately 6,000 million units of power to supplement the present state-wide generation of 14,000 million units. It will also irrigate 270,000 hectares of land and act as a flood-prevention cushion with its capacity to store water during the peak discharge season.

But notwithstanding its obvious benefits in a state starved for power, the proposal has come under attack from ecologists who have even filed a petition against the project in the Supreme Court. Their objection is that the project is situated in a seismically-sensitive area and the possibility of a major earthquake translates the TDP into a high-risk venture, specially for the inhabitants of the area. Charges Prem Singh, a journalist and social worker who is spearheading the campaign to stop the project: "Ecological considerations have been largely ignored. The construction of the dam is a political decision."

Singh and the ecologists who echo his strident objections have collected an impressive mound of evidence to support their stand. One prominent exhibit is the letter to the Government written by Sunil Roy, chairman of the Working Group set up by the Department of Environment to study the ecological consequences of the project. The letter says: "I have from the outset held the view that work should be halted on Tehri Dam but lacked an adequate data base." It adds the query: "Who will be ready to respond to future generations for the most appalling consequences of any possible error in planning, or miscalculation, or the incalculable disasters following a major earthquake in the area?" Roy, and ecologists opposed to the project, base their views on previous project surveys. One, conducted in 1978, concluded: "It is not possible to forecast as to when a catastrophic earthquake may occur in the region but it is a potential seismic area...it (TDP) would be a very risky venture."

AJAY GOYAL

Tehri project site: seismic zone

Scientists involved in the project insist that ecological and other safety considerations have not been ignored.

Despite the ominous rumbles, officials and scientists involved in the project insist that ecological and other safety considerations have not been ignored. Says M.M.L.Khanna, TDP's chief engineer: "Experts from various research and technical institutions have studied the project from every angle and the decision to go ahead with it was taken only after all due considerations. We also recognise the importance of ecological factors and at no place have we compromised on this ground or taken any risk in the design".

Other experts concur. Says Dr L.S. Srivastava, a geologist and professor at Department of Earthquake Engineering of the University of Roorkee: "There is no place on the face of the earth where you can rule out the possibility of an earthquake. And the design of the Tehri Project incorporates all these factors with certain in-built safety arrangements based on state-of-the-art technology available in the world today."

But another potential earthquake is the prickly question of rehabilitation of the inhabitants of Tehri town and the 23 villages around it which will be submerged in the reservoir, apart from the 72 other villages which will be submerged partially at the maximum flood level of the dam affecting about 8,600 families. Says Prem Dutt Dobhal, a Tehri resident: "The people who are being ousted are being paid compensation in instalments, making it impossible for them to go ahead with the construction of new houses."

The authorities admit that resettlement is not very satisfactory. Says A.K.Das, state power secretary: "The project has suffered in the past because of non-availability of funds which should not be any constraint now. We are facing certain problems at the moment but the Government is committed to provide acceptable alternatives to people." Adds S.S.Panti, commissioner of Garhwal who, as ex-officio Administrator of TDP, looks after the rehabilitation: "The Government is exploring the possibility of acquiring more lands in Dehradun and Saharanpur districts but large chunks of land are not available so easily. Also, the Government thinks that providing the evicted a similar physical environment would help them resettle better and that is the reason we are looking for land in Shivalik hills."

But till then, the TDP, already delayed, will obviously continue to be submerged in controversy and mud-slinging, specially considering the fact that its ultimate destiny still precariously hangs on the decision that the Supreme Court will take on the petition.

—SHEKHAR KUMAR JHA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

For 50 years,
We've been making your life a lot sweeter.

One of the oldest names in sugar is still one of the foremost sugar mills today. Hindusthan Sugar Mills Ltd. A company dedicated to productive achievement...aspiring towards even further growth.

bajaj group

THE HINDUSTHAN SUGAR MILLS LTD.
Golagokarannath, Dist. Kheri, U.P.
Regd. Office: 226, Bajaj Bhawan, Nariman Point, Bombay-400 021.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

OWN A HOUSE & Much More!

"Much More" includes the things much more indeed. Almost everything to meet basic human needs besides ROTI, KAPDA aur MAKAN. We at SAHARA do appreciate that the luxuries of yesterdays have now to cope the pace with space-age, become the necessities today, on indigenous part of anybody's life. May it be a well furnished air-conditioned house, car and other auto vehicles, T.V., Refrigerator. Domestic appliances or Agricultural equipments to foster the growth of food grains.

Golden key is a kind of project which gets you all this and much more— Rs. 50,000/- Death help to the nominee Rs. 4,000/- Maturity payment direct from Post office/Bank Rs. 2,500/- Worth articles as Guarantee prize thousands of easy Housing loans and numerous opportunities to own A-Z articles of Convenience again and again.

And this is all for Rs. 2,500/- only to be deposited once (you can DEPOSIT this in very Convenient instalments too) kindly ask for further details from your nearest SAHARA INDIA LTD office.

SAHARA INDIA LTD.
COMMAND OFFICE : FORSYTH ROAD, LALBAGH, LUCKNOW
TELS : 31977, 34885, 73062, 71260, 72232, 43582, GRAM: SAHARAINDA TELEX : 0535-287 INDA-IN.

Zonal & Sector Offices : Lucknow, Gorakhpur, Delhi, Bombay, Calcutta, Patna, Bhopal, Ahmedabad, Jaipur, Hyderabad, Azamgarh, Gola, Faizabad, Bahraich, Sultanpur, Bareilly, Muzzafarpur, Siwan, Batia Bokaro, Ranchi, Dhanbad, Indore, Raipur, Trivendrum, Bangalore, Baroda, Ajmer, Allahabad, Kanpur, Basti, Deoria Khalilabad, Kasia, Padrauna, Dibrugarh & Port Blair.

You are welcome to any of our 175 offices in capital cities & major towns in 13 states.

BECOME A GOLDEN MEMBER TODAY and Own All These

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CONTRACEPTIVES

Making it Easier

NEWLY-weds Kamala and Mohan strolled across to their local gynaecologist to consult her on one of the oldest problems in the world: which was the best contraceptive to use? The doctor's friendly smile put them at ease.

Opening a drawer she removed a strip of tablets and said: "Now you don't have to take a pill daily. You can take it once a week." Then displaying a loaded syringe, she added: "If Kamala took a shot of this she would be protected for two months."

Kamala wasn't keen on having her arms jabbed so regularly. So the doctor pulled out two tiny rods from a drawer and said: "These are injected under the forearm painlessly and could protect you for around three years. It's ideal for spacing your children."

Kamala wanted to know why is it that all contraceptives are designed for women only. Pulling out a strip of tablets, the doctor said: "Now we've got one for males too."

The doctor hadn't finished. Taking out a vial marked Birth Control Vaccine she informed: "This makes women immune to pregnancy for a year and is undergoing testing. We are also testing a vaccine for men. In a year or two they may be ready for use."

Centchroman
Usage: Weekly oral pill (females)
Protection: As long as taken
Side-effects: Delayed menses
Availability: Awaiting Drugs Controller's clearance

LOOKS too good to be true? But even as Indians continue to be the world's most prolific baby-makers, new imported contraceptives and research underway in Indian laboratories promise a wider range of birth control methods for the country's 120 million couples. Hardly three years from now a spate of contraceptives will hit the market and launch what scientists optimistically describe as a "second birth control revolution".

Several of the newer methods are already in advanced stages of testing. Awaiting clearance for commercial distribution is a weekly pill called Centchroman developed by the Central Drug Research Institute (CDRI). The institute claims it as effective as the oral pill with no major side-effects.

Women visiting primary health centres in 15 medical colleges across the country are being injected with the imported contraceptive Norethisterone Enanthate (NET-EN). The drug, which protects women from pregnancy for two months, has already been cleared by the Indian Council of Medical Research (ICMR) after extensive trials. Meanwhile the Supreme Court, acting on writ petitions filed by three women's organisations, has to decide whether the Government was ethically right in conducting the trials.

Another imported contraceptive, Norplant II, which is embedded in a woman's forearm, is in an advanced stage of clinical trial. Said to have a life-span of three years, initial results indicate that Norplant II has no serious side-effects. The ICMR hopes to have it cleared by next year.

More significantly, Indian research institutes are currently testing a host of new indigenously devis contraceptives. The National Institute Immunology in New Delhi has develope an anti-pregnancy vaccine. Recently initiated trials on 121 women volunte at five centres to test its efficacy. T National Institute of Health and Fam Welfare (NIHFW) is awaiting clearance f a multi-centre trial on a male contrace tive pill. In Bangalore the Indian Instit of Science (IIS) is working on a ma contraceptive vaccine.

Most of the research on these contr ceptives has been going on for more than decade now but it received fresh impet when a National Programme on R search on Human Reproduction w launched in 1980. The work on contr ceptives began to be co-ordinated and research institutes were set up to evalu the effect of the drugs being develope "We have never been on such a go wicket," says Badri Saxena, ICMR's seni deputy director-general and coordinat of the national programme.

CPA & TA
Usage: Oral pill plus injection (males)
Protection: As long as taken
Side-effects: Not known
Availability: Awaiting clinical trials

The resurgence of contraceptive research in the country hasn't come a too soon. With only 34 per cent of Indi couples using some kind of protecti India's population curve shows no sig of dipping. Further, existing methods contraception have not gained the m acceptance needed to make the fam planning programme a success.

While the use of Nirodh has show marked increase (current sales: 300 m lion), it is still not the best bet. The int uterine devices, popular in the '60s, n have hardly 4 per cent couples us them. The oral pill is yet to catch on. A sterilisation is only popular among th who already have an average of 5 children. Sadly, those sterilised form t thirds of the couples that the Governm claims are protected.

Realising this, the Family Wel

NET-EN
Usage: Bi-monthly injection (females)
Protection: Two months
Side-effects: Irregular menses
Availability: With gynaecologists

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Ministry conceived a new strategy last year. With 4.5 million couples—potential baby-makers—being added every year the Government shifted its emphasis to spacing of children. For this it is looking out for better contraceptives that are safe, simple to use, easy to distribute and cheap. As a health official said: "We would grab any safe contraceptive, Indian or foreign."

The search for longer acting contraceptives has led the Government to import NET-EN and Norplant II. NET-EN is mixed with an oil base that allows only a slow release of the drug in the bloodstream. In Norplant II, the agents are stored in tiny non-toxic rods and released in low doses for up to three to five years making the women infertile during these periods. The major problem with these types of drugs is that around 40 per cent of the users suffer from irregular menstrual bleeding leading to high drop-out rates. And currently the country's health services are not adequate enough to administer and monitor their effects on a mass scale.

But Indian researchers are developing contraceptives that are more suited to local conditions. CDRI's weekly pill is a good example. It was known that the hormone estrogen prepares the uterus for pregnancy. In the '60s CDRI synthesised centchroman, a compound that neutralised estrogen's action on the uterus, making it hostile to a fertilised ovum and thereby preventing pregnancy.

Initially it was developed as a 'morning after' pill. While it did work well when high doses were administered, two women showed signs of developing ovarian cysts. The cysts disappeared when the drug was withdrawn but the doubts remained.

Using extremely low doses the CDRI launched the multi-centre trial in 1982 on 648 women. The drug proved highly effective. The drop-out rates were low and only 27 of the 648 women became pregnant—normal for such tests. The only side-effect noticed was that a few women had delayed menses. However, none of them developed ovarian cysts.

The advantage with Centchroman is that, unlike the pill, it doesn't use steroids to prevent pregnancy thereby avoiding its negative effects. But the Drug Controller of India wants to see whether the drug has any serious side-effects if given for long periods. The drug has an interesting spin-off. When women suffering from breast cancer were given the drug a quarter of them showed a marked reduction in tumour growth. Tests are being done to develop it as an anti-cancer drug.

The male contraceptive pill developed by the NIHFW uses a compound, Cyproterone acetate(CPA), to curb male fertility. Initially the major problem was that the drug seemed to lower the level of testosterone, the primary male hormone, leading to a loss of libido. Researchers at NIHFW then gave volunteers fortnightly injections of synthetically prepared testosterone to compensate for any loss of libido. The tests were successful but the efficacy of the pill will not be proved unless multi-centre trials are initiated which is what the NIHFW has asked for. Says Professor Somnath Roy, director, NIHFW: "Developing a male contraceptive is difficult but we are getting closer to it."

BUT probably the most promising contraceptives being developed are in an area where angels fear to tread: immunological control. As one of its leading researcher Professor G.P. Talwar, director, National Institute of Immunology, says: "Population is a problem of epidemic proportions. Vaccines have been used to control such breakouts. What is needed is a vaccine against birth." The trick is to use the body's natural defence mechanism to block the reproduction process.

Anti-pregnancy vaccine
Usage: Yearly injection (females)
Protection: One year
Side-effects: Not known
Availability: Under clinical trials

The institute plans to do exactly that with the anti-pregnancy vaccine. When conception occurs the fertilised ovum secretes a hormone called human chorionic gonadotropin (HCG). HCG helps the ovum to implant itself on the uterus where it grows into a foetus. If the body's immune system could be manipulated to produce antibodies against HCG then the pregnancy could be prevented. But the problem was getting the body to fight its own secretions.

Talwar hit upon the novel idea of linking HCG with the tetanus toxide vaccine and fooling the body into developing immunity against both. But when clinical trials started in 1976, not all the women seemed to generate the same level of antibody reaction. The trials were stopped and Talwar worked on better ways of stimulating anti-body response to the vaccine. Now human trials have been initiated again.

In Bangalore, Professor N.R. Moudgal of the IIS is in an advanced stage of developing a male fertility vaccine. Moudgal's vaccine blocks the action of one of the hormones that stimulates sperm production. His extensive studies on monkeys have shown encouraging results and Moudgal is awaiting permission to test humans.

Indian researchers are working on other leads too. In Bombay the Institute for Reproduction and Research is working on a unisex pill. The research team is concentrating on perfecting the pill to control male fertility. Their method is to control the protein, inhibin, which is known to regulate glandular secretions necessary for sperm production in the testes. Tests on animals have shown encouraging results and trials on humans have been planned for next year. The institute is also

Norplant II
Usage: Sub-dermal implant (females)
Protection: Three years
Side-effects: Irregular menses
Availability: Under clinical trials

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Does a Rs.9000/- Electronic Typewriter really belong in an office?

The Manual does.

A Rs. 9000/- Electronic Typewriter is nothing more than a portable version of the Manual Typewriter.
In fact it is a lot less.
A lot less rugged.
A lot less economical.
A lot more expensive to buy.
It costs twice as much as a Manual.
Apart from high maintenance costs, you pay almost 2 rupees per page
as operational cost.
It is definitely not built for everyday office use.
It best serves as a personal typewriter.
Nothing more.

The Manual on the other hand is a lot more.
A lot more rugged.
Used for over 20 years.
A lot more economical.
Maintenance and operational costs are negligible.
So before you get carried away by "dirt cheap" electronic marvels, weigh the pros and cons carefully.
The Manual is still the most practical, hardworking, sensible office machine for most of your needs that gives you a lot more than you bargained for — not less.
So choose wisely.

The Manual: It's a sturdy machine.

Issued by the Indian Typewriter Manufacturers' Association

ULKA-ITMA-2-87

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

working on a nasal spray for women as a substitute for the common oral pill.

But the immunological approach is fraught with risks. No one really knows the long-term impact of playing with the body's natural defence system and the health hazards it poses. In fact, contraceptive research the world over is plagued by big question marks. The road to a safe and effective contraceptive is long, arduous and taxing to most governments. Results are slow by the very nature of the field.

Since contraceptives are something that people would have to use right through their reproductive life tests have to be extremely stringent. The new drugs have to be first tested on animals to see whether they work without any harmful side-effects. Then a series of human clinical trials have to be done that may take a minimum of five years before the drug is cleared for commercial use.

The ethical aspect is crucial because any failure on volunteers or on mass users would lead to unwanted pregnancies and serious health hazards. Irked by repeated government queries to show quick results, NIHFW's Roy snaps: "You tell me that there won't be a population problem in 1995 and I'll stop work on contraceptive research right now."

The moment of conception when a sperm enters an ovum

Contraceptive research the world over is plagued by big question marks. Results are slow.

While there is optimism that some of the contraceptives being developed in the country may work there is an equally strong possibility that many may fail to make the grade. But, as the late Indira Gandhi told the WHO Assembly in 1981: "Family planning programmes are awaiting a big breakthrough. Without a safe, preferably oral, drug which women and men take, no amount of government commitment and political determination will avail." The search for better contraceptives must go on.

—RAJ CHENGAPPA with bureau reports

THE PILL

Hard Sell

IN New Delhi's Nirman Bhawan, health officials are putting the final touches to the most massive promotional campaign since Nirodh was launched. Their goal: by end-1990 more than three million women are to be wooed into using the pill.

Although the pill was introduced into the family planning programme in 1974, it hasn't caught on in a big way as yet. But with the popularity of intra-uterine devices and sterilisation methods remaining stagnant the Government has singled out the pill for special treatment.

It will be marketed under a new name, Mala (the pills in the packet look like a row of beads) and sold at a subsidised price of Rs 2 for each course. Several private manufacturers have been given licences to manufacture and market the pill under the same brand name. Meanwhile, health workers all over the country are been given special training on how to educate people to use the pill.

But the decision to popularise the pill is controversial. There are still fears that prolonged use of the pill leads to cervical cancer, hypertension and heart disease. The drop-out rates are high because of its side-effects like nausea, vomiting and irregular menstrual bleeding. The negative effects of the pill on women in developed countries is well-researched. But there is hardly any research to show whether it would be safe for undernourished Indian women. Nor has its effect been studied on lactating women.

The oral pills in new package

Introduction of the pill is being backed by the Indian Council of Medical Research (ICMR), the country's premier medical research institute. Citing research done abroad ICMR experts say that the pill is high risk for only those who use it regularly for more than five years, are over 35 years of age, have complaints like diabetes and hypertension or are smokers. The studies also show that women who use the pill for prolonged periods do not have a high rate of breast cancer but run a marginal risk of getting cervical cancer.

But senior Health Ministry officials point out that the decision to introduce the pill has to be weighed against other considerations. Teenage pregnancy is on the rise, adversely affecting the health of both mother and child and leading to high death rates. Multiple pregnancies, especially for women above 30, are also known to be extremely harmful. As one official said: "The risk of not taking a contraceptive like the pill is as great as using one. So it's for the women to choose."

—RAJ CHENGAPPA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Faces that dreams are made of are touched with Special magic

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

aj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Millions of babies are born every year. And then, one of them grows up to be a Marilyn Monroe, an Ingrid Bergman, a Madhubala, a Meena Kumari. Faces that dreams are made of. Faces touched with a special magic. An unmistakable, yet inexplicable glow that sets them apart. The same kind of glow that sets apart walls painted with Special Effects from the walls painted with ordinary plastic emulsion. Because Special Effects is not just a paint but a supreme acrylic wall finish that gives your walls that unmistakable sheen and glow no other plastic emulsion can. It's sheer luxury.
Give your walls a touch of Special Effects and a star is born.

Special Effects

Special magic for your walls.

A premium plastic emulsion paint from Jenson & Nicholson.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

AJANTA PAINTINGS

Monument to Neglect

AJANTA may not be dying yet. But like Venice it is incurably sick. The unique cave paintings of Ajanta and Ellora which, for decades, have awed visitors from all over the world, are rapidly becoming a tragic monument to archaeological neglect. The condition of the famous Buddhist cave paintings has visibly deteriorated over the years and even though the caves—one of the world's oldest monasteries—have now been put on the world heritage list, the historic works of ancient Indian art are being starved of the expert attention they urgently require.

The biggest threat to these ethereal cave paintings—which date over various centuries from the second century onwards—comes from gawking visitors. The 22 isolated caves, situated near the modern-day city of Aurangabad, were originally inhabited by the handful of Buddhist monks who created the paintings. But since 1819, when the caves were accidentally discovered by a British soldier from the Madras army, a flood of people has invaded their serenity.

Today, on an average, the caves are visited by between 3,000 and 5,000 people every day. Not surprisingly, therefore, carbonisation caused by human breath has affected the paintings adversely. An expert committee had limited the number of visitors in the caves to 20 at a time in order to maintain the temperature and humidity at levels which would not damage the paintings. But the rules have not always been strictly adhered to: there are usually more people than the stipulated number and there have even been instances when rather large college groups have barged in.

Worse still, some carry umbrellas or sticks which often leave scratches on the exquisitely painted pillars. The caves are dark and the few attendants present are literally in the dark about what the visitors are doing. In fact, many of the attendants who ought to keep an eye on the paintings are busier playing guides to tourists for that extra buck.

Lights pose yet another danger. Tourists can hire 40 watt bulbs for one and a half hours for certain caves, provided they do not spend more than 15 minutes in each cave and not too long before any one painting. But this rule is observed more in the breach: the lights are focused well beyond the allowed time on the more well-known works like the Black Princess and the apsaras with the famous swaying curve. Ultra-violet rays are harmful to the paintings and make them fade, say restorers. Moreover, visitors bring in dust on their shoes and on their person—adding considerably to the dust already on the paintings. The denuded hill opposite the caves only aggravates the dust problem.

Besides the deterioration caused by age and the callous visitors, there are the more deliberate acts of man damaging the paintings. A few have been destroyed by restoration work. Others have been tampered with by over-zealous restorers. Says a former guide: "I have seen attendants put their own strokes, changing there the expressions, depth and perspective of the paintings in Cave 17. Attendants also clean paintings and in the process rub hard things against them."

Ajanta also has its own painter's sde shellac, a varnish used by Italian expert L. Cecconi who was called to restore the paintings by the Nizam of Hyderabad when the caves were in his care. Over the years, the shellac, which was not uniformly applied, attracted carbon and other matter. It first became brittle and then translucent. Some of the paintings even became chalky. And when the Restorer at the caves; and (right) damaged painting: shoddy work

Photographs by NAMASH

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Bodhisattva Padmapani: crumbling over the years

ack Princess an ous swaying re harmful to t fade, say rest ring in dust person—addi
t already on t hill opposite t e dust proble ation caused ors, there are an damaging een destroyed
s have been ta us restorers. S seen attenda hanging there nd perspective
. Attendants a the process
m." n painter's de by Italian exp led to restore n of Hyderab his care. Over ch was not ted carbon came brittle
e of the paint nd when the

aphs by NAMAS aeological Survey of India (ASI) restors tried to remove this varnish, bits of the int came off with the varnish, leaving ps in the paintings. The Buddhist onks did not paint directly on the walls d ceilings; they painted on a one-inch ick paste of rice, gum, clay and mud hich was applied on the cave surfaces.

th gradual decay of the binding me-rm, chunks of paintings have fallen off.
The paintings have also suffered from certain amount of bio-degradation, used by microbes and spores settling on eir surface. Smoke and beeswax have o altered their tonal value. Insects have ten at the works. Bat excreta has created y designs on the paintings. Unfortuely, only two of the caves have been rigated because there isn't enough
ter. All the caves need to be fumied, according to the experts. The Bagh e paintings in Madhya Pradesh which e from the same period as the Ajanta ntings, have already passed beyond the pale of restoration.

And, then, there are the problems of the archaeological survey men themselves. Nobody wants to go to Ajanta. Because of its location, it is considered the last frontier, a punishment post for the employees of the ASI. The caves are in a sort of wasteland, miles away from normal civic amenities. And for the keepers of one of India's prize possessions, they might as well be at the end of the world. Some years ago the son of a senior chemical assistant, V.R. Mangiraja, was ill and could not be taken to a doctor in time. Mangiraja packed his bags and left.

The best ASI conservationists or restorers are reluctant to be posted there. At present there are two senior chemical assistants, three chemical assistants, one photographer, two modellers, one lower division clerk, two attendants and a deputy superintendent. But there ought to be 10 senior chemical assistants, and the same number of chemical assistants, complain ASI employees at Ajanta.

Says a bachelor technician: "Nobody wants to marry us. The water is not potable. There are no houses, schools, medical facilities or transport....The village is 15 km away and we have to walk to buy vegetables." Adds another: "We live in mud houses which are like stables; they have no proper floors. We have to take leave to go to the bank in Phardapur. There is a doctor in Ajanta but he is not always there and we have to go as far as Jalgaon or even Aurangabad (over 100 km away)."

Under such conditions, it is little wonder that the beauty of the paintings and its historic legacy is being gradually buried under layers of neglect and official apathy. And if the present situation is allowed to continue, it won't be long before the enigmatic smiles on the serene faces of the apsaras are wiped out forever.

—MADHU JAIN in Ajanta

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

From a name that was virtually unknown 8 years ag to one that today 'says it al

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

We have come a long way

We began almost a decade ago with exhaust fans. But we did not see ourselves as just another one-product company. Over the years, our name has gained recognition and as we grew, we diversified. First into cooler kits, followed by water heaters, then ceiling fans. More recently, we introduced 'Big Pop', a handy snackmaker. And this is just the beginning.

Today, our name is trusted by those who have our products at home. And to those who don't need an electrical product immediately, we are a name to look for when they do.

In eight years, we have come a long way.

DURABLE

The name says it all.

Durable Electricals Pvt. Ltd.
Marketing H.O. : B-11/3, Hans Bhawan, Bahadur Shah Zafar Marg,
New Delhi-110 002. Phone : 3317857
Works : 16/5, Mathura Road, Faridabad, Haryana - 121 002.
Phone : 24878

CH-D DEL 3286

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

◆ Imran Khan on your mind? Now have him on your chest. Pakistan's glamorous cricket star is plugging Cinthol soap on his T-shirts for Parmeshwar and hubby Adi Godrej. "Instead of wearing an Adidas T-shirt, why not Cinthol for a friend? I have known them for a long time," he says. In his own country, Imran pushes tea: in a mellifluous voice-over in Punjabi, Sone desh de waste soni chai (Beautiful tea, for a beautiful country).

Imran: a piece of cake

◆ M.F. Husain is not the only barefoot ingenue with paint on his hands. Bhil tribal Bhoora Bai, 26, who has won a Rs 21,000 Madhya Pradesh state award for folk arts is a construction worker. Pouts Bhoora: "I had never painted before. The saheb (J. Swaminathan, noted painter and a director at Bharat Bhavan) said, 'Come and paint. I shall pay you as much as you are earning'." She was feted at Bharat Bhavan, which is ironically, the house she built.

PRASHANT PANJIAR

Sharma and bride with Rajiv

◆ It was a hectic day for Anand Sharma, 34, president of the Indian Youth Congress and Rajya Sabha member; two marriage ceremonies and attending the opening day of Parliament. In the morning, Sharma, and Zenobia, a final year medical student, tied the knot in a civil ceremony; and later, sanctified it in the Arya Samaj way. Sharma's comment: "I am following my leader who believes in national integration." Four years ago, he was asked to help Zenobia, the granddaughter of Ibrahim Aswat, Mahatma Gandhi's comrade in South Africa, get into medical college. He got her to the altar too—and in the bargain a doctor in the house.

◆ Where do all good stars go before they fade out? Parliament of course. That's the big apple they now lust after and Rajesh Khanna is the new debutant in the Congress(I). Bombay grape-vine has Murli Deora, city party chief, spending sleepless nights about The Khanna unseating him. The matinee idol has learned his lines: "I have already tasted name, fame and money; I want to involve myself actively in politics to serve the nation better." And, given his nosediving popularity, Khanna has a good script-writer: "Right from childhood I have had a soft corner for Congress." Of course, the r role might be only a gu appearance.

◆ The tacky taffeta a moth-eaten tails didn't qu do queen and country pro The group of 203 Englishm and women shepherded b British travel agency, throu "Victorian" India for £2,0 each to celebrate the cen nary of the Golden Jubile her rule was to climax at Grand Victorian Ball in "durbar" of a Delhi five-s hotel. They gaped at the lu ied attendants with lances rode in carriages and anti cars. But the other India them shell-shocked: "I not prepared for the pov and the dirt," said one of th

RATHJIT G

Khanna: a new script

Bhoora Bai at work

GHANSHYAM SHARMA

Tourists in "Victorian" India

PRADEEP

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

corner for f course, the e only a gu ky taffeta a ails didn't qu

l country pro 203 Englishm shepherded b agency, throu
India for £2,0 orate the cen
Golden Jubilee to climax at rian Ball in a Delhi fiveaped at the lu RATHUJIT G

a new script

s with lances ages and and other India hocked: "I for the pov said one of th

PRADEEP

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

13004

13003

13002

13001

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Crumbling Citadel

The verdict in last week's assembly elections represents a major set-back to the Congress(I) and Rajiv Gandhi. The electoral reverses will also weaken the prime minister's hold over the party and government. An analysis:

COVER STORY 68

Unresolved Controversy

Though the prime minister finally held a two-hour meeting with the President last week, the cold war in the relationship is far from over. All the signs point to the makings of a major constitutional crisis of the kind never seen before. A report:

SPECIAL REPORT 26

Pandora's Box

The arrest of Indian Express columnist S. Gurumurthy provoked a nation-wide controversy involving an investigation abroad, prime minister's closest advisers, a cabinet minister, a leading press baron and industrialists. An exclusive report.

SPECIAL REPORT 32

Trading in Trusts

The Sarabhais of Ahmedabad have been known as a business family with a difference. But they are now embroiled in tax disputes about some 2,000 family trusts and 400 companies. A look at an extraordinary exercise in tax planning.

INVESTIGATION 94

Hard Lessons

The just-concluded series against Pakistan came as a high-voltage shock to Indian cricket fans. Kapil Dev and his men were outplayed by Pakistan in every department of the game to be beaten for the first time ever on home soil.

SPORTS 102

Setback in the Sky

The failure of the ASLV mission less than a minute after a perfect blast-off is a major blow to India's ambitious space programme. The launch represented a quantum jump in space technology. An analysis of the implications of this set-back.

SCIENCE 112

पुस्तकालय
गुरुकुल कांगड़ी विश्वविद्यालय
हरिद्वार

CONTENTS

COMMENT 11
CAPITALOOK 12
VOICES 18
INDIANOTES 23
SPECIAL REPORT
PM-President Meeting
Unresolved Controversy 26
Express Raids: Pandora's Box 32
CURRENT EVENTS
Gujarat: State of Siege 40
Madhya Pradesh:
The Rape Scandal 41
Tamil Nadu: Deadly Sabotage 47
Tamil Nadu: Rule by Whim 53
Andhra Pradesh: A Close Affair 54
Bihar: Farm Fraud 59
Orissa: Sorry State 60
CRIME
Bombay: King Con 66
COVER STORY
Congress (I): Crumbling Citadel 68
Kerala: Left March 72
Jammu & Kashmir:
A Tarnished Triumph 76
West Bengal: A Startling Sweep 79
Ten Years of Left Front:
A Red Stranglehold 90
Kashipur: Crushing Blow 92
INVESTIGATION
The Sarabhais: Trading in Trusts 94
SPORTS
Cricket: Hard Lessons 102
GLOBE-TROTTING
Johnson Matthey:
The Shamji Comeback 109
SCIENCE
ASLV Programme:
Setback in the Sky 112
TRADE WINDS 121
BUSINESS
Oil India: Absentee Chairman 122
Dempo Steamship: Sinking Ship 128
Export Obligations:
Unrealistic Demands 134
TIDCO: Unusual Track 137
Excise Officials: Stalling Tactics 140
The Markets: See Saw 141
STATENOTES 143
ENVIRONMENT
Karnataka: A Notable Triumph 146
EDUCATION
Bihar: Foul Tongues 151
LAW
Bonded Labour: Loosening the Knot 157
RELIGION
Madhya Pradesh: Nun on the Run 163
BOOKS
Shiva's Shadow 164
EYECATCHERS 168

Cover Illustration by JAR

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SELF-RESPECTIN' COWBOYS WORE NOTHING BUT FRENCH CLOTHES.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya S... Gangotri

One and a half centuries before Pierre Cardin, a French fabric made a name for itself in America.

It was called Serge-de-Nimes, which was a bit much for the rough-talkin' cowboys.

So without much ado, they trimmed the name to 'denim'.

Denim cost next to nothing.

It was dyed blue only because indigo was the cheapest dye around.

And it was tough enough to build a tent.

In fact, that's just what the first consignments of denim were imported for.

Until someone realised it could also make a great pair of jeans.

The rest is history.

The scene now shifts from the wild West to Western India.

Where the Arvind Mills have set up India's first plant to manufacture genuine denim.

The quality of denim used by Levi Strauss, Calvin Klein, Vanderbilt and Co.

Arvind denim will be sold in India and exported to the fashion capitals of the world.

C'est fantastique, n'est pas?

ORIGINAL Arvind DENIM

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

ARVIND. THE LONE RANGER OF ORIGINAL DENIM

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The exquisite flowers tempted even the great Bhima to steal them from the Gods...

The ancient books called it Nandan Kanan, a garden so beautiful, it rightly belonged to the Gods. A valley of flowers asleep through the long winter months, waiting for the call of summer. When the melting snows leave a trail of colours on every slope and meadow. Primulas and gentians, wild irises and anemones, geraniums and lilies... even rare blue poppies. Come, visit the Valley of Flowers.

ACCESSIBILITY
Nearest railhead and airport is Dehra Dun. From here, it is 228 km by road to Joshimath and a further 44 km to Badrinath. To begin the trek to the Valley, you backtrack 30 km to Govindghat. Then cross the River Alaknanda and walk on to Ghanghariya (14 km). From Ghanghariya, the Valley is 6 km.

ACCOMMODATION
Ghanghariya has a Forest Rest House run by the Garhwal Mandal Vikas Nigam. There are also Tourist Lodges and Dharamshalas at Govindghat.

TOURS
In season, Tours are operated by the Garhwal Mandal Vikas Nigam from Rishikesh. For information, write to: 74/1 Rajpur Rd., Dehra Dun, Phone: 24408.

SEASON
Best season is mid-July to mid-August, when all the flowers are in bloom. However the full season lasts from June to September.

VALLEY OF FLOWERS
Discover India
Discover yourself

Department of Tourism
Government of India

In India you'll see the world.

Rediffusion/DT/5144

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

INDIA TODAY
THE COMPLETE NEWSMAGAZINE

VOLUME XII NUMBER 7
FOR THE FORTNIGHT APRIL 1-15, 1987

EDITOR
AROON PURIE

EXECUTIVE EDITOR T.N. NINAN
PICTURE EDITOR RAGHU RAI
FEATURES EDITOR INDERJIT BADHWAR
DEPUTY EDITOR DILIP BOBB
SENIOR EDITOR PRABHU CHAWLA

CORRESPONDENTS

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENTS RAMINDAR SINGH
SHEKHAR GUPTA
NEW DELHI PALAKUNNATHU G. MATHAI
RAJ CHENGAPPA
MADHU JAIN
JAGANNATH DUBASHI
SREEKANT KHANDEKAR
TANIA MIDHA
AHMEDABAD RAMESH MENON
BHOPAL N.K. SINGH
BOMBAY M. RAHMAN
PARTHASARATHI SWAMI
CALCUTTA INDRANIL BANERJIE
HYDERABAD AMARNATH K. MENON
LUCKNOW DILIP AWASTHI
MADRAS S.H. VENKATRAMANI
PATNA FARZAND AHMED
TRIVANDRUM SREEDHAR PILLAI
LONDON RAMESH CHANDRAN

NEWS COORDINATOR RADHIKA ROY

ART DIRECTOR M.G. MOINUDDIN

CHIEF OF PRODUCTION SHIRLEY JOSHUA
ANURADHA KAPOOR

COPY DESK SIMRAN BHARGAVA
ANN NINAN
MOHAMMED ASLAM

CHIEF PHOTOGRAPHER BHAWAN SINGH
PHOTOGRAPHERS PRAMOD PUSHKARNA
PRASHANT PANJIAR
NAMAS BHOJANI

CARTOONIST AJIT NINAN MATHEW
CARTOGRAPHER B.K. SHARMA
LAYOUT ARTISTS ANUP GUPTA
PEALI DUTTA GUPTA

MARKETING DIRECTOR MOHINI BHULLAR

ADVERTISING MANAGERS

BOMBAY ANOOP ZUTSHI
DELHI NAGINDER RISHI
CALCUTTA MEERA PAUL
MADRAS R. ANAND
BANGALORE S.J. NAIDU

GENERAL MANAGER CHANDER RAI

• EDITORIAL OFFICE LIVING MEDIA INDIA PVT LTD. F-14/15, CONNAUGHT PLACE NEW DELHI 110001. PHONE: 3315801-4. TELEX: 31-61245 INTO IN CABLE: LIVMEDIA. NEW DELHI • SUBSCRIPTIONS: INDIA TODAY SUBSCRIPTION DEPARTMENT. POST BOX 69. FARIDABAD HARYANA • TRADE CIRCULATION: INDIA TODAY CIRCULATION MANAGER. F-14 CONNAUGHT PLACE, MIDTELE CIRCLE. NEW DELHI. PHONE: 3313076-8. TELEX: 31-62634 INTO IN • ADVERTISING OFFICES: 28 A&B JOLLY MAKER CHAMBER II, NARIMAN POINT, BOMBAY-400021. PHONE: 2026152, 2029326, 2026435. TELEX: 11-5373 THOM IN. CABLE: LIVMEDIA, BOMBAY • K-9, CONNAUGHT CIRCUS, NEW DELHI-110001. PHONE: 352378, 351576, 351273 AND 351323. TELEX: 31-2651 THOM IN. CABLES: LIVMEDIA, NEW DELHI • FAGUN CHAMBERS, 26 COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF ROAD, MADRAS-600105. PHONE: 477188, 477770, 479163. CABLE: LIVMEDIA MADRAS • 74/1ST MARKS ROAD, BANGALORE-560001. PHONE: 568448, 579037, 579089. CABLE: LIVMEDIA, BANGALORE • 12C EVEREST 146C CHOWRINGEE ROAD, CALCUTTA-700016. PHONE: 445398, 447726. CABLE: LIVINMEDIA, CALCUTTA
• COPYRIGHT © 1984 LIVING MEDIA INDIA PVT LTD. ALL RIGHTS RESERVED THROUGHOUT THE WORLD. REPRODUCTION IN ANY MANNER IS PROHIBITED.
PUBLISHED BY CHANDER RAI FOR LIVING MEDIA INDIA PVT LTD. NEW DELHI AND PRINTED AT THOMSON PRESS INDIA LTD. FARIDABAD HARYANA • INDIA TODAY DOES NOT TAKE RESPONSIBILITY FOR RETURNING UNSOLICITED PUBLICATION MATERIAL •

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

NO REAL THREAT

The cover story ("Pakistan's Nuclear Bombshell", March 31) was thought-provoking. Pakistan's capability to make the bomb is not an actual threat to us, since the superpowers already have sufficient weapons to end all life on earth. By spending money on arming ourselves, we are not going to be any safer. Instead of diverting our resources to defence we should channelise them to developmental purposes.

Ahmedabad VINOD C. DIXIT

■ Kudos to your cover story. We are all desperately concerned about our neighbour's military might. In nuclear rivalry, there are neither victors nor vanquished. We don't want war. But we cannot afford to remain unarmed and face the threat to our peace complacently.

Kottayam V.K. SATHYAVAN NAIR

POLITICAL DOCUMENT

The totally colourless budget ("A Damp Squib", March 31) makes us feel that the prime minister has lost touch with the Indian reality. The salaried class has not received any tax respite.

Bhilwara, Rajasthan PRAKASH NAWAL

■ Rajiv's maiden budget was a disappointment. The budget gives no incentives to industry and agriculture. Nor does it try to tackle the problem of unemployment. Instead of aiding the growth of the country's economy, the budget is going to stunt its growth. It is a political document and not economic.

Bangalore K. CHIDANAND KUMAR

LACK OF PARITY

■ Your story on salaries in Bombay ("The High Wage Island", January 31) was an eye-opener indeed. The wage disparity between private sector employees and state employees is worrying. Can't Datta Samant be called in to help the public sector?

New Delhi A.G. AJWANI

RAJIV'S WIT

It was interesting to read about Rajiv ("Raging Rajiv", March 31) in Parliament. His statements made us laugh.

Bangalore M. WASHINGTON

CROWD PLAY

At last we have an Indian cricketer who plays the game for the crowds. Hats off to Srikkanth ("Explosive Entertainer", March 31), the dashing opener who, even if he gets out after 20 runs, has given you runs for the money spent. May he continue to entertain.

New Delhi K.S. GOPALA KRISHNAN

■ There was a time when opponents used to be happy when they got rid of Gavaskar. But now it is Srikkanth. He is undoubtedly the most entertaining and feared batsman among the current world-class cricketers. Whether it is Marshall & Co or Imran & Co, once Srikkanth gets going there is no stopping him.

Cuttack ARTA MISHRA

■ In an otherwise good article, there is a frequent reference to "records", the obvious target, of course, being the favourite whipping boy of Indian cricket—Sunil Gavaskar. It looks like a case of sour grapes. This could have been avoided. After all, both batsmen are great in their own way. It is like comparing Hindi film songs with Indian classical music.

Pune P.P. PUNTAMBEKAR

THE WASTE LAND

Your article on government waste ("The Dirty Dozen", March 15) is a beautiful analysis of the sorry state of affairs in the country. It is time the Government took a serious view of this absolutely colossal waste of public money. Government departments are indeed quite overstaffed and given proper direction, half of the existing strength can do the same work much better. Also, the state's tendency to appoint commissions and committees which serve no purpose should stop.

Madras S. RETNASWAMY

■ Figures and facts made the cover

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

story most interesting. But the instances cited were sometimes too few.
Delhi — Dr VIVEK PAL

■ It should not be forgotten, especially after reading your story, that taxes are actually the biggest fraud played on the people by politicians and the Government. The wastages of the state—officials and politicians living expenses, perks, privileges—are paid out of taxed revenues. They glory in our money while we continue without improving.
Bombay — RICHARD DIAS

■ Your cover story made pleasurable reading. It was well-written and must have involved a lot of research work. But one point seems to have been missed out. The case for privatising the public sector only because it works better would not be in the interest of the common citizen. The private sector rarely works for the benefit of the public: the textile mills are a good example. Profit, whatever the cost in human resources, is its main consideration. We can progress without the aid of the private sector.
New Delhi — Y.R. MEHTA

■ The cartoons illustrating your cover story were brilliant. The details worked into each frame complemented the editorial beautifully.
Bombay — S.N.D. POOJARY

■ Will the Government appoint yet another committee to look into the wastage? Considering the fact that we seem to have a staggering Rs 20,000 crore to waste, we are no longer a poor country but have joined the ranks of the industrialised West.
Agra — RAKESH K. SHARMA

■ The concept of checks and balances does not exist in the present system of government. In the current set-up, the press remains the only pressure group capable of voicing public opinion and exposing the ills of the system.
Dehra Dun — SUNIL KAPUR

■ The Government's expenses are not a waste as you have laboriously stated. If the money was buried in some rich man's bank locker, then one could afford to be critical. But as long as the money stays within the country and is distributed amongst the thousands employed in the government sector, it cannot be seen as a scandalous wastage. The people live off this money.
Wardha — R.K. SURANA

■ The prime minister promises to put a stop to all wastage by the end of this year. He will deserve to be congratulated even if partially successful.
Nasik — SUNIL CHATI

■ Your cover story on government wastage made us gasp. The proportion of waste has never been tabulated—the public should sue the Government for indiscriminate wastage.
Calcutta — B.L. BIYANI

■ One wasteful expenditure has been overlooked. This is the precious foreign exchange we lose in maintaining both an Indian mission and offices of public sector concerns in the same place. We should have one or the other as overlapping of functions is a waste.
Tokyo — A. SAGHAR

■ Your cover story made us think. I fully agree that sick industries should be closed down immediately. They are a big drain on the public exchequer and are run at the cost of the general masses.
Kanpur — R.K. JAYASWAL

■ Your article provided an insight into the mishandling of public money by the Government. It revealed the gravity of the crime and also how the common man was unknowingly a victim. I feel that the unnecessary wastage can be controlled if the Government feels so. Let your article be an eye-opener for the Government.
Ahmedabad — K. SASIDHARAN

BAD CARETAKERS

Your article on the Ajanta paintings ("Monument to Neglect", March 15) was a few years late in its being written. The officials and peons who are entrusted with the job of looking after the monument are themselves corrupt. Hence it is difficult to imagine how they can be expected to help preserve something that is in danger of fading.
Aurangabad — DEEPAK BHINGARDEO

■ The write-up on Ajanta paintings should make millions of art lovers within the country sit up and take action. It is extremely sad to realise that one of India's prized possessions is in such a state of negligence. It is high time that a serious and sincere effort is made to protect and restore the cave paintings before all that is left of them are photographs in art journals.
Surat — PABITRA BARUAH

BITTER-SWEET HOME

The write-up on the Uttar Pradesh Housing and Development Board ("House Grouse", March 15) was only half the story. Not only do they not honour commitments made to aspiring householders and still ask for fresh registrations, even after waiting for years, citizens are forced to occupy houses of substandard construction.
Durgapur — SUDHA KUMAR

NOT SO SAFE

Your article on contraceptives ("Making it Easier", March 15) gives a one-sided view of the new methods. The complexities of the issue have been missed while the establishment's line on population control, whatever the cost, has been highlighted. On no account can the methods described be considered safe. They act by disrupting the finely-tuned hormonal or the immunological mechanisms in the body. The writ petitions filed in the Supreme Court do not just question the unethical manner in which trials with NE-EN are being conducted, but challenge the claims of safety made by the ICMR, WHO and Ministry of Health and Family Welfare. The contraceptive was not cleared by the ICMR after extensive trials but by two studies on Indian women. Safety cannot be proved on such flimsy evidence.
New Delhi — Dr SATHYAMALA

GIVING A HOME

Thank you for the report on the Chakma refugees in India ("Shattered Lives", March 15) who are fleeing from the brutality of the Bangladesh Army. The sensitive pictures illustrated clearly the seriousness of the situation. This peace-loving tribe has been hounded out from its traditional home for no reason. The Indian Government must ensure that the wrong is righted and the Chakmas have a home again.
Agartala — NILKANTI CHAKMA

NO CLAIMS

Reading your article on Bombay musicals ("Casting a Spell", February 28) I was amused at the misquotes and distortions. I complimented Karla Singh for her choreography in Evita, but never claimed to have danced in it.
Bombay — FARIDA PEDDER

The error is regretted. —Editor

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The real facts behind the "zero-cholesterol" story...

We put SAFFOLA, corn oil and refined groundnut oil into a freezer for 4 hours. And this is what we found:

Corn oil froze.

Groundnut oil froze solid.

But SAFFOLA remained liquid. Even after 24 hours!

Why not try this test yourself?

This clearly proves that of the three cooking mediums, SAFFOLA is highest in polyunsaturated fat – a substance that actually helps to lower cholesterol.

Yes, all vegetable oils are "zero-cholesterol". But only SAFFOLA, with the highest content of polyunsaturated fat actually brings down the cholesterol level in the blood. And that's what really counts!

Major research studies confirm that heart disease is directly linked to the level of cholesterol in the blood. "Lowering cholesterol levels markedly reduces the incidence of fatal heart attacks".

So when you cook, fry or bake with SAFFOLA, you're doing what's best for the whole family.

The cholesterol lowering factor (polyunsaturated fat) content in various oils.

Saffola

Good for your heart. Good for your health.

FSA/BOIL/7/86

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

When fall, feel,
colour and weave spell
matchless elegance...
the fabric has to be

Raymond's
Spring Field

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The European Connection.

Short transit times, fast ground handling facilities and excellent onward connections make Lufthansa's Frankfurt the best gateway to Europe and the world.

Lufthansa
German Airlines

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Squeezing the Press

I would rather have a completely free press with all the dangers involved in the wrong use of that freedom than a suppressed or regulated press.

—Jawaharlal Nehru

IF constant attacks on the press and its manner of functioning were regular features of Mrs Gandhi's turbulent years in power, Rajiv Gandhi's advent to office had marked a noticeable easing of tensions on this score. There was a new openness in the air, the prime minister was suddenly accessible to non-sycophantic publications, and journalists breathed more freely. But in all too short a period, as things have soured after the initial heady days, the Government has tended to turn on the press, to display the old hostility, to treat bad news on the front pages as a sign of bad journalistic behaviour instead of as a barometer of things going wrong.

Last fortnight's events drove this point home forcefully, with a part-time contributor to a newspaper under arrest on the charge of violating the Official Secrets Act, raids by the Central Bureau of Investigation on the Indian Express guest-house in New Delhi, and ministers as well as parliamentarians declaring in all seriousness that the press has ganged up with opposition forces and foreign elements with the objective of destabilising the country.

Illustration by AJIT NINAN

There have been problems earlier too. The police have taken action even against such respected publications as the Economic and Political Weekly for perfectly legitimate writing, journalists have been hauled up on sedition charges, and publications that dare to indulge in fearless reporting are dragged before privileges committees of legislative bodies. There is an intolerance here, as well as a disregard for the importance of letting the truth be known, that speak very poorly of those in authority.

Looking back on a period that had once promised a new beginning, the last 29 months have seen hardly any concrete measures aimed at facilitating the press in its functioning; on the contrary, there has been a series of decisions that have imposed fresh economic burdens which, when looked at in their entirety, suggest a very deliberate government strategy to hinder the growth of a free, healthy and vibrant press.

One primary focus of attack has been on the economic front. Indian newsprint prices are now the highest in the world, and domestically produced newsprint costs about 40 per cent more than the international price. Newsprint allocation policies are arbitrary, and even the officially allotted quotas are not supplied: the current backlog runs into tens of thousands of tonnes. Publications consequently have to buy import licences at a premium in the open market—adding still further to costs. Earlier this year, telecommunication charges (for telex and teleprinter lines) were raised by between 50 and 100 per cent. For some kinds of publications, the effective increase is as much as 500 per cent. And postal charges for newspapers have gone up by between 60 per cent and 200 per cent. There are also new and higher customs duties. The additional economic burden on publications has been heavy—leading to sharp hikes in newspaper prices.

This has inevitably restricted the reach of the print media and limited the size of the reading public at a time when the official media flourish. Television has seen unprecedented growth in the last five years, helped by massive government investment in expanding the transmitter network and by duty concessions on TV sets at a time when the fresh taxes were being imposed on the print media. So when TV focuses most of its cameras on the prime minister with unwinking shamelessness, the message comes across very clearly. The media outside official control will be squeezed, and access to the official message will be dramatically improved.

The focus must inevitably turn on to the 64-year-old Official Secrets Act, especially the catch-all Section 5, which is so sweeping as to make practically no distinction between passing on a defence secret to a foreign enemy and possession of some innocuous file that an official may have marked 'secret' in self-defence. The Second Press Commission had suggested changes in this Act, but the then minister for information and broadcasting rejected this last year, using the extraordinary argument in Parliament that the Act had not come in the way of the freedom of the press. The Official Secrets Act must be used in the strict sense—for protecting national secrets that have strategic value—and the rest of the Government's functioning should be open for public review instead of being cloaked in needless secrecy.

Indian politicians are never tired of holding up the free press in India as an example of the vitality of Indian democracy. Yet their actions at home show a desire to tame or control the press. At a time when the ruling party has a brute majority in Parliament, when the judiciary is sought to be tackled through careful appointments of judges and when the bureaucracy is cowed down by politically motivated transfers, the free functioning of the press becomes all the more important for the country. Despite temptations to take on the press when it gets inconvenient, Rajiv Gandhi should hark back, not to his mother's confrontationist attitude, but to his grandfather's more liberal approach, which was based on recognising the value of encouraging a free and vibrant press.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Sounding Board

● Members of the Barnala Government during the past couple of months have been receiving confused signals about who truly represents the prime minister's views in finding a solution to the Punjab crisis. The state's chief minister as well as several cabinet ministers have complained regularly that they are never quite sure about who is really in charge of the Punjab scene in Delhi. They have often wondered aloud at conferences and other formal occasions whether people "designated" to talk to them on behalf of the prime minister accurately reflect the Government's views.

In order to clear some of the prevailing confusion, Rajiv has now decided that his own secretariat will henceforth be wholly responsible for direct liaison with Barnala's office on a day-to-day basis. The Prime Minister's Secretariat would report straight back to him.

In the past Rajiv's secretary, Sarla Grewal, handled this chore, but only on an ad hoc basis. Now there's an additional hand—that of Gopi Arora, special secretary to the prime minister, who enjoys considerable rapport with seasoned senior IAS officers in Punjab who have long complained that they have had no direct sounding board in New Delhi for the administrative problems faced by the Barnala Government.

Conflicting Circles

● The war of bureaucratic nerves between the Prime Minister's Secretariat and the foreign office is far from over. Just as the External Affairs Ministry was recovering from the aftermath of the Venkateswaran affair in which its traditional independence was shaken, it came in for another institutional jolt. The word is out that the system of promoting and posting IFS officers—now handled by the foreign secretary—is to be scrapped. According to plans now under way, a five-member board appointed by the prime minister under the charge of the cabinet secretary will be responsible for all diplomatic postings as well as overseeing promotions. The Indian Foreign Service Association (IFSA) is strongly opposed to the proposal on the grounds that it could lead to further politicisation of the service. During the Venkateswaran episode, the IFSA demonstrated its solidarity with the outgoing foreign secretary by ignoring warnings from the prime minister's office and launching a strong protest. It looks as if another headlong clash will soon be in the making.

Cartoons by AJIT NINAN

Catching Snoops

● Giani Zail Singh scored again last fortnight. And this time against the Intelligence Bureau. For the past couple of months, the President has expressed his displeasure not only over not being consulted by the prime minister on crucial affairs of state but also over what he considered to be the irritating habit of the bureau's men posted directly outside his office taking down the particulars of every single person who visited him. On the face of it, the President seemed to be getting unduly exercised over what was, after all, a routine security measure. But Rashtrapati Bhawan sources say Zail Singh was justifiably upset. The Intelligence Bureau's checks on his visitors were conducted well after they had been cleared by the President's own security set-up, and even when they were accompanied by a presidential bodyguard. Zail Singh launched his protest by phoning the deputy commissioner of police in charge of Rashtrapati Bhawan and telling him in no uncertain terms that if the additional checking of his visitors was not stopped he, the President, would consider himself under surveillance. Zail Singh's forthrightness yielded swift results. The Bureau's snoops, it is now reported, have been asked to mind their own business when it comes to keeping an eye on the President's guests in Rashtrapati Bhawan.

Thoughtful Host

● For the 15 or so top-level Soviet scientists who came to Delhi last fortnight, it must have been a strange twist in protocol. The delegation, led by the Soviet Union's top scientist, the legendary Gury Marchuk, flew in from Russia to finalise arrangements for the high-level scientific cooperation outlined during Soviet supremo Mikhail Gorbachev's visit to India. One key engagement on their agenda was a New Delhi dinner to be hosted by Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi. But when they reached Delhi they discovered that Rajiv was not at home. He was over in Jammu & Kashmir, campaigning for the Congress(I)-National Conference(F) coalition. But the prime minister is internationalist in spirit—his hospitality does not recognise state boundaries or distances. In a jiffy, the Soviet scientists were hustled into a specially chartered plane that flew them to Kashmir for the promised meeting. And the promised dinner. The fancy repast was laid out in the regal Raj Bhawan. And Indo-Soviet friendship was catapulted into the age of the jet-setters.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

business
eeping an t's guests wan.

Host

o top-level
o came to t, it must e twist in ation, led
's top sci-ary Gury

om Russia
ments for tific cooping Soviet rbachev's y engage-da was a be hosted ajiv Ganreached d that Ra-
e. He was Kashmir.
he Cong-Conferenthe prime onalist in lity does boundaa jiffy, the e hustled chartered to Kashmeeting.
nner. The out in the
And Indovas cata-of the jet-

Ripe 'n' mellow Sunshine Yellow

Sunshine Yellow will make you feel right at home ! And Shalimar Superlac has more in store. 46 designer shades to combine and contrast. Glowing Lemon. Rich Tibetan Gold. Delectable Chestnut.

Perfected by one of India's leading paint companies, Superlac Acrylic Emulsion will bring your walls to life. And so easy to maintain.

Superlac Acrylic Emulsion—the mix 'n' match collection for your walls.

Shalimar Paints
Wall time favourites

SUPERLAC
The mix 'n' match collection

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The business day in shades of ey.

A Product of VXL India Ltd.

WE EXCEL

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gu

Of ey.
Summer Stunners by OCM
SUITINGS
THE PERFECT FABRIC

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SUCCESSFULLY HYATT.

At Hyatt Regency Delhi, the clock ticks to the rhythm of quiet efficiency. You could synchronise your plans to the precision of its facilities, ready to work at your fingertips.

Push button contact with the Hyatt Business Centre. An impressive portfolio of conference services. The luxury of well-appointed rooms and suites. And satisfying conclusions to every business meet.

It's the reassurance of knowing that time has been productive. And it's Hyatt's successful touch you'll want to come back for, again.

Don't you WISH YOU WERE HERE℠

HYATT REGENCY DELHI

INDIA

Reservations: Call the hotel 609911. Telex: 031-62779, 031-61512 HYT IN
Or Sales & Reservation office at Bombay. Telephone: 244578, 244579
Telex: 011-2818 SUBH IN

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

AROUND THE WORLD ONCE IN 3 HOURS

INCREDIBLE BUT TRUE

That's the distance the KTC fleet covers every three hours.

3,20,000 km every day with a nation-wide net work of over 300 branches. Leaving many others far behind.

KTC, the Leader
Carrying cargo - from medicines to machinery from transistors to transformers with the greatest care. And speed. In sun and rain, over hills and plain.

Blazing a trail of commitment which has grown over the past three decades.
The commitment to serve
The commitment to satisfy
Keeping the wheels of progress ever moving
So that the country moves forward and so do the people.
With KTC.

KTC

KERALA TRANSPORT CO

KTC Bldg YMCA Rd Calicut 673 001 Kerala
Ph. 60972 76062/63/64
Grams Vayuveg Tlx 0804-201

Ontaya/KTC/812

KTC – bringing people and places closer

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

INDIA TODAY
INTERNATIONAL EDITION

GIFT INDIA TO SOMEONE YOU CARE FOR...

GIFT FOR _____

ADDRESS _____

CITY _____ CODE _____

COUNTRY _____

Please send one year's subscription of INDIA TODAY, International Edition and my gift card to the person named above. Enclosed is my cheque/DD/M.O. for Rs_____ payable to Living Media India Pvt. Ltd.

MY NAME _____

ADDRESS _____

CITY _____ CODE _____

COUNTRY _____

Send this advertisement and payment to:
Living Media India Pvt. Ltd.
Subscription Department
P.B. No. 69, Delhi-Mathura Road
Faridabad 121007, Haryana, India

Annual Airmail Subscription Rates

Rs 585
ABU DHABI
AFGHANISTHAN
ANTIGUA
AUSTRALIA
BAHRAIN
BAHAMAS
BARBADOS
BELGIUM
BRAZIL
BULGARIA
BURMA
CANADA
CHINA
CHILE
COLOMBIA
DENMARK
EGYPT
ETHIOPIA
FIJI
FRANCE
W. GERMANY
GHANA
GIBRALTAR
GREECE
GUYANA
HAWAI
HONG KONG
HUNGARY
INDONESIA
IRAN
IRAQ
IRELAND
ITALY
JAMAICA
JAPAN
JORDON
KAMPUCHEA
KENYA
KUWAIT
S. KOREA
LAOS
LEBANON
MALAYSIA
MALAWI
MALDIVES
MEXICO
MORROCO
NETHERLANDS
NEW ZEALAND
NORWAY
OMAN
PAKISTAN
PANAMA
PHILIPPINES
POLAND
QATAR
ROMANIA
SAUDI ARABIA
SEYCHELLES
SHARJAH
SIERRA LEONE
SINGAPORE
SOUTH AFRICA
SPAIN
SRI LANKA
SUDAN
SWITZERLAND
SYRIA
TAIWAN
TANZANIA
THAILAND
UAE
UGANDA
UK
USA
VENEZUELA
YUGOSLAVIA
YEMEN
ZAMBIA
ZIMBABWE

Rs 185
BANGLADESH
BHUTAN
NEPAL

NH 943

The Hindustan Times

● I appreciate the spirit behind your observations (that the President has been briefed on important issues)....But as you are aware, the factual position is somewhat at variance with what has been stated by you.

■ President ZAIL SINGH in a letter to the prime minister

● I have made my statement (on keeping the President informed) in the House. I stand by what I have said. My correspondence with the President is confidential as it should be. ■ Prime Minister RAJIV GANDHI talking to newsmen in Calcutta

● Instead of wasting its energies on taming the press, the Government will be well advised to direct them at answering the charges that the President has levelled.... The longer the Government delays answering him... the deeper will be the suspicion that it has much to hide. ■ Editorial in the Indian Express

● It is ironic that instead of honouring my client for exposing the corrupt deeds of a private business house with a Vir Chakra or its equivalent, he has been charged under the Official Secrets Act.

■ RAM JETHMALANI, counsel for S. Gurumurthy, Indian Express business columnist and financial advisor

● I am told that the play (put up by the Left Front) shows a magician conjure up a thousand crore of rupees and then make them vanish into thin air. They are right; we have produced one thousand crores of rupees for West Bengal and it is the Left Front Government which has made the sum disappear.

■ RAJIV GANDHI electioneering in Asansol

● It would be utterly mad of anyone in Pakistan to think that they would start hostilities with India without causing grave damage to Pakistan.

■ HUMAYUN KHAN, Pakistan ambassador to India, quoted in Probe India

● Cricket diplomacy must use cricket balls, not atomic bombs.

■ N.D. TIWARI, at an Indian community meeting in New York, quoted in The Hindu

● A woman politician in an Islamic society has problems. I can't embrace people or ruffle their hair like my father or brother used to do. Such actions often say more than words, but this camaraderie can exist only man to man.

■ BENAZIR BHUTTO quoted in Sunday

● The Indian heroine can never change, like the Indian film can never change. We're taking a trip in the same boat. There's the goody-goody girl on the one side, the vamp on the other and that's it. ■ REKHA in Sunday Review

● An Indo-Pak series is like no other and neutral umpires are a must for the future of such series. It will clear the air and remove the tension.

■ IMRAN KHAN, captain, Pakistan cricket team

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Limca for the teacher

Limca for the taught

When you're hot and thirsty after a real hard try at teaching modern maths or learning it ... reach for a zero-bacteria Limca with thirst-quenching isotonic salts.

Limca

is veri veri lime'n' lemoni

SERVE CHILLED

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Sarayu Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

LET'S TAKE
LET'S TAKE SE

Tyre Service Centres. Once a concept. Now a burgeoning reality. A unique marketing innovation. Service that says "We Care". A first from Dunlop.

Hardly surprising from a Company that has a plethora of firsts to its name.

Dunlop. First tyre and rubber company to establish operations in India in 1898.

First to make tyres for aircraft, and still the only one. First to manufacture extra-large earthmover tyres in India. First to manufacture hi-tech steel cord belting in India.

First to get a radial tyre approved for fitment on the Maruti. And the Standard 2000. First to introduce nylon two-wheeler tyres. The list goes on.... Dunlop the largest tyre and rubber company. Where innovation is a way of life.

Dunlop. Started first. Remains first.

DUNLOP

DUNLOP TYRE SERVICE CENTRE

KE FIRSTS SERVICE CENTRES

Dunlop is Dunlop. Always ahead.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Scorch-proof Sungloss SuperShield

Sungloss has the unique SuperShield against heat, stains and scratches

The SuperShield, a unique protection treatment, gives the sungloss surface greater resistance against heat, stains and scratches.

No worrying about everyday accidents and accidents. Just wipe... and presto! The laminate is beautiful as new. Almost forever!

You can choose from a wide selection of exquisite shades and designs. In Gloss, Matt, Woodtex and Textures.

So the next time you get laminated furniture, insist on Sungloss SuperShield. You'll be glad you did.

SunGLOSS
SuperShield
Decorative Laminate

Looks great, gets tough

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Cartoons by AJIT NINAN

JUMBO PROBLEM

■ 'Own an elephant on a hire-purchase basis,' said the advertisement in a Bombay city daily. Most readers would have just turned the page but the Pathak family succumbed to the tempting offer. Money soon changed hands and the pachyderm came home—on loan, of course, till the entire sum was paid up. This should have been yet another story with a

'and-they-all-lived-happily-ever-after' ending but for the untimely demise of Mr Pathak. The wife, poor woman, suddenly found herself left behind with an elephantine problem.

But the dealer had only one thing on his mind. He plagued the family for days, demanding either payment or the elephant. And one morning, tired of pleading, he decided to stealthily retrieve what was his from the Pathaks. The lady saw it as a case of kidnapping and rushed to the police claiming that her pet was "forcibly confined" by the dealer and his accomplices. The police issued a search warrant and the dealer petitioned the Bombay High Court to quash it—every action has an equal and opposite reaction. Now, while the law takes its course, the elephant is spending its time in the sanctuary of the police station.

DOGGED GUARD

■ Most individuals provided with a bodyguard for security reasons would probably heave a sigh of relief. But a lady MLA in Madhya Pradesh found the brawny appendage at her elbow a plain nuisance. Ever since the powers that be thrust a guard on her—she was on the terrorists' hit list—she has been trying to shake off her shadow. She first appealed to the district police stating she did not feel threatened at all. But they said they couldn't call off bodyguards allotted by the state police headquarters.

The legislator was determined not to give up without a fight—and put into effect an elaborate scheme. On the pretext of meeting the officer on duty, she paid a visit to the local police station. She then told her bodyguard to inform the officer she wished to meet him. As the bodyguard moved off, the lady vanished. She zipped to the railway station, flashed her pass and boarded a waiting train for Bhopal.

But the long arm of the law is not so easily shaken off. The bodyguard reached Bhopal and got back on duty—dogging his lady's footsteps. The lady conceded defeat but is still visiting the police station asking how they knew.

MONKEY MOVES

■ The police in Munger, Bihar, have never been so busy. They are all hell-bent on the elusive trail of a monkey. Sounds funny, but it is reported that the force have never taken its job as seriously as this time. The cause for all this charged activity is a primate that has been indiscriminately harassing and biting policemen. There have been some other victims but the monkey seems to have an eye on humans in uniform. At the last count, he had set a new record: 35 victims—almost all of them policemen—in three days.

Naturally, the arbitrariness of his choice has upset the police force. At first, they thought it was the colour of their uniform and petitioned for a change. But as time went by, they discovered that even some of their men in civies had proved juicy targets for the monkey.

The monkey, it appeared, was not content with catching men on the move, but was game for a raid even at night. On one well-remembered occasion, the raider entered the barracks while everyone, including the sentry on duty, slept, and bit an unsuspecting cop. The man's anguished shriek woke everyone, but the culprit melted away into the darkness. Out of sight, but definitely not out of mind.

MALE SALE

■ A banner announcing a sale, even if it is only a 5 per cent discount on seconds, is like a pot of honey attracting ants. Last fortnight, in the same spirit of thrift, a 'Grand Bumper Sale—30 per cent off on Bridegrooms' was announced and the crowds rolled in. Over 3,000 girls collected at a local government college to bid and buy at throwaway prices bridegrooms on sale. An added attraction was a free kerosene stove. The event, organised by the Nonsense Club of Chandigarh, was a part of the festivities for International Women's Day on March 8.

'Our prices are controlled and our products guaranteed', a banner proclaimed. Underneath bedecked bridegrooms ranging from civil servants to clerks stood anxiously. Each had a price-tag, with the original and discounted prices. Some 'pieces' being auctioned had only an original price.

As bidding began, the girls joined in. But nothing, not even a doctor whose original price was Rs 3.50 lakh, was bid for more than Re 1. The price the public decided on for the hapless doctor was half a rupee. A rough deal indeed for bridegrooms.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BLUE STAR

The only guarantee you'll ever need

A 2-minute quiz for Managers thinking of a cool drink on a hot day.

Full marks if you answered: "Blue Star", and "Blue Star's Aquarius Water Cooler." Blue Star has been the leader in Water Coolers for more than 40 years. It has supplied more Water Coolers than all the other Indian manufacturers put together. Blue Star Aquarius Water Coolers have a field-tested, perfectly balanced refrigeration system, designed to operate under the most demanding conditions.

Small wonder then, that Blue Star Water Coolers have been quenching the thirst of millions around the world.

Select models available on DGS & D Rate Contract
ME-6/RC-1646/WC/06/11/87-88/BS/COAB/1473 Dated 20-1-1987

BLUE STAR Aquarius

The rugged Indian Water Cooler with a world-wide reputation.

ATTN: DDOs & GOVERNMENT BUYERS: You can place your order for Water Coolers mentioning the above DGS & D Rate Contract No.

For more information, please contact: Blue Star Limited, Appliances Division, Shiva-e-Numh, Dr. Annie Besant Road, Worli, Bombay 400 018. Tel: 493 3165.

FSA/BSL/1/86/M

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

We put people on talking terms.

CMI has been at the forefront in the manufacture of dry core telecommunication cables for telephone exchanges and switchboards. These cables have been tested and re-tested to outlast and outperform any other cable in the country.

We give railways the green signal.

CMI also manufactures specially designed Quad cables for axle counters, used extensively on Railway tracks.

We are at the controls.

CMI is at the nerve centre of instrumentation and control panels that throb the veins of progress in industry. CMI provides the best instrumentation cables for data transmission with the highest degree of precision.

Now, what can we do for you?

Today CMI cables are at work in the heart of industry. Telephone Exchanges, Railways, Computer and Control Rooms, Power Stations, Heavy Vehicles, Defence, Satellite Launchings ... You name it!

Each a nerve centre that depends on CMI's quality cables to meet the most stringent requirements.

CMI is on the threshold of launching a range of petroleum jelly filled cables as part of its current expansion programme.

If yours isn't already one of our fields of specialisation, we will custom-make it for you.

CMI (P) LTD.
602, Ansal Bhawan, Kasturba Gandhi Marg, New Delhi - 110 001
Ph. 331-1695, 331-1984, TLX: 031-61082 CMI-IN

CMI CABLES
Making the right connections

APPEAL/CMI 86-14 Creative: Sam Mathews Inc.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

PM-PRESIDENT MEETING

Unresolved

"I will meet the President when it is necessary to do so."
—Rajiv Gandhi on March 27

THE necessity arose less than 20 hours later. Even while the prime minister was making that face-saving statement at a press conference in Bangalore, his aides were sounding out the President for a meeting with the prime minister to call a temporary cease-fire in the escalating cold war between the chief executive and the head of state. The request was immediately granted. And, when Rajiv finally met President Giani Zail Singh at 12.15 p.m. the next day in the President's ground floor study room at Rashtrapati Bhawan, the meeting turned out to be a marathon one—the longest ever between a prime minister and the President since Independence.

The 130-minute meeting marked the first time the country's two top functionaries had ever met for such a long period without aides and covered such a wide range of subjects, from their personal relationship to external threats. The seriousness and the urgency attached to the long overdue meeting was evident in the fact that both of them had to miss lunch. And, when the two emerged smiling with hands clasped, it appeared that a major constitutional crisis had been averted. Said one of the President's aides: "The President, it seems, has accepted the prime minister's assertion that he respects the President." Signals also went out from the prime minister's office that the rift between the prime minister and the President had been amicably settled.

But that was evidently at odds with the truth. The all-important meeting may have succeeded in forging a temporary truce but the crisis is far from over. INDIA TODAY has learnt that during the meeting, the two leaders did manage to smooth over their personal differences but disagreed sharply over the role of the President. Both went into the meeting fully briefed and with the express intention of outscoring one another. Both quoted the

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

RAJIV GANDHI ◆ ZAIL SINGH

"I consider that it is the duty of all right thinking people to keep the Presidency above partisan politics and controversy."

"In fact, the politicisation (of the President's office) was started by a member of the ruling party in April 1985 who was later made a minister."

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Controversy

BHAWAN SINGH

Constitution extensively to support their respective views which centred around the key question: whether the President has the right to be informed on all issues of national importance? Rajiv insisted that it was for the Government to decide what information was to be made available to the President. Zail Singh asserted that the Government could not deny him information on any subject if he asked for it.

According to unofficial sources, Rajiv assured the President that he respected him but stuck to the position that he was not bound by the Constitution to send information on all matters to him. He repeated his fears that information was being leaked from Rashtrapati Bhawan and also argued against supplying the Thakkar Commission report to the President saying that if leaked out, it would affect the course of court proceedings in the Indira Gandhi murder case. Rajiv is also believed to have complained that the President was meeting too many opposition leaders and Congress dissidents.

The President, on his part, asserted that the Government could not deny him any specific information if he sought it. He also bluntly told the prime minister that it was from the prime minister's office that the espionage ring was exposed in 1985 and that the head of the personal staff was rewarded with the post of a high commissioner later on. The President recalled instances where the prime minister did not turn up for discussions despite promises. The meeting failed to arrive at a consensus on how the problems between them could be resolved.

That Zail Singh was irked and determined to give as good as he got was evident in their meeting earlier the same day—at the investiture ceremony for Padma Shri awardees. At the informal get-together after the ceremony, the prime minister and the President came face-to-face in a gathering of Union ministers and journalists. There was laughter and bonhomie and the President quoted much Urdu poetry. But it was clear that he was using the occasion to make as many

RAJIV GANDHI ◆ ZAIL SINGH

"When we had a confrontation with Pakistan in the middle of January, I myself briefed the President. I asked the Defence Minister to go and brief the President."

"There was no formal briefing by the prime minister. He only had an informal chat in the car at the airport where the prime minister had gone to receive foreign dignitaries."

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

digs as he could about the controversy, to the obvious discomfort of the prime minister. When a journalist asked Zail Singh: "In view of this pleasant exchange, will you still need to write letters to the prime minister?", he countered: "We will continue to write letters till we are alive. And you know when our letters will be published? Eighty years hence." Here, the prime minister offered meekly: "After 50 years." The President pleaded: "Kindly spare us. Several letters are written. Somebody got hold of one and published it." The irrepressible President went on: "It does not matter how many years. What is certain is neither he will remain prime minister nor I President. But the office of prime minister and President will still be there."

He then commented on some ministers being returned to Parliament from states other than their home states: pointing to Narasimha Rao, he said he belongs to Andhra Pradesh but got elected from Maharashtra. As Rajiv looked more and more uncomfortable, Singh burst into an Urdu couplet: "If the saaqi (female wine-pourer in a tavern) keeps showering all her blessings only on those she favours, the tavern will soon be empty."

An hour later the two leaders had their decisive meeting. While it seems to have succeeded in lowering the temperature of the crisis temporarily, elsewhere there were indications that the rift was assuming serious proportions. The meeting was preceded by a major parliamentary confrontation between the Opposition and presiding officers of the two houses and hectic mediatory efforts by senior ministers and leading Congressmen following the publication of a letter written by Zail Singh to Rajiv in the media.

Though the Rajiv-Zail confrontation had been brewing for some months (INDIA TODAY, January 31), it boiled over when the President decided to challenge the prime minister's assertion in Parliament that the President was kept informed on all issues, by writing a detailed letter to Rajiv refuting his statement. The prime minister sat on the letter for over a week. When he finally replied, his letter was more an assertion of his earlier stand in Parliament rather than a point-by-point answer to the questions raised by the President. The prime minister also avoided answering the basic question raised by the President: that he had the right to be informed on each subject.

On the face of it, the question was not insoluble. But the personal mistrust and hostility evident between the two soured the prospects of the issue being settled so easily. More crucial, it has led to a situation where the prime minister's supporters and the President's aides have resorted to publicising their leaders' views in the media. The strategy of the prime minister's advisers was to tackle the presidential challenge in two ways—an anti-Zail publicity blitz in the media and the use of selective mediators to prevent the President from embarrassing the Government before last week's assembly elections.

The messy and sometimes clumsy media war began soon after the President refused to sign the Indian Post Office (Amendment) Bill. As a counter, secret government files were made available to journalists stating that Zail Singh had no moral right to refuse consent to the bill as he himself as home minister had piloted a similar bill. The President waited for his moment, which arrived when the prime minister, in the Lok Sabha and the Rajya Sabha, repeated his earlier statement that the Government was not ignoring the President. Once the prime minister committed himself on the floor of the House, the President shot off his letter, which was also duly leaked to the press.

The prime minister's advisers immedi-

T.S. ASHOK

V.P. Singh with Zail: go between

RAJIV GANDHI ◆ ZAIL SINGH

"There is no time when issues of national interest are kept away from the President. Let me also say that our ministers have been meeting the President continuously."

"Even on certain domestic issues like accords in Punjab, Mizoram and Assam, the head of the state was not informed."

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ately pounced on the leak to support their stand that it was not safe to send confidential information to the President. An attempt was made to browbeat the President by planting inspired rumours that the Government had, in fact, been lenient to the President whose role had been commented upon by the Thakkar Commission. It was also alleged that the President, by attacking the prime minister, was trying to get himself struck off the hit list of Sikh terrorists.

The propaganda against the President continued. Opposition parties, however, failed to force a discussion on the rift in Parliament. Attempts to do so were successfully stonewalled by the presiding officers and Congress(I) MPs. For over a week, the opposition parties angrily protested and staged walk-outs to try and convince Speaker Balram Jakhar and Chairman R. Venkataraman to allow discussion, but to no avail. Even a privilege motion against the prime minister was turned down. Jakhar and Venkataraman gave identical rulings. Venkataraman insisted that the discussion on the letter was not advisable because, "confidentiality of the communication between the President and the prime minister is maintained in the larger interest of democracy and the nation". And in the Lok Sabha, Jakhar declared: "I am absolutely clear in my mind that any debate on the floor of the House which brings the name of the President into any controversy or which tends to discuss the relationship between the President and his council of ministers must be avoided at all costs in the wider interests of the nation."

BHAWAN SINGH

Tripathi with Rajiv: sound advice

The government determination to stall any discussion on the subject in Parliament is obviously to Rajiv's advantage. Rashtrapati Bhawan records clearly show that the prime minister has met the President only twice before to brief him on various issues. In fact, the prime minister has never briefed the President personally before or after any of his over two dozen trips abroad. Nor did he inform the President about his talks with super-powers' leaders Reagan and Gorbachev. Though the Government may have some justification in not consulting the President on Punjab affairs, he has also not been briefed on the Tamil problem in Sri Lanka.

Opposition leaders quote constitutional provisions stating that the President was within his rights to demand information from the Government. Article 74: "There shall be a council of ministers with the prime minister at the head to aid and advise the President in the exercise of his functions." Article 78(A): "It shall be the duty of the prime minister to communicate to the President all decisions of the Council of Ministers relating to the administration. Article 78(B): "It shall be the duty of the prime minister to furnish such information relating to the administration of the Union and proposals for legislation as the President may call for."

Though Zail Singh held back from doing so, he would have been within his constitutional rights in sending a message to Parliament on the issue, thus forcing the Government's hand. Article 86 states that the President has the right to send messages to the two houses because without the President the Parliament is not complete. The Opposition was clearly hoping he would send the message, in which case, the issue would perforce have to be discussed.

But the battle between the two was clearly not one of constitutional niceties but one of political conveniences—as was evident soon after the assembly election results had come in. The prime minister, who could have seen the President soon after electioneering was over, sent emissaries instead. Minister of State for Surface

RAJIV GANDHI ◆ ZAIL SINGH

"It has been the tradition of the Congress to accord the highest respect to the office of the President."

"The prime minister has not been responding to the requests for formal meetings with the President on certain important issues."

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Transport Rajesh Pilot was pulled out of electioneering to meet the President. During his half-hour meeting he assured Zail Singh that the prime minister would soon call on him. He also pledged that in future, the Government would keep the President's office fully informed.

Four days later, the prime minister sent another emissary, his most respected Cabinet Minister, Vishwanath Pratap Singh. Though the President had earlier summoned Singh himself, the defence minister came to Rashtrapati Bhawan only when the prime minister asked him to intervene on his behalf. Singh pleaded with the President not to precipitate the crisis as the prime minister himself was willing to defuse it. Between these meetings, Kamalapati Tripathi, the ousted working president of the Congress(I), also met the President and wrote to both the leaders requesting them to bury the hatchet, saying: "It is in the interest of both the party and the Government that the dispute is amicably solved."

The President, meanwhile, was dealing his own political cards. He sent individual invitation cards to all the 750-odd MPs for a farewell dinner before he bows out of office in end-July. The idea was to solicit discreetly the opinion of both the ruling and opposition MPs on the issue. He also hinted that he was not satisfied with the prime minister's reply and was considering either writing to him again or sending a message directly to Parliament.

But the electoral reverses for the Congress in West Bengal and Kerala, followed by the resignation of Union law minister Asoke Sen, changed the situation dramatically. Rajiv decided to meet the President but the ensuing conversation gave little hope that the controversy is over.

Though he had accepted Rajiv's assurance that he would henceforth receive full respect from the Government, sources close to the President say he is clearly doubtful of its implementation. His doubts are based on the thin attendance of Congress MPs at his dinner last week. Only 34 of the 70 MPs turned up. Prominent absentees included Union ministers Janardan Poojary, Shankaranand, Ghulam Nabi Azad and AICC General-Secretary Bhagwat Jha Azad. While over 90 per cent of opposition MPs responded to his subsequent invitations, less than 25 per cent of the Congress(I) MPs showed up. Said a pro-Zail Singh MP from Uttar Pradesh: "Respect to the President can't be shown in a private room. It has to be visible. If the prime minister was sincere he could have issued a whip to MPs to attend. Signals should have gone to civil servants and ministers to honour the Presidency. It's just a time-buying technique."

With both sides unwilling to give in, last week's truce is clearly all too temporary. If this meeting is not followed up by further goodwill gestures on either side, it could lead to serious tensions resurfacing. The Government has the option of withdrawing the controversial Post Censorship Bill to avoid confrontation with the President. Rajiv can also show he is serious about resolving the crisis by visiting Rashtrapati Bhawan more frequently. In the mood Zail Singh is, if he continues to feel humiliated he might hit back by sending the bills and all the correspondence exchanged between him and the Government on various subjects directly to Parliament for discussion.

The confrontation has already raised serious and fundamental questions about the working of the Constitution. An active judiciary, a vigilant media and the President are expected to act as checks on the executive. With both the President and the judiciary rendered ineffective and the media under pressure from the Government, the checks are gradually being eroded. With the Opposition in disarray, the potential for mischief is even greater. The ruling party has also shown that it is not prepared to tolerate internal criticism. Those who have dared to do so have been dismissed or sidelined. Further, the Congress Parliamentary Board and the Working Committee hardly ever meet to review the performance of the Government.

Last week's electoral results have injected a new element into the current crisis. With the ruling party weakened and Rajiv's personal image having taken a battering, a confrontation with the President is the last thing the country needs. More so when it clearly seems to be a battle in which there will be no winners, only losers. —PRABHU CHAWLA

"Confidentiality of communication between the President and the PM is in the nation's interest."
R. VENKATARAMAN

"Any debate in the House which brings the President's name into a controversy must be avoided."
BALRAM JHAKAR

RAJIV GANDHI ◆ ZAIL SINGH

"Information on all important matters was given to the President. There is no question of keeping the President outside."

"Home Minister Buta Singh backed out of his own promise of sending reports of various commissions like Mishra and Thakkar."

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ZAIL vs RAJIV

No Winners

NOT since the controversy over the Hindu Code Bill in the 1950s has the country witnessed such a clear difference of opinion between the President and the prime minister. And even the dispute between Rajendra Prasad and Jawaharlal Nehru was not as embarrassingly public as the one now between Zail Singh and Rajiv Gandhi—though there was a leak of a Presidential letter even then.

Inevitably, the dispute, the controversy in Parliament and the resulting national debate have seen sharply polarised opinion on the merits and demerits of the various stands taken by the President, the prime minister and the Speaker of the Lok Sabha.

To assess public opinion on the entire range of issues involved, INDIA TODAY commissioned MARG (Marketing and Research Group Pvt Ltd), the leading independent market research company, to conduct a street-corner poll in the four metropolitan cities of Bombay, Calcutta, Delhi and Madras. On March 23 and 24, MARG interviewers fanned out over a large number of localities in each city and interviewed a total of 1,116 adults (men and women), each with a monthly income of over Rs 1,000. While a poll in the four metropolitan cities cannot be said to be representative of the rest of the country, it certainly indicates the views of the most politically conscious segment of the electorate.

NEITHER the President nor the prime minister (nor, for that matter the Speaker of the Lok Sabha) has emerged with great credit from the messy controversy that has followed the publication by the Indian Express of the President's letter to the prime minister. Rajiv, however, has got a serious credibility problem.

Despite the barrage of interviews, statements and theories of conspiracy in the press, opinion is evenly divided on whether Rajiv was speaking the truth in Parliament when he said that he had briefed the President adequately on all major issues. Though Rajiv's credibility among men is relatively low, he should be grateful for a greater measure of support among women.

In any case, there is little doubt that the poll respondents wish to know the truth as the balance of opinion is clearly against the speaker's blanket ruling that no debate can or will be permitted on any communication between the President and the prime minister. In fact, the respondents, by a narrow margin, support the Opposition's intention to move a motion of no confidence against the Government on this issue.

It is perhaps a comment on political morality in the largest democracy in the world that an overwhelming majority of respondents feel that even if the prime minister has lied to Parliament, there is no need for him to resign. What would a Profumo or a Nixon have given for such a supportive electorate!

Respondents also voted decisively against impeaching Zail Singh because of his role in the dispute. Yet, in the minds of a clear majority of the respondents, the prestige of the President's office has been lowered by this dispute. Significantly, the electors apportion blame almost equally to the two main characters in the drama—with the balance of opinion among women swinging in favour of the prime minister and the men tilting towards the President.

As for the Express, the Central Bureau of Investigation (CBI) has maintained that its raid on and arrest of S. Gurumurthy (the man who has run a campaign in the Express against Reliance Industries) were in connection with the violation of the Official Secrets Act and the Reliance affair. The Indian Express, on the other hand, has attributed the actions of the CBI to the publication of the President's letter. That the CBI's credibility is rather low is evidenced by the fact that the respondents, by a two-to-one majority, plump for the Express version of events.

The findings of the INDIA TODAY—MARG poll suggest that the present controversy has caused considerable damage to the institution of the Presidency. But Zail Singh emerges in a better light than Rajiv Gandhi. And the finding that around half the respondents believe that the prime minister lied to Parliament and want the speaker to remove the shackles on the discussion of the letter should give Rajiv and his advisors some points to ponder.

Table by RAJEEV MADAN

POLL RESULTS

		Men	Women	Total
	Sample Size	591	525	1,116
The PM's statement to Parliament about his relations with the President.	True	39	47	43
	False	47	34	41
If the PM has lied to Parliament, should he resign?	Yes	23	16	20
	No	70	75	72
The speaker's ruling forbidding discussion on the controversy.	Agree	44	43	44
	Disagree	50	48	49
Is the Opposition justified in moving a motion of no confidence?	Yes	50	40	45
	No	42	42	42
Should the President be impeached because of his role in the controversy?	Yes	22	25	23
	No	64	56	60
Has the prestige of the President's office been lowered?	Yes	55	53	54
	No	39	39	39
Who is more responsible for lowering the prestige?	President	25	33	29
	PM	36	25	31
	Both	33	35	34
Raid on Goenka/arrest of Gurumurthy: whose version of raid/arrest more credible?	CBI	22	29	25
	Express	53	45	49
	Neither	12	11	12

'Don't knows' excluded

All figures are in Percentages

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

EXPRESS CASE

PANDORA'S BOX

THE action was 70mm all the way: front page newspaper campaigns, shadowy roles by prime minister's buddies, rumours of ministerial resignations, bitter business rivalries and dare-devil officials being penalised. In a swiftly developing story, there were also raids, arrests, charges of foreign exchange skullduggery, cloak-and-dagger detective work across continents and secret code names. If even that weren't enough, there were accusations of forgery, court-room drama, calculated leaks to an excited press and—perhaps inevitably—bare-faced lies. Even a writer of potboilers would have had to stretch his imagination to dream up such a plot, such a canvas and such a cast.

The air has begun to clear a bit, after a concentrated burst of gunfire. But in other ways the plot still thickens. And no one knows as yet how exactly the curtain will finally ring down on a saga that started one mellow March morning last year, when the Indian Express began its shrill campaign against the high-flying if controversial Reliance Industries.

What provoked last fortnight's frenzied action was a photocopy of a brief letter that has been denounced as a forgery, and which investigating officials say will now be subjected to a forensic test. Purportedly written by Gordon McKay, vice-president of an American detective outfit called Fairfax Group, the letter was addressed to Express columnist S. Gurumurthy and talked of investigating the "Swiss properties of Bachchan". It also talked of Express Chairman R.N. Goenka and Bombay Dyeing Chairman Nusli Wadia (a Reliance rival) paying Fairfax half a million dollars abroad, and of a 'Dr Harris' from Fairfax having visited India. All this in completely unguarded fashion—as though the 'letter' was meant to be used in other ways. As McKay told INDIA TODAY in Annandale: "To write such a letter would be a stupid, unprofessional thing to do. Like putting a gun to your own head."

How the 'letter' came into the hands of the Central Bureau of Investigation (CBI) remains a secret, but the most likely route seems to have been via the prime minister's office. A senior official quoted the prime minister as having said matter-of-factly about the letter: "Look into it." If the prime minister did get the letter, who gave it to him? Was it his friend Amitabh Bachchan, whose 'Swiss properties' Fairfax was allegedly investigating? If so, how did Bachchan get it? And if the letter was fake, who could have forged it?

Whether genuine or fake, the letter served to take the lid off one of the most dramatic sequences in recent Indian history, coinciding with V.P. Singh's campaign to clean up Indian business.

Singh's striking arm was the Enforcement Directorate, headed by the dreaded Bhure Lal—who decided (like Gurumurthy) that Reliance needed to be investigated. He and Gurumurthy were soon in touch with each other, and if the CBI is to be believed both went to London last May (Bhure Lal has said he

INDIAN

FOR ECONOMICS NEWS AND VIEWS READ
FINANCIAL EXPRESS

Vol. LV No. 123 ● Largest combined net sales among all daily newspapers in India ● Published from Ahmedabad

Reliance Industries Ltd. — III

Petrochemical plants without

By S. GURUMURTHY

BOMBAY, Sept 18

"Reliance obtained clearances to import capital goods and tie up foreign collaborations not just for a PTA plant but two other units to make Paraxylene and Benzene even though it had neither bought nor obtained licences or MRTP clearances for them."

S. Gurumurthy

Nusli Wadia

Dhirubhai Ambani

SEQUENCE OF EVENTS

1986

MARCH

- Indian Express and its columnist S. Gurumurthy begin their campaign against Reliance Industries.

MAY

- Enforcement Director Bhure Lal and Gurumurthy visit London, perhaps on different dates, to investigate Reliance.

JULY

- Reliance file vanishes from DGTD office for two weeks.

AUGUST

- Ajitabh Bachchan leaves to

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

went alone), looking for evidence that some investment companies in the Isle of Man were actually owned by Reliance Chairman Dhirubhai Ambani.

But the companies had been wound up, and new ones had taken their place elsewhere on the globe. Gurumurthy screamed this out on the front page of the Express shortly after his return. Bhure Lal then made a second trip abroad, but once again returned empty-handed. A well-informed source said that Bhure Lal did not quite know how to go about making inquiries abroad on financial deals hidden behind clever smokescreens.

Gurumurthy's arrest took the lid off a dramatic case involving US sleuths, Rajiv's friends, a cabinet minister, his trusted officials, and prominent businessmen.

But Bhure Lal was not a man to give up easily, and in September he and the Revenue Department suggested to V.P. Singh that the only way out might be to hire three detective agencies abroad—to look into Reliance, as well as some deals by the Tatas, Goenkas and Chhabrias. But V.P. Singh demurred, apparently because of the likely cost, and asked Bhure Lal to try again.

Meanwhile, the thought of turning to a private detective agency seems to have occurred to Gurumurthy as well. And in October, Gurumurthy was on his way to New York—mainly to look into some problems concerning some machinery that Indian Express had ordered, but also to scout around for detective agencies. Several names were suggested to him, including Fairfax, but Gurumurthy says he found they were all too expensive for him, and that he did not even contact Fairfax.

Amitabh Bachchan

Bhure Lal

V.P. Singh

(But in one of the several contradictions that abound in the story, McKay told INDIA TODAY in Virginia: "There could be some truth in that. But the whole thing did not proceed in this manner." For good measure, Gurumurthy also says somewhat contradictorily that he contacted Fairfax on behalf of the Enforcement Directorate.)

On returning to New Delhi, Gurumurthy suggested that Bhure Lal hire Fairfax for the Government. And in the last week of December, that is precisely what the enforcement director did—after his own inquiries in Washington.

He probably made a good choice. In the four years of its existence, Fairfax Group has already made a name for itself, especially for handling government work. Operating from quiet, obscure Annandale, nestling in the lush green Virginia countryside (with 420 as an office suite number), Fairfax has earned the respect of its competitors. Said one: "Fairfax is new, but it has a great reputation. They have some of the best minds on their staff when it comes to government-related investigations."

But even before Bhure Lal hired Fairfax, the 'Dr Harris' in McKay's letter did indeed visit India. Harris was none other than Fairfax President Michael Hershman. And he stayed from November 14 to 17 in room 130 at the Oberoi in New Delhi—where (though he denies it—see interview) he met Gurumurthy, Goenka, Bhure Lal and others.

McKay's letter to Gurumurthy is purportedly written after this visit. McKay's reference in the letter to Nusli Wadia's involvement may be wholly fiction (as Wadia insists it is), but the fact is that it was Bombay Dyeing which booked Hershman's room for him at the Oberoi (which too Wadia denies). If the Express wanted to use Hershman to dig into Reliance affairs, and if a business rival like Wadia was involved, it put the newspaper's campaign against Reliance in a somewhat coloured light.

GURUMURTHY CHURNS OUT RELIANCE ARTICLES

take up residence in Switzerland.

SEPTEMBER

- Gurumurthy quotes extensively from government files in further Reliance articles.
- V.P. Singh denies Bhure Lal permission to hire detective agencies.

OCTOBER

- Gurumurthy visits New York, looks for detective agencies.
- Reliance Chairman D.H. Ambani meets Rajiv Gandhi, and road-blocked Reliance proposals start getting cleared.

NOVEMBER

- 'Dr Harris' (Michael Hershman,

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Also, if one of the key questions to be answered on the whole episode is whether a private group had in fact hired Fairfax before Bhure Lal did (and paid money abroad in violation of India's foreign exchange laws), Fairfax is not helping at all in answering it. On the one hand, Fairfax told a newspaper that it had been hired in the fall of 1986, but Bhure Lal hired it only in late December—which is winter, not fall. On the other hand, why should Hershman stop by at India in November—before Bhure Lal hired Fairfax—and stay in an expensive hotel for three days unless there was serious business afoot?

Before the enforcement director went hotfooting to Washington, Vinod Pande (his boss and revenue secretary) had verbally cleared the Fairfax arrangement with V.P. Singh, who approved on the condition that no advance payment was to be made and that the Government would only buy information. And after Bhure Lal returned from Washington around New Year, he wrote to Fairfax asking it to investigate Reliance on 15 counts. Fairfax was also asked to investigate other deals on the Bhure Lal agenda—including the Bachchans: Amitabh, and his brother Ajitabh who suddenly took up Swiss residence last August (a move that has led to endless speculation about reason and motive). Once again, Hershman has denied any knowledge of Bachchan.

Rumours of Bachchan being investigated abroad started doing the rounds in the capital by mid-January. V.P. Singh was shifted to the Defence Ministry on January 24. Barely a week later, the prime minister called Singh in for what must have been a key conversation.

Singh was asked whether he had approved the Fairfax arrangement. He said he had, and added that he wouldn't mind saying so in writing. Two weeks later, a formal reference was made to him by the Finance Ministry, and he formally recorded his reasons for seeking Fairfax help. Meanwhile, Finance Secretary S. Venkitaramanan summoned Bhure Lal and asked him about his Fairfax operation. Unexpectedly, Bhure Lal declined a reply—and may have been within his rights to do so, because he was answerable to the revenue secretary. Bhure Lal has also been questioned by G.K. Arora, special secretary to the prime minister.

Through the weeks and months, the situation (and the tension) had clearly been building up. And on March 11, when the CBI got hold of the McKay letter, the pace suddenly quickened.

The CBI moved fast, and some other wings of the Government moved even faster. Bhure Lal was given his transfer orders that same night. Revenue Secretary Vinod Pande was simultaneously divested of the charge of the Enforcement Directorate, which was placed under Finance Secretary Venkitaramanan. Pande himself was briefly questioned by the CBI. The CBI also took 24 hours to check out some details regarding the letter, and then despatched raid and arrest orders by air to Madras for Gurumurthy and to Bombay for his business partner, A. Janakiraman, on March 12.

But by the time the raids were

V.P. SINGH

In Defence

DID the hiring of the Fairfax Group to investigate the affairs of Indian companies and personalities have proper approval? What was the then finance minister V.P. Singh's role in the affair? Was cabinet clearance required, and was this taken? Singh answered these key questions to INDIA TODAY:

► "I had given clear approval to the officials to attack economic offenders. In the process, if they had to buy intelligence from a foreign agency, that had my approval as well. This was the most cost-effective way of collecting information as we have hardly any investigative network or contacts of our own abroad. There couldn't have been a better arrangement than getting exclusive and conclusive evidence without making any advance financial commitment."

► "It was within my powers to approve the hiring of a foreign agency. This did not need the prime minister's or the Cabinet's approval. The Finance Ministry has done this in the past too."

► "I firmly believe I had the full trust and confidence of the prime minister when I took this decision. It was his assignment to me to deal firmly with the parallel economy and black money. Any effort to accomplish this task had the prime minister's full backing."

BHAWAN SINGH

Singh: "I approved Fairfax"

1986

president of detective company called Fairfax Group) visits India and has a room booked for him in Oberoi Hotel, New Delhi, by Bombay Dyeing, a Reliance rival. Hershman meets Gurumurthy, Bhure Lal and Express Chairman R.N. Goenka. Hershman stays in Delhi for three days.

► Bombay Dyeing Chairman Nusli Wadia stays in same hotel on overlapping dates.

► Government says in Parliament that leakage of government files to Gurumurthy being investigated.

'DR HARRIS' (MICHAEL HERSHMAN) COMES TO DELHI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

launched the following morning (March 13), the Express had come out with the sensational contents of a letter written by the President to the prime minister, a letter in which Rajiv Gandhi was all but called a liar for having told Parliament that he had kept the President fully briefed on all important issues. And by that evening, the raiding parties had also landed up at the Express guest-house in New Delhi, then occupied by Goenka himself. In fact, Dhirubhai Ambani telephoned Goenka shortly after the raid, offering to help in any way he could. Goenka is believed to have slammed the phone down in fury.

Fairfax President Michael Hershman denied meeting Gurumurthy who, however, said the meeting had taken place. Nusli Wadia too denied any role in the affair, but his company booked Hershman into a Delhi hotel.

Nusli Wadia was at the guest-house when the raid started in New Delhi, and was personally frisked and and his briefcase searched before he was allowed to leave. Among the papers found in the guest-house were blank sheets of paper with the letterhead of the Enforcement Directorate.

Inevitably, the raids were seen in the context of the President's letter being published, but the real provocation of the raids was something else altogether. Ostensibly, the CBI's case number RC 7/86-CIU(II) SPE CBI is about a leakage of official secrets (Gurumurthy quoted extensively from government files in some of his Reliance articles). But the primary objective is to try and get to the bottom of a much more complicated and explosive affair: to find out who was investigating whom in the Fairfax affair, and at whose behest.

Whatever the answer to that question, the drama was now out in the open, and the spotlight was on Gurumurthy and on the Express—which has capitalised on the press freedom issue and may well challenge the Official Secrets Act itself in court. The CBI in any case didn't look too good in court when Gurumurthy's bail applications were argued one after another, and it vacillated between pressing the case on official secrets and on a conspiracy theory involving the handing out of government secrets to foreign agencies. A third charge suggested was that the foreign agency was getting government secrets for the Express.

For a while the central issue was the genuineness of the McKay letter, or at least the contents of the letter—which (among all the other things) also referred to a gentleman called R.Briner in Switzerland as well as a Swiss address where Goenka is said to have been late last year. The address turned out to be that of Nusli Wadia's father Neville, but Goenka couldn't have gone there because he stopped in Geneva for just three hours, and the address was a seven-hour drive away. Robert Briner turned out to be an aging lawyer who (when contacted at a ski resort) initially denied having any contact with Indians for years, but then admitted to INDIA TODAY that he was a longstanding friend of Goenka and had visited India last year. But he denied knowledge of Bachchan, Wadia and Gurumurthy.

Despite the tell-tale links exposed by the McKay 'letter', middle-level CBI officials admitted to journalists that in their judgement it was a forgery, and that they were under pressure from higher up to persist with the case. In fact, Gurumurthy's lawyer produced in court a telegram from Fairfax denying that it had ever

FAIRFAX

Contradictions

EVERYONE cannot be telling the truth about Fairfax. The accounts of critical events vary radically from person to person. Thus:

- Michael Hershman, Fairfax president, says he has never met S. Gurumurthy of Indian Express. Yet Gurumurthy told INDIA TODAY he met Hershman in Delhi's Oberoi Hotel last November.
- CBI sources maintain that the then enforcement director Bhure Lal took Gurumurthy with him to London last May, to investigate Reliance. Bhure Lal denies this.
- Finance Ministry and CBI officials maintain that there is not a shred of paper relating to the hiring of Fairfax in the Enforcement Directorate's files, barring a brief report by Bhure Lal to Revenue Secretary V.C. Pande. Hershman says he has received letters on the Government of India's stationery.
- Nusli Wadia of Bombay Dyeing is sought to be linked to Fairfax. Wadia denies any connection whatsoever. But it was Bombay Dyeing who booked the Oberoi room for Hershman, though Wadia denies this too.
- The raid on and arrest of S. Gurumurthy was claimed by Indian Express to be linked to its publication of the President's letter. But the raid and arrest orders were sent out a day before the publication.

DECEMBER 2

- Central Bureau of Investigation (CBI) registers case under Official Secrets Act against Gurumurthy.

DECEMBER 23

- Gurumurthy residence in Madras raided, papers seized.

BHURE LAL HIRES FAIRFAX IN WASHINGTON

DECEMBER

- Bhure Lal visits Washington with V.P.Singh's approval, asks Fairfax Group to investigate Reliance on 15 counts, as well as foreign exchange dealings by Amitabh and Ajitabh Bachchan, Tatas, Goenkas and Chhabrias.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

written such a letter.

Finally, after 10 days, Gurumurthy was released on bail—and it turned out that during his first day under arrest the questioning had focused essentially on the Bachchan issue. Was Gurumurthy investigating Bachchan? The Express columnist maintained that he was interested only in Reliance.

In court, meanwhile, Gurumurthy's lawyer Ram Jethmalani made a tantalising reference to a Swiss company called Macny Adol Brothers (which sounds suspiciously like 'matinee idol'). If all this pointed to Bachchan being a key figure in the entire story, there was also plenty of talk about Bachchan having helped Dhirubhai Ambani meet the prime minister

Indian Express

Goenka's room after raid: bad timing last October—something the Ambanis strenuously deny. Nevertheless, the grape-vine line-up pitted Rajiv-Amitabh-Reliance against V.P. Singh-Bhure Lal-Express-Bombay Dyeing. Certainly, the action against Gurumurthy seemed out of all proportion to his original 'crime', of quoting some files that were important only to a company and its rivals.

Whatever the truth of the matter, the matinee idol was not available for com-

MICHAEL HERSHMAN

"It hurts me"

IN a Washington metro train it would be hard to tell Michael Hershman, 41, from the other busy executives, businessmen and bureaucrats. But it is his profession that makes him unusual—and a bit of all three. "No. I'd rather not give a picture of mine. In the kind of business I am in the less people know what I look like the better," he says. But at the same time, he asserts that there is no cloak-and-dagger stuff in his business as the owner of one of the more expensive private detective agencies in the US.

But last fortnight Hershman, who made his reputation as a career inquisitor with the US Administration, Congress and the Senate and finally as a senior investigator in the Senate Watergate Commission, was finding it hard to guard his anonymity. His phone rang all day and the telex clacked repeatedly. Many of the calls were from journalists in India. "We do not like this. We consider ourselves a respectable company," he says and points out that in his kind of business publicity is hardly welcome. Yet, now that there was no getting away from media glare, Hershman had rehearsed his role well, anticipating the obvious questions and shrewdly evading the inconvenient ones. At the same time, there was no doubting as to the side he was on, as Special Correspondent SHEKHAR GUPTA discovered in the course of an interview. Excerpts:

Q. Did your deputy Mckay indeed write a letter to Gurumurthy regarding services that your company was performing for him?

A. It is insane and preposterous to even suggest that we could write such a letter. Would you ever do a thing like that? And we have performed no services for the Indian Express or Mr Gurumurthy.

Q. But weren't you engaged to do investigative work against certain prominent people in India?

A. It is true that we have been engaged to perform certain services for the Government of India. And as far as we are concerned, we still are doing that.

Q. Who approached you on behalf of the Government of India?

A. I am afraid I cannot disclose that. But there is no doubt that we have been engaged by your government. We have correspondence with them on their stationery.

Q. Were you approached by Mr Bhure Lal or Mr Vinod Pande?

> "The letter supposedly written by Mr McKay is an absolute forgery... The Government must catch those responsible for this rather than the innocent Express reporter."

A. Once again I shall not answer that question. But certainly we know Mr Bhure Lal.

Q. And do you know Mr Gurumurthy?

A. I do not know him but I know of him through his writings. And we know the Indian Express. We also know its reputation. We find it preposterous that Mr Gurumurthy has been arrested by the Government. In fact, I would go so far as to say that whoever is responsible for that should take his place in the prison.

Q. Why such strong sympathy if 1987

JANUARY

- Speculative reports about detective agency abroad being hired to investigate Reliance and Bachchans.

JANUARY 24

- V.P. Singh shifted from Finance Ministry and made defence minister; Amitabh Bachchan seen as partially responsible, though he denies it.

FEBRUARY

- Rajiv Gandhi questions V.P.Singh on Fairfax, asks him to ratify on the file that this had his verbal approval.

PM QUIZZES VP SINGH

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

you do not even know him?

A. Because it hurts me very badly that our name has been used to wreak vengeance against an innocent journalist.

Q. Have you been in touch with Mr Gurumurthy or the Indian Express since the controversy surfaced in India?

A. Well, we have only received some messages from Mr Gurumurthy's attorneys and we have replied saying that the letter supposed to have been written by Mr Mckay is an absolute forgery. It seems to my mind that someone just cut off the top of our letterhead and used that to forge the letter.

Q. Do you have any suspicions as to who could have done this?

A. Your guess is as good as mine but it could be people who did not want Mr Gurumurthy to go ahead with his writings.

Q. What did the Government of India offer as your fees?

A. That information is privileged between us and our clients, but let me tell you we never got $300,000 (Rs 38.4 lakh). It is not as if I wouldn't like to have that much money but no one gave it to us. We would swear to it under oath.

Q. It has been stated by some officials in Delhi that your company had agreed to work without the payment of any advance and, in fact, under the arrangement that it would be paid on the basis of the value of the information uncovered. Is that true?

A. This is absolutely true. The way we bill is a lot like a law firm. Normally, our billing would be for the services rendered. But sometimes it could even be like the law firms here in the US. For example, you may go to a lawyer and say I have no money. But if we win you would get 25 per cent of the figure.

Q. But isn't it rather unusual for a company like yours to work without even the guaranteed payment of your expenses?

A. No, it is not unusual in our business. We have experience in dealing with governments and they are generally good with the money. Most of our people are former government servants. I myself was with the Government and Mr Mckay was an assistant attorney with the DC district attorney's office. I consider our firm to be a highly respectable one which is why we do some government work. And I am also very familiar with the Government of India for which I have a great deal of respect.

Q. What exactly was your earlier acquaintance with the Government of India?

A. I was once the deputy auditor-general with the US Agency for International Development whose Delhi office was under my jurisdiction.

Q. To return to the letter, were you indeed hired to investigate against the people mentioned in the letter?

A. I haven't seen the letter but I have been told that it mentions the names of three other prominent Indian citizens who we haven't even heard of. I would say no more than that. Whatever that letter says is absolute trash of the mill.

Q. What do you plan to do about the circulation of the letter which you call a forgery? Are you planning to take legal remedies or are you sending one of your executives to India to sort this out?

A. Currently we have no such travel plans. We are looking at various options. But more than anything else we want the Government of India to put the full weight of its investigative machinery to find out who is responsible for the forgery. I assume there are laws against forgery in India. They must catch those responsible for this rather than the innocent reporter of the Indian Express.

Q. Don't you sound rather too upset?

A. Yes indeed. No one likes to have their stationery misused.

ment—despite repeated telephone calls. But it seemed reasonably certain that Fairfax had already investigated the Bachchans to some extent, and perhaps unearthed enough information to begin asking embarrassing questions.

But that has only deepened the mystery in the Enforcement Directorate, with officials saying that there is no evidence of any contract having been signed with Fairfax, no mention of the terms, no exchange of correspondence, no record of Fairfax having provided information. The only reference to Fairfax is in a report that Bhure Lal submitted to Vinod Pande.

The absence of documentation is odd precisely because Bhure Lal has written at least one letter to Fairfax, which admits

Indian Express

Gurumurthy(right) and Janakiraman receiving correspondence on government stationery. Also, Bhure Lal has apparently told the CBI that Fairfax had provided him some information. But the CBI maintains that there is no record of this either in the Enforcement Directorate. The CBI has raised one further question: when Fairfax gave Bhure Lal the information, didn't they ask for any payment at that stage? The answer, apparently, is in the negative—though one report talked of a pay-

Finance secretary questions Bhure Lal on Fairfax affair; Bhure Lal declines reply.

MARCH 11

▸ CBI gets allegedly forged letters from Fairfax to Gurumurthy, which refer to 'Dr Harris' meeting Bhure Lal.

▸ Bhure Lal transferred out of Enforcement Directorate.

▸ Enforcement Directorate shifted from Revenue Department to Department of Economic Affairs, under finance secretary.

MARCH 12

▸ CBI raid/arrest orders flown to Madras and Bombay.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

S. GURUMURTHY

Meteoric Rise

BEFORE March 1986, readers of the Indian Express would not have recognised his byline. After that date, nobody has been able to forget S. Gurumurthy, 38, the anti-Reliance crusader.

Gurumurthy is a chartered accountant and Express Chairman R.N. Goenka's consiglieri. He first met Goenka in 1975, when he was working for Gowri Kantan and Company, auditors of the Indian Express, Madras. In 1976, he was appointed adviser to the Express. Today he is Goenka's closest confidant, even mediating in disputes within the Goenka clan.

Though he has become a national talking point, Gurumurthy says: "Writers require anonymity, otherwise they become demagogues. I would never have come into the public...but now I have been brought to the streets." But his meek exterior hides a determined toughness. His interrogators kept him awake for 48 hours at a stretch, without success. He refused the bed and mattress offered by the police, preferring the floor.

He is certainly a disciplined man, with a 16-year association with the Rashtriya Swayamsevak Sangh (RSS). He can call up any number of cars, yet he cycles to RSS shakhas.

Born into a poor family in Tamil Nadu's South Arcot district, a scholarship helped him get a Bachelor of Commerce degree, after which he did his chartered accountancy. In 1975, he started his own accountancy practice, and three years ago he started the firm Guru & Varadan in partnership with A.Janakiraman. Among his clients today are Vijay Mallya's McDowells, while the Chhabrias are known to have sought him out when they were in trouble with the Government.

Gurumurthy is also a model of South Indian conservatism. He lives in a middle-class joint family, a vegetarian and teetotaller, and not much of a socialiser. Talking of his children, he says: "I may violate the Official Secrets Act, but in family planning matters I am a nationalist. I have only two children." Appropriately named Durga and Shiva.

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

Gurumurthy: sticking to his guns

The first piece he wrote was for the Express in September 1985. He was appointed its columnist in January 1986—the appointment letter is among the documents that the CBI has seized. Will there be more pieces on Reliance? "I have just come out after 10 days of contemplation. Let us see. The answer lies in the womb of the future," he says.

—RAMINDAR SINGH

ment of $ 33,000.

If that is where matters stand at the moment, the entire affair has exposed the different factions in the Government, the pulls and counter-pressures that have been developing, and the lobbies that have been operating. V.P.Singh's crusade clearly exposed the system to the bone, with several raw nerves showing.

Thus, the view is now surfacing that V.P.Singh's approach to tax and economic issues was not all what it should have been. The argument is put forward that in the zeal to nab tax evaders, Singh held up clearances for large projects, thereby delayed production start-up and added to the import bill. Industries languished without succour, and companies were hauled up for imaginary offences and then forced to apologise by using the coercive power of the Government. The cases referred to in order to bolster these arguments indicate that several large companies and groups with access to the prime minister had managed to drive home this point of view.

A CBI official pointed out for good measure that the initial decision was to investigate both the leakage of documents to Gurumurthy as well as the charges that Gurumurthy had made against Reliance with the help of the documents. "But only Gurumurthy has been proceeded against, not Reliance." Echoing this, Express Editor Suman Dubey asked: "Why is the Government going after Gurumurthy and not Reliance?"

Meanwhile, Singh's favourite officials have been sidelined or neutralised while also being repeatedly interrogated despite Singh's protests. Inevitably, this has led to a loss of heart down the line. Nowhere is

1987

MARCH 13

- Indian Express publishes text of President's letter to prime minister.
- Gurumurthy arrested in Madras, his accountancy partner A. Janakiraman arrested in Bombay.
- Papers seen being burnt outside Indian Express guest-house in New Delhi.
- Guest-house also raided.

MARCH 14

- Indian Express charges that

GURUMURTHY IS ARRESTED IN MADRAS

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

the demoralisation more evident than in the Enforcement Directorate, where one official said it was a shame that their director should be questioned by the CBI and another pointed out that work had come to a virtual standstill. Said an observer: "In V.P. Singh's time, officers had come to believe they could arrest anyone who broke the law, however big he was. Now they are once again afraid to touch the money bags." Although an official justified the shifting of the directorate to the Department of Economic Affairs on the ground that it was this department which handled foreign exchange (and not the Department of Revenue), the timing of the transfer told its own tale. The political message for Singh is clear in all this, and he can be expected to weigh his options carefully.

As for the Fairfax affair itself, some key questions remain to be answered: Did anyone other than the Government hire and pay Fairfax? What was the real reason for the viciousness with which the Government came down on Gurumurthy for a technical offence committed some months earlier in pursuit of what he saw as public interest? Was it because it felt Bachchan was being investigated, as the McKay letter said and as rumours had been suggesting? Did Fairfax indeed file damaging information on the Bachchans? Was the McKay letter genuine or fake? If the latter, who forged it and why?

There are, however, no easy explanations available. But it seems more than likely that in course of time at least some of these questions will find the right answers.

—T.N. NINAN with PRABHU CHAWLA and RAMINDAR SINGH

BHURE LAL

Dogged Crusader

FOR Bhure Lal, 48, the change of fortunes has been dramatic. Earlier, he was doing the interrogating. Last fortnight it was his turn to be questioned, by the Central Bureau of Investigation.

During his 20-month tenure as director, enforcement, he had been a dreaded figure, with the reputation of a determined sleuth. And although he was grilled for three days by the CBI—and felt he was being hounded for no fault of his—he defended his actions and got down to his new charge as joint secretary (coins and currency).

BHAWAN SINGH

Bhure Lal: enviable record

Lal has been a fighter and crusader throughout his career. Born into a poor rural family of eastern Uttar Pradesh, Lal started off as a commissioned army officer in 1963 and saw action in the 1965 Indo-Pak war in the Sialkot sector. He rose to the rank of captain before appearing for the IAS examination in 1970.

Ever since, it has been a story of going after the corrupt and guilty—and of being summarily transferred. As subdivisional magistrate of Bahraich (UP), he raided over 100 traders in edible oils. As joint director (industries) at Meerut, he began penalising over 50 industrialists for misusing raw materials meant for small-scale units. And as district magistrate of Varanasi, he went after the local coal mafia. Each time he was served with premature transfer orders—once at midnight. As district magistrate at Allahabad, he used to carry a leather whip during his routine rounds, and earned the name of 'Hunterwala magistrate'.

His next assignment in Uttar Pradesh was as secretary to the then chief minister V.P. Singh. Says Singh: "Bhure Lal is one of the finest, most honest and most dependable officers I have worked with."

Lal's record in the Enforcement Directorate is now part of history, for he went after leading businessmen in a manner that no one else had dared. Influential and biased officials now say Lal's record was unimpressive as he recovered only Rs 25 crore in foreign exchange from 11,000 cases, but the facts show this was a record performance. Others argue that Lal's record should be judged in the context of how much foreign exchange loss he prevented by putting the fear of God in people. A third viewpoint is that Lal's approach would discourage Indians with money abroad from bringing it back. Irrespective of the criticism, he has left behind a legacy which his successor will find almost impossible to match.

—PRABHU CHAWLA

raids and arrests are linked to publication of President's letter.

MARCH 17

- Home Minister Buta Singh alleges that press is involved in a design to destabilise country.

MARCH 23

- Gurumurthy and Janakiraman released on bail.

MARCH 28

- CBI seeks details of Hershman from Oberoi Hotel.
- Prime Minister calls on President.

CBI CHECKS IN AT OBEROI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

GUJARAT

A State of Siege

THOUGH Gujarat Chief Minister Amarsinh Chaudhary does not have much clout in his own state, Congress(I) party bosses had drafted him to campaign in West Bengal. But Chaudhary had to put his bags away when the Bharatiya Kisan Sangh (BKS), an organisation of farmers, announced that seven lakh of them would march to the state capital Gandhinagar and gherao the state Assembly on March 18. They were to draw attention to their long-standing demands which included remunerative support prices for farm produce, cheaper power and fertilisers, changes in land revenue rules and speeding up of irrigation projects.

Chaudhary, in his typically tactless style, decided that the best strategy would be to ensure that none of them reached the capital. He recruited 5,500 paramilitary personnel to guard Gandhinagar and had a Rs 2.75-lakh barricade built around the Assembly building. He also ordered the police to prevent the agitationists from leaving their districts to join the march. Road transport officials were employed to stop tractors and vehicles from carrying farmers to the state capital.

Events later proved that the Government's show of force had backfired: the agitation snowballed into one of the most violent ever seen. Angry farmers—who had been agitating since October 3—all over Gujarat set 73 government vehicles on fire and destroyed another 40 in a single day. They felled trees to block traffic and damaged railway lines. Though more than 2,000 people were arrested, mob violence and firing had left 10 dead and over 150 seriously injured. Nine of the dead were farmers and the tenth was a policeman lynched by a mob. Among those severely beaten up was former chief minister Madhavsinh Solanki.

Moreover, as the fortnight progressed, farmers began to hit where it hurt most. They retaliated by cutting off the supply of milk and vegetables to urban areas where prices leapt overnight by 50 per cent following serious shortages. Trucks carrying vegetables to towns were set afire and milk was spilled on the road. In Ahmedabad, the Abad dairy's daily supply of 1.5 lakh litres of milk fell to 50,000 litres. And in Sabarkantha district, angry farmers barricaded highways and disrupted traffic.

ANUBHAI SHAH

Armed police outside the Assembly (left); farmers enroute to Gandhinagar; and (inset) Chaudhary: backfiring tactics

ANUBHAI SHAH

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

In the Assembly, Chaudhary had a hard time explaining why vehicles loaded with farmers had been stopped when, in the past, similar mass transport of Congress(I) supporters to election meetings had proceeded unhindered. While opposition MLAs charged the Government with adopting undemocratic means, Chaudhary defended himself saying that the action was taken to "safeguard the state's highest democratic institution...when it was busy discussing important affairs." But the otherwise weak-kneed opposition was not persuaded and walked out when the chief minister refused to apologise for the police firing. Said former chief minister Babubhai Patel: "The eagerness to show off sheer force ended in innocents being killed and injured."

The Congress(I) sweep in the district and taluka panchayat elections in late January this year had convinced Chaudhary that the farmers' stir was of no consequence and would die out. Though farmer leaders deny any political involvement, the truth is that they are being directed mainly by the BJP and the RSS. Says Ashok Bhatt, one of the BJP leaders: "This state-wide stir can overthrow the Chaudhary Government."

Chaudhary's poll gifts had comprised a subsidy in power tariffs worth Rs 105.73 crore, crop insurance benefits worth Rs 118 crore and remunerative support prices which made a difference of about Rs 30 crore. Said the chief minister: "We have been fair to farmers. Unreasonable demands cannot be met particularly now as the state is in the grip of a severe drought." But it is also true that, in comparison to his predecessor Solanki, Chaudhary has allocated less money towards agriculture and power. Allocation for agriculture has fallen from Rs 54.19 crore in 1984-85 to Rs 49.31 crore two years later. In power, which farmers desperately need, the fall is even steeper—from Rs 348 crore to Rs 240.51 crore.

Three days after the outburst of violence, BKS President Rambhai Patel announced that the stir had been called off because Chaudhary, in a meeting, had promised to release arrested farmers. But the recent move to cut off vegetables and milk supply to towns indicates that his followers are unwilling to take his orders on this count. The blockade is likely to hurt the poor farmers most because they can ill-afford to lose the small money they earn. But with the BJP urging the farmers on, the agitation may continue to give Chaudhary many sleepless nights.

—RAMESH MENON

MADHYA PRADESH

The Rape Scandal

THE sensational news of the gangrape of a 25-year-old woman last fortnight in Bhopal by Ganpat Singh Dhurve, 31, a Congress(I) MLA and his two accomplices, threatens to snowball into a major political scandal in the state. The ruling party, realising the serious implications of the case, quickly moved to suspend the legislator from primary membership of the party, and expel him from the Congress Legislature Party.

SANJEEV GUPTA

Dhurve (right); and Shrivastava, the victim with son: shock waves

Dhurve, who has represented the Jamai constituency in Chhindwara district since 1980, has been charged under Sections 376 (rape) and 342 (wrongful confinement) of the Indian Penal Code. His co-accused are an unidentified office-bearer of the Chhindwara Improvement Trust and Naveen Sood, a local liquor contractor and member of the newly-constituted district 20-point programme implementation committee.

The three associates have been charged for forcibly detaining Malati Shrivastava, an employee of the state's Health Department working in Babai, Hoshangabad district, in room number 40 of Bhopal's MLAs' rest-house number one, and gangraping her.

Shrivastava had come to Bhopal along with her eight-year-old son, Vinay, to seek a recommendation for transfer to Gwalior where her husband is a lower division clerk in a government hospital. In her complaint to the police, the victim said that on March 9 she met Dhurve accidently at the rest-house and he had offered to help her with the transfer as well as a promotion. He then called her to his room at 7.30 p.m. on the pretext that the health minister would be visiting him at that time in the evening.

When Shrivastava, accompanied by her son and an acquaintance, Asharam, who is a key eyewitness to the alleged crime, reached the room in the evening, the minister was nowhere in sight. A little later, Asharam was sent off to the market "for making some purchases". The three accused present in the room began drinking, and bolted the door from inside. They gagged the woman and then criminally assaulted her.

The boy, Vinay, was slapped and locked in the bathroom when he tried to help his mother fend off the men. "They are bad persons. They beat up my mother," a still traumatised Vinay told the police later. During the next two hours Shrivastava was repeatedly gangraped. Eventually she was allowed to go the bathroom and managed to escape through the window.

"I did not report the matter immediately to the police because my son was in their custody," said Shrivastava. Vinay returned late that night with Asharam. The report was eventually lodged with the police on March 14, when local newspapers had already broken the story. Shrivastava was medically examined, her statement recorded by a magistrate and the room where the rape allegedly took place was sealed by the police.

Dhurve, who had left town, was ar-

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

MOTILAL VORA

New Offensive

MADHYA Pradesh Chief Minister Motilal Vora has so far carefully husbanded his political ammunition. But last fortnight he finally let fly—and killed two birds with the same stone. His first shot was the nomination of Arun Vora, 24, his younger son, as one of the members of the Durg district 20-point programme implementation committee, a move that was interpreted as blatant nepotism.

Arun Vora is a district Youth Congress president, a post he acquired after Vora came into power. But there are 62 district Youth Congress presidents in the state and none of them have been fortunate enough to find a place in the Government's programme implementation committees. Asked whether it was proper, Vora brusquely snapped: "I nominated him because I wanted to."

The nomination was in keeping with Vora's new mood: defiant and aggressive. But it clearly had a more significant motive—notice that Vora was finally ready to take on arch-rival Arjun Singh. Till late last year, the programme implementation committees set up by Arjun Singh five years ago were still intact. Their term had expired in March 1985 but a politically shaky Vora kept extending it. Now, with the rift between the two leaders growing and sensing that Singh's political fortunes were on the wane, Vora finally launched his offensive. While reconstituting the committees, he systematically removed members of the Arjun Singh group. Most of the 1,300 nominees are new faces and Vora's men.

The sudden coup increased Congress(I) infighting. Jagatpal Singh, MP, state Congress(I) Committee general secretary and an Arjun Singh supporter, wrote off to Vora that the state committee for coordination between the party organisation and the Government wasn't consulted before the reconstitution, which, he allegedly pointed out, was necessary under AICC(I) directives.

Vora replied that he too was not consulted by the party organisation, controlled by Arjun loyalists, in making several important appointments. Incidentally, meeting the coordination committee could have been suicidal for Vora: of its six members, three each from the Government and the party, four are Arjun's men.

Still, Vora took care to ensure that the new nominees were not going to cause him embarrassment. They were nominated only after the police verified their character. In fact, several names suggested by senior party leaders had to be axed because of adverse reports. "This was done in view of the past experience," said state Industries Corporation Chairman Manak Agarwal, said to be Vora's left-hand man. The implication was obvious. The committees formed by Arjun Singh had members classified as "criminal elements" and caused the Government's discomfiture on several occasions.

Cartoon by AJIT NINAN

Still, the selection was not without its controversies. One of the new nominees was charged in the sensational rape case that rocked the state last fortnight and there were also charges of nepotism. In Raigarh, Jagatpal Singh, MP, his brother Prithvipal Singh and son Sanjay Singh were all nominated. Obviously, they seem to have taken their cue from the top.

—N.K. SINGH

rested at Bhopal railway station when he returned on March 23. Claimed the accused legislator: "I don't know what is happening. From March 5 to March 13, eight people had stayed with me in this room." Earlier, in a statement issued from his hometown, he described the complaint against him as an attempt of "character assassination" by his political opponents.

The police, however, claim that they recovered a piece of Shrivastava's garment and broken bangles when they opened the sealed room in the MLA's presence. He was also identified by the victim and her son, when presented before the magistrate who remanded him to judicial custody for 15 days.

Meanwhile, a new twist has been added to the investigations with the report that Ram, a servant of Dhurve and a key witness in the case, has been "missing" since March 18. The case took yet another intriguing turn when Shalabh Bhadoria, resident editor of Satpura Vani, a local daily which relentlessly exposed the crime, was assaulted by some hoodlums on March 22. "They asked me to stop writing against the MLA," says Bhadoria. In fact, even the police stalled before finally acting. Initially, they refused to register the victim's First Information Report and moved the case only when local newspapers made it too hot for them to ignore. Dhurve's arrest—10 days after the complaint had been lodged—came significantly, on the day the Vidhan Sabha resumed its session after the Holi recess.

The case, meanwhile, has also focussed attention on the unsavoury reputation the MLAs' rest-house has acquired. The speaker of the state Assembly, Rajendra Shukla, made a surprise inspection of the complex last week after several MLAs complained that the place had become "a den of debauchery, prostitution and antisocial activities". Only last year a prostitute and a teacher were arrested from the rest-house. The teacher told the police that he had brought the prostitute as he had been asked by an MLA "to supply a girl", if he wanted to get his transfer done.

Even in the present case, it is intriguing that although all the adjacent rooms were occupied at the time, no one heard Shrivastava's cries for help or came to her rescue. Shrivastava will now have to relive her nightmare when the hearings start in court where, at least, she has some assurance of justice.

—N.K. SINGH

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THE SUPERLATIVES

VIMAL®
A RELIANCE PRODUCT

DRESS MATERIAL

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Now, the way to beat holiday inflation once and for all... in style!

Imagine spending 7 fun-filled days by the sea one year. And the very next year, exchanging it for 7 bracing days up in the coolness of the hills, or changing over to a week of big fun holidays in a big-time metro...

And in each place, availing exclusive accommodation — furnished, equipped and impeccably maintained. All reserved for you, for life. Yours to enjoy. Or to exchange, sell, or even bequeath!

Just imagine paying for all this once. At today's rates. And not at the rates that are rising year after year.

Starting 1988, you'll have a choice of five exquisite holiday resorts. But, starting today, you have the option to book any of these places. At today's cost!

The Ansals Holiday Resorts Plan is backed by 30 years of the Ansals building expertise, innovation and foresight in real estate. And Rs. 500 crores worth of current building projects.

- Initially a choice of 5 resorts — Goa, Kulu Manali, Mussoorie, Nainital and Delhi.
- 'Floating' weeks for holidays anytime of the year.
  'Flexible' weeks to be chosen within a fixed month.
  'Fixed' weeks for a fixed span every year.
- Option to 'bank' or 'prepone' your week.
- Professionally managed.
- Two bedroom 'Apartments'. One bedroom 'Suites'. Efficiency 'Studios' — all luxuriously furnished.
- Option to sell and exchange your Resort accommodation.
- Entitles you to avail exclusive Ansals Resorts Club membership.
- Price: Rs. 14,000 upwards, depending upon accommodation and seasonality.

Ansals Holiday Resorts Plan

The best locales for a life-time at one-time cost.

ansal resorts & HOTELS LTD.

Regd. & Head Office:
UG Floor, Indra Prakash, 21, Barakhamba Road,
New Delhi-110001. Phones: 331-7466, 331-8195, 331-6975
Telex: 31-62626 ANSL IN. Cable: ANSALHORT

ON-LINE/ARH/87 D

Sales Offices:
★ Ahmedabad: 1864/6, 'Dwarakesh', Khanpur Road, Ph. 393525 ★ Bangalore: 91/1, Infantry Road, Ph. 562479 ★ Bombay: 1211, Maker Chambers-V, Nariman Point, Ph. 225405, 232633 ★ Calcutta: Todi Mansion, 3rd Floor, P-15, India Exchange Place Ext., Ph. 278084 ★ Chandigarh: SCO 112-113, Sector 8-C, Madhya Marg, Ph. 20263, 20866, 29793 ★ Cochin: XXXVI/1544, Mahatma Gandhi Road, Post Box No. 1002, Ernakulam, Cochin-682011, Ph. 353904, 353878, 353853 ★ Lucknow: 9, Rani Laxmibai Marg, Ph. 48554 ★ Madras: 'Anand House' 2nd Floor, 51, Armenian Street, Ph. 24161, 23550.

SEAL OF ansals DEPENDABILITY

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

You can enjoy the same cooker that's the favourite in America's top department store

The Hawkins Futura has been exported to leading department stores in the United States of America. This success is based on unique consumer benefits and product design that has been awarded patents in the United States of America and the United Kingdom.

In actual cooking trials the Hawkins Futura on average proved 46% faster than microwave cooking.

The Hawkins Futura's beautiful, jewel-grey Satilon finish combines the advantages of quick-heating aluminium with the non-tarnish quality of stainless steel.

The fingertip control provides safe, automatic, direction-controlled steam release.

Enjoy cooking in the world's latest and best pressure cooker – the Hawkins Futura.

Twenty-nine traditional Hawkins models are also available from Rs. 180* upwards.

Hawkins Futura pressure cookers on display in a Bloomingdale's store in New York. Bloomingdale's is America's leading department store chain for high-quality products.

Hawkins®

FUTURA™

The New Generation pressure cooker

* Maximum recommended retail price excluding all taxes. Check with your nearest Hawkins dealer. If you need further information write to: Hawkins Cookers Ltd., Dept. No. 102, P.O. Box 348, Bombay 116. ® Registered Trade Mark © 1987 Copyright by Hawkins Cookers Ltd. ™ Trade Mark. Patent pending.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Photographs by SHYAM TEKWANI

TAMIL NADU

Deadly Sabotage

The sabotage was clearly a sophisticated operation. Investigations have focussed on the Tamil Nadu Viduthalai Padai which has links with several other separatist movements.

Map by B.K. SHARMA

IT wasn't the worst-ever train accident in Tamil Nadu, let alone in the country. But if the tally of 25 dead and 139 seriously injured nevertheless seemed horrendous, it was because the story this time wasn't the standard one of human error—the bomb that caused the tragedy spoke clearly of human design.

The saboteurs had picked the site—and the time—with grim purpose. The Rockfort Express travels 334-km between Madras and Tiruchi. It steamed into Ariyalur, 62 km from Tiruchi, at 4.30 a.m when the tired driver, K. Vellaiyan was given a disturbing message from Sillakkudi, the next station. The message, sent 15 minutes earlier by the Sillakkudi station-master stated that he had heard a sound like that of an explosion, though he wasn't sure of its direction. But railway officials decided that this did not spell any danger for the Rockfort Express. The train was allowed to proceed after Vellaiyan was formally handed a note of caution.

Vellaiyan was, however, taking no chances. He approached the 540-ft long Marudayar bridge at a slow 25 km an hour. As the powerful engine lights picked out the length of the bridge, he didn't notice anything amiss. But the saboteurs had done their work with deadly precision. As the engine reached the eighth of the nine piers supporting the track, the rails began to sink under its weight. Vellaiyan jammed the emergency brakes, but it was too late.

The engine, after derailing, hit the stone embankment at the end of the bridge and recoiled. Vellaiyan was killed on the spot. In the powerful impact of the recoil, the compartment just behind the engine—a jam-packed second class one—telescoped into it, swerved to the left in a violent jolt, and hung precariously from the bridge. In all, eight out of 17 bogies were derailed.

The sabotaging of the bridge was a sophisticated operation. Observed C.S. Kannan, Tiruchi divisional railway manager: "The bomb was exploded at precisely a point where the consequent derailment of the engine would cause it to hit the stone embankment. If it hadn't been for the impact of the engine's recoil, so many bogies—and therefore people—might not have been affected."

Though press reports said that the bomb exploded as the train passed over the bridge, it was actually detonated at 4.15 a.m., exactly half an hour before the train was due, making a gaping hole in one of the cast-iron pillars supporting the bridge. The sound was heard by villagers in nearby Ramlingapuram and Laslapuram. Besides the pillar, the capping beam it supported had also given way. But the driver couldn't see this as the track was kept up by heavy girders and sank only as the train came on.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

What gave cause for concern was that despite it being a major accident, neither the rescue operations nor police investigations were prompt or professional. The number of agencies involved—the railways, state police, CID's crime branch, forensic scientists, an explosives expert and the fire services—added to the confusion and delay.

Rajesh Zaveri, 22, came to the accident site looking for his father Ashok Gopaldas Zaveri, 45, a famous Tiruchi jeweller. When, aided by railway officials, he finally found his father's body trapped under the footboard of a crushed compartment, the police and explosives expert said that the body couldn't be removed as cutting away the footboard would tamper with the evidence. Besides, a long fire ladder needed to reach the coach from the riverbed, had been wound up for the day by the fire services. Said a disgusted Rajesh, who retrieved the body 29 long-hours after the accident: "The harassment and red tape in getting my father's body have been greater than even my personal grief."

Ironically, however, the same eagerness to protect evidence was not reflected where it really mattered. There was a crucial trail of footsteps and a 100-metre-long wire—with fingerprints—along the dry riverbed from where the pillar had been ripped open. The significance of this was underlined by the conclusions of the forensic experts: a sophisticated plunger-type push button bomb had been operated mechanically by someone at the end of the wire, and a 50-kg explosive mixture of nitro-glycerine and nitro-cellulose had been used. But the footprints' area was not cordoned off. Nor did police officials think of employing sniffer dogs to track the saboteurs.

Initially, suspicion fell on the Tamil Eelam Liberation Organisation (TELO) and the Peoples' Liberation Organisation of Tamil Eelam (PLOTE). TELO had been earlier accused of the series of bomb blasts in the state and PLOTE was also guilty of several law and order violations. The day after the incident, 188 armed policemen surrounded a major PLOTE camp, 60 km from the blast site. Three PLOTE members were picked up for interrogation. But K. Ravindran, director-general of police, later admitted that they had yet to find any evidence of their involvement. Last week, Tamil Nadu police investigators categorically ruled out the involvement of Sri Lankan Tamil militant groups in the Rockfort Express sabotage.

Rescue work in progress: heavy toll

Suspicion is now focussed on a shadowy organisation, the Tamil Nadu Viduthalai Padai (Tamil Nadu Liberation Troop). Its posters, which were found on the bridge and in Ariyalur, questioned the Government's failure to officially recognise Tamil Eelam, protested the imposition of Hindi and pleaded for the return of the militants' arms who, the posters said, should not be arrested. Police officials claim that the organisation, which is committed to violence, has links with the CPI(ML) and has been linked with several other separatist movements.

Little is so far known about the organisation which is said to be headed by a man called Thamizharasan who was arrested in 1985 in one case, came out on parole, and is since absconding. He is one of the accused in the Thiruvaiyaru bridge blast in Thanjavur district on the eve of Rajiv Gandhi's visit to inaugurate the South Zone Cultural Centre early last year. The modus operandi then was the same. Thamizharasan, who had studied chemical engineering, is said to have some expertise in explosives. Says Ravindran: "The Viduthalai Padai seems to always time its bomb blasts to coincide with VIP visits."

The Tamil Nadu police subsequently arrested Pichai Pillai, 28, an unemployed man from Vallam village, 20 km from the blast site. Police officials say he belongs to the Viduthalai Padai. They have recovered a substantial quantity of gelatine sticks, evidently used for the bomb, from him. Says Inspector General of Police K.K. Rajasekaran Nair: "We believe we have made a major breakthrough with his arrest. But we are also on the look-out for four or five other suspects." Police are convinced that the sabotage was planned and executed by a small group of local extremists owing allegiance to the Viduthalai Padai.

Meanwhile, the state Government has introduced 24-hour armed security by Railway Protection Force personnel at all important bridges and embankments and frequent inspection of tracks by the use of motorised trollies between the running of trains in sensitive areas, specially after dark. But regardless of the added precautions, the Ariyalur bomb blast, coming at the end of a series of such incidents, seems to have permanently destroyed the calm and security of this once peaceful state.

—S.H. VENKATRAMANI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Born in America.
Now the world's first choice.

Around the world, one name rises above the rest for engine oil performance: GULF. Born in America, Gulf Oil pioneered the development of the finest lubricants science and man could create. It grew to become the universal choice for high-technology, state-of-the-art lubricants for Industrial and Automotive uses. From North America, Europe, the Middle East, all the way to South Korea, GULF is the number one name for top quality engine oils.

GULF engine oils, manufactured by Petrosil in India, offer you top class performance, complete engine protection, longer life, more engine power and higher fuel efficiency for all automotive engines. Now, you can stop worrying about that investment in your precious vehicle.

Insist on GULF's genuine engine protection – your engine deserves the finest oil.

Petrosil Oil Co. Ltd. Licensees of Gulf Oil Corpn., U.S.A.
Apeejay House, 3, Dinsha Wacha Road, Bombay 400 020.
Area Offices: New Delhi • Ahmedabad • Calcutta • Madras
Petrosil has depots, distributors and stockists all over India. Gulf lubricants are also available with leading auto spare parts dealers.

Gulf®

Engine Oils

World's First Choice. Make it yours.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

'It's funny how every time we set up the Barbecute a party just happens!'

INTRODUCING

Prestige

Barbecute

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

MAA (S) PBE 3A 86

Anywhere, anytime, it's great times with Prestige Barbecute.

It's strange how every man who loves good food and good company turns out to be a terrific barbecue chef. He may have never seen the inside of a kitchen before but Prestige Barbecute brings out the creative cook in him.

Prestige Barbecute. It does wonderful things. Set it up some place and a party just grows around it. Neighbours drop by. Friends get wind of it and come calling. The children call up their friends. And before you can say seekh kabab, a full blown party is under way.

And as the glowing coal slow grills the chicken tangri and the corn-a-cob gets browner, the tantalizing aroma of food makes everyone hungrier, livelier, then the stampede for food begins!

Discover how to put the sizzle in a party, even an instant party, with new Prestige Barbecute. Light and conveniently portable, it can be set up in minutes on a terrace, in a backyard, on the beach, even a traffic island!

Next time you are in the mood for fun, set up the Prestige Barbecute.

And watch a party evolve. A party where everyone is a great chef. Everyone wants to grab the juiciest morsels. Everyone gets hungrier every minute. And everyone has a simply marvellous time.

Portable barbecue- 5 minutes to assemble.

Rs.495/=
Local taxes extra.

Designed by Prestige of London

A Product

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Marakesh

Transasia's latest creation in pure new wool.

Woolmark
(वूलमार्क)

PURE NEW WOOL PILE

Understated elegance in hushed tones that whisper your good taste. Marakesh wears the Woolmark. The internationally recognised symbol guaranteeing the matchless qualities of pure new wool — exceptional durability and easy maintenance, looks that last for years and rich colours that never fade.

TRANSASIA

TransAsia Carpets

In collaboration with Besmer of West Germany.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

TAMIL NADU

Rule by Whim

WHEN, last fortnight, Tamil Nadu Chief Minister M.G. Ramachandran relieved two ministers from their posts, he was merely acting true to form. For, the subtle distinction between professional relationships and personal likes and dislikes, is entirely alien to him. At the receiving end of MGR's ire were K.A. Krishnaswamy, local administration minister and Anoor Jagadeesan, rural industries minister, who were dropped from the 16-member Cabinet. Confided an AIADMK MP: "The chief minister seems to be sacking and taking in ministers according to his whims and fancies. Nobody knows where he ultimately stands in the Government or in the party."

While the facts of the case can never be established, strong circumstantial evidence suggests that this weird story began with MGR's wife, V.N. Janaki's active interest in effecting a matrimonial alliance between Krishnaswamy's daughter, Mankani, and Iniyan Sampath, a Tamil Nadu Youth Congress(I) secretary and son of E.V.K. Sulochana Sampath, chairperson of the Tamil Nadu Industrial Development Corporation, who is known to be close to MGR.

But Krishnaswamy did not share Janaki's keenness and arranged another match for his daughter. According to sources close to MGR, what invited the chief minister's wrath was Krishnaswamy's "audacity" in calling him to conduct the wedding after rejecting Janaki's choice. Krishnaswamy made things worse for himself by inviting DMK President M. Karunanidhi to the wedding as well (INDIA TODAY March 31, 1987). Anticipating the embarrassment that his presence would cause, Karunanidhi politely excused himself.

Krishnaswamy, in the meantime, spared no expense to receive the chief minister. Lavish preparations were made and an expensive hall hired for the occasion. But then, instead of Puratchi Thalaivar (Revolutionary Leader) MGR's portrait, the picture adorning the podium was of Krishnaswamy's late brother. Such are the details that change the course of Tamil Nadu politics.

MGR boycotted both the wedding and the reception that followed. And as word of his absence got around, all the ministers present slipped out, barring Jagadeesan and his family, who not only sat through the ceremony, but also attended the reception that evening.

The ministers' fate was sealed. In a deliberate move to cut the two offenders down to size, MGR sent Krishnaswamy on a four-day tour of the districts to organise drought-relief work. But even as he was supervising work at Tirunelveli, he got the message that he had been dismissed. Said a crestfallen Krishnaswamy: "I am going to keep a low profile. Don't drag me into any controversy."

Jagadeesan suffered an equally dismal end. MGR asked Jagadeesan to come to the secretariat and show him some footwear samples for a new Rs 20-crore footwear scheme for schoolchildren. But, on the afternoon of March 16, Jagadeesan—with his samples—waited in vain for MGR. In fact, MGR does not normally go to the secretariat in the afternoon. It was finally the rural industries secretary who broke the news of his dismissal to the patiently waiting Jagadeesan. Confessed a bewildered Jagadeesan: "I was upset, but I respect the wishes of my beloved leader."

In sacking Krishnaswamy and Jagadeesan, MGR has also hit out once again at the party faction of R.M. Veerappan, former information minister. Jagadeesan has always been a staunch Veerappan loyalist and Krishnaswamy, who had earlier been a fence-sitter between the Jayalalitha and Veerappan factions, had recently begun to identify himself with the former minister's clique.

The re-allocation of portfolios held by the sacked ministers is also a pointer to the direction in which the wind is blowing. Krishnaswamy's portfolio has been given to Food Minister S. Ramachandran, and Jagadeesan's to Transport Minister S. Muthuswamy, both of whom have cast their lot with the party Propaganda Secretary Jayalalitha. And though no one is willing to go on record, the Jayalalitha camp is evidently content.

Irrespective of the course of AIADMK's factional politics, the entire episode is a sad reflection on the nature of politics in this southern state.

—S.H. VENKATRAMANI

"I am going to keep a low profile. Don't drag me into any controversy."

K.A. KRISHNASWAMY

BHAWAN SINGH

MGR and wife: playing cupid

"I was upset, but I respect the wishes of my beloved leader."

ANOOR JAGADEESAN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ANDHRA PRADESH

A Close Affair

AT first sight, it seemed a straight victory for Chief Minister N.T. Rama Rao and his Telugu Desam. After all, the party had bagged 18 of 21 Zilla Praja Parishads (ZPPs) and 632 out of 1,058 Mandal Praja Parishads (MPPs) in the mid-March elections. Moreover, its ally, the CPI(M), had won another 41 MPPs. But a few days later, after results of the March 18 municipal elections had come in, the Congress(I) too had something to smile about. In 49 out of 95 municipalities its chairpersons were installed plus it had won the mayor's seat in Vijayawada. The urban-rural divide couldn't have been clearer.

The ZPP and MPP elections were part of Rama Rao's design to decentralise administration and marked the replacement of the panchayat samithi system where non-party elections were fought. The public had to directly elect the MPP president—who represents 35,000 to 50,000 people—as also the chairman of the ZPP, whose constituency is twice as large as an MP's.

But even in the rural areas, the Congress(I) pulled off a significant victory in the south coastal districts. It captured the ZPP in the chief minister's home district, Krishna, and in the adjacent Guntur district. The Congress(I) bagged 42 of the 57 mandals in this district, 29 of the 48 in Krishna and half the 56 seats in the contiguous Prakasam district. Said party General Secretary Chandrababu Naidu: "We did not do well here because of anti-party activities. We will punish defiant workers."

The dominant upper caste in these districts is the Kamma, Rama Rao's own clan, which is divided on his decision to raise reservations for elected posts to 50 per cent. While 15 per cent is reserved for Harijans and 6 per cent for Girijans, Rama Rao reserved another 20 per cent for backward classes and 9 per cent for women. This incensed the Kammas as well as the Harijans—a large chunk of the electorate in the south coastal districts—who thought they would lose out on political posts and jobs.

Interestingly, both the parties have improved their position in terms of voting percentages as compared to earlier elections. If all the votes in villages and towns are considered together, then 48.4 per cent of the voters stamped the Telugu Desam's cycle symbol, as against 46.21 per cent in the 1985 assembly elections and 46.83 per cent in the January 1983 Assembly elections.

Though Rama Rao's Telugu Desam has done well in villages, its performance in towns has given it cause for concern.

For the first time since 1983, the Congress(I) under Vengala Rao has seriously challenged the ruling party.

The squabble-ridden Congress(I) first believed it had done badly due to the invectives hurled by Union Industry Minister and state Congress(I) chief Jalagam Vengala Rao at the chief minister. Though his own son Prasad Rao lost the race for ZPP presidentship in their home district of Khammam, Vengala Rao recovered sufficiently to demand Rama Rao's resignation when the detailed tally became known. The Congress(I) improved its position impressively, securing a 42.38 per cent of the votes, about 5 per cent more than the 1985 score and nearly 9 per cent more than at the time of the 1983 election debacle. If the urban-rural results are used to assess what it means in terms of assembly voting—in most cases, four mandals cover an assembly constituency—the Congress(I) was in the lead in about 140 of the 294 assembly constituencies. It clearly indicates that the next state election is bound to be a keen one.

For the Telugu Desam the victory did not come easily. Rama Rao toured all the districts over a month but his campaign was devoid of serious issues: he was mostly engaged in a slanging match with Vengala Rao. Rama Rao made a major faux pas when, in the tiny town of Madanapalle, he described his actor-son Balakrishna as a crowd puller and a worthy successor. The announcement was intended to neutralise his son-in-law Chandrababu Naidu—another aspirant for party leadership—but later, Rama Rao denied that he had announced his intention to crown Balakrishna. All the same, the chief minister had to face scathing criticism.

The elections have been so reassuring for the Congress(I) that Vengala Rao says his party will certainly triumph in the next assembly elections, "The myths about Rama Rao have yet to be fully shattered. The voters are still coming to grips with the maladministration. His abilities will become better known when he runs out of cash for his populist gimmicks."

As for Rama Rao, following the analysis of results, he is reportedly going slow on his plan to reshuffle the ministry and pull up errant district party leaders for the Telugu Desam's defeat in some areas. Said a senior minister: "The chief minister was keen on making dramatic changes soon after the elections. But the voting pattern and the failure of the party in towns have made him put off the plan indefinitely."

Meanwhile, the emergence of the ZPP with chairpersons of enormous clout deserves watching since they will hold the purse strings for district developmental programmes. What will also be carefully watched is the struggle for succession within the Telugu Desam whose chief will have to find a way of ensuring that the Congress(I) does not get any closer in popularity terms.

—AMARNATH K. MENON

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Name change

Glaxo

Laboratories (India) Ltd.

IS NOW

Glindia

LIMITED

Glindia will continue to be closely associated with the Glaxo Group worldwide, especially in the manufacture of high-technology drugs and pharmaceuticals.

Glindia
LIMITED
Dr. Annie Besant Road, Worli, Bombay 400 025

RADEUS/G

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The Discovery of a Superstar

Read here the story of how a three times world champion, Michael Ferreira and a famous Doordarshan star and champion of public causes, Priya Tendulkar discovered a world-class office machine.

PHENOMENA 920

The only electric typewriter in English and all Indian languages. At a price just a little more than a manual's. No expensive add-ons; no hidden costs. Meeting all the needs of a modern office.

The complete office machine – at an unbelievable price

Technologically unbeatable. Easy to operate and easy to maintain. HTL's Phenomena 920 is the most 'user friendly' machine around.

Priced only Rs.7,560/- (Local taxes extra). Virtually no maintenance cost. Yet packed with thoughtful features that make it immune to misoperations. No special consumables required – you can use the same typewriter ribbon and paper as with the manual. No extra investment for getting multiple copies.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

HINDUSTAN TELEPRINTERS

PHENOMENA 920

at an unbelievable price, for the facilities and quality offered.

Almost totally indigenous content

Plus: a unique money-back guarantee if you're not satisfied and several attractive options for payment. Finance through banks arranged.

- Pay cash and take delivery.
- Pay 20% now as advance and balance at the time of delivery.
- Bulk order discount – cash down.
- Bulk order discount – advance order.
- Hire purchase.
- Buy now and pay later.
- Leasing
- Barter system (exchange your old ET with the new ET of HTL)
- Rate Contract with DGS & D

That's right. You'll never get another office machine of this class, at this price! And, with so many options!

Why Phenomena 920 is better than any other typewriter

- A 'feather-touch' keyboard capable of speed upto 920 characters per minute!
- Can operate anywhere. Doesn't need airconditioning. No voltage regulator required.
- Rugged enough to last 20 years.
- No special expertise required to operate it.
- Very high quality printing. Crisp copies upto 12.
- Easy to service – a trained mechanic needs just 20 minutes. And, spares available anytime, anywhere. No dependence on imports.

Excellent after-sales-service, wherever your machine may be.

Manufactured from one of the most sophisticated plants, the Phenomena 920 virtually needs no maintenance.

Yet with a nationwide network of service engineers, HTL will keep your typewriter in top shape.

Phenomena 920 is indeed a phenomenon.

Price: Rs.7,560/- Local taxes extra

No language barrier – no extra cost.

Phenomena 920 is available in English, Tamil, Hindi, Kannada and Marathi. Soon in other Indian languages too. Whatever language you pick, the price is the same.

HTL/9A/87

hindustan teleprinters ltd.
(A Government of India Undertaking)
G.S.T. Road, Guindy, Madras – 600 032
Telephone: 432771 (8 lines)

Regional Offices:
23, Kasturba Gandhi Marg
New Delhi – 110 001
Phone: 3312960

Regent Chambers
Nariman Point
Bombay – 400 021
Phone: 232893

Chatterjee International Centre
33A Jawaharlal Nehru Road
Calcutta – 700 071
Phone: 298337

45/6 Promanade Road
Bangalore – 560 042
Phone: 564085

Sub Offices
B K Kakoti Road
Rebabari
Guwahati – 781 008
Phone: 23631

House No.1058, Sector 15,
Chandigarh – 160 015
Phone: 22062

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Nothing comes between your feet and comfort

POWER JOGGER

If you've so long regarded jogging to be a chore, now forget it. Power Jogger is comfortable enough to turn jogging into sheer pleasure. And lightweight enough not to tire you when you're jogging.

The twin density sole, effectively absorbs 'road shock' with soft EVA inner layer, while the outer layer is made of special rubber compound for extra grip and ruggedness. The nylon and suede upper, with padded tongue and collar completes the comfort features.

Power Jogger. Born for fitness. Designed for comfort.

POWER®

makes the DIFFERENCE...

CLARION C-BIL-J-11

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Available at select Bata & POWER stores

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BIHAR

Farm Fraud

WAS there an agricultural decline in Bihar during the sixth plan? If yes, who were the dramatis personae involved? These are difficult questions but last fortnight the state Vigilance Department started the search for some answers into an otherwise forbidden area. It began probing the affairs of the Agriculture Directorate and the Bihar State Cooperative Marketing Union, an apex cooperative institution.

The inquiry was a personal triumph for Bihar Khetihar Manch (BKM) Convenor Saryu Roy, who had been petitioning Rajiv Gandhi for a year that public money had been plundered during the sixth plan in the name of farm inputs, thus turning what was meant to be Bihar's green revolution into a farmers' nightmare. On the basis of Roy's well-documented petitions, Rajiv directed Chief Minister Bindeshwari Dubey to have the charges investigated. And the Vigilance Department was brought in.

But it is going to be an uphill task. The investigation is sure to upset powerful people including MP and "cooperative king" Tapeshwar Singh, the Marketing Union's chairman; Agriculture Minister Lahtan Choudhary; Advocate-General Ram Balak Mahto and Agriculture Director D.N. Ram. Says an official: "Roy's petition is based on hard evidence but we have to tread carefully." The allegations are stunning:

► In 1983, the rabi crop in over 50,000 hectares in 31 blocks of Rohtas and Bhojpur districts withered away. In the face of a BKM threat to launch an agitation, the administration tested samples of Hara Bahar, the union's best fertiliser, which was used. The nutrient content was found to be far below what it ought to have been. Inquiries revealed that local traders had supplied the fertiliser—in the name of a non-existent Surat firm—which was sold in the union's bags to farmers. Though Tapeshwar Singh announced that farmers would be compensated, only Rs 2 lakh for two blocks has been paid.

► In December 1983, the then Patna collector Rajkumar Singh seized 4,500 tonnes of single superphosphate fertiliser from a private businessman who did not possess a licence. But before action could be taken, Ram issued an antedated licence and renewed it for the next year. Rajkumar Singh retaliated by raiding the directorate: he seized forged documents and recommended action against Ram. The then chief minister, Chandrashekhar Singh, sought an explanation from Ram, and there matters rested until Choudhary referred the matter to Mahto, who exonerated Ram. Says Ram: "I did nothing illegal, otherwise I would have been removed long back."

BHAWAN SINGH

The inquiry, on Rajiv Gandhi's directions, may implicate a number of powerful people, including Congress(I) MP and "cooperative king" Tapeshwar Singh.

► On the Agriculture Department's request, in 1984, the union asked two Patna traders to supply 75,000 quintals of gram seeds. A raid by Rajkumar Singh found that ordinary gram instead of gram seeds was being supplied to the farmers. The price difference: Rs 500 per quintal. Further, the suppliers had no licence and the meeting of the committee which selected the suppliers was attended by Tapeshwar Singh and Ram. Rajkumar Singh recommended strong action against the officials, confiscated the remaining stock and ordered the filing of an FIR. The police sought the Government's permission to arrest Ram, but Choudhary intervened and with Mahto's help, bailed Ram out.

► Two years ago, the union bought pesticides worth Rs 2 crore just one month before their date of expiry, which could not be disposed of. Last year, the Agriculture Department purchased pesticides worth Rs 65 lakh for the rabi crop when the crop was ready for harvesting. Tapeshwar Singh justified this as an "important social obligation".

► In March 1985, the union sold 70,000 tonnes of seeds to retail stores. Patna Collector Mukhtiyar Singh received complaints that pesticide-treated poisonous grain was being sold for human consumption and samples were tested, confirming the reports. His recommendation for a state-level inquiry into the extent of the damage to humans was ignored.

► Last year, the union distributed zinc sulphate and chilated zinc under a short-term credit scheme. Samples of the zinc sulphate when tested showed no zinc at all. Inquiries by Mukhtiyar Singh and Nalanda Collector Sushil Kumar Choudhary showed that magnesium sulphate (price: Rs 400 a tonne) had been passed off as zinc sulphate (Rs 5,100 a tonne). An inquiry into the Marketing Union's role is going on. Though the Bombay manufacturers of chilated zinc had said clearly that it was not a fertiliser, it was sold as such.

Signs of panic are already visible in Lahtan Choudhary's request to Agriculture Production Commissioner Nishikant Sinha to get back all the files he had given to the Vigilance Department. But the investigators agreed only to return some files, and after making photostats.

But because of the possible political repercussions, it seems doubtful if the investigators will be able to sustain the tempo, although the two officials in charge, Inspector General of Police N.N. Singh and Deputy Inspector General D.P. Ojha are not the kind of people who will be cowed down. But The Indian Nation, a local daily usually supportive of the Dubey administration, summed up the public mood: "The people of Bihar have been pleasantly surprised that the investigation into charges against such formidably influential persons has been ordered at all." Any inquiry is obviously better than none. —FARZAND AHMED

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ORISSA

Sorry State

THE wear and tear of one year's incessant infighting within the ruling Congress(I) is finally beginning to make itself felt to Orissa's 2.63 crore people. A series of events that took place last fortnight indicated the serious extent to which the grasp of the state administration has weakened as a consequence of this constant political turmoil.

There was a deep sense of despair at the near collapse of authority. While the poverty-stricken tribals of Kalahandi and Koraput districts continued to die of hunger and disease, waves of communalism swept across the south-western districts of this otherwise peaceful state, and several cases of rape involving police as well as other government employees were reported. One of these incidents, which occurred in Chief Minister J.B. Patnaik's chamber in the secretariat, gave rise to the greatest public outcry. Angry students took to the streets in Bhubaneswar, chanting: "Orissa is unsafe in Patnaik's hands."

In the state Assembly, even Congress(I) dissidents joined hands with the Opposition to attack the state Government.

But Patnaik appeared to have lost the very will to reassert his authority. Former finance minister and dissident leader Gangadhar Mahapatra summarised the situation: "There may be a government technically but there is no government now. There is a complete psychological breakdown." It was a telling comment on an administration that, in the early '80s, was rated as one of the better run in the country.

The result is an administration unable to function. The administrative palsy was best illustrated by a startling report of the Planning and Coordination Department on the eve of the state's budget session. It said that of the Rs 605-crore plan outlay for 1986-87, only Rs 305 crore—or 50.52 per cent—had been utilised by end-December. The Irrigation and Power Department, allotted the maximum of Rs 291.50 crore, used up only 47.68 per cent of the money in the first nine months of 1986-87. In the Agriculture and Cooperation Department, the figure was 49.88 per cent; in Education 45.44 per cent; in General Administration and Police less than 25 per cent. And in the Law Department, only 4 per cent of the funds had been used up. The utilisation in Central and centrally-sponsored schemes was also a low 50.90 per cent. Warned the report: "Unless the plan allocation is utilised in full, there will be proportionate cuts in the Central assistance." But Patnaik made light of this failure, arguing that "this happens everywhere and every year", and that real work gets done only between November and March.

The listlessness was evident in both the presentation of the annual budget for 1987-88 by state Finance Minister Jugal Kishore Patnaik as also Governor B.N. Pande's address to the Assembly. The budget, showing a deficit of Rs 12.10 crore, and presented within just six minutes, spoke of neither new taxes nor new schemes. Pande, on his part, had little to highlight in terms of the Government's specific achievements and blamed "natural calamities" and "historical reasons" instead for the plight of the poor. All the same, he claimed that Orissa's destitutes had received much greater priority than in other states.

But opposition leader and former chief minister Biju Patnaik, recently back from an extensive tour of 43 constituencies, said these claims were untrue. While the leader of the Opposition and the chief minister argued back and forth about real achievements in alleviating poverty, a micro-level study of the Integrated Rural Development Programme in Kalahandi proved an additional embarrassment for the Government. Conducted by the economic appraisal cell of the Orissa University of Agriculture and Technology, it said that the programme had lifted only 0.60 per cent of the beneficiaries over the poverty line. It put to doubt the chief minister's claim that 23 per cent of the people covered by schemes for the poor had been raised above the poverty line.

So evident is the administrative paralysis that it attracted the attention of even Uma Shankar Dixit, Rajiv Gandhi's special emissary, who had visited the state for four days in February to assess the intra-party situation. Before return-

Cartoon by AJIT NINAN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Cathay Pacific. Your business connection to the world.

The kind of connection you dream of each time you embark on a business trip.

Fly any of our 4 flights a week to Hong Kong and make convenient connections to over 400 Cathay Pacific flights worldwide, including major destinations in Japan, Korea, North America and Australia.

Add to that computerised reservations and smooth ground handling, with in-flight service provided by our flight attendants who combine the grace and beauty of 10 Asian lands.

All this and more — designed to help you arrive in better shape.

Call your travel agent or Cathay Pacific at 2029112/9113.

Arrive in better shape

CATHAY PACIFIC
The Swire Group

Rediffusion/CX/5427

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The Concept of The Three-Da

For a 'perk' as attractive as the sabbatical, there are far too many resistances to making it a reality—not the least among these being the manager's own corporate stoicism and, of course, the genuine problems of continuity.

The need of course, is for creating among the more brilliant of one's people the mental spaces for creativity and personal innovation. Within the ordered routine of maintenance and day-to-day fire-fighting there is usually no mental room for the free movement of intuition and breakthrough thinking.

However, by a process of business evolution perhaps, senior executives worldwide seem to have fashioned as it were a clever, convenient, legitimate and effective substitute for the real thing—the quick, business-dictated trip outside the work city. Be it the geographical stimulus of another place or the mere distancing from the sources of expediency, managers have confessed to a perceptible shift in patterns of thinking during these trips.

A study of this phenomenon of contemporary business metaphysics inspired the hospitality designers of Welcomgroup to innovate a totally new genre of hotel services. "Can we", they asked themselves, "create an environment for the encouragement of this 'mental space' for executives?" They realised that it called for more than the obvious provision of commercial facilities like secretarial services and equipment. It meant carving out a whole new quality of properties and services. It involved programmes of executive life-style study and, very important, intensive training programmes for a new breed of hotel managers and personnel.

Maurya Sheraton Towers

Thus was born the idea of the Maurya Sheraton Towers.

saw t
the M

Busin
of the club;
incor

hospi intell unob effici the p which

Maur imagi and y on bu
of the

Diplo

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

-Day Working Sabbatical.

When we in the advertising agency were briefed about this unique concept and were 'shown the product', it was indeed difficult to contain the hyperbole of traditional advertese. The glossy photographs of the highlights of the Maurya Towers property and the services looked impressive; but we saw too the inadequacy of all these to convey the real discriminator between the Maurya Towers and other five-star deluxe hotels.

The exclusivity of each floor, the elegant design of the rooms; the Business Centre and conference rooms; the intellectual stimulation of the Tower Club with its library and bar, the dining room and the health club; the exquisite taste with which every corner is designed...all these were incomparable, but in a way not the real discriminators.

What makes the Maurya Towers another genre in the art of executive hospitality is the intangibles which the sensitive and mature intellect will perceive—in the finesse, the unobtrusiveness of the service, the incredible efficiency, the charm and the flair with which the personnel allow you that 'mental space' which in fact is possible during your stay.

Admittedly not for everybody, the Maurya Towers should be seen as an imaginative investment in creativity for you and your nucleus of brilliant people. Perhaps the next time you are in Delhi on business, it may be a good idea to try this attractive new idea of the micro-mini working sabbatical.

The Maurya Sheraton Towers at Welcomgroup Maurya Sheraton, Diplomatic Enclave, New Delhi-110 021

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

the intra-party situation. Before returning, he issued an extraordinary appeal to the bureaucracy not to be influenced by Congress(I) infighting.

Even Patnaik doesn't deny the effect of the political scene on administration. Says he: "Naturally, it will affect functioning when one is bogged down by attacks. The others may have a one-point programme (to oust me) but I have a 20-point programme to implement." Over the year, Patnaik has been compelled to rush to New Delhi regularly to counter the moves of dissidents there. In addition to this constant junketing, each of the five by-elections—the Congress(I) has lost them all—have taken several weeks of Patnaik's time so that he has had precious little left for the tasks of administration.

The results of Patnaik's preoccupation with his political survival are evident all over. The state Public Service Commission has been without a chairman and a member for over a year. Utkal University has neither a controller of examinations nor a deputy controller. Secretariat sources point out that Patnaik disposes of files only irregularly and often in the manner of a man with other things on his mind. In the past year, about a hundred doctors have been transferred and the orders cancelled following the use of political clout. Last month, possibly in an attempt to show he was still in control, Patnaik shuffled 22 secretary-level officials. Said dissident leader B.P. Mohanty: "Never in the state's history have there been such drastic changes at the top level during the off-season. And at the lower level, changes are made frequently either to please the loyalists or punish the dissidents." Biju Patnaik adds that the officers, unsure of whether the chief minister would continue, are essentially whiling time. He says: "The chief minister has lost hold over them and the officers only carry out his orders mechanically."

Meanwhile, the dissident pressure, far from declining, may actually scale new highs in the coming weeks. This situation is reflected in a memorandum 46 MLAs sent to Rajiv Gandhi seeking permission to resign their assembly seats, because they "don't want to be party to the speedy erosion of the party's image in the state under the chief minister ship of J.B. Patnaik". As long as Patnaik's political fate remains unresolved, it is the state administration and the people of Orissa who will continue to suffer.

—FARZAND AHMED in Bhubaneswar

LAST WORD/RAJINDER PURI

The Acting Advisor

WE all know that Rajiv Gandhi is a wonderful prime minister but he gets rotten advisors. That's why things go wrong. When things go wrong people say: "If only Rajiv would get good advice there wouldn't be such a mess!"

I ask: "Who is his advisor?"

They say: "Who knows?"

So I asked an insider. He said: "Rajiv keeps changing his advisors. These days his closest advisor is Amitabh Bachchan!"

"Amitabh?" I exclaimed. "How did Rajiv select him?"

The insider told me how. It seems that Rajiv was fed up. He had tried the old war-horses as well as the young whizz-kids. Nothing worked. Kamalapati, Arun Nehru, they were all in the dumps. "These people do nothing but talk," Rajiv complained. "I need someone who can act! Isn't there a single person in our party who can act, for God's sake?"

"Indeed there is, sir," a party minion said earnestly.

"Who?" asked Rajiv.

"Amitabh, sir," the minion replied. "They say he has acted hundreds of times! He has been to countless different locations!"

"Very well," Rajiv said. "Bring him to me!" That is how Amitabh became Rajiv's chief advisor.

The prime minister and his new advisor got on wonderfully and Rajiv was very pleased with the way things started moving.

"I am worried about my children's security," Rajiv said. "We have to guard against terrorists!"

"Don't worry," Amitabh said. "I will make arrangements for your kids to study in Switzerland where they will be safe. Of course, money will have to be arranged!"

"But do you have any experience with terrorists?" Rajiv asked.

"Are you kidding?" Amitabh said. "I have had lots of experience with terrorists of all kinds. I know how they think and plan!"

"Where did you get such experience?" Rajiv asked.

"I thought everyone knew." Amitabh said with surprise. "In Sholay, of course!"

"Ah yes, of course," Rajiv said hastily. "But what about V.P. Singh, you know how he bristles at the mention of Switzerland, he can get inconvenient!"

"That's easy," Amitabh said. "Create a war scare and shift him to defence!"

"War scare?" Rajiv said with alarm. "War can be a nasty business!"

"Don't worry about violence," Amitabh said confidently. "I have lots of experience of dealing with violence!"

"How?" Rajiv asked curiously.

"By working in Kalia," Amitabh reminded him.

"That's right," Rajiv said with relief. "But what about the press? The papers may kick up dirt!"

"Relax," Amitabh said. "Conduct a police raid against a press baron and the papers will behave! I know all about police work!"

"Where did you learn that?" Rajiv asked with surprise.

"Don't you remember?" Amitabh said. "In Aakhree Rasta!"

"Yes I remember," Rajiv said, biting his lip. "But if the police bungle it will be terrible! A big scandal could break out, I may even have to resign! I would be without a job!"

"So what?" Amitabh said. "Being jobless can be fun!"

"What!" Rajiv gasped. "How can you say that?"

"That's easy," Amitabh said, patting Rajiv on the back. "Don't forget, I've faced unemployment in Andha Kanoon..."

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BOMBAY

King Con

FOR years the motto of Tribhovandas Bhimji Zaveri has been "where trust is a tradition". Last fortnight, however, Bombay's leading jewellers carried their trusting much further than expected.

Early in the afternoon of March 19, a posse of men flashing Central Bureau of Investigation (CBI) identity cards descended on their posh showroom in south Bombay and took up stations. The leader, dressed immaculately in a three-piece suit, ordered the closed circuit TV to be switched off, "confiscated' the petty cash of Rs 3.75 lakh and choice samples worth about Rs 20 lakh, stepped out—and then suddenly disappeared.

The plot seemed straight out of a James Hadley Chase whodunit. Just a day earlier an advertisement had appeared in The Times of India asking for "50 dynamic graduates for intelligence officers posts". The aspirants were asked to report at none other than the famous five-star Taj Hotel. They went through a full-length interview with a man called Mohan Singh, who asked them a variety of questions as to why they had applied for the job, and how they would handle given situations in apprehending smugglers. The 28 candidates who were selected were then informed that they would have to prove their worth in 'practicals' by participating in a mock raid.

Accordingly, the excited aspirants landed up the next day as asked. Singh, who was staying at the Taj, had hired a bus and everyone trooped in eager to prove their mettle. Claiming to be from the Research and Analysis Wing, he then gave them CBI identity cards complete with their photographs—which they had submitted earlier—carefully affixed. With a brief break for a cold drink in the middle they then proceeded to their target. Things then went as per plan, Singh's plan.

After Singh did his vanishing act on the pretext of going to investigate the next shop, nobody smelt a rat at all for the best part of an hour. Then someone suspecting that something was wrong went looking for the bus. But it had disappeared. Some of the others went to the Taj to look for Singh. But he had already checked out. It was then that finally, the police were called in.

"It was a very smart operation," admits Deputy Commissioner of Police S.M. Mushriff who is in charge of the case. "We have very little to work on." Singh, who speaks with a distinct south Indian accent, left a Trivandrum address at the Taj but that naturally proved a blind—nobody stays there. According to the police, Singh drove the bus back to the Taj. He then caught a taxi and was spotted in an auto-rickshaw in the suburbs carrying a briefcase, an attache case and a gunny bag. But it was here that the trail ended.

The whole operation was evidently very well-planned. There was even a dress rehearsal of sorts. In October last year a similar advertisement had appeared in The Times of India. And even then about 150 candidates landed up at the Taj. But unfortunately, however, the CBI had been tipped off and Singh (if he indeed was behind it) failed to show up.

Apart from his evident knowledge of CBI technique, this has added credence to the view that Singh is either an old CBI hand or has an inside channel of information. "He knew exactly how to go about it," says owner Pratap Zaveri, who has been through several raids before. "There was nothing to make us suspicious this time. All the documents were there and he said all the normal stuff about search and seizure and asked for our cooperation. It is the custom in all raids that you hand over the firearms in your possession, so I handed over my revolver to him, which he put into his briefcase." Zaveri says that they did protest when the man was leaving the shop since he had not given them a receipt, as is normal procedure. But the man completely ignored them.

All the police know is that the conman is 5 ft 6 inches tall, black-haired, dark-complexioned, and bespectacled. As the conned "recruits" testify, he is a glib talker. There is also one more clue to his character—they know he is exceedingly smart. —PARTHASARATHI SWAMI

MAHENDRA PARIKH

Policemen at Zaveri's jewellery shop: after the act

sumables. Contact Reliable Media, 20, Shivai Estate, Near Parke Davis, Sakl Naka, Andheri. AA22445X

WANTED 50 DYNAMIC GRADUATES FOR INTELLIGENCE OFFICERS POST AND SECURITY OFFICERS POST COME PERSONALLY FOR INTERVIEW WITH BIO-DATA, CERTIFICATES, PASSPORT SIZE PHOTO ON 18.3.87. AT TAJ INTERCONTINENTAL HOTEL ENQUIRY COUNTER BETWEEN 10 AM. TO 5 PM.

WANTED SALESMEN

Newspaper ad (top) and fake ID card: clever ploy

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SITA, MERCURY & OBEROI HOTELS PRESENT

Soaltee Surprise

OBEROI TURNS A VISIT INTO A VACATION.

In the magic Kingdom of Nepal, Soaltee Oberoi conjures up the perfect holiday package—Soaltee Surprise. 4 days and 3 nights of excitement.

Beginning with the extravagant 5-star luxury of the Oberoi. Three speciality restaurants. A host of facilities.

Plus the only Casino in town with all the glitz and glamour of Las Vegas. Enjoy a flutter at our expense. We start you off with a generous helping of complimentary casino coupons. The rest is up to Lady Luck!

What you pay

Rs. 1499/- (per person sharing a double room)or Rs. 2190/- for single occupancy.

And what you get

A super holiday. Plus Rs. 1200/- in free casino coupons.

Add transport to and from the airport, a choice of Indian or Continental breakfast on the house, 2 deluxe half-day sightseeing tours of Kathmandu and 2 children up to 12 years accommodated free in the same room (without extra beds or meals), and you'll realise why we call it the Soaltee Surprise.

So come on up to the roof of the world. To Soaltee. For that top of the world feeling.

It's what makes a trip to Kathmandu one thing. And the Soaltee Surprise quite another.

Soaltee Oberoi

For further details contact SITA, Mercury, Oberoi Hotels or a bonafide travel agent.

ULKA-D-EIH-172

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CONGRESS(I)

CRUMBLING

The Congress(I), a national party, ruling in 18 states when Rajiv became prime minister, now rules in only a dozen.

THE jokes, the jibes, the jabs and the quips which Rajiv Gandhi is known to aim with startling dexterity at opposing parliamentarians seemed to fail him last fortnight when the prime minister faced the Lok Sabha for the first time after his party's debacle in the assembly polls in West Bengal and Kerala. When Rajiv, looking obviously dejected, walked into the chamber, an opposition member arose and asked the prime minister whether he could use this opportunity to condole him. Rajiv remained silent but the members burst into raucous laughter and even the Treasury benches could scarce forbear to join in.

That Rajiv's fighting spirit had evaporated, if even temporarily, was evident from his speech delivered earlier to the Congress(I) Parliamentary Party. Even during this meeting, billed as a post-mortem of the party's electoral misfortunes, Rajiv was not the man he was a year ago when he had addressed his party at its centenary celebrations and promised to usher in a new era of reform and rejuvenation, even if it meant throwing out its most formidable power brokers. His mood was sullen, and eager for compromise. And in order to rally his party around him he resorted to a time-worn tactic his mother had used whenever she felt her base threatened. The words could have been Mrs Gandhi's but her son now found refuge in them. In a statement bordering on paranoia, Rajiv blamed his party's reverses on a "foreign conspiracy" aimed at destabilising India. The enemies of Congress(I), which stood for the stability of the nation, he said, were the "friends of the multinationals...whose allegiance is to their masters abroad".

The rhetoric apart, it was obvious that Rajiv had come face to face with a fundamental truth at home: Congress(I), a national party, ruling in 18 states when he became prime minister now rules in only a dozen. And the south was lost entirely. For the first time since India became independent there is not a single Congress chief minister in any of the four southern states. And large chunks of the east are already out of Congress control. This shrinking base of influence threatens to reduce the once unchallenged grandeur and reach of the Indian National Congress to a satrapy over the Hindi heartland.

For the first time since independence there is no Congress chief minister in any of the four southern states. Large chunks of the east are already out of Congress control.

BHAWAN SINGH

(Top) Rajiv got a poor hand; new prominence for hammer and sickle

CC-0. In Public Domain

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

G CITADEL

But there was little to take heart in even the by-election victories in the Uttar Pradesh cowbelt. The two Congress(I) victories in Hardwar and Rath were by narrow margins. Congress(I)'s victory margin in Hardwar was reduced from 1.4 lakh votes to 23,000. What was most disturbing to Congress(I) was the emergence of the Bahujan Samaj Party (BSP) in all the Uttar Pradesh constituencies. This militant Harijan organisation has been eating into the traditional Scheduled Caste vote banks of the Congress(I) and was partially responsible also, for the defeat of the ruling party stalwart, Minister for Parliamentary Affairs, Ammar Rizvi by opposition candidate Akbar 'Dumpy' Ahmed in Kashipur where the vote of the Harijans went to a BSP candidate instead of Congress(I). The Kashipur defeat was symbolically among the worst that Congress(I) suffered. This was the prestige seat vacated by N.D. Tiwari, minister for external affairs, when he was inducted into the Union Cabinet—a seat which he had won by more than 40,000 votes and was virtually considered a Congress(I) pocket borough. Ahmed won despite strong campaigning by Congress(I) ministers including Tiwari himself.

Opposition leaders, smelling blood, were quick to pounce on the wounded ruling party and its leader. Janata Party leader George Fernandes, stating that Rajiv Gandhi had converted the elections into an appeal for a personal mandate, demanded that the prime minister should quit because the electorate had rejected him. L.K. Advani, president of the Bharatiya Janata Party, said that the prime minister "by his lack of perspective and because of his inexperience had personally contributed to the Congress(I) defeats". The Lok Dal General Secretary, Satya Prakash Malaviya, said that the poll results showed a massive disillusionment with Rajiv's policies. H.N. Bahuguna, leader of another Lok Dal faction, said that the poll results were critical because they came "when our polity is facing a wilful subversion of its democratic institutions by no less a person than the prime minister".

P. Upendra, Telugu Desam MP, pointed out that Congress(I)'s stature had been reduced to that of a regional party, while Karnataka Chief Minister Ramakrishna Hegde saw in the election results a new

PRASHANT PANJIAR

There was little doubt that Rajiv's credibility, clout and charisma had been dealt a megavolt jolt.

Rajiv had gambled by putting his personal image and popularity on the firing line. More than Congress(I), Rajiv's personal ability as a vote-catcher was on trial.

Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

In Jammu & Kashmir the picture for Congress(I) is not as bright as the party's leaders, including Rajiv Gandhi, are making it out to be. Every Congress(I) candidate was nominated under Farooq's veto and a grassroots Congress(I) organisation, is virtually non-existent.

Polling in Kashmir: charges of rigging pattern of popular support for opposition leaders and parties. While some of this opposition rhetoric may be as wildly overblown as was Rajiv's in his speech to his party's parliamentarians—because both Rajiv and Congress(I) still remain formidable national forces to reckon with—there was little doubt that Rajiv's credibility, clout and charisma had been dealt a megavolt jolt. The electoral numbers tell their own stark story: in the three states where Congress(I) had commanded a total of 121 assembly seats it now holds only 98.

Just as he had done in the parliamentary elections in December 1984, Rajiv during the recent assembly battles, had gambled by putting his personal image and popularity on the firing line. More than Congress(I), Rajiv's personal ability as a vote-catcher was on trial. In 1984, enshrouded as he was in the image of a new and dynamic leader and in the atmosphere of the sympathy that erupted after Mrs Gandhi's assassination, Rajiv had carried the day for his party. The people had responded to him because of his freshness of approach and because he represented stability at a time when most feared disintegration and chaos.

But even that honeymoon was shortlived. In the 1985 assembly elections the share of Congress(I) votes—notwithstanding the hectic campaigning by Rajiv—came down substantially. In fact, Karnataka, which had gone overwhelmingly in Congress(I)'s favour during the parliamentary elections, was captured by the Opposition in the ensuing state elections. Punjab, Assam, Mizoram slipped rapidly out of

Maps by B.K. SHARMA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

RAJEEV CHAWLA

Opposition leaders discussing poll results: new hope

Congress(I)'s grip. And now Kerala has slipped into the determined grip of the Marxist-led Left Democratic Front while West Bengal has witnessed the virtual destruction of the Congress(I) not only as a political force but also as a political organisation.

In Jammu and Kashmir the picture for Congress(I) is not as bright as the party's leaders, including Rajiv Gandhi, are making it out to be. Here Congress(I), the main opposition party, teamed up with the mass-based ruling National Conference (NC) to take on what should have been a rag-tag bunch of opposition candidates loosely united under the fundamentalist banner of the Muslim United Front (MUF). But the MUF posed a strong challenge and even though only a handful of its candidates were elected, it made major inroads—including in Srinagar district—into the traditional strongholds of the established parties while maintaining its grip in key districts. The electoral gain was for all intents and purposes NC's victory engineered by Farooq Abdullah who treats Congress(I) as a junior partner. In fact, every Congress(I) candidate was nominated under the veto power of Farooq and a grassroots Congress(I) organisation, except for a few areas in Jammu, is virtually non-existent.

If the Congress(I) piggy-backed on the coat-tails of Farooq in Kashmir because it lacked a viable organisation of its own to fight an equal battle as part of the coalition, it had, as is now evident, even less of an organisation in West Bengal where the party had been reduced to a shambles because of internecine squabbling. Because of the absence of any state-level leaders capable of standing up to the colossal stature of Jyoti Basu, Rajiv decided that he would play the role of the giant killer himself. The fight there ultimately became one between Rajiv and the state's leadership. It was the same story in Kerala. In both states the campaigns were personalised. They were Rajiv's campaigns.

And Rajiv campaigned hard. He travelled for about 20 days in both the states, and in about 100 hours of barnstorming addressed as many as 200 meetings. But the campaigns were desultory and disorganised as was the campaign rhetoric. He attracted huge crowds at places but he failed to define and discuss concrete issues. One day in West Bengal he would quibble with Basu about the expenditure of a Rs 1,000-crore grant to the state, and on another day he would talk about the building of a "nutan" (new) Bengal, which to many voters appeared to be a subliminal message that the Centre would redefine the state's boundaries by excluding areas which would go to "Gorkhaland". In Kerala, during his campaign, he quipped about renaming the Communist Party of India as the "Communal Party of India", a statement that, to the voters, reeked of hypocrisy because his own ruling party in the state was pandering to communal elements like the Muslim League and the Nair and Ezhwa communities.

What was most astonishing was the optimistic naivete with which Rajiv and his advisers approached the West Bengal and Kerala elections. Even four days before the polling started Rajiv confided to a top aide that, according to accurate reports he was getting, Congress(I) would dislodge Jyoti Basu in West Bengal and sweep the polls in Kerala. The misinformation he received is a serious indication that Rajiv's political apparatus has suffered grave damage.

And the crisis is partly of Rajiv's own making. For the last two years Rajiv made no serious attempt to strengthen his party organisation, even with the polls looming ahead. In Kerala and West Bengal he was unable to check Congress(I) infighting, which snowballed disastrously until the elections were at hand. He

Several opposition leaders, stating that Rajiv Gandhi had converted the elections into an appeal for a personal mandate, demanded that the prime minister should quit because the electorate had rejected him.

The electoral numbers tell their own stark story. Opposition leaders see a new pattern of support for opposition parties.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The assembly elections have become a grim testament to Rajiv's diminished ability to convert the crowds he can attract at rallies into votes for the Congress(I).

seemed strangely oblivious to repeated reports about corruption and the sliding popularity of the then Kerala chief minister Karunakaran's government. In West Bengal he not only alienated party stalwarts, Law Minister Asoke Sen and Programme Implementation Minister A.B.A. Ghani Khan Chaudhury by denying them commanding roles in organisational matters but also imposed over their heads the leadership of Priya Ranjan Das Munshi, a factional party boss. And, in an astonishing display of political puerility Das Munshi, a lightweight by any standard, was projected as an alternative to Basu in West Bengal. The old guard reacted by campaigning less than enthusiastically during the election.

The election campaign, if it could be called that, was run by a central committee from Delhi. And Rajiv's Indian Air Force plane became the control room. This curious set-up was hardly conducive to a free flow of good, hard grassroots information from the various states. Civil servants and selected journalists, who were hand-picked to accompany the star campaigner as he criss-crossed the country from Calcutta to Trivandrum, painted rosy pictures with the help of sample surveys and spot reportage. In fact, the prime minister's travelling troupe ridiculed as nonsense a report from a senior Congress(I) leader from Kerala, several days before the election, that the Congress(I)-led UDF would not win more than 60 seats.

Rajiv and his party have paid dearly for these lapses and the prime minister has made it clear that it is now time for introspection. As expected, he has appointed a committee to study ways of limiting further damage. Even though Congress(I)'s Hindi belt is still secure with the return of two MLAs and a Lok Sabha MP from Uttar Pradesh, there has been a sharp decline in the number of popular votes cast for Congress(I). The other factor in Rajiv's favour so far is the dismal performance of the other national parties like the BJP and Lok Dal, which have failed to materialise as real threats in north India. In Haryana, the potentially dangerous Lok Dal has lost some of its bite because of the vertical split in its ranks. How elections in that state, due within six weeks, will turn out is still anybody's guess because it will be a battle between two thoroughly demoralised parties.

But the most devastating blow to Rajiv from the political drama that unfolded in the states last fortnight is that large numbers of his partymen, including senior ministers, have begun to doubt whether he can ensure their return to the legislatures. The assembly elections have become a grim testament to Rajiv's diminished ability to convert the crowds he can attract at rallies into votes for the Congress(I). Rajiv's major task now is to restore his own credibility not only as prime minister but as a party boss as well. Opposition hawks are already talking about forging a national front against Congress(I) as they did on a limited scale—and with thumping success—in Kashipur. The scales will tilt in the direction of whoever can seize the momentum. For Rajiv this entails more than just the soft option of introspection. It requires, midway in his career as a national leader, a harsh, and brutally frank reappraisal of his political journey.

—INDERJIT BADHWAR and PRABHU CHAWLA

Rajiv's major task now is to restore his own credibility not only as prime minister but as a party boss as well.

KERALA

Left March

IT was literally celebrated as a red letter day in Trivandrum. As the fifteenth state Government—and the fourth Communist-led one—headed by E.K. Nayanar was sworn in on the spacious Raj Bhawan grounds in the heart of the city, hundreds of crackers were exploded outside to mark the victory of the Left Democratic Front (LDF) and the eclipse of the only Congress(I) government in the south.

The huge green iron gates of the Raj Bhawan were thrown open and nearly 20,000 cheering party workers rushed in, shouting "Nayanar zindabad, EMS zindabad". Sworn in along with Nayanar were four ministers from other major constituents of the LDF: Baby John of the Revolutionary Socialist Party, K. Chandrasekharan of the Janata Party, A.C. Shanmughadas of the Congress (S) and P.S. Sreenivasan of the CPI. The coming of vanquished chief minister Karunakaran and other UDF leaders was greeted with hooting which was firmly put down by LDF leaders. Nayanar went up to Karunakaran and warmly embraced him. It was, in every sense, a people's function. LDF workers trampled all over the neatly manicured lawns and in the chandeliered hall where tea was served, many red flags were on view. And after the ceremony, while Nayanar drove to the secretariat to take charge, Karunakaran walked alone towards his personal car to drive home.

That solitary walk marked the final ringing down of the curtain on Karunakaran's political play which had run for a full 65 months. Securing only 61 seats—including one independent—as against the LDF's 75 in

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SHYAM TEKWANI

Nayanar being sworn-in: triumphant return the 140-member Assembly, the Congress(I)-led UDF was voted out of power for its failings that had accumulated over the years. Said P.K.Vasudevan Nair, a former chief minister and leader of the state CPI: "The verdict is clearly against Congress(I) misrule and its alliance with communal forces." According to Baby John: "The Karunakaran government failed on all fronts. And, it was, above all, the most communal government in Kerala's history."

The shift in vote towards the LDF, though, was breathtakingly small: a mere 1 per cent swing, but it was enough to fell a government. The LDF polled only 65,285 votes more than the UDF. The victors were helped in no small measure by the arrogance of the ruling Kerala Congress, the National Democratic Party (NDP) and the Socialist Republican Party (SRP). The empty rhetoric of the Congress (I) during the campaign, led single-handedly by Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi himself, also went to LDF's advantage.

Never before in Kerala had a prime minister addressed as many as 54 meetings, covering almost half the assembly seats. He spent a total of 64 hours and 35 minutes in the state, travelling 3,450 km by road and air. In all, he spoke for 24 hours and 25 minutes. But the result? Most of the constituencies he visited went the LDF way.

It was the first time in 25 years that all the communal and regional parties had been voted out. Since 1962, the Muslim League and the Christian-dominated Kerala Congress have shared power—and they ensured that job reservations for their communities rose. All the same, these parties were the worst-hit in the latest electoral round: while the Muslim League's tally fell from 18 to 15 seats, the Kerala Congress' share was cut sharply from 14 seats to nine.

Congressmen now concede that many of the UDF's losses were due to the large number of seats that Karunakaran had doled out to regional and communal parties. For instance, although the Kerala Congress groups led by K.M. Mani and P.J. Joseph were locked in a bitter struggle, Karunakaran let them have 23 seats. To win over the Nair community which was annoyed over his shelving of the controversial economic reservation policy, he gave its political wing, the NDP, nine seats. The Ezhavas' political party, the SRP, similarly was given four seats.

The outcome was disastrous. Out of the 36 seats given to the Kerala Congress, NDP and SRP mainly in their strongholds, they could win only 10. Apart from the Kerala Congress' total of nine, the NDP registered a

The shift in vote towards the LDF was breathtakingly small: a mere 1 per cent swing, but it was enough to fell a government. The LDF polled only 65,285 votes more than the UDF.

Congress(I) state chief Padmarajan (centre) with colleagues: a divided front

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Congressmen now concede that the UDF's failure had much to do with the large number of seats doled out to regional and communal parties. All these groups fared poorly at the hustings.

solitary victory while the SRP did not have even that limited satisfaction and was wiped out. Said V.M. Sudheeran, the soft-spoken former speaker: "The Kerala Congress feud and the seats allotted to the NDP and SRP cost us the election." The two Kerala Congress groups sabotaged each other's chances in almost all the constituencies in central Travancore area, their stronghold. Admitted K.M. Mani: "It was very unfortunate that there was some cross voting." Infighting cost the factions at least seven seats.

The Congress(I) did not do well either. It won only 34 seats as against its tally of 41 MLAs in the dissolved house. If anything, it should have done better with the merger of the Antony faction in 1982 and the P.C. Chacko faction last year. During the 1982 elections, even a part of the Muslim League was not with the UDF. But these mergers don't seem to have helped.

The other major reason for the Congress(I) defeat was the selection of wrong candidates and the denial of seats to Youth Congress(I) workers. Initially, there were plans to drop over half the sitting MLAs but Karunakaran prevailed on the prime minister to renominate 35 of them: 16 of these MLAs lost their seats. Interestingly, of the 34 winners, 15 were not just new—nine of them wrested seats from the LDF.

Instead, it was left to the LDF to field new and young faces. Said Cheriyan Philip, one of the Youth

Karunakaran after defeat: failed policies

Congress(I) state secretaries: "The LDF, especially the CPI(M), had fielded almost 30 young candidates, some of them straight out of college. We, on the other hand, were given only five seats, which included two sitting Youth Congress MLAs." In Mararikulam, T.J. Anjalose, a 25-year-old CPI(M) student leader from a poor fisherman's family trounced SRP's S.R. Prakashan, old enough to be his grandfather, by over 12,000 votes. Some Youth Congress(I) leaders feel that the party did

E.K. NAYANAR

Back in Power

FOR Erambala Krishnan Nayanar, 68, Kerala's new chief minister, the wheel has come full circle. It is indeed, a remarkable comeback for a man who, just last year, had seemed to be sliding into political oblivion.

Sworn in as chief minister last in January 1980, his government was pulled down just 21 months later by Kerala Congress (Mani) and A.K. Antony's Congress group. Ever since then, his career graph had been moving steadily downwards. Such was his status recently that although a member of the CPI(M)'s Central Committee, that body had even reprimanded him. And, last year, party bosses had suspected him of sympathising with M.V. Raghavan, the Marxist rebel who had sparked off tremors in the party.

Not surprisingly, then, almost everyone was taken aback by Nayanar's return. His selection of senior leader K.R. Gowri, is aimed at silencing critics who say that the party's state leadership has been continuously neglecting the Malabar region, the cradle of Kerala's communist movement. Nayanar himself was a part of the movement which had swept the state in the early '40s.

At 7.30 a.m. on the day following his swearing in, Nayanar had just finished reading the newspapers in his cubicle at the state party headquarters, the A.K. Gopalan Centre in Trivandrum. Senior Correspondent SREEDHAR PILLAI met the simple, beedi-smoking chief minister in a room that contained a bed, and had heaps of newspapers, party campaign posters and clothes strewn all over the place. Excerpts:

Q. What does it feel like to be chief minister once again?

A. Well, the people have voted us back to power and the party has decided that I should be the chief minister. Whatever work the party had asked me to do all these years, I have done it.

Q. How do you analyse the Left Democratic Front's (LDF) victory?

A. It was a vote for secularism, democracy and progress. During the last five years, Kerala had become a communal cauldron with hatred all around. The people had had enough of the communal government of Karunakaran, which was also very corrupt. I feel this was what tilted the balance in our favour. The LDF has a secular and clean image.

Q. But Karunakaran and the United Democratic Front (UDF) claim that you cashed in on the sentiments of Hindu communal forces?

A. We are opposed to Hindu majority and Muslim and Christian minority

Photographs by SHYAM TEKWANI

Nayanar: determined to succeed

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

not poll a majority of the 28 lakh new voters registered after the last elections.

Not only were the new voters hostile to the ruling UDF, the caste and religion arithmetic also worked against it. Even the Ezhava community, one of its major supporters, turned against it due to Karunakaran's reservation policies and C.V. Padmarajan, a prominent Congress(I) Ezhava leader, lost his seat. Said Chacko: "The Ezhava community was being wooed back by the Marxists when they projected K.R. Gowri as their chief minister designate. The Ezhavas were also put off by the reservation issue."

The UDF also lost among upper class Hindus, the Nairs and the Brahmins, many of whom chose to support the BJP-Hindu Munnani Front. In at least 90 constituencies, this third alliance's candidates polled more than 5,000 votes. In Trivandrum east, the Hindu Munnani candidate polled more than the official UDF candidate although he lost in the triangular fight to the Congress(S) nominee. In Calicut-1, Kamalam, the former Congress(I) minister, lost by 7,708 votes to M. Dasan, a CPI(M) youth leader, while the BJP-Hindu Munnani candidate C. Prabhakaran polled 12,234 votes. Said G. Karthikeyan, the former Youth Congress president who lost to M. Vijayakumar, the CPI(M) youth leader who is likely to find a berth in the new ministry: "The Hindu Munnani-BJP Front certainly hurt us, especially in urban areas." When Karthikeyan had won in 1982, the BJP had managed only 959 votes, but this time it polled 13,398 votes. Said BJP state President K.G. Marar: "Today we are definitely a force to reckon with."

With the Congress(I) out of power, all eyes are set on the manner in which the LDF will go about with the business of governance. Since none of the LDF governments have been able to complete their full term due to defections and internal dissensions, Congress(I) leaders are confident that the new Government will go the same way. Moreover, the LDF is likely to face trouble from the Marxists' militant labour wing, the Centre of Indian Trade Unions. The LDF has still to draw out a precise programme but its immediate target seems to be the revival of traditional industries like coir, cashew nuts, fishing and handicrafts, which suffered during the Congress (I) regime. Moreover, it has to reverse the process of communalisation in the administration as also in educational institutions. Says Vasudevan Nair: "We will never compromise with communal parties. We will discipline our trade union leaders. I don't think there will be any problems." Still, the LDF is likely to face major opposition from the Congress(I) with its aggressive MLAs like former speaker, Sudheeran, former ministers Vayalar Ravi and Ramesh Chennithala. As KPCC (I) chief Padmarajan, who himself failed to win, put it: "We have accepted the verdict gracefully but that doesn't mean that we will sit quietly." But with divisions within UDF ranks, the LDF has enough breathing space to consolidate its position before the Opposition recovers from the shock of defeat.

—PRABHU CHAWLA with SREEDHAR PILLAI in Trivandrum

Many Youth Congress(I) leaders also attribute the defeat to the party's failure to field young and new candidates. The LDF on the other hand did, and it yielded rich dividends.

communalism. We fought the election along with secular forces and won in spite of the Congress(I), which pandered to minority communalism, and the BJP and Hindu Munnani which represented majority communalism.

Q. The UDF feels that law and order will deteriorate with the LDF's coming to power.

A. This is a canard spread by the Congress(I) for years. In fact, you wait and see. The atmosphere will be more peaceful than during Karunakaran's regime. I can assure you that there won't be any incident like Thankamani (where the police mass-raped village women).

Q. But even your admirers admit that you cannot control your trade union CITU, which had played a role in bringing down your ministry.

A. We will correct mistakes we have made in the past. But the bourgeoisie press here tries to exaggerate and make mountains out of molehills.

Q. What about your economic policies?

A. I can give you a list of Congress(I) states where industrialisation has never taken place. First and foremost, we will reopen closed factories. Traditional industries like cashew and coir will be revived in a big way.

"The people had had enough of the communal government of Karunakaran which was also very corrupt. This tilted the balance in our favour."

Q. How are you going to solve the tricky reservation issue?

A. Status quo will be maintained till these things are thrashed out.

Q. You say that corruption was institutionalised by the UDF regime. Are you planning to inquire into it?

A. We have to discuss this with other front partners. I don't rule out the possibility of appointing a commission of inquiry into the corruption and other misdeeds of the UDF government.

Q. What about the education policy you will follow?

A. We know there was much resentment against the UDF's educational policies. We are planning to overhaul the education system without creating problems for students and teachers.

Q. Already there are rumours that there are differences between the CPI(M) and the CPI, which are likely to increase.

A. It is wishful thinking of the Opposition. There are some differences of opinion, but no bickering since we have the same commitment.

Q. The media had projected K.R. Gowri as a Marxist chief minister.

A. The party never projected anybody as a chief minister during the election campaign. The bourgeoisie papers were playing their guessing game to confuse the electorate. The decision of the party is final. Nobody will ever question it.

Q. Will your government survive the full term?

A. With the help of the people it will.

Q. What will be your attitude towards the Centre?

A. We would like to have a healthy relationship without sacrificing our prestige and honour. In fact, last evening Rajiv telephoned me to congratulate us. As long as they don't run us down, we will cooperate with them in all national endeavours.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

JAMMU & KASHMIR

A Tarnished Triumph

The fact that details of the election results remained unannounced almost a week after the polling had ended gave credence to opposition charges that there was rigging and electoral bungling.

BY all logic a landslide victory for an electoral alliance led by the scion of the Sheikh Abdullah family in the Jammu & Kashmir Assembly poll should have been the cause for exuberant rejoicing in the state. It was not. But for scattered fireworks displays in some strongholds of Farooq's National Conference (NC) in Srinagar district, even this bastion of NC's power kept an eerie silence well after it was known that the NC-Congress(I) alliance had swept to a massive win. As the results came in, the victorious new government was busy arresting top Muslim United Front (MUF) leaders—Professor Abdul Gani, Gulam Qadir Wani, Ghulam Mohammed Butt—on charges of anti-national activities. Chunks of the valley—Anantnag, Sopore, Handwara, Baramulla—were under virtual curfew even as votes were being tabulated at some counting stations five days after they had been cast.

That it was the only state where details of the poll results remained unannounced almost a week after polling ended, gave credence to widespread opposition charges that there was rigging and electoral bungling. The reason for curfew in key areas was a growing belief among people that the election was manipulated in several areas in favour of the alliance, and people were ready to take to the streets. A call for a protest bandh issued by MUF met with considerable success.

Contrary to the euphoria generated by the victory in which the alliance captured 60 seats as against 70 in the dissolved house (36 for NC and 24 for Congress-I) the stark reality is sobering. The valley is now sharply divided between the old-line party machine which brings out the vote for NC, and lakhs of people who entered politics for the first time through the umbrella organisation provided by the MUF or older voters who are disgruntled with both NC and Congress(I).

The election was neither a routing of fundamentalism—as Rajiv claimed—nor a victory for the Congress(I). In Kashmiri politics the Congress(I), as a grass-roots organisation, is virtually non-existent. Most of its winners were successful in Jammu either due to massive vote divisions caused by an unprecedented influx of independents, or because they were Farooq's candidates. In-

Farooq after swearing-in ceremony; and (inset) pre-stamped ballot paper found on an NC supporter

Photographs by PRASHANT PANJIAR

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

deed, the Congress(I) functioned as a junior partner within the alliance. During the negotiations that led to the Congress(I)-NC alliance, Farooq was given a free hand in picking Congress(I) candidates and final approval for appointing the new PCC(I) chief Ghulam Rasul Kar after the ouster of the group led by Mufti Mohammed Sayed. Also, the fact that the opposition parties, including the BJP, had no rural organisations went in Congress(I)'s favour in Jammu.

MUF, usually billed as a "fundamentalist" organisation, is an ad hoc opposition party with no real group ideology. Some of its leaders like Ali Shah Geelani, who trounced the NC in Sopore, spout extreme fundamentalist rhetoric of restoring Kashmir as a centre of Islam and subordinating the state to the Quran, and others like Asraf Sharraf speak menacingly of separatism. But much of the MUF is packed by educated youth, illiterate working class people and farmers who express their anger against 40 years of "family rule", corruption, and lack of economic development in the state. To a large extent the MUF was a repository of this protest vote.

The four seats captured by the MUF in Anantnag and Baramulla districts do not tell the the real story of the dramatic rise of this force, barely one year after it came into being as a political organisation. The so-called fundamentalists had been able to capture only one seat in 1977. In 1983 they had lost even this. But the three they won in Anantnag are significant in that all of them previously went to NC candidates by massive margins. Geelani's victory in Sopore was against a powerful NC minister, Abdul Ahad Vakil—NC had won this seat by 18,000 votes in the last election. More importantly, even though the alliance secured a two-thirds majority, it polled just under 50 per cent of the popular vote. But for constituencies like Ganderbal from where Farooq was elected by 22,000 votes, his percentage falling from 98.8 of the valid vote to 78.8 with an MUF candidate polling nearly 18 per cent even in this impregnable fortress), Khan Sahib, Uri, Charie Sharif, MUF candidates lost by slim margins. A rough tally indicates that MUF will have polled more than 35 per cent of the popular vote—more than that polled by the Congress(I).

Clearly, the MUF while not making significant gains in terms of seats, is far from being a vanquished force. Several disinterested observers believe that MUF candidates could have obtained twice the number of these seats had the Government played a more neutral role. According to top level intelligence estimates done on election eve, MUF was expected to bag at least 10 seats including three in the Srinagar district. People's Conference (PC), led by the charismatic Abdul Ghani Lone, was expected to do well in Bandipora, Sangrama, Handwara, Kupwara and Karna.

A journey through Kupwara and Handwara districts, when voting was in progress, indicated that Lone and his supporters held virtually unchallenged sway. But the counting was postponed in several of Lone's strongholds at the last minute. In fact, just when the counting began in Handwara on March 26, Lone and his counting agents were thrown out by the police from the counting station. Lone has filed written charges with the election commissioner that ballot-boxes from the counting station were removed overnight and that 100 of his counting agents had been arrested. Lone was declared the loser, two days later, by about 1,300 votes. Said a disconsolate Lone: "This simply deepens people's feelings against the Government of India. If people are not allowed to cast their votes where will their venom go except into expressions of anti-national feelings?"

Reports of rigging and strong-arm tactics kept pouring in from all over the valley into party offices and the offices of district commissioners. In Pattan, where powerful Shia leader Maulana Iftiquar Ansari had been denied a Congress(I) ticket and had freed his voters to work for the Opposition, entire ballot books pre-stamped for NC (bearing the serial numbers 024864-024898) were recovered with counterfoils intact from polling booths. Similar pre-stamped books (numbers 037201-037225) were recovered by opposition agents from polling officers at Idgah. Others were recovered from Handwara and Cahdura. Opposition candidates also charged massive booth capturing at Khan Sahib and Hazratbal where gangs of NC workers drove to polling stations in Matadors and entered the booths while the police looked helplessly on.

What gives some credence to these charges—many of them in the form of official complaints—is that the government machinery worked blatantly in favour of the alliance. Starting about two weeks before the election, 600 opposition workers were arrested in areas where MUF, independents and PC candidates were showing strength. In many polling stations located on properties owned by NC supporters, voters were simply

Most of Congress(I)'s candidates were successful in Jammu either due to massive vote divisions caused by an unprecedented influx of independents, or because they were Farooq's candidates.

Map by B.K. SHARMA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Though MUF bagged only four seats, it polled almost 35 per cent of the popular vote—larger than that polled by all Congress(I) candidates in the fray.

not allowed to vote. At Kawari in Kupwara district—Lone's stronghold—some 250 of his supporters were roughed up and pushed out of the polling booth by NC supporters. Yet the counting continued.

The police refused to listen to any complaint. At one counting station—an agricultural college near Sopore—a huge traffic jam was created at night during driving rain. Buses carrying ballot-boxes were stopped 2 km from the station, and in the ensuing confusion polling officers and policemen began removing the ballot-boxes, hand-carrying them to the counting area amid charges that boxes with the real votes were being swapped for boxes with phony votes. In many instances polling officers refused to seal ballot-boxes on the ground that they did not have seals.

While Farooq's election result was announced within three hours after the counting started on March 24, results from the all-important Anantnag district were held up for the next two-and-a-half days. The Anantnag counting station was like an armed camp with several hundred policemen surrounding it. One reason why the results were delayed was because the government-appointed counting officers—many of them illiterate forest guards—would stop the counting as soon as they saw opposition candidates taking a lead. At the counting room for Anantnag town from where MUF candidate Syed Shah was finally declared a winner, the presiding officer suspended counting after agents for the alliance pulled ballot papers out of boxes and scattered them on the ground when Shah's lead became obvious. At the Bij Behara counting room, the polling officers simply stopped counting when an MUF candidate established an early lead. At the Dooru station, the presiding officer declared an NC candidate elected as soon as he took a 300-vote lead even though one ballot-box with 1,100 votes had still to be counted. The MUF coordinator Qazi Nissar, who was present there, pleaded with the officer to be fair, but in vain.

These events, some of them witnessed by INDIA TODAY, have only served to produce a deeper feeling of alienation among the youth who have flocked to the Opposition—even the MUF—in search of an alternative power structure in Kashmir. As a young lawyer pleaded: "I don't even pray regularly. But I'm supporting the MUF because there is nothing else. If you take my vote away I lose all faith in Indian democracy." Even Islamic preachers like Nissar, sensing their party would do well in the elections, had begun to talk about a stake in the Indian system. "I believe in the Indian Constitution," he said. "I will live and die an Indian. How long can people like us keep getting votes by exploiting Islam? We have to prove we can do something concrete. But this kind of thing simply makes people lose faith in the Constitution."

This is not to say that Farooq or his party manipulated the entire election. The NC is a mass-based party and Farooq is a dynamic and charismatic personality who was indubitably a one-man electoral missile during the entire campaign. He did not even once pander to fundamentalist or secessionist forces in his election rhetoric, as he has done in the past, and chose instead to dwell on bread and butter issues. But the alienation that the Kashmiris suffer is partly because ever since 1953, elections have been either uncontested or rigged and have failed to draw Kashmiris into India's emotional mainstream. The backlash has always been a flight to obscurantist or secessionist causes. The point is that if even 10 seats during this election were won unfairly by the alliance, it taints the credibility of the entire election.

In fact, the signs of a backlash are already there. Farooq faces a formidable challenge. He has no more alibis. He can no longer blame the Centre if he does not deliver rapidly on his promises to fight corruption and step up economic progress. His other task will be to hold out his hand to the valley's alienated people who feel that this election effectively disenfranchised them and somehow make them feel a part of the system. If he fails, increasing numbers of young voters—there will be 24 per cent new ones in the next election—will be drawn into anti-national causes as a protest and the alliance will go down in history as having accomplished nothing more than an election result.

—INDERJIT BADHWAR

Nissar lodging a protest: widespread resentment

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

WEST BENGAL

A Startling Sweep

A political gale blowing from New Delhi in December 1984 had stunned West Bengal's ruling Left Front as the Congress(I) captured 17 of the state's 42 Lok Sabha seats. But in 27 months, the wind had changed direction more than anyone had realised. The decline in the Congress(I)'s tally of seats from 54 to a mere 40 in a 294-member Assembly was, quite simply, incredible. "How could it happen?" wondered a bleary-eyed state party chief Priya Ranjan Das Munshi, surrounded by unbelieving party workers. Within days, Union law minister Asoke Sen's dramatic resignation had signalled the beginning of a process in which many state Congress(I) leaders may find their wings clipped.

Every logical indicator had suggested that the party's tally of seats would surely increase. But explains the CPI(M)'s organisation man, Biman Bose: "Rajiv moved through Bengal like a king expecting people to bow down to him. But they only felt insulted when he offered them money and jobs in exchange for votes." Even Congressmen in retrospect admit that they badly miscalculated their strategy and "hurt the ego of the Bengali electorate in the process". Had it not been for the party's unexpected resurgence in the Greater Calcutta region, where it won 23 seats, the Congress(I)'s fate would have been even more pitiable. As it is, 21 sitting Congress(I) MLAs lost.

"Our slogan of 10 lakh jobs and rice at Rs 2 per kg for certain categories of people backfired badly," explained Saugata Roy, Congress(I) victor from Calcutta's Alipore constituency. "The CPI(M) took these slogans apart and declared them to be a complete bluff." Scepticism at Rajiv's promises, including his highly-publicised but little understood Rs 1,007-crore aid package, had been evident right in the initial days of the campaigning. The Marxists literally cashed in on this, selling lakhs of pamphlets ridiculing Congress(I) promises—a 25 paisa pamphlet on the Rs 1,007-crore package, for instance, sold five lakh copies, netting over Rs 1.2 lakh. Basu's trenchant criticism of Rajiv's "lies and false promises" proved to be equally popular, and 2,200 audio cassettes of his speeches priced at Rs 20 each were sold to district committees where they were copied and further distributed. The running battle between the two became the central issue of the elections.

Das Munshi, who acted as the prime minister's translator and official go-between, is being held culpable for providing inadequate, and at times misleading, feedback to Rajiv. "Today everybody is blaming the prime minister for our debacle," says an MLA, "but he only did what the state leadership told him to." One plan, as represented by Union Information and Broadcasting Minister Ajit Panja, was to Every logical indicator had suggested that the Congress(I)'s tally of seats would surely increase. But in retrospect, Congressmen feel that they miscalculated their strategy and "hurt the ego of the electorate in the process".

Photographs by RAGHU RAI

Basu at a rally: popular mandate

Gurukul Kangri Colle

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Party insiders read in Sen's resignation a message to Rajiv not to impose people like Das Munshi on the state unit while senior leaders like Ghani Khan Choudhury and Sen himself are available.

shore up the party's organisation to mobilise votes. But Das Munshi's argument was that they could never match the Marxists' capacity for organisation, and should rely on Rajiv to dazzle voters.

But this strategy proved disastrous. Said Panja dramatically: "The seeds were sown and the crop was there, but we failed to harvest it." And the prime minister appeared to agree, stating that the "formidable Marxist cadres" had outmatched the Congress(I)'s organisation in mobilising votes.

Rajiv, after consulting Das Munshi, has ordered a four-member committee to probe the debacle but it may yield little. Dissident activity did not affect the results even marginally, except in a handful of seats. Pranab Mukherjee's Rashtriya Samajbadi Congress, along with a few other parties under the Jatiya Front banner, had fielded 160-odd candidates. But there was clearly a polarisation between the Left Front and the Congress(I).

Most people seem to subscribe to Pranab Mukherjee's theory that the Congress(I) has always relied on the personal popularity of its leader, and not on organisation, to draw votes—and that the debacle is a personal defeat for Rajiv. Thus, even former Congress(I) bastions like Bolpur, Kaandi, Malda, Bankura Town, Arambagh and a number of north Bengal constituencies visited by the prime minister witnessed astonishing negative swings.

Though the use of Rajiv extensively took the Left Front by surprise initially, it actually went to its advantage. His record of resolving national problems and the Gorkhaland agitation became a constant target of Marxist assault. Similarly the Left Front propagated that the Centre was deliberately introducing religion into politics. This ploy obviously proved effective.

The most prominent exception to the overall voting pattern in the state was Calcutta, which gave the Congress(I) 13 seats. Voters in areas adjoining the city proper voted another 10 Congressmen in. This has baffled both Marxists and Congressmen, because pre-poll calculations had indicated a pro-Left swing here. The ruling party's failure to keep its 1984 election promise of more jobs and the opening of closed industries was expected to cost it seats in Calcutta and in the adjoining suburbs. Congressmen

Polling in progess: extreme polarisation

RAGHU RAI

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Today's Pan Am. A Richer Experience.

Pan Am is doing many things, in the air and on the ground, to make sure our First and Clipper® Class passengers get the treatment they so richly deserve.

More Luxury Than Ever In First Class

We have completely renewed and redesigned our First Class on all our 747's.

With bright new interiors, innovative new cuisine, and beautiful new leather-and-sheepskin Sleeperette® Seats so supple and soft, they literally mold themselves to your body.

In Clipper, on all our 747s, our new tweed seats will be arranged six-across, as before, to give you more room to work or relax.

More Comfort Than Ever In Clipper Class

Our Clipper® Class service, too, has been renewed and made better in virtually every way. With new fabrics, carpeting and curtains everywhere you look. And with handsome new tweed seats, arranged six-across on every 747 we fly, to give you more room to work or relax than you'd get in some airlines' First Class sections.

A Private Terminal Just For You In New York

Our new First and Clipper Class Terminal at JFK Airport, lets you experience new heights of luxury and comfort even before you leave the ground. Here you can relax in an atmosphere more reminiscent of a fine hotel than an airport, while a friendly, helpful staff attends to all your travel needs—everything from checking-in, to reserving rental cars and hotel rooms.

Pan Am's New Indian Look

Travelling Pan Am means you not only avoid a lot of hassle, you get a lot of comfort too.

Our new First Class Sleeperette Seat will cradle you in buttery-soft glove leather and plush sheepskin.

For every flight from Delhi and Bombay is a luxurious 747 with three classes to choose from. And with our new Indian flight attendants plus our delicious Indian cuisine and announcements made in Hindi, we make you feel more at home.

So fly with us soon to Europe, South America, or the USA.

And get the treatment you so richly deserve.

For reservations and information see your Travel Agent or call Pan Am, New Delhi: 345222, 345244; Bombay: 2029020, 2029048.

Systems/357

Pan Am. You Can't Beat The Experience.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

JUNGLE PRINTS IN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

THE Wild Passion

Garden*
VARELI
DRESS FASHIONS

A I N O Y O R Y U

VG-1105

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"Ready, steady... go for Rasna."

Mudra:A:PI: 3357

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Kinetic Honda. You deserve nothing less.

Kinetic Honda.
With each component engineered with the belief that perfection is a need, not a luxury.
Kinetic Honda.
Now, at the touch of a mere button, leave the others behind.

Contact your nearest dealer today, for a test ride.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

KINETIC HONDA
What your scooter ought to be

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Our peacock is specially trained to stand guard over the nation's industries

The increasing stacks and towers, that crowd the skyline of our cities reflect in a silent way India's industrial progress. But this growth will get arrested unless someone takes care of the manifold risks that confront our various industries.

National Insurance provides comprehensive insurance protection to the nation's industries. NIC's schemes such as Contractor's All Risks, Erection All Risks, Machinery Breakdown, Loss of Profit (Fire), Product and Public Liability, etc., are tailored to cover the needs of everyone—from giant steel plants to the smallest lathe shop.

Beyond industries, NIC brings security to the lives of farmers and village artisans through various Rural Insurance Schemes. And for the urban section there are a number of schemes that offer protection against burglary, fire and accidents.

So, whenever you need protection just call us. With its growing network and professional expertise, NIC offers you personalised service at every level.

National Insurance Company Limited
(A subsidiary of General Insurance Corporation)
3, Middleton Street, Calcutta 700 071.

Putting service first

CLARION C-NIC-15

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

like MLA Saugata Roy believe though that "in Calcutta, voters reacted directly to the non-performance of the Left Front Government". But Left Front leaders feel that they did poorly because Rajiv succeeded in dragging in religion by branding the Marxists as non-believers.

The CPI(M)'s single-party majority of 187 seats could prove to be a political stranglehold. Indeed, it has already hinted that it may reduce the role of the smaller Front partners. The Congress(I) warns that this absolute power could spell danger but the Marxists say it will only mean that they can work freely without the encumbrances of political compromise.

As far as Sen's surprise decision goes, it appears calculated to hit both the party leadership as well as the high command. "I believe that I can serve the Congress and my people better without being burdened by any political office," he declared. But party insiders read it as a message to Rajiv not to impose people like Das Munshi on the state unit while senior leaders like Abdul Ghani Khan Choudhury and Sen himself are available. Some feel that Sen acted quickly because he feared being dropped from the Cabinet anyway. Though few expect Rajiv to cave in to this pressure, apart from Das Munshi, Chief Whip Subrata Mukherjee may find his influence reduced. The state party leadership may well pass to someone non-controversial like MLA and former cabinet minister D.P. Chattopadhyay. Men like Chattopadhyay and MLAs Saugata Roy and Apurbalal Mazumdar, rather than Sen, stand a better chance of raising a new Congress(I) from the ashes of the latest poll defeat.

—INDRANIL BANERJIE

Das Munshi felt that the Congress(I), should rely on Rajiv to dazzle voters. But this strategy proved disastrous.

JYOTI BASU

Ruling Supreme

DURING the last few days preceding polling day, Marxist Chief Minister Jyoti Basu seemed entirely eclipsed in the giant shadow cast by Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi who blitzkrieged his way across the state. But a few days later, belying all predictions, the diminutive, dhoti-clad septuagenarian proved his political mettle, leading his party and alliance partners to a remarkable victory.

INDIA TODAY'S INDRANIL BANERJIE met Basu the next day at his office in Writers' Building, the state secretariat. The smiling chief minister remarked that Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi had just congratulated him on telephone. "Isn't this interview too soon after the polls?" he wanted to know, but added: "Anyway, ask whatever you want." Excerpts:

Q. How could you be so confident of winning again considering that any government in power for so long is bound to breed disenchantment?

A. We have been in power for 10 years and there have been several elections—in the panchayats and also the Lok Sabha. We always review the results and draw conclusions so that we can remove our weaknesses. We don't conclude anything from the crowds. So we did not take the 1984 election reverses very seriously.

Only this time we did not realise that the prime minister would be utilised in this fashion or that he would also take on the responsibility of being his party's sole spokesman. Thus our main concentration was against him.

Q. Did rural voters support you because they were more concerned about "national integrity" than they were about local issues?

A. The changes in villages during our rule are solid, we have done a lot of work. Rajiv's entire tour in the rural areas had no impact. He drew crowds but they did not believe him when he said we had done nothing.

Q. Why do you think you fared so badly in metropolitan Calcutta?

A. I think the newspapers did us a lot of damage, denigrating our government day in and day out. The TV propaganda also had its impact.

Q. Is the Congress(I) defeat because of its failure to channelise Rajiv's popularity into votes or does the defeat signify a rebuff for him?

A. Because of both reasons. They depended too much on Rajiv's image, his speeches and promises. But Rajiv did not prove to be a vote-catcher. The party also did not do elementary things required to mobilise votes.

Q. What do you feel about Rajiv Gandhi's manner of campaigning?

A. It was very alarming. He resorted to lies, he dragged in religious issues and did everything to denigrate us.

Q. How do you respond to the prime minister's call to "break the despondency among the people and build a new Bengal"?

A. Are the high level of votes cast in this election a symptom of despondency? Fortunately, the people of this state have some intelligence and could not be taken in so easily. Nobody knew what Rajiv Gandhi's "Natun Bangla" stood for or meant.

Q. What do you feel about the prime minister's comment that you are the only competent person in the Left Front Government?

A. Earlier he did not make this distinction. Only later, somebody advised him not to denigrate me personally. Also, newspapers have been talking about how the CPI(M) does not exist after me. And large sections of the public believe this. But it's a lie.

Q. Do you think the Congress(I)'s defeat in the latest two elections augers ill for stability at the Centre?

A. We can't prop up the Congress(I). I have been saying that we should think about an alternative alliance at the Centre with regional and national opposition parties and chalk up a common minimum programme. Some regional parties have become all-India parties. Telugu Desam, the largest opposition party in the Lok Sabha, is forced to think about national issues like foreign policy. So, such parties can possibly come together and form a national alternative. Our Central Committee will be meeting very soon and we shall raise this issue.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

CLARION C-NIC-15

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Until another party can dislodge the Left Front cadres from their secure niches in government offices, trade unions, and in anchayats, the tate is unlikely to witness another political somersault.

The Left Front continues to entrench itself in rural areas, which have ecome its main power base. Today, each of the state's 41,000 villages as at least one unit of a left party.

TEN YEARS OF LEFT FRONT

The Red Stranglehold

TEN years ago, in the momentous month of May, politics did a somersault in West Bengal. In one electoral blow, the then Congress chief minister Siddhartha Shankar Ray and his 216 MLAs were pulverised into a party with just 20 MLAs, and the Left Front under the Marxist leader Jyoti Basu swept into power with 230 seats in a 294-member state legislature. May 1977 marked a catharsis for a state that had been rent by political violence for over a decade, witnessing first a bloody Naxalite insurgency and then an equally gruesome period of retaliation by Ray's Congress government. Calcutta had become what actor-playwright Utpal Dutt termed a "nightmare city", stalked by killers, goondas and a maverick police force. The Marxists promised "democracy, peace and progress", released thousands of political prisoners, sent back the last contingents of the Central Reserve Police Force, announced dozens of new development schemes and the dawn of a new era in rural Bengal.

Today, the Left Front is mostly judged by its failures, rarely by what it has done. Left radicals accuse it of apostasy, of betraying Marxist ideals; the rival Congress(I) denounces it for falling short of every critical target, from plan expenditures to minimum needs. In Calcutta, the Marxists are lambasted for the potholed roads, overcrowded buses, crumbling institutions and traffic jams. In Bengal's paddy heartland too, peasants complain of corruption among panchayat officials and the left sarkar's general apathy. A universal feeling of stagnation pervades the state.

Yet, even as the Left Front approaches the end of its 10th year in power—a world record for a democratically-elected Marxist government—all its sins of omissions do not add up to tilt the balance of political power: the red flag continues to flutter almost everywhere. Today, each of the state's 41,000 villages has at least one unit of a left party. The dominant Left Front constituent, the CPI(M) and its frontal organisations alone claim almost nine million members out of the state's total population of 54 million (1981 census)—the strength has grown by 2.3 million since 1981-82.

The Marxists, of course, attribute this to their achievements of the past 10 years. But, says Congress(I) leader Subrata Mukherjee: "Any party in power attracts followers and this is more so with the Left Front as jobs, government benefits and other favours come with party membership." Indeed, a major CPI(M) concern since the 1984 reversal in the Lok Sabha polls has been the need to educate its new cadres in Marxist thought and weed out the "opportunistic elements" that have infiltrated at the grassroots.

The evidence of their achievements in rural Bengal is somewhat confusing. On the one hand, the number of shallow tube-wells has risen from 78,000 in 1977 to more than 2.25 lakh today, and deep tube-wells are up from 174 to 454. The Rs 156-crore World Bank-aided plan for tube-wells and pump-sets to water an additional 1,38,000 hectares is beginning to take effect. The result in terms of figures is spectacular: production of boro, the third paddy crop, for instance, has doubled over the decade and today West Bengal is the second-largest rice producer after Andhra Pradesh. Cashing in on this agricultural boom are a new breed of 'bhadralok' farmers, who, in many parts of the state, rake in profits exceeding Rs 1,000 per bigha.

On the other hand, large areas are still dependent on the monsoons and a single paddy crop. Though in 10 years the Left Front has brought an additional 5.3 lakh hectares of farmland under minor irrigation—compared to 5.1 lakh hectares in the previous 30 years—and is implementing a mega project to tap the Teesta river, over 65 per cent of the arable land remains unirrigated.

Left Front strikes rural roots: strong base

The percentage of people below the poverty line has declined from 59 in 1977 to 43.8 in 1983-84, according to the National Sample Survey. Landless peasants now get a better wage too, partly due to Left Front-led wage movements and partly as the revitalised panchayat system has emerged as a major employer between 1978 and '86. Panchayats created 256 million mandays in this period, assuring at least one member of every family of agricultural labourers employment for a 100 days in a year.

Former finance minister Ashok Mitra's remark, "if

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

the panchayats fail, the CPI(M) experiment fails", reflects the Marxists' need to preserve their rural base. Outsiders like Princeton University's Atul Kohli point out: "The creation of red panchayats, the registration of sharecroppers, the facilitation of credit for small landholders and mobilisation of the landless for higher wage are all aimed at securing political position by improving the conditions of the lower classes." And the Left Front strategy seems to have worked.

Another large chunk of beneficiaries is the state's 1.3 million-odd sharecroppers and the 1.64 million recipients of eight lakh acres of surplus land. The famous "Operation Barga" which began in 1978 led to tenancy reforms and gave sharecroppers a better share of their produce as also security from evictions. The two programmes alone are estimated to have helped over two million peasants and provide the Marxists with a rock-hard base among the state's 8.6 million rural working population.

But while the Left Front's objective of creating a large loyal following controlled by a small band of cadres has had a positive impact in the countryside, the attempt at a similar penetration of urban and government institutions has proved disastrous. The politicisation of colleges, hospitals and even a critical force like the police, has crippled their functioning. Calcutta University, for instance, has been plunged into academic chaos ever since the CPI(M) failed to get its nominee the vice-chancellor's post. The police too has fallen prey to the CPI(M) decision to foster a union, which now decides on postings and duty allotments. Several times police union members have refused to take orders and have even abused senior officials. Marxist ministers too find themselves impotent in dealing with the Frankenstein they have created. The Left Front had once appointed an MLA, Shyamal Chakraborty, to revitalise the Calcutta State Transport Corporation where absenteeism, pilferage and rampant indiscipline were costing the state exchequer almost Rs 20 crore a year in subsidies. But Chakraborty quit in a year in frustration—and nothing changed. Similar attempts to revamp the state administration have floundered with Left Front bosses ultimately being forced to promote several clerks.

PRASHANT PANJIAR

The Left Front has been somewhat more successful in controlling labour employed in private sector industries and the CPI(M)'s Centre of Indian Trade Unions (CITU) is today a more disciplined force than ever before. But the Marxist entente with big business and multinationals has drawn fire from radical leftists and chunks of trade unionists have deserted CITU. A major revolt against the Left Front policy of wooing big business, believed to be Basu's brainchild, has so far been kept at bay by promises of large-scale new investment, including R.P. Goenka's much-publicised Rs 850-crore Haldia petrochemical project.

The Left Front's transformation into a social democratic party with pragmatism as its principal ideology has been necessitated because its policies failed to match the urgent need for economic development. For West Bengal's 14 million urbanites in particular, the overall pace of progress under Left Front rule was proving to be a tremendous disappointment. The Marxists might have ended the nightmare of crippling power-cuts by pumping in Rs 900 crore into the power sector, they might have succeeded in creating new industrial growth centres—but expectations have been rising even faster.

For the urban youth, Calcutta remains a tired, worn-out metropolis with millions of unemployed chasing increasingly fewer jobs. Sensing this disenchantment, the state Congress(I) has never failed to promise dramatic changes, including lakhs of jobs, and as Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi reiterated in his election speeches, a "new Bengal".

A major Marxist programme has consequently been propaganda that the Centre is responsible for the state's ills. Propaganda has also kept alive memories of the lawlessness of the 1972-77 Congress period, but the Marxists' unchanging theme is beginning to wear thin in urban areas. "The whole concept of a state government's limited resources and power is beginning to boomerang and people are beginning to wonder if it would be better to vote for a party connected to the Centre with its limitless powers and finances," says Timir Bhaduri, a dissident Left Front poll candidate and an ex-Revolutionary Socialist Party leader.

But here again, the Left Front's success in implementing its most fundamental programme—that of capturing every keystone in the state's power structure—is proving to be a boon. Today, elections alone cannot dislodge Left Front cadres from their secure niches in government offices, in trade unions, and in panchayats. Until another political party can break the Marxists' stranglehold in these places, the state is unlikely to witness another political somersault.

—INDRANIL BANERJIE

Though in 10 years, the Left Front has brought an additional 5.3 lakh hectares of farmland under irrigation—against 5.1 lakh hectares in the previous 30 years—over 65 per cent of the arable land remains unirrigated.

The Left Front's efforts to penetrate urban and government institutions have proved disastrous. The politicisation of colleges, hospitals and even a critical force like the police has crippled their functioning.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

KASHIPUR

Crushing Blow

IN unity lies strength. This moral was established beyond doubt in Kashipur where the Rashtriya Sanjay Manch (RSM) Vice-President, Akbar 'Dumpy' Ahmed, with the support of the Janata Party, the Lok Dal and the CPI, bested the ruling Congress(I) candidate and state Minister for Parliamentary Affairs Ammar Rizvi. Not even the campaigning of External Affairs Minister Narain Dutt Tiwari, who has nurtured the constituency carefully over the last two decades, could upset the Opposition's winning cart: Ahmed won by a convincing 8,151-vote margin.

Undoubtedly, Congress(I) fortunes had been affected by the Bahujan Samaj Party (BSP), whose candidate Jai Ram Jai drew away 12,921 Harijan and backward caste votes. But for the larger part, it was a straight fight between Ahmed, who secured 43,213 votes, and Rizvi, who managed 35,062 votes. The BJP aspirant could secure only 3,462 votes and forfeited his security deposit like the 17 independents and the BSP candidate.

Ahmed: deft campaigning

The loss was treated as a debacle and caused much gloom in ruling party circles because, just two years ago, Tiwari had won the constituency for the Congress(I) with an impressive margin of 48,808 votes. And despite Ahmed's claim that "the people of Kashipur voted out the Congress(I) because of its policy on local industry", there were few who were ready to swallow that explanation. Few dispute that the industrialisation of Kashipur, initiated under the aegis of Tiwari, has benefited the constituency.

In fact, the entire ruling party campaign was built around the external affairs minister. Even the slogan—Tiwariji ki baat par, Mohar lagao haath par (Stamp the hand on Tiwari's saying)—was aimed to cash in on Tiwari's popularity in the area. Rizvi wound up his campaign on this high note, saying: "It is not a question of voting for Ammar Rizvi or not. It is a question of voting for Tiwari or not." And for nine days, the external affairs minister took time off his busy official schedule to camp in the constituency. Even on the polling day, he was hard at work, visiting Muslim areas alone in a rickshaw.

But his efforts were in vain, largely due to the strategy adopted by Ahmed. In meeting after meeting the RSM leader drilled home one point religiously: "Tiwari himself might have done some good for you but his men have failed your expectations." It was a rewarding strategy for there was much resentment against the sitting Congress(I) MP of the area, Satendra Chandra Guria, who had secured the ticket in the last poll on Tiwari's recommendation and for whom Tiwari had campaigned extensively.

Guria has for long felt that the Muslims and Sikhs of the constituency—who make up 39.6 per cent of the electorate—had voted overwhelmingly against him in the last parliamentary elections. Subsequently, Guria has not only behaved arrogantly with these sections but has even managed to alienate most of his party's local leaders. Ahmed went all-out to woo the Muslims and Sikhs and played on their hurt sentiments.

Indeed, Guria may have had more to do with the defeat than many outsiders realise. On March 21, he was deliberately rude in public to R.P. Joshi, a popular local leader, formerly of the Lok Dal, whom Tiwari had inducted into the party just before the by-election to strengthen Rizvi's chances. Though Joshi covered up his displeasure, his supporters—who are considerable—were so upset by the incident that subsequently, many of them canvassed actively for Ahmed.

Another point that went in Ahmed's favour was his deft marshalling of his slender resources. The RSM campaigners fanned out in rural areas and worked as a strong, well-knit team. In contrast, the Congress(I) workers, who were much greater in strength, continued to work in urban areas only. The ruling party ministers too seemed more preoccupied with ensuring that Tiwari and Rizvi noticed their presence. In fact, Corbett National Park, about 70 km from Kashipur, became a familiar resting spot for the party's luminaries.

Little wonder, the question of the possible fall-out of the defeat troubled many Congress(I) leaders when they zoomed back to the state capital in their Ambassadors. They certainly were not worried about the highly vocal RSM leader's performance in the Assembly, where, because the RSM has only one other MLA, it cannot be regarded as a potent force as yet.

However, much is being read in Chief Minister Bir Bahadur Singh's absence from the constituency. Though the chief minister campaigned actively in Hardwar, Patti and Rath—the three other constituencies where by-elections were held—he chose to make only a fleeting appearance at Kashipur. Even the dozen-plus state ministers who visited the constituency apparently came of their own volition and not on any official bidding by Singh. The chief minister's remark to one of his senior ministers that "I am hardly needed in Kashipur when Tiwari himself is around" is unlikely to help him when the final analysis is done.

—DILIP AWASTHI

The shock defeat of Congress(I) stalwart Ammar Rizvi in Kashipur, a ruling party stronghold, at the hands of the joint opposition candidate, Akbar 'Dumpy' Ahmed, has demonstrated once again that there is strength in opposition unity.

The general resentment against the sitting Congress(I) MP of the area worked to Ahmed's advantage.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

When a heart sinks beyond all hope dare you risk the last resort?

BPL medical electronic equipment... for life-saving reliability.

Cardiac Resuscitation Systems from BPL. The reliable ultimate resort for instant remedy. With dependability delivered in every joule and efficiency in every cardiac emergency, BPL's Cardiac Resuscitation Systems are one step closer to a heart's recovery.

As leaders in medical electronics, BPL offer their Cardiac Resuscitation System comprising a DC defibrillator, monitor and recorder. Portable and operable on mains or rechargeable batteries, it has a built-in synchroniser, solid trace, freeze display facilities and heart rate indicators. Energy selection, either continuous or in two auto modes, is indicated through a flashing bar graph. A warning facility for battery recharge, a safety mechanism for over discharge, a QRS beeper, choice of three leads and an option for direct ECG monitoring through the paddles are added advantages.

Prestigious technical tie-ups. Constant product development. A comprehensive manufacturing infrastructure. Rigorous research. And around two decades of invaluable experience. That is BPL's contribution to coronary care. That is BPL's commitment to life-saving reliability.

Also from BPL

- Cardiart ECGs
- Bedside Monitors
- Central Nursing Stations
- Supplies and Accessories

For more information, contact any of our Sales Offices.

everest/S/87/BPL/47

BPL-INDIA

In pursuit of perfection

CENTRAL MARKETING ORGANISATION: BANGALORE: Phone: 572321/2/6

SALES OFFICES: • BANGALORE: Phone: 561598/574787 • BOMBAY: Phone: 4938704/4938392 • CALCUTTA: Phone: 431658/448566 • COCHIN: Phone: 361619 • COIMBATORE: Phone: 3492 • HYDERABAD: Phone: 231091 • MADRAS: Phone: 474309/471378/479420 • NEW DELHI: Phone: 6433689/6433865/6431886 • PALGHAT: Phone: 3241

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THE SARABHAIS

Trading in Trusts

NEARLY 2,000 trusts, 400 investment companies and 96 other firms for holding the family jewellery and property: the Sarabhais have outdone themselves in what tax officials say is an intricate tax-avoidance scheme perfected into a fine art. But the taxmen have worked their way through the legal jungle, and the tax money has started flowing out of Sarabhai coffers. An investigation into an extraordinary case by RAMESH MENON and T.N. NINAN.

THE first day of March, 1976, was a busy one for the Sarabhai family in Ahmedabad. No fewer than 67 family trusts were created that day: 15 named after Anand Sarabhai, 12 after Suhrid Sarabhai, 13 after Mallika Sarabhai, and so on up and down the family tree.

The next day was equally busy: another 35 family trusts were created. In all, more than 200 trusts were created in the first eight days of the month.

Such frenetic activity has consumed the Sarabhais periodically, usually in March—just before the close of the financial year. March 1974, for instance, saw 400 trusts being created. By the early 1980s, nearly 2,000 trusts existed for the 20 members of one of India's most illustrious and distinguished families.

When the list became too long for trusts to be named, numbers had to be resorted to. So there is a Gautam Sarabhai Trust No. 1, Gautam Sarabhai Trust No. 2 and so on till Gautam Sarabhai Trust No. 128. There are trusts named after valleys and trees, and trusts with no names at all, just initials and numbers, like MG-T61 Trust and AZ-8152-NZA Trust.

Why would anyone want to create so many trusts? The Sarabhais have their answers, and so do the Government's tax officials. If the latter are to be believed, the trusts are little more than devices aimed at avoiding tax. But the Sarabhais argue that the trusts have been created for specific needs at different times, to meet the present and future needs of family members. They say that many of the trusts do not benefit from any tax saving at all, and that 2,000 trusts cannot save any more tax than 20 trusts, so that the numbers are inconsequential. Finally, it is argued, the trusts cannot be said to belong to one family in the normal

SARABHAI TRUST MANIA

DATE	NUMBER
30.3.72	253
29.3.73	250
30.3.73	25
28.3.74	400
25.3.75	9
26.3.75	1
28.3.75	8
31.3.75	3
10.11.75	24
1.3.76	67
2.3.76	35
5.3.76	28
8.3.76	78

Note : Dates when nearly 800 other trusts were created are not readily available.

Chart by B.K. SHARMA

The Sarabhai family in 1957: decline and dissension

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The Retreat: sylvan complex, but not a tax haven sense—because they involve four generations of Sarabhais, including women (who would normally be said to belong to the families into which they have been married).

Whatever the truth, these trusts have now set the stage for a furious and continuing battle between the Sarabhais and the tax officials. Thousands of tax assessments are being disputed, appealed against, or conceded; compromises are being struck, penal action being launched, concessions being made. What ultimately emerges from this flurry of activity is the extraordinary story of a family's willingness to go to unimaginable lengths to avoid paying tax.

Said a senior tax official in Ahmedabad: "The Sarabhai family has made a mess of its Rs 400 crore business, which is losing money. But it has excelled in the tax avoidance business." Added another tax official: "This kind of behaviour comes about only when someone believes that it is a crime to pay tax."

The disputes have already resulted in the Sarabhais coughing up much larger sums of tax money. The additional burden already agreed to by the Sarabhais is about Rs 3 crore. And the Sarabhai Foundation alone has paid over Rs 60 lakh. One group company is now paying Rs 10 lakh every month against old dues, another is paying Rs 20 lakh every month. And the family's annual tax liability could multiply tenfold on the trusts alone.

In support of its contention that the purpose of the trusts was to avoid taxes, the Income Tax Department has confronted the Sarabhais with numerous anomalies and illogicalities in the trusts:

► Mallika Sarabhai, daughter of the late scientist Vikram Sarabhai and niece of family patriarch Gautam, set up a trust in the early 1970s saying that the income of the trust should in the next 21 months be given to the third child of Pallavi, a niece of Gautam's. Pallavi was not even married then. When she was barely 16, she also set up trusts, with her uncles (of the previous generation) as the beneficiaries.

► In several trusts, the beneficiaries named were already in their 60s and were to be paid several decades later.

► In some trusts, the settler would not specify who the beneficiaries were, leaving some other family member to appoint them, though the trust deed would say that the trust settler was creating it due to affection for the beneficiaries.

► Most trust deeds read alike, several are just cyclostyled copies with the names and numbers changed—suggesting a common plan and purpose.

► Virtually no new private trusts have been created after 1981, when the tax laws became unfavourable to trusts.

► Several trusts were not performing the objectives set out for them. The Sarabhai Foundation, registered as a charitable trust, had a 16-acre farm which housed mango and lemon groves. The family claimed that these trees were for botanical research, and got tax exemption on this account. But surprise checks by the income tax authorities revealed that students hardly used the premises.

The taxmen also found that the priceless Calico Museum had been given by Calico Mills to the Sarabhai Foundation and shifted from the Calico Mills to the Sarabhais' sylvan residential complex in Ahmedabad, The Retreat, where the museum was not really open to the public. Other facilities—like the books and music library, as well as the botanical garden—were also found to be used primarily, if not exclusively, by the family.

The taxmen decided that the Sarabhai Foundation did not therefore deserve the status of a tax-free charitable trust, and that it was a private trust meant to benefit the Sarabhais. The foundation has therefore been slapped with heavy tax bills.

Disputes have also arisen over 400 investment companies that the Sarabhais have created—partly to reduce the annual wealth tax liability from Rs 40 lakh to Rs 5 lakh (or so say the taxmen). Other companies have been set up to lease such items as refrigerators and other household goods to the Sarabhais, to provide street lighting on the road into The Retreat, to hold jewellery, and so on.

The tax officials say that the objective, again, was tax avoidance—because there was no wealth tax on companies. Thus the Sarabhais transferred their personal assets—like jewellery, buildings and even gardens—to these companies, drastically reducing the tax burden on a total family wealth of about Rs 40 crore.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Other business families have played similar games, but as in the case of the trusts, the Sarabhais have shown that they are a class apart. The family set up 36 companies to hold the family jewellery, worth Rs 15 crore. The family members would create a jewellery company and execute an agreement that they could take the jewellery on an annual rent of Rs 500 a year. The jewellery remained in personal lockers, with no tax burden. Ingeniously, the rental charge was used by the company to insure the jewellery.

In another case, Gautam Sarabhai, the architect of some of these schemes, claimed medical expenses worth Rs 6.04 lakh from the Employees Welfare Account of one investment company of which he was an employee on a salary of Re 1 a month. The reimbursement was shown to be drawn for the treatment of his late wife, Kamalini, and included transcontinental visits by members of the family as well as travel costs for doctors coming from the US.

Many of the family companies provide services to other family companies or to family members themselves. And tax officials say that such a company will charge more for services to a profitable associate, and not charge at all to one that incurs a loss—in order to minimise the tax burden. Accounting entries, they add, are often put in at the year-end.

About 25 companies were used to finance the Sarabhais' foreign travel as well as their personal expenses, including compensation for the payment of electricity, entertainment and personal servants. Even the air-conditioners and refrigerators of these firms were used by the Sarabhais by paying rent.

The Income Tax Department has vigorously followed the Sarabhai trail for the last few years, leading to the tax disputes. And the Sarabhais have filed over 4,000

Classy Clan

THE Americans have the Rockefellers, Indians have the Sarabhais. Both are families with immense wealth and large corporate empires—and contributions to society that go well beyond the world of business. Both have given generously to charity, contributed to the arts, figured in the world of politics, stood for taste and distinction.

The Sarabhais have, of course, operated on a much smaller financial scale than the Rockefellers, but in many senses they have been even more versatile than the Rockefellers. Friends of Mahatma Gandhi, Jawaharlal Nehru and Indira Gandhi, labour leaders, builders of some of Ahmedabad's finest and proudest institutions, contributors to science and dance, creators of the priceless Calico Museum, the Sarabhais have been princes among merchants and merchants among princes.

Anusuya, sister of the founder of the family business Ambalal (see family tree), led the 1918 textile strike during which Maha Gandhi first went on a hunger strike. She also founded and ran the Ahmedabad Textile Labour Association at a time when her brother headed the Mill Owners' Association at the age of 22. Years later Mridula Sarabhai, Ambalal's daughter, was with Gandhi in Noakhali, she was particularly close to Jawaharlal Nehru and Sheikh Abdullah. And because of her role in helping women in distress, she was known as the 'abductor of abducted women'.

Leena runs Shreyas, an institute for destitute women and children, her brother Gautam (now the 70-year-old

Chart by B.K. SHARMA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Calico Museum: private pleasure cases in the courts and income tax tribunals against what they consider faulty assessments. Nearly 2,000 of them refer to the trusts alone. A battery of lawyers and accountants—in many cases, the same experts who had set out the rationale for the trusts—has been fighting their cases.

If the manner in which the trusts and investment companies were created give rise to questions, the tax department's charges against the Sarabhais are not easily answered either. For instance, after creating nearly 2,000 trusts, the family tried to shift the corpus of the 'discretionary trusts' (whose trustees can decide who should get the benefit of the trust) to 'specific trusts' (where the beneficiaries are specified). This was after a change in the law that imposed a higher tax burden on discretionary trusts.

In another complicated manoeuvre, gold bonds worth Rs 8 crore were sold two days before their date of maturity to newly-created investment companies (in which the seller was the only shareholder), in exchange for companies shares. Within days, the shares were sold to the same set of (but different) companies, at 25 per cent of the face value. An artificial capital loss was claimed as a result.

When the bonds were redeemed, wealth tax was sought to be escaped by creating new trusts in which each donor was the sole beneficiary. The shares of the companies were then gifted to the trusts.

Also, various Sarabhai companies have been paying substantial amounts of interest to other family companies. The receiving companies claimed the paying company should have deducted tax at source, but the latter said it had no such liability. So both the payer and the payee deferred the income tax liability of about Rs 2 crore a year for three years in a row.

These charges by the tax officials have come at the end of three years of concerted effort. And they were helped in their efforts by a judgement a couple of years ago by Supreme Court Justice O. Chinnappa Reddy in a McDowell case, holding that "colourable devices" in tax planning are tantamount to tax evasion. The judgement explicitly said that "though tax planning could be legitimate if within the framework of law, colourable devices couldn't be part of tax planning and it was not honourable to avoid payment of tax by dubious methods as it was the obligation of everyone to pay taxes honestly without resorting to subterfuges". It added that "it was for the court to take stock, to determine the nature of the new and sophisticated legal devices to avoid tax, and expose the devices for what they really were and refuse to give judicial benediction".

Early last year, the income tax commissioner of the Sarabhai Range, V.S. Banthia, and income tax officer Madan Lal created history in Ahmedabad when they individually summoned, over January and February, all the members of the Sarabhai family to question them about the trusts. Both the officials had spent many nights peering into hundreds of trust deeds trying to fathom the financial wizardry that went into them.

At first, senior income tax officials who put their heads together to work their way through the maze found that they had stepped into a "legal jungle". But slowly they put the pieces together and concluded that the family had avoided paying taxes amounting to crores of rupees by resorting to the subterfuge of creating trusts. One breakthrough is said to have come, for instance, when Mallika Sarabhai was questioned for over four family patriarch) was till recently running Ahmedabad's B.M. Institute for Handicapped Children, and was also chairman of the National Institute of Design—which the Sarabhais helped create. The family also runs Jyoti Sangh and Vikas Grah (for destitute women).

Vikram, Gautam's younger brother, gave birth to and spearheaded India's space effort, and died a premature death in 1971, when he was chairman of the Indian Space Research Organisation. He also helped establish the Ahmedabad Textile Industry Research Association as well as the Physical Research Laboratory. Vikram's wife Mrinalini and daughter Mallika are dancers and run the dance school Darpana.

The Sarabhais also played a role in starting the Indian Institute of Management in Ahmedabad. Gautam's wife Kamalini dabbled in psycho-analysis, and was partly instrumental in bringing Eric Ericson to India to research Gandhi and publish his definitive book, Gandhi's Truth.

Despite these many and varied achievements, the Sarabhais are perhaps even more distinguished for their elegant taste and style, patenting a Gandhian austerity amidst refined wealth. The family home in Ahmedabad—called The Retreat—is a veritable botanical garden with shaded walks, each building and home a small art gallery.

The Sarabhais have also been avant-garde. None of them has gone to school, being privately educated at home before going to university. Many of the couples in the clan have never formally married though they have brought up children—who in turn have raised their own brood without going through the ritual of marriage. In recent years, however, disputes and tensions in the family have created rifts—and Mrinalini and Mallika, for instance, have moved out of The Retreat, now occupied primarily by Gautam and sister Gira.

In business, the Sarabhais once ranked among the top few industrial houses in the country. But decline has set in, the young inheritors are no longer associated with the companies, and Gautam's tutelage has seen the two major companies—Ambalal Sarabhai Enterprises and Calico Mills—slip into the red. Assets and turnover have been declining (about Rs 400 crore each), and the losses have been mounting. Calico Mills has just been given financial transfusion by the government-owned financial institutions, and there is talk of them wanting to wrest control from Gautam. Meanwhile, Ambalal Sarabhai Enterprises—created by amalgamating several group companies in 1982—is now sought to be divided again.

Inevitably, the family's reputation has taken a beating. And the tax disputes over the trusts have not helped.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

hours at a stretch. The path through the legal jungle now led to a gold-mine.

When the officials began to draw their conclusions, the Sarabhais got active. A family with a reputation for contesting even minor tax assessments now came out with proposals saying that they were ready to pay Rs 60 lakh a year in taxes on these trusts. The tax officials were taken aback, but they continued with their investigations and finally asked the Sarabhais to pay around Rs 80 lakh. The Sarabhais appealed to the Central Board of Direct Taxes in New Delhi, but with no luck.

With the tax authorities after them, the law itself has been changed to deal with the situations created by the Sarabhais. In 1981, for instance, the entire corpus of private trusts became taxable, and that too at the maximum marginal rate of tax—making them infinitely less attractive tax-saving devices. Then, when the Sarabhais began transferring their wealth to companies because these were exempt from wealth tax, this law too was changed in 1984 so that closely-held companies had to pay wealth tax.

With the law becoming less charitable to trusts and the tax savings becoming less attractive (if not non-existent, in some cases), the Sarabhais have now changed tack. Virtually no new trusts have been created after 1981, and over the last few years several trusts have been wound up. Some 500 trusts have ceased to exist. Another 100 are now proposed to be wound up. More will disappear in the future. The tax authorities say that another reason for creating the trusts may have been to escape estate duty, which has now been abolished—removing another reason for keeping the trusts in existence.

Meanwhile, the tax disputes have served to focus attention on the manner in which the family companies function. Tax officials say that as many as 40 companies have their head offices in one small room, several companies share employees, and many of the companies exist only on paper. Employees often got transferred from one investment company to the other so as to deny them terminal benefits, payable after five years of continuous service.

Court disclosures have been revealing. Chiman Chatur Patel who works with the Sarabhais said that though employees sat under one roof, they worked for different companies. Natwarlal Somnath Pandya, another employee, deposed that though he was transferred time and again from one company to another, neither did his place of work nor his work change. Sevak Shah, an ex-employee of Sarabhai Technological Development Syndicate, said in an affidavit before the Gujarat Industrial Tribunal that he was a clerk in one company, the secretary of another and a power-of-attorney holder in the third. But he didn't know what was happening in any of these companies.

While Gautam Sarabhai has marshalled the family's defences, the tax authorities made a breakthrough when they questioned his niece, Mallika, for over four hours.

The man who has to face the tax authorities on all the contentious issues is none other than Gautam Sarabhai—a very private person who does not talk to journalists. At 70, he is the only member of the family who still has a say in running the Sarabhai group of companies. And the future must look grim.

He is a lean, spare figure, the light grey eyes slightly rheumy. Clothed in spotless white, he sits in the typically elegant Shanti Sadan—a building that was once occupied by the Income Tax Department—and prepares his defence.

It is a defence that the Sarabhais have repeatedly presented to the tax authorities, who all too often have rejected the arguments put forward by the lawyers hired by the trusts and investment companies. But the arguments are not always without merit, and will be presented in appeal to the courts.

For instance, Gautam has pointed out to the tax authorities that his family has never stopped short of a full disclosure of the facts, and that it is only the interpretation of the facts that differs. A tax official agreed with this and remarked sardonically that the Sarabhais' was a case of 'daylight robbery'. Nevertheless, it took a full nine months for the taxmen to sort out the taxability of the jewellery companies alone, and to establish that the entire chain of transactions was meant for personal gain. Tax officials admit that, despite all their efforts so far, they have been able to sort out the affairs of only 800 of the 2,000 trusts. The rest still remains to be investigated. The 800 trusts have so far been assessed for an additional tax liability of Rs 3 crore, plus interest.

Gautam has also argued that the Supreme Court judgement in the McDowell case has encouraged the tax authorities to look differently at cases that they have routinely dealt with for 15 or 20 years. He has pointed out that several of the decisions relating to the family trusts have meant paying gift tax voluntarily, that the jewellery companies do not enjoy any tax benefit, that the capital loss on the gold bond companies has not meant any tax saving, and so on.

The Sarabhai lawyers—among them Nani Palkhivala—have also argued before the tax authorities that trusts created for people not yet born is merely a way of providing for the welfare of succeeding generations that will be there and that such provisions too do not mean any extra tax benefit. The controversy over tax not being deducted at source is explained as a valid form of accounting practice, and the family has often acquiesced to the authorities' rulings in order to end fractious dispute and to avoid litigation cost.

Even the Sarabhai lawyers have admitted to the tax authorities that their clients have a mania for multiplying trusts and companies in a manner that defies logic. And in the ultimate analysis, it is perhaps this frame of mind that has led an illustrious family to concentrate, not on the growth of business and the seizing of opportunities, but on how to build fortifications against the taxman. The result today is breached fortifications and a battered empire.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Soft never came on so strong!

Reach for Skybags — and you're ready to go places. Exclusively stylish. Delightfully light. Soft... yet made of tough material. So you can really pack Skybags — they take the load, beautifully.

Don't settle for an imitation. Own an original...

Skybags

SOFT • STRONG • STYLISH

The designer collection– only from V.I.P.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Air-trek to the Himalayas

There's no experience quite like it.

It's yours to discover. For the first time ever—on Vayudoot's 18-seater Dornier, where each seat is a window-seat. It's almost like flying in your own aircraft!

Take your cameras and bring back memories of this rare experience—clicking the Himalayas from close range—from above!

Air-trek takes off every Sunday, from Delhi and Dehradun. Don't miss out on the Himalayan experience of a lifetime!

Ministry of Tourism
Government of India

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

For bookings, contact
Vayudoot offices:

Malhotra Building
F-Block
Janpath
New Delhi-110 001
Ph: 3312587, 3312779,
3315768

Commercial Department
Vayudoot Headquarters
Safdarjung Airport
New Delhi-110 003
Ph: 699272

Delhi Airport:
391351, 391470,
391361 Ext. 2268.

Dehradun:
Ph: 23400, 27776

वायुदूत
Vayudoot
Himalayan Air-trek

Scheduled Flight	: Every Sunday
Departure Delhi	: 7.20 am
Arrival Delhi	: 10.10 am
Tariff	: Rs. 850
Departure Dehradun	: 8.20 am
Arrival Dehradun	: 9.10 am
Tariff	: Rs. 350

20% off for children & students.
Charter facility also available.

Flight Route:
Dehradun, Rishikesh, Pauri, Rudraprayag, Karnaprayag, Kanol (close to Nanda Devi peak), Gopeshwar, Kedarnath, Dehradun.

Check-in time: 30 mts before departure.
Only hand baggage allowed on board.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CRICKET

Hard Lessons

IT was India's Imrangate. In cricketing measure, no less a scandal than the one engulfing the White House. A reputation in disarray, a leader lacking leadership, a team that acted in invincibility and a public in despair and disillusionment. Asia's Ashes. No contest so fierce, no stakes so high or public involvement greater. Yet, in the end, Kapil's devils were fallen angels, the cracks in a once-indestructible armour cruelly exposed to public glare and ridicule.

Indian cricket fans can forgive—and forget—most transgressions. But their Bible lists two Commandments. One; Thou Shalt Not Lose To Pakistan. The second and ultimate sin—Thou Shalt Not Lose To Pakistan in India. For 35 years, the second commandment has remained inviolate. And now, even that fig leaf has been ripped aside.

Perhaps for the first time, there was a visible sense of collective relief that a cricket series had come to an end, such was Pakistan's domination over the Indians. It was not that they had better resources, just that they employed them more judiciously. And, above all, were better motivated. In the end, that was the difference between winning and losing. As Imran observed: "The team that played here in 1979 was much better than the present one. It was the faith we had in the team and the effort everybody put in that made all the difference."

For Imran, it was a dream come true. For Kapil, a dream gone sour. Losing the Test series was wounding enough. It was the Pakwash in the one-day internationals (5-1) that was the final ignominy. Suddenly, the world champions of one-day cricket were pretenders to a non-existent throne. And, in the end, there was no pretender so great as Kapil Dev himself. If Imran led from the front, Kapil led from the rear. His personal contribution was meagre enough. His best bowling figures in the Test series were 3 for 46. His best in the one-day series: 2 for 32. In six Test

Imran cuts and (right) Akram strikes: motivated

It was India's Imrangate. A reputation in disarray, a leader lacking leadership, a team that acted in invincibility and a public in despair and disillusionment.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Photographs by PRADEEP MANDHANI

Pakistan's domination in the series was not because they had better resources, just that they employed them more judiciously. And, were better motivated.

(From left) Kapil misses, Srikkant hooks and Gavaskar glides: demoralised innings, his highest score was 66. And, in the crucial one-day series, his batting average was 19.25. But it was his captaincy—or lack of it—that was largely responsible for India's sad showing. In comparison to Imran, Kapil was clearly a poor second, limited in imagination and tending to crack under pressure.

And pressure there was in abundance. Ultimately, the series resembled nothing more than the relationship between the two countries: long periods of boring inactivity suddenly exploding into hostile life. Seldom has a series threatened to bestow Test matches with the kiss of death. For the first four excruciating Tests, the pitches were like headstones in cricket's graveyard. For the first time in an Indo-Pakistan series, there was the rarest of subcontinental cricketing sights—vacant areas in the stands. Adding to the agony was the fact that neither of the teams was willing to take the slightest risk. Remarked former Test star M.L. Jaisimha: "If cricket has to survive in India there has got to be some co-relation between the board and the authorities who stage Test matches and those who play." Added Imran: "On these wickets, even a six-day Test will find it difficult to produce a result."

The villain of the piece was a man none of the unfortunate spectators even saw—Sitaram—who, along with his fellow groundsmen, is responsible for the preparation and care of Test pitches. But equally, it was the Indian Cricket Board which must share the blame. As one disgusted fan quipped after the fourth successive draw in Ahmedabad: "It should now be known as the Indian Cricket Bored."

Even so, there were moments of distraction. The little man Sunil Gavaskar created the biggest storm when he flatly refused to play in the second Test at Calcutta citing "personal reasons". The real reason: the last time he had played there, he had been abused by spectators and his wife pelted with missiles. Sport-crazy Calcutta—and Bengali sentiments—were in uproar. Effigies were burnt, processions taken out, state ministers got into the act and the newspapers went to town. But the master remained unmoved, even though it was the first time in 12 years and 106 Tests in succession that he would not be representing India. In the bargain, he also sacrificed

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The hard lesson for India is lack of bowlers who can get a side out twice. But the future of Indian cricket hinges on whether Kapil should stay as captain.

Indian players watch a departing Pakistan batsman: outplayed setting another world record—for the most number of successive Test appearances. But, in typical Gavaskar fashion, his only comment was: "Let it not be said that Sunil Gavaskar does not care for his critics. Who else would have given them free ammunition just when they were running out of it?"

The next episode of the Gavaskar serial witnessed scenes of great jubilation in Calcutta when, in his next innings in the third Test at Jaipur, he went for a duck. But Gavaskar then proceeded to knock the wind out of everybody's sails by arriving at yet another landmark—the first player to reach five figures in Test cricket. The sight of the normally phlegmatic and unemotional Gavaskar punching the air in joy—and perhaps relief—when he scored his 10,000th run was, for cricket fans, an equally historic occasion. It is unlikely that Gavaskar's feat will ever be duplicated. There are only three other international cricketers in contemporary cricket who have crossed the 6,000-run mark: Alan Border (6,917), David Gower (6,553) and Vivian Richards (6,447), all of whom are at the fag end of their careers. But even if anybody does, as Gavaskar remarked: "Many people have climbed Mount Everest. But those who have been remembered are the ones who got to the summit first."

The indefatigable Gavaskar wasn't quite finished with his leading role in the proceedings. In Bangalore, on a minefield of a pitch, he once again stood alone among the ruins of Indian batting to score 96 in an innings that will probably rank among the best ever played, even though India lost the Test—and thereby the series. For a player in his 38th year to end a Test series with an average of just under 50 is added testimony, if any was required, to his class and consistency.

SADLY, with the sole exception of Dilip Vengsarkar, the same could hardly be said for the rest of his team-mates. Vengsarkar once again reinforced his reputation as a worthy successor to Gavaskar by heading the Indian batting averages in the Tests (67.33). Though consistently overshadowed by Gavaskar's achievements, Vengsarkar's performance in recent Tests has been phenomenal. In just 12 Tests (17 innings) he has scored an incredible 1,300 runs including six centuries. He is already the second-highest century maker for India and, after Gavaskar, the man who has accumulated the most Test runs—5,951.

But for the rest, India hardly lived up to its reputation of having the best batting line-up in the world. Srikkanth was his usual inconsistent self, serving up his favourite cocktail of odd and audacious shots. He started brilliantly, rattling up a century in the first Test at Madras, but failed to maintain the tempo, finishing with an average of 38.87 in the Tests. India's great Hyderabadi hope, Azharuddin, did manage to notch up two centuries but failed when the pressure was on. As Wasim Akram and Imran and later Tauseef Ahmed and Iqbal Qasim showed, Azhar is highly vulnerable to short-pitched deliveries and top-class spin. Shastri fared even poorer with the bat—his one century in the Tests took him seven hours—and apart from one spell of 4 for 69, did not impress with the ball either. Mohinder Amarnath is obviously over-conscious of retaining his place, thus rendering him a liability when the chips are down.

But the hard lesson for India is the lack of bowlers who can get a side out twice. The succession of seamers who were paraded on view—Roger Binny, Madan Lal, Raju Kulkarni, Bharat Arun, Chetan Sharma, Manoj Prabhakar—was a sad commentary on the paucity of an opening bowler to partner Kapil. The only bowler to emerge with some credit was Maninder Singh, but even he buckled under pressure and failed to maintain consistency in Pakistan's second innings at Bangalore after finishing with 7 for 27 in the first. Shivlal Yadav and Gopal Sharma are hardly in the match-winning mould, which does not bode well for the future of Indian cricket.

But the future of Indian cricket currently hinges on the key issue of whether Kapil should be retained as captain. Once again, a series has exposed his obvious limitations as a leader, his inexplicable bowling changes or his lack of them, his inability to motivate the team when the pressure was on, his poverty of strategy and judgement. He has now ended 36 Tests as captain with just four victories and it is doubtful if the patience and tolerance displayed by Indian cricket fans—or, for that matter, the selectors—can last much longer.

—DILIP BOBB

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Fashion forecast is now being broadcast.
Dinesh Suitings.
In comfortable high-quality wool and blends.
From pin-stripes to weaves,
from subtle checks to herringbones,
the focus is on the textures, shades
and the fall of the fabric.
So while Tejeshwar Singh reads the news
Dinesh designs make the headlines!

dinesh
Worsted Suitings

Woolmark

everest/86/SDM/519 R

Designs programmed for fashion.

Pure New Wool Suitings

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Digitized by Sarayu Foundation Trust and eGangotri

NORTH STAR®

It's a great feeling!

Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Amul Cheese. My son's first lesson in nutrition.

When I learnt that my son needed more and more protein, I included cheese in his time-table.

Because cheese is extremely rich in protein — the kind of protein capable of replacing even meat in one's diet.

And of course, didn't he love its taste!

To keep him smiling, I have even invented some cheese recipes. Recipes that go with him to school.

AMUL CHEESE ROLLS
(Makes about 20)

150 gm Amul Cheese — grated; ½ cup milk; 2 small onions — chopped fine; 1 capsicum — chopped fine; 2 green chillies — chopped fine; 2 cm ginger — chopped fine; 1 tsp salt; 400 gm fresh sliced bread — trimmed; oil for deep frying.

Mix cheese with milk. Add onions, green chillies, ginger and salt. Spread mixture on slices and roll each like a jam roll. Fry in oil till light brown. Or bake in a buttered oven-proof dish, brushed with butter for 10-15 minutes at (150°C, Gas 2) turning them over once to brown evenly.

CHILLI CHICKEN MINI BURGERS
(Makes about 15)

½ chicken — boiled, skinned, boned and meat finely chopped; 3 tbsp flour; 2 tbsp chilli sauce; 1 tbsp soya sauce; ½ tsp pepper powder; ½ tsp China salt (Ajinomoto); oil for frying; 20 Amul Cheese slices.

Mix together all burger ingredients, except oil, and shape into 10 burgers. Deep fry in hot oil till brown. To serve, place a piece of sliced cheese, and put a burger on this. Place another slice of cheese and thread the whole burger through with a toothpick and serve hot.

Write in for an Amul Cheese Book with 120 mouth-watering cheese recipes, to: P.O. Box 10124, Bombay along with P.O. of Rs. 15/- in favour of Gujarat Co-op. Milk Marketing Federation Ltd., with your complete address.

Amul cheese

Perks up meals with zest and taste.

Marketed by:
Gujarat Co-operative Milk Marketing Federation Limited, Anand 388 001, Gujarat.

OPERATION FLOOD

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

JOHNSON MATTHEY

The Shamji Comeback

THE Johnson Matthey Bankers (JMB) saga was one of the most inflammatory scandals to rock London's financial and banking world. The "JMB affair" was back in business news headlines last fortnight when Umed Chand Golecha—former business partner of Rajendra Sethia—and Rajendra Kumar Choraria, who holds directorships of several import-export firms, were charged with false accounting and fraud in relation to JMB.

Golecha and Choraria are just two more Asian names implicated in the spectacular collapse of JMB—a banking division of the international bullion traders. The affair dragged in the mire a glittering array of super-rich Asians: Rajendra Sethia, Mahmud Sipra, Abdul Shamji, the Imam brothers of Pakistan and the Pahoomal brothers.

At the hub of the scandal was JMB. The bank found itself asphyxiated with bad debts, totalling almost £248 million, prompting the Bank of England to step in and rescue it in a controversial take-over. At the heart of JMB's problems lay its over-rapid expansion in trade finance, mostly to UK-based Asian traders. Loosely-connected trading groups relied heavily on bills of lading and other trading paper as collateral. JMB did not have adequate scrutinising procedures to check the terms and continuing validity of enough of this collateral to have security against the millions it loaned.

The stunning collapse was given a cutting edge by a Labour Party MP Brian Sedgemore who mounted a ferocious campaign against the Asian tycoons caught in the JMB quagmire. Much of his damning comments were reserved for Mahmud Sipra, the Pakistani shipping magnate and Abdul Shamji, head of the far-flung Gomba group. Sipra—whose El Saeed group of shipping and film companies owed £70 million—was JMB's biggest debtor. Sipra left Britain for Karachi and has not returned.

Shamji, with approximately £21 million in debts was made out to be the third biggest debtor to JMB. His friendship with Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher and Conservative Party Chairman Norman Tebbit was given special attention by Sedgemore. Shamji had consistently denied allegations levelled against him and insisted that his Gomba group was fully capable of repaying all outstanding loans.

His problems began when JMB became unhappy with his efforts to settle its debt which had originally been calculated at £21 million. The receivers, Price Waterhouse, were called in by the bank to manage the debt-recovery process. Two attempts were made to settle the outstanding loans but failed when the two parties could not agree to the amounts.

Shamji then filed a writ to get rid of the receivers put in by the bank but the court rejected the appeal stating that Gomba broke an agreement, under which the bank had agreed to accept the reduced sum of £14.6 million rather than Gomba's full debt of £21 million. The six Gomba companies that were ordered to make repayments were: Gomba Holdings UK, Gomba UK group, the Duchess Theatre company, the Garrick Theatre company, Gomba Exmin and Routestone. A judgement for £5.1 million was given against Shamji personally and for £11.8 million and $852,000 against Arya holdings, the group's Jersey-based holding company. The idea behind the court orders was to give the stricken JMB a variety of sources from which they could recover the debt with interest.

Shamji: back from the brink

Gomba's UK empire, split into three parts, had, according to conservative estimates, an annual turnover of £50 million prior to the JMB crash. The group's three sections were: a 32 per cent stake in Belgrave Holdings (later pledged to JMB) which ran seven hotels, various commercial properties and had a part of its original engineering business. Second was the Rochester group of companies that included the Scottish truck manufacturer, Stonefield Vehicles. Finally there were his sophisticated safe deposit centres, handbag factory, the three London theatres, a nightclub and Shamji's stake in the famous Wembley stadium.

The affair acquired an international dimension when Shamji took the battle to the United States where, before a New York Federal Court, he claimed $80 million in compensatory and punitive damages from JMB and the Bank of England. He alleged that the bank unlawfully destroyed his businesses and had acted illegally as a bank in New York state because it had not obtained the required licence. Shamji is associated in the US with Strongsay Ltd, Baglap Ltd and Parklane Investments Inc.

Amongst the most closely scrutinised aspects of the JMB affair has been Tiny Rowland's Observer paper's dogged coverage of Shamji and the Gomba group's travails. It has provoked widespread comments that both, Rowland and Shamji with extensive interests in Africa are rivals there and Rowland was also in the running for the controlling stake in the Wembley Football Stadium. At the height of the JMB affair, Shamji filed libel suits against the Sunday paper.

The result of all this strident publicity in the media was general opprobrium for Asian businessmen in the country, coming in the wake of Rajendra Sethia's headline grabbing bankruptcy. The JMB affair earned Asian businessmen an undeserved reputation—of being shady wheeler-dealers rather than an industrious and highly inventive lot.

Amidst the adverse publicity, Shamji's tenacious comeback has largely gone unnoticed. After all the months of figuring in national headlines, the fact that Shamji has managed to claw back and pay his debts to the Bank of England, seems exceptional. The Gomba group has now repaid more than £17 million ahead of its debt schedule early this year.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Among the assets sold by Gomba UK to repay his debts include: Stonefield Vehicles (for an estimated £ 5.6 million); the Garrick Theatre (£ 300.00); the Duchess Theatre (£ 1.35 million; stake in Wembley Stadium (approximately £ 5 million). The rest came from the sale of his shares in Belgrave Holdings and its hotel interests, stake in the Coin and Medals group—Birmingham Mint—and various company shares. Shamji continues to hold several million pounds of assets such as the Mermaid theatre, the Skindles hotel at Maidenhead, the Felldene estate and numerous other hotels and properties.

How did Gomba manage to come unscathed through this often-ferocious three-year struggle? Most observers put it to the solidity of Gomba's base stemming from its world-wide operations. What might have been a calamity for many companies, in the end proved only a hiccough for Gomba in the UK.

—RAMESH CHANDRAN

ABDUL SHAMJI

"I was a political football"

ABDUL SHAMJI, 54, has acquired an enviable reputation for his remarkable resilience and commercial stamina. Shamji, born in Uganda, left school at 13 to mind the family store in the remote Ugandan village of Gomba. Soon afterwards, he obtained the license to import Japanese cars and trucks which he assembled locally. He has not looked back since. Deftly using his entrepreneurial skills to build a vast empire, the Gomba group became the largest in the country employing a 2,000-strong workforce and an annual turnover of 50 million Ugandan shillings. In 1972 this flourishing empire was halted in its tracks when President Idi Amin decided to expel Asians. Shamji endured a brief spell in prison before successfully bribing his way to freedom.

Adroitly using his extensive banking contacts in London he started to rebuild his second empire. In 15 years he rebuilt his Gomba group of industries—the name a reflection of his sentimental attachment to the obscure Ugandan village—into a more sprawling one than that he had left behind in Uganda: construction, real estate, commodity trading, vehicles and components, shipping, a crocodile farm in Malaysia to supplement his thriving leather business, and hotels in United Kingdom, North America, Malaysia and the Philippines. The Jersey-based company with its offices in London's gracious Park Lane is tightly run by Shamji and his two Texas University-educated sons, Ryaz and Alim. His unslaked zeal for acquisitions—each more daring than the previous—ensured that he was never far from news headlines in Britain.

In 1985, disaster hit him. The spectacular collapse of Johnson Matthey Bankers (JMB) caused the Bank of England to put the squeeze for immediate repayments of advances worth nearly £21 million. Shamji was forced to relinquish control of some of his large holdings to the receivers to repay the Bank of England.

Although he has squared his debts—the only one from amongst a galaxy of defaulting Asian millionaires, he says he is "shaken" by what he describes as the "hostility" of the press and the establishment. In an exclusive interview to London Correspondent RAMESH CHANDRAN, his first since the JMB scandal became public, the dapper and courtly Shamji talks about the past and the future. Excerpts:

> "Gomba did not go bust. It was Johnson Mathey Bankers that went bust...I simply became a convenient excuse for JMB's downfall."

► His assessment of the JMB scandal and his personal involvement:

Since I stood my ground and fought I was made the scapegoat in the JMB affair. I never ran. Let me remind you that Gomba did not go bust. It was Johnson Matthey Bankers who went bust. For our part, we had fully secured loans. I simply became a convenient excuse for JMB's downfall. Events since then have proved just how wrong our detractors were.

► On why Gomba was tardy in making its repayments to JMB:

There was never any question of my making any payments until JMB got into trouble. There was never any pressure from them on us to make any payments. The cover of our securities was so good. When they landed in trouble, they looked for a scapegoat.

► On the current status of Gomba's debts to JMB:

All monies currently due have been fully repaid including substantial costs. There is nothing current or prospectively due to Johnson Matthey. In fact the bank are holding on to certain securities at the moment to cover contingent liabilities.

► On his close friendship with Margaret Thatcher and Norman Tebbit:

I am a conservative. I contribute funds to the Conservative Party and I am not the only one who does so. I did meet them on many occasions as most substantial businessmen do. The photo of me and Mrs Margaret Thatcher at my office is like the one thousands of others have taken with the prime minister and display prominently.

► On his being singled out for attacks by Sedgemore:

He made numerous charges against me under the cover of parliamentary privilege. I was made into a political football between the Labour and the Conservative parties with the kick-off at Wembley.

► On his rivalry with Tiny Rowland, owner of the Observer:

I have no rivalry with Tiny Rowland. I think he was just upset at losing Wembley Stadium so soon after losing Harrods.

► On his speculated plans to sue Rowland, the Observer and Grenada Television:

You haven't heard the last of this yet. The lawyers are looking into it for an early decision.

► On his swift squaring of debts and his comeback:

It has been quite a battle. However, we at Gomba are stoically soldering on in the firm belief that the setbacks have only strengthened our resolve and apply ourselves to our tasks with greater determination. Immediately on discharge of the receivers, we have been able to negotiate and sign a contract to enable the Royal Shakespeare Company to present plays in our Mermaid theatre. This first deal augurs well for the future.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Superior [su:'piəriə] a. higher in rank or quality; better or greater in some respect; high quality. Superiority in the new Oberoi, Delhi shows itself in the smallest details. Whether it's unpacking and packing bags, a warm welcoming smile, efficient and accurate business service in the Executive Centre or an attentive but discreet waiter, we make sure that our service is impeccable — because you deserve the best the world has to offer.

The Oberoi

NEW DELHI

For reservations please contact your travel agent, the hotel direct
Telephone 363030, Telex : 63222 and 3829 OBDL IN or call Ahmedabad 464451
Bangalore 573444. Bombay 2024343. Calcutta 292323. Madras 478156.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ASLV PROGRAMME

Setback in the Sky

THE 31-hour countdown was smooth, the lift-off perfect. But, less than a minute after the sleek Augmented Satellite Launch Vehicle (ASLV-1) blasted off from the Sriharikota Range last week, and arched into the sky trailing squiggles of smoke, the 40 tonne rocket suddenly lost height and direction and plunged into the Bay of Bengal. The course taken by the first flight of the new generation of rockets was symbolic of the sudden dampener the failure represents for India's ambitious space programme.

The ASLV-1 launch, delayed by 15 months, was tom-tommed as a "quantum jump" for Indian space scientists—a giant leap into the use of an array of hi-tech, inter-active microprocessors, to form what is called, the closed loop guidance system meant to keep the rocket on course at the right speed, and to make in-corrections if it goes astray. The other major technology to be tried out by the Indian Space Research Organisation (ISRO) for the first time, was the strap-on systems—two boosters tied to the main vehicle to give the rocket a more powerful thrust at lift-off.

All that came to naught when the ASLV-1's mid-day blast-off from the Sriharikota Range in coastal Andhra Pradesh, ended in a watery grave. For the scientists, the failure was a bitter and traumatic development. Everything had gone with clockwork precision from the start of the final countdown, at 5 a.m. on March 23. All checks were completed and launch readiness conveyed to Mission Director M.S.R. Dev for the final okay, 14 minutes before lift-off. Finally, at 12.09 p.m., the two strap-on boosters were ignited and ASLV-1 soared majestically

RAGHU RAI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

when the
from the adhra Pra-
e. For the bitter and thing had from the 5 a.m. on pleted and o Mission
l okay, 14 at 12.09
ters were ajestically

into the sky, leaving behind a fluffy trail of smoke.

From the terrace of the two-storeyed mission control centre, Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi, ISRO Chairman Professor U.R. Rao, Andhra Pradesh Governor Kumudben Joshi and Chief Minister N.T. Rama Rao watched. Another 10,000 were watching the historic event from viewing galleries and housetops in the Sriharikota Range employees colony. As the rocket climbed steadily, they hugged one another and shouted in excitement. At a height of 12 km, the boosters separated and came down in two slender smoke trails.

But in the mission control room, scien-

The ASLV blasts off; and (right) the strap-on booster separates: watery grave

RAGHU RAI

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SONY

Space Sound System FX.

Unique wide design, with speakers to match our Sony — perfect picture.

If what you like is big, wide spectacular sound, why not bring the theatre home? Hear it all from four 2-way, 70-watt P.M.P.O. speakers crafted by Sony to match our finest picture ever. See it all on our flat, square, black screen. Plus 15-system worldwide compatibility, three direct audio-video ports. With looks like Sony's done it again.

SUPER TRINITRON

WIN★G

Champagne Gold

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

tists and engineers quickly realised that something had gone wrong. The first warning of the impending disaster came 48.5 seconds after lift-off, when the plotters and consoles in the Range Safety Room showed ASLV-1 going off course. Four seconds later, the burnt out strap-on boosters separated, and the rocket went astray.

In the blockhouse bunker, barely 100 metres away from the launch pad, the 44 scientists and engineers stared in disbelief at the console spewing data, gathered from signals sent by the 150 kg satellite SROSS-1 (Stretched Rohini Series Satellite-1), intended to be put in a 400 km circular orbit by ASLV-1. The console showed the rocket taking a sharp nose-dive. All of them, including five women, had spent sleepless nights during the last three months, assembling and linking the 55 sub-systems of the rocket to a specially prepared computer programme, for its final launch. The data showed that the rocket motor to be ignited after 48.5 seconds had not fired, and finally, 163 seconds after blast-off ASLV-1 dropped headlong into the Bay of Bengal. The cruel irony is that the motor which failed was a proven one, being the first stage of the earlier Satellite Launch Vehicle-3 (SLV-3) rockets. Said the Director of Sriharikota Range M.R. Kurup: "It appears that the failure of the motor to burn is the reason for ASLV-1 not going up, but it will be two weeks before we can conclude why the motor failed."

Nearly two hours after blast-off, Rao officially announced that ASLV-1 had failed. "It is a setback. But ISRO will be at the drawing-boards to get the rocketry programme operational as quickly as possible. We are committed to self-reliance in launch vehicle technology," said Rao. Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi tried his best to reassure the disappointed scientists. Congratulating them for "the good work ISRO has done", he told them not to lose heart. "It is only a setback in time. It is only when you stumble that you can get up and walk better," he said.

But his words sounded hollow in the face of the failure and its implications. For a space programme begun way back in November 1963, when a 7 kg pencil-shaped rocket was launched from a decrepit church building at Thumba near Trivandrum, last week's performance was a major setback. It was the first launch in four years, and the second of five launchings to fail in the last nine years. The first SLV-3 rocket came hurtling down five minutes and 15 seconds after lift-off, on August 10, 1979. The next three SLV-3 launches were successful and ISRO changed gear to put the first ASLV in flight, skipping the schedule for two more SLV-3 launches. ISRO also decided on a brain transplant, and put in the closed loop guidance system in ASLV-1, instead of using the open loop guidance system, as was originally planned. But the gamble to save time in order to take rocketry to the operational phase, did not pay off.

The major setback caused by the failure of the ASLV-1 mission is in testing the flying qualities of the new class of rockets. Though in its external features ASLV-1 is an upgradation of the earlier SLV-3 design, the 'brain' of the rocket is an improved one. The closed loop guidance system is the new kind of brain to control the rocket's speed, its direction and make corrections in flight, if it deviates from the pre-planned path, and ultimately lob the 150-kg SROSS-1 satellite into the 400-km circular orbit. Mission Director Dev said at the end of the scientists' "quick look review", that "the setback is the lost opportunity in getting first hand information from the satellite about how the ASLV-1 behaved and the efficacy and accuracy of the closed loop guidance system."

Satellite tracking specialists also missed the chance to study how the distance of a satellite in orbit can be measured by firing a laser beam at on-board reflectors. ISRO is to decide by May whether the experiment can be repeated on the ASLV-2 mission already committed to carrying a new kind of earth scanner. The actual cash loss by the

Diagram by B.K. SHARMA

The ASLV-1 with the booster rockets

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

failure of the ASLV-1 mission is about Rs 6 crore. Says Kurup: "Failures are part of the game but the setback is only one of time. This can be absorbed before we begin flying the next generation of Polar Satellite Launch Vehicle rockets."

With the stand-by sub-systems, including the main rocket vehicle, built by Hindustan Aeronautics Ltd and motors on the shelf, the engineers at Sarabhai Centre can get the second one ready in less than a year, after making changes to be suggested by the ASLV-1 failure analysis committee by April 15.

Space programmes the world over face failures. Rocket technology is tricky and much of the know how is not shared among countries. Only six nations—US, USSR, France, China, Japan and India—have developed launching facilities. All the programmes have had their share of failures. Strangely, China, a latecomer to the field, has the most enviable record of 18 launch successes and only three failures.

In that context, ASLV-1 cannot really compare with rockets like China's Long March, the European Space Agency's Ariane, US's Delta and USSR's Proton. They all stand more than 33 metres tall, weigh more than 220 tonnes at lift-off, and can send a satellite more than 1,500 kg into orbit around the earth. Even the next generation of Indian rockets—the Polar Satellite Launch Vechicle—will, for its 44 metres height and 260 tonnes weight, be able to put only a 1,000 kg satellite into orbit. Clearly, the height-weight factor is a crucial one, and if heavier loads are to be ferried into space, ISRO will have to work on alternative designs, admit engineers of the Vikram Sarabhai Space Centre, Trivandrum, where the designs are drawn. It involves much more than the money now spent on the space programme. The ASLV project is likely to cost Rs 23 crore and the Polar Satellite Launch Vehicle is to cost more than Rs 350 crore.

For India, the stakes in the space programme are huge. In addition to acquiring international prestige, the development of rocketry can perhaps bring the country a thick wad of much needed foreign exchange through commercial launchings by the turn of the century. Extra launches can also spread the heavy cost of developing each rocket. But for the present, the concern is with mastering the hi-tech in avionics for guiding and controlling spacecraft, and collaborating with Indian industry to supply space grade equipment. Admits S.C. Gupta, director of the Sarabhai Centre: "All this could not be put to test by the first ASLV, but we hope to be back with the second flight in a year to try out the new technologies."

An equally important reason for building rockets is to launch India's own satellites for telecommunications, weather forecasting, remote sensing and radio and TV networking. The Satellite Instructional Television Experiment covering village clusters in six states, with programmes for farmers and schoolgoers in 1974-75, using channel-time bought on the France-German Symphonie satellite, showed the exploits of space technology to Indian planners for the first time. Meanwhile, the ISRO Satellite Centre made the Aryabhata and later, Bhaskar I and II satellites carry cameras to take pictures of the country to map its surface and sub-surface resources. Eventually ISRO was able to convince the Government to contract Ford Aerospace to build the multi-purpose Indian National Satellite System (INSAT-1 A). Though much of the ground work had not been done by the time INSAT-1A was orbiting the earth, the failure of the satellite and the orbiting of INSAT-1B gave user agencies enough time to build the earth stations and other facilities, to use the satellite efficiently. Today, the satellite's use for such practical applications goes on unnoticed.

"It is a setback. But we will get the programme operational as soon as possible."

U.R. RAO
chairman, ISRO

The use of satellite photographs for planning and improving agriculture, developing wastelands, tapping groundwater sources and mapping forest and mineral wealth has not grown, though pictures taken by the American Landsat series of satellites and the French SPOT satellite are available with the ISRO's National Remote Sensing Agency. Says Rao: "This is a vital area where, if we have our own satellite, it is possible to map whatever resources we want to know about, and do not have to depend on others for the latest photographs." The Indian Remote Sensing satellite (IRS), to be launched by a Russian rocket in September-October this year, has comparable capabilities.

ISRO has an elaborate IRS utilisation programme to interpret the wealth of data beamed back by the satellite, for better planning in agriculture and mining of metals. But Rao says all states have not set up remote sensing data utilisation centres, as suggested more than four years ago. Laments Rao: "The realisation about satellite applications bringing a revolution in our way of life simply does not exist." But he is hopeful that the IRS utilisation programme will take the benefits of space technology down to the individual farmer.

The fall-out of the space programme is not as impressive as in the US, where space research led to the micro-chip and fibre optics revolutions. But one encouraging example of import substitution and indigenisation of technology is the making of a propellant fuel with unsymmetrical dimethyl hydrazine, by the state owned Indian Drugs and Pharmaceuticals Limited—for the Polar Satellite Launch Vehicle programme—using ISRO's own process of production. The chemical used to make the fuel was found to be useful in agriculture. But for more striking spin-offs, Indian space technology itself has to evolve. After last week's failure, that process is certain to be delayed even further.

—AMARNATH K. MENON in Sriharikota

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Presenting the bathroom mystique

Open the door to an experience which will transport you into a world of peace and tranquility. A place for silent contemplation, a place for creativity, a place to experience the third dimension.

An atmosphere created for you to make you forget yourself, right there in your own home, by none other than — C. Bhogilal.

Do drop in at our showroom. We have a lot more to offer.

C.BHOGILAL & CO.

For designer hand painted and screen printed tiles & bathroom fittings.

Behind Reserve Bank, 310 Perin Nariman Street,
Bombay-400 001.
Tel: 2860690/2862718/2863766/2862724
Grams: FASHION

Special Effects/CB/31/87

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Transatlantic business travellers...

I like it. Flying the Atlantic in TWA's Ambassador Class.

It makes flying on business a real pleasure.

Just look at the business of getting on the plane. TWA make it as effortless as possible. Boarding cards and seat reservations settled before you even leave the office! Think of the time and trouble that saves.

Of course I enjoy it. Who couldn't. In that Ambassador Class cabin comfort is the thing. Ah, peace! It's wonderful.

There you are, sitting comfortably in the widest business class seat across the Atlantic. The TWA Business Lounger. Plenty of space around you. Plenty of space to stow carry-on-luggage. Room to stretch and wiggle your toes.

Then the attention you get. This lovely girl offers you a selection of drinks, when you want them.

Brings you an interesting menu, with excellent cuisine to back it up. It's real, TWA American, friendly service.

Well, I say to myself, I'm on business. I deserve this sort of quiet comfort. All business travellers do.

Great thing is TWA flies to over 100 cities in the US. That makes it easy to get where you want to go. And to enjoy the Ambassador Class comfort that makes business travel such a pleasure.

For further details contact your favourite Travel Agent or call TWA (Bombay) at 223081.

...deserve the quiet comfort of TWA's Ambassador Class.

Leading the way to the USA.

TWA

TWA-417/86 R

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The All-rounder Collection

Cool, classy, comfortable. Duke.
The sportiest, trendiest T-shirts, sweat shirts and baggy shirts for any occasion —
parties, sports, movies or picnics.

Available at all leading stores.
From Rs. 50 onwards.

duke ®

Casual, Sports and Party wea

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

NEROLAC

BEAUTY

NEROLAC

PROTECTION

Exquisite colours to drape your home in beauty. With the added assurance of Nerolac protection. To keep your walls safe from the corroding effects of weather and time.

NEROLAC
ACRYLIC EMULSION
Always a shade better

everest/86/GNP/451

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BAJAJ BID

THE Bajaj Auto bid for Ashok Leyland may yet come off, though competition could materialise in the shape of non-resident groups like the Hindujas. The Bajaj offer (which is subject to Government approval) was initially made through a bank for acquiring Ashok Leyland's 40 per cent overseas shareholding (held by a British government-owned company). The disinvestment decision is yet to be made in London, but is seen as inevitable and could come through in the next couple of years. Meanwhile, individual members of the Leyland management are believed to have contacted groups like the Hindujas in an effort to sponsor rival bids. But if Bajaj does succeed in its first-ever acquisition bid, Rahul Bajaj will be represented from the top to the bottom end of the automotive market.

AMBITIOUS AIMS

HINDUSTAN Brown Boveri (HBB) has ambitious diversification plans on its drawing-boards. The Rs 100-crore-turnover engineering outfit is readying to leap into computer peripherals, energy management systems, facsimiles and even teleprinters. A sortie into railway communications, track control and signalling equipment has fructified into a collaboration with Switzerland's Integra. While these items are to be produced at Halol near Baroda, HBB has plans to turn out switchgears at Rae Bareilly, and a joint venture with the Gujarat Industrial Investment Corporation is expected to result in the production of industrial steam turbines. The total investment of around Rs 20 crore in these projects will push up HBB sales to Rs 150 crore in three years' time.

NEW RANGE

THE beleaguered Gramophone Company of India which had to be bailed out by R.P.Goenka some time ago, is planning to go in for a whole host of products to enable it to come out of the red. Capacity utilisation in its main line of business—records—has dropped to a mere 16 per cent and piracy has hit pre-recorded cassette sales hard. Its experiments with cassette decks and moulded furniture have proved none too fruitful either. The company is now planning to go in for gas leak detectors and kitchen equipment like microwave ovens. It is also looking for a Japanese tie-up to make digital audio tapes and compact discs using laser technology. The moulded furniture venture is being revived with the East European market as the segment. Other ventures involving technology-oriented fields are also on the drawing-boards.

SOAPY LURE

UNDAUNTED by the failure of half a dozen soaps in recent times, several companies are rushing into the consumer goods market with their offerings. J.B. Advani and Company, which has introduced the internationally-known English Leather line of consumer products, is all set to launch its soap, after-shave and cologne in the Indian market. The hair-care and skin-care products will hit the shelves in the next month. For good measure, Boots has set up a consumer products division and Martin Burn plans to go in for chocolates, candy and toiletries. Meanwhile, Colfax Laboratories, which produces Old Spice items in India, is planning to refurbish its packaging.

BLOOMING BIRLAS

THE large industrial houses have been doing well for themselves, recording handsome growth rates in assets, turnover and profits. The latest count done by the Department of Company Affairs shows that the Birlas are now well ahead of the Tatas in terms of both assets and turnover—but that the Tatas have performed decidedly better on profitability. In fact, Tata profits more than doubled in 1985, moving up from Rs 113.35 crore to Rs 251.83 crore, while Birla profits increased by less than 30 per cent, from Rs 120.96 crore to Rs 154 crore. The other groups remain far behind in the race. The Mafatlal, Modi and Singhania groups have barely managed to cross the Rs 1,000 mark in group turnover. Similarly, three groups (Reliance, Thapar and Singhania) have scraped through into the four-figure range in assets.

Chart by B.K. SHARMA

EXPANSION SPREE

NIRMA, the washing powder company that has jingled its way to the top of the charts—with sales last year of over Rs 180 crore—is now headed for greener pastures. It plans to introduce a toilet soap (also with the Nirma brand name), which will be produced at a new plant coming up in Mehsana district in Gujarat. In another project, Nirma plans to manufacture 10,000 tonnes of alpha olefin sulphonate (a raw material for soaps and detergents). The factory for this too will be located in Mehsana. Besides Nirma, two other companies—Godrej and Dharmsi Morarji Chemical Company—have also been licensed to make this raw material, but Nirma hopes to put its product on the market first. Other projects in the pipeline for the future include a toothpaste, and the production, for captive consumption, of sulphuric acid and soda ash. Nirma might also make a pitch for linear alkyl benzene.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

PRASHANT PANJIAR

"The Assamese agitators are out to kill me."
S.C.N. JATAR
chairman and managing director, Oil India Limited

OIL INDIA

Absentee Chairman

THE writing is quite literally on the wall in Duliajan, the headquarters of Oil India Limited (OIL) near Dibrugarh in Assam. The graffiti all over the small town makes the same demand: remove S.C.N. Jatar, chairman and managing director of OIL. The anti-Jatar movement, spearheaded by the All Assam Students' Union (AASU), has been gaining momentum over the last four months. And it has now reached its crescendo with the stalemated aliens issue adding fuel to the OIL fire.

As far back as September 1985, AASU had submitted a memorandum to Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi listing various charges of corruption and favouritism against the OIL chief but it went unacknowledged. The agitation and the repeated reminders too were ignored. It was only after AASU called a five-day oil blockade last month that the Centre sat up and took notice. Making amends, it hastily started talks with AASU and the ruling Asom Gana Parishad's (AGP) representatives in Guwahati and assured them that the charges against Jatar would be looked into. Momentarily pacified, AASU called off its oil blockade but a bandh was organised in Duliajan on March 3 and yet another on March 23.

However, the fact that the Government had so far chosen to ignore an agitation against the head of a public sector enterprise as important as OIL is shocking: it has an annual turnover of over Rs 400 crore and in 1985-86, its gross profit stood at Rs 118.34 crore and net profit at Rs 68.23 crore. As a result of the Government's indifference, the agitation has grown to such an extent—it has already caused a loss of Rs 12 crore—that it has become impossible for Jatar to visit Duliajan. The OIL chief has not visited his headquarters since October last year and AASU has threatened to call a total bandh if he ever does. So the chief tries to do the impossible by trying to run the show from New Delhi. Apart from demoralising the employees because the organisation in Duliajan has turned virtually headless, it means that officials have to keep flying to New Delhi to arrive at decisions that should actually have been taken at the site.

Employee morale is at its lowest in Duliajan with mounting hysteria against "outsiders". Three non-Assamese officials were assaulted this month; in October last year, 2,000 youths gheraoed Mohammad Salim, chief of OIL's seismic camp near Duliajan, and demanded jobs at the site; in January this year, the house of R.K. Saxena, a company executive, was stormed; candidates for jobs from other states were waylaid and beaten up, forcing the management to hold interviews elsewhere.

Jatar says that the atmosphere in the once tension-free complex has been vitiated. So much so, that when a non-Assamese officer is assaulted, it is only his non-Assamese colleagues who help him. But Nakul Barooah, a former OIL executive who resigned his job to join the AGP and lead the agitation against Jatar, makes light of the violence: "The boys get worked up sometimes. We are trying to ensure that such assaults do not take place."

The entire agitation hinges on the aliens issue. The primary charge against Jatar is that being an outsider, he is anti-Assamese and ensures that only non-Assamese get jobs. Says Prabin Dihingia, general secretary of AASU's Duliajan unit: "The Assamese may not qualify for senior jobs but they can at least be recruited at lower levels. But most of the jobs go to outsiders." Jatar, however, claims that the recruitment of Assamese has in fact risen from 68 per cent to 82 per cent of the total since he took over. As proof, he points out that two of the additional directors and four of the seven general managers are Assamese—the first time in OIL's 27-year history that they have risen to such senior positions.

But both the AASU and AGP refuse to buy that. They have never taken kindly to Jatar right from the time when he was pulled out of the army and deputed to OIL by Indira Gandhi in February 1981, soon after the famous oil blockade during the anti-alien stir. His brief was to ensure that the agitation did not disrupt oil flow. In February 1983, when AASU called a 21-day non-cooperation programme to protest against the holding of the assembly elections, Jatar deployed military engineers to keep the oil flowing. The 180 Assamese company executives had handed in identical resignation letters, complaining that Jatar was anti-Assamese. In fact, later even Chief Minister Prafulla Kumar Mahanta had publicly remarked that a local person should replace Jatar as only an Assamese could safeguard the state's interests. To add

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The Winner!

All refrigerators are not the same. Only LEONARD is backed by Blue Star. No. 1 in refrigeration and air-conditioning.

What does the Blue Star name guarantee you?

1. Lifetime Reliability. That's the Blue Star promise. Leonard has the lowest failure rate among Indian refrigerators.

2. Unmatched Blue Star service, just a phone call away, anywhere in India. Even though you may never need it.

3. Absolute assurance in the fact that Blue Star – for over 40 years, leaders in refrigeration and air-conditioning – backs the Leonard in your home.

Look for the Blue Star seal on every Leonard fridge and freezer.

The only guarantee you'll ever need.

FSA/BS/L/2/84

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Introducing

EXTRA SUPER ECONOMY and SAFETY

- Extra Super Motor Oil (20W-40) lubricates the car engine for twice the distance compared to conventional motor oils. Available in 5, 2.5 lt and 500 ml.
- Super Duty Brake Fluid (DOT 3) gives added safety under severe driving conditions. Available in 500 ml and 250 ml.

Super Duty Brake fluid

Stay ahead with new generation products from HP

Marketed by Hindustan Petroleum Corporation Limited
(A Government of India Enterprise)

Digitized by Sarayu Trust

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"Take this invitation to that voluptuous woman who plays Jane
in that movie.
I'm sure,
she'd love to meet the real Me!"

We'll deliver. Wherever on earth. SKYPAK The worldwide couriers.
Skypak House, Off M. Vasanji Road, Marol Naka, Andheri (E), Bombay 400 059.

Avenues SC 325 87

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

RAMESH MENON

Anti-Jatar graffiti in Duliajan: writing on the wall insult to AASU's injury, Jatar, who was due to retire last year, was given a three-year extension. Says Dinesh Deka, president of AASU's Duliajan unit: "Giving him an extension without even looking into our charges is plain arrogance."

AASU has made a long list of charges against Jatar, many unsubstantiated and some factually incorrect. Barooah says the purpose of the memorandum was merely to draw the Government's attention to happenings in OIL: "We do not have access to documents and files. If an inquiry is held, it will easily spot the irregularities. We thought the memorandum would serve the purpose but instead he gave Jatar an extension."

Jatar suspects that Barooah has a personal axe to grind because he removed him from the tender committee which approves contracts. He says he found Barooah's brother sending in quotations in response to the company's enquiries. In a spirited 77-page reply to the charges against him, Jatar says that the agitation is motivated by sectarian interests. Some of the charges accompanied by Jatar's replies:

► AASU says that in April 1983, 244 unskilled workmen in the age group 40 to 50 years were recruited although young and able local candidates were available. The defence is that the workmen had been engaged as casual contract labour for many years in OIL and were regularised because the Government wanted to abolish contract labour.

► Jatar did not disclose for well over a year that his son, Ravi, had taken a job in Ingersoll Rand. Under the rules, he was required to do so since OIL has business dealings with that company. The allegation also runs that Jatar granted huge contracts to Ingersoll Rand so that his son could collect fat commissions. But Jatar says he informed OIL about his son's job on November 25, 1985, five days after Ravi joined that company. R.P. Bhairali, director, operations, says that the charge about contracts was baseless as OIL had had dealings with Ingersoll Rand long before Jatar came.

► The company awarded a contract to Adroit, a Bombay-based ad agency, to make an audio-visual. Jatar's daughter, Nita, happened to be an Adroit executive. Jatar says Adroit was found to be the best agency among the contenders.

► Jatar's nephew, Major S.S. Thakar, was appointed as a superintending engineer in OIL, in preference to an Assamese candidate. Jatar says the appointment was okayed by the board of directors.

► In November 1984, many senior officials including Bhairali and Hazarika, went to Pune ostensibly on an official trip but actually to attend the wedding of Jatar's daughter. Says Bhairali: "What's wrong? All over the world, organisations make such adjustments."

► The company has hired two helicopters to inspect the pipeline from Duliajan to Barauni in Bihar. But Jatar uses them to fly from Dibrugarh to Duliajan, 75 km away, which is a waste of money. Jatar says he uses the helicopter as there is danger to his life.

► In May 1984, OIL decided to buy eight bottomhole heaters from Raychem for Rs 1.03 crore. Since the idea was to find out if these could reduce wax in the oil wells, three or four heaters would have sufficed. Eventually, only one of the heaters worked, so the user department advised the financial director not to release the payment. But OIL's Calcutta office not only paid the supplier but also released the security deposit against the performance guarantee. Jatar says eight heaters were bought because they wanted to test them under varied conditions.

As for the number of irregularities in recruitment and purchase pointed out by AASU, Jatar says that the decisions were not taken by him but by various officials and, in any case, were okayed by the board of directors. Jatar is also charged with destroying some wells by overdrawing on them. While an OIL committee conceded that there had been overdrawing, it did not think the damage was irreversible. The Institute of Reservoir Studies, Ahmedabad, has now been asked to probe.

Jatar ascribes all these accusations to the AASU's bias against outsiders and wants a judicial inquiry into them as also into charges against AASU and AGP leaders, who he says are making money by influencing contracts. In his living room in Delhi, Jatar displays a trophy few would be proud of: a bow and two arrows recovered from some sharpshooters who attacked him four years ago in Duliajan. "They are out to kill me," says Jatar, remembering how agitators lynched to death R. Mitra, technical manager of OIL in January 1980. The Government does not seem to be in a hurry to find out the extent of truth in AASU's charges. Meanwhile, Duliajan continues to simmer.

—RAMESH MENON

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

DEMPO STEAMSHIP

Sinking Ship

FOR years it has been steadily sinking. Dempo Steamships Ltd, once a blue chip company whose Rs 100-share was quoted at seven times the par value, is today up for grabs. But there are no takers.

The immediate cause was small—a winding-up petition, filed in the Bombay High Court, by the Goa-based Syndicate Marine Enterprises. Dempo had been unable to pay the company a comparatively trivial sum of Rs 1.42 lakh. The court has appointed an official liquidator, who is now engaged in disposing of the company's assets. Like Mogul Line before it, Dempo is destined to fade into oblivion.

The Dempo saga is a reflection on the parlous state of the shipping industry today. No less than five companies have gone, hat-in-hand, to the newly-formed government-owned Shipping Credit and Investment Company (SCIC), which is busy working out rescue packages. The writing on the wall is clear—unless urgent measures are taken in the next couple of months, many more will go the Dempo way.

"We had just no alternative," says Dempo Vice-Chairman Surendra V. Dempo. "Our sister concerns have pumped in more than Rs 5 crore to keep us afloat for so long. But after five years of continuous losses, and more than Rs 40 crore in loans, all of which the company is in no position to repay, we do not see any future at all."

At present, three of the company's four ships are lying off the coast of Gujarat. They are long overdue for repairs which cannot be carried out because of the empty coffers. The fourth ship is in Italy. And, says Dempo: "It will take Rs 36 lakh just to get it back here."

What has really crippled the industry is the sharp decline in freight rates. Bulk carriers were earning $15,000 (Rs 198,600) a day, in the '70s. Now the rate has dropped to a mere $3,500 (Rs 56,340). With the break-even point being twice that figure, the sea of red ink in which the industry finds itself is understandable.

Dempo had problems peculiar to itself. While other companies kept their heads above water by going in for offshore vessels and into other relatively profitable areas, Dempo stuck to bulk carriers. Besides, it went in for the purchase of two ships from Mitsui of Japan, in 1980. The deal had been approved by the Government, and Dempo was confident that the Shipping Development Fund Committee (SDFC) would advance it the necessary foreign exchange. But it did not do so.

Chart by B.K. SHARMA

MAHINDRA PARIKH

S.V. Dempo: in deep trouble

"The SDFC rate was 4.5 per cent. Instead, we had to go in for a Euroloan at 22 per cent interest. The interest charges alone were Rs 10 crore. The additional burden on us was a whopping Rs 18 crore," explains Dempo. That apart, according to government regulations, Dempo had to simultaneously buy two ships of similar capacity from Hindustan Shipyard. While a payment of some Rs 70 lakh was made, delays in construction and, of course, the financial crunch, meant that the company was in no position to take delivery. The two ships were eventually handed over to Mogul Line, but the money has not been returned. For a company already starved of working capital, this was perhaps the unkindest cut.

Dempo feels that a rescue is still possible, but it is now for the Government to take the initiative. "Given the amount of loans we have from SDFC and other agencies, the Government is the biggest partner in this venture. If we can put in Rs 5 crore, they too can do their bit," he says.

But as far as the shipping industry goes, the Government evidently has a lot on its plate already. All moves to ensure cargo support for Indian bottoms have come to naught in the face of concerted opposition from shippers. The SDFC, which has pumped in more than Rs 600 crore into the industry, has been wound up. Its replacement—the SCIC—was formed only on December 8 last year, and has still not had the time to come to grips with the problem. It has other candidates who need urgent attention. On the dole line are Scindia (with accumulated losses of Rs 64 crore), Ratnakar (Rs 32 crore), India Steamship (Rs 46 crore), Chowgule (Rs 16.7 crore), and Indo-Oceanic (Rs 8 crore).

Among the proposals which have cropped up are a spate of mergers. "It is inevitable that the number of shipping companies will reduce soon," says an industry analyst. But that route too will run into heavy weather. For, the few successful companies are unwilling to saddle themselves with perpetual millstones.

"We are not averse to a merger," says Great Eastern Shipping Chairman Vasant J. Sheth. "There have been informal discussions. But there are lots of ifs and buts. Nothing concrete has resulted so far." Great Eastern is one of the few companies which has fared well. It is also keeping itself covered by going into more

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Approved by EIL

Production Shoots up to 100 tons/day

- Orders worth Rs. 50 Million from IPCL, ONGC & others executed
- Orders worth over Rs. 40 Million under production.

Thick Walled M.S. & S.S. Pipes & Tubulars, in lengths upto 16 Mtrs, 90mm thick

For the 1st time in India

40% Cheaper than ERW or Fabricated Pipes.

SECO SAW PIPES LTD the 1st Company to manufacture submerged arc welded thick walled steel pipes is already producing 100 tons of pipes/day. It will meet the demand of...

Oil & Gas Industries, Petrochemical Complexes, Shipyards, Sugar Industries, Hydraulic Projects, and Process Equipment Fabricators

SECO SAW

PIPES

SURINDRA ENGINEERING CO. PVT. LTD.

Surindra House, Safaid Pool, P.O. Box No. 8939, M.V. Road, Bombay-400 072. Phones: 512 8515 / 512 8579 / 512 8518.
Telegram: HAMMERMAN. Telex: 11-72337 BAHRAIN, P.B. No. 20207 Manama KUWAIT. P.B. No. 24434 Safat

Professional Motivators

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

India at its best. India at its most exciting. India alive. India we love. India forever.

The non political, non commercial magazine that cares about India's environment, that cares about India's traditions, about India's folklore, India's festivals, India's music, India's wildlife, India's people, India's mind, India forever.

The new look India magazine is now better printed, better edited, better designed. The new look India magazine is a necessity every month.

Preserve every issue to educate the minds of your children, their children, their children's children.

Subscribe today.
Gift India to family abroad.
Gift India for business abroad.
Gift India to your children.
Gift India to someone you love.
Subscribe today to show you care.

Subscribe today. The publishers give you a money back guarantee, in full, if you decide to cancel your subscription within 3 months.

Save 20% on news stand prices.

The India magazine is a part of the Business India group of publications.

the India magazine of her people and culture

India One year (12 issues) Rs. 96 Two years (24 issues) Rs. 192
Overseas (One year only) Airmail to Pakistan, Bangla Desh, Sri Lanka, Afghanistan & Burma Rs. 275 or US $23
Middle East, Asia, Japan, Europe, Africa & Australia Rs. 450 or US $38 North & South America Rs. 500 or US $42
Surface mail for all countries Rs. 250 or US $20

SUBSCRIPTION

Yes, I would like to subscribe to the India magazine for one year ☐ two years ☐

The magazine should be sent to me at the following address:

Name: _____

Address: _____

My cheque ☐ bank draft ☐ M.O. ☐ P.O. ☐ for Rs. _____ drawn in favour of the India magazine is enclosed.
+ Rs. 5 for cheques not drawn on a Bombay bank.

GIFT SUBSCRIPTION

Please gift the India magazine for one year ☐ two years ☐ to:

Name: _____

Address: _____

The sender's name for the gift is:

Name: _____

Address: _____

the India magazine, Wadia Building, 17/19 Dalal Street, Fort, Bombay 400 001.

NDD

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

profitable areas such as real estate and hotels.

The other possibility is that the losing ventures will be absorbed by the state-owned Shipping Corporation of India (SCI). A precedent has already been set by Mogul Line, and SCI has anyway been asked by the official liquidator and the SFFC, to take care of the manning and maintenance of the four Dempo ships. "We have not yet been asked to take over the company," says SCI Chairman L.M.S. Rajwar. "Nor has there been any such suggestion in the case of the others." But Rajwar equally feels, that if the recession carries on, there will be very few survivors left: "Indian shipping might soon mean SCI only."

The demise of Dempo Steamship is yet another pointer to that prediction coming true. "When we went to meet the finance minister some time back, to tell him about the industry's problems, he told us that we should have regular discussions," says Dempo. "We also told him at that time that it remains to be seen how many will survive till the next round. Well, there will be at least one person less." For the 22-year-old company, which once ranked among the top 100 industrial giants in the country, the obituary has already been written.

—PARTHASARATHI SWAMI

ORKAY

New Medicine

WHEN a textile tycoon decides to turn medicine man, the corporate world may well be forgiven for raising an enquiring eyebrow. But Orkay Chairman Kapal Mehra seems comfortable enough wearing his new cap. "There are no growth avenues barred," he says. Orkay has moved back into the limelight after its tie-up with Cetus Corporation of California to initially market and finally manufacture an anti-cancer drug, Interleukin-2 (IL-2). The deal has been signed and government clearance is awaited.

Red tape apart, there is still some way to go. Though IL-2 has worked wonders in the laboratory and among terminally ill patients in the US, clinical trials are yet to begin. These trials are scheduled to be held in three Indian hospitals once the Government okay is received. The results are to be coordinated with Cetus' findings elsewhere.

But this so-called miracle drug is not the only string to Orkay's bow. "We are negotiating with four or five US companies for other life-saving drugs presently not available. IL-2 should increase our turnover by Rs 200 crore. If everything works out, the sky is the limit," says Mehra.

The message is clear: a company that has grown rapidly in the field of polyester yarn and cloth, and which saw a sharp drop in profitability last year, is now looking for fresh and hopefully greener pastures. Thus, Orkay is setting up a research laboratory which Mehra says will have 200 doctors. "This is a commercial proposition," he clarifies. "We will have the best equipment and brains. We will be selling man-hours to foreign companies for the research they want us to conduct. It is a brain drain in reverse. A genetic laboratory abroad has already been identified and we propose to buy it and shift it lock, stock and barrel."

JAGANNATH DUBASHI

Mehra: exploring new avenues

How well and how soon these plans will materialise is not known, and government clearances could always prove to be unexpected hurdles. But Mehra is going full tilt down the diversification route, and talks of entering the field of bio-technology as well as buying a local pharmaceutical concern to obtain the marketing skills and the know-how. The company is also making a sortie into the construction field, as also a mini-cement plant.

As against these ambitious new plans, older schemes have made slow progress. The leasing venture planned some time ago is still to get off the ground, and the proposal to amalgamate the 20 or so companies in the group's stable has not yet fructified. The amalgamation move has been under wraps for a long time, mainly because the legal advantages of a merger or a takeover are yet to be worked out.

Also, the diversification plans are going to cost a pretty penny. Adding up the bits and pieces, it will cost more than Rs 200 crore in terms of investment including working capital needs. That's a tidy sum for a company that saw its profits drop last year from Rs 13.5 crore to Rs 6.9 crore, despite a hefty increase in the turnover from Rs 186 crore to Rs 243 crore. But it is possible that all the plans will not work out, and the full investment budget may not therefore be required. Thus, Orkay had some time ago decided to go in for consumer electronics, a scheme which was dropped like a hot potato when it was belatedly discovered that "there was very little scope for growth and turnover". And the same thing could well happen again.

"We have gone into these areas with our eyes open," says Mehra. "We believe they will do well but our company is wedded to growth and if Orkay finds something not contributing to this aim, it will be dropped. For that matter, even I can be dropped."

But Orkay's diversification has become a must after the polyester field has become a sector where profits are thin and competition intense. Orkay's life-saving drugs venture may thus end up saving more than just human lives.

—PARTHASARATHI SWAMI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Five hundred years ago Leonardo Da' Vinci designed a work of art ...

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

perfecting it has helped put a smile on a million faces

Leonardo Da' Vinci, the great Italian genius was the first to develop the gear as an efficient means of power transmission.

A practical thinker, Da' Vinci devoted much of his endeavours to improve and mechanise industrial processes.

Shanthi Gears Limited, Coimbatore, was established in 1969, with the same vision. To improve the quality, standards and availability of gears and gear products, which play an indispensable role in the mechanisation of the nation.

Today, Shanthi gears and gear boxes span a wide spectrum of applications — in the core engineering and industrial sectors, such as steel, cement, sugar, fertilisers, textiles, chemicals, pollution control, rubber, thermal power stations, etc.

Shanthi — the driving force

Shanthi Gears Limited manufactures a comprehensive range of precision gears to meet the needs of textile and general engineering industries. Apart from being extensively used in the replacement market, including the textile mills, most of the OEMs prefer Shanthi as OE. Shanthi Gears Limited was the first to introduce ball bearing conversion of gearing ends and draft gearing for the modernisation of textile machinery.

Shanthi worm reduction gear boxes are available in a wide range. Adaptable, horizontal, vertical, under driven, over driven, double reduction and hollow shaft models. Helical gear boxes range from single stage to quadruple stages. Shanthi Gears Limited also manufactures worm and wheel pairs upto 14" centre distance and spur/helical gears upto 1800 mm dia. 16 module.

Shanthi gear boxes are recognised for their high quality, efficiency and universal adaptability.

A full fledged R&D cell, continuous product development, quality engineering, the latest production techniques and quality control of the highest order are your assurance of quality, long life and dependable performance.

Shaping an inspiration

Shanthi Gears Limited plays an important role in the industrialisation of the country. Much has been achieved through the commitment of its people. Much through continuous support and patronage from the industry.

Yes, in perspective, the challenge has been worth the effort. And it shows in the smiling faces of tens of millions, whose lives have been touched and benefitted.

Shanthi

Turning the wheels of industry

Shanthi Gears Limited

304-A, Trichy Road, Singanallur
Coimbatore-641 005
Phone: 872741 (5 lines)
Grams: SANTHIGEAR
Telex: 0855-375 GEAR IN 0855-302 SALE IN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar MAA (S) SHANTHI 3 A 86

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

EXPORT OBLIGATIONS

Unrealistic Demands

THE list includes some of the biggest, and possibly brightest, stars in the country's industrial firmament: Voltas, Tata Oil Mills, Hindustan Lever, Escorts, Asian Paints, to name just a few. Last month, however, the Government took some of the shine off their corporate images. Replying to a question in Parliament, Commerce Minister P. Shiv Shankar announced that 79 of them had failed to stick to their export commitments.

That inevitably kicked up a rumpus, with many of the companies on the firing line indignantly protesting that they were innocent of any wrongdoing. Snapped Manmohan Singh, managing director of Frick India, the air-conditioning and refrigeration equipment company: "We have no export obligation of any kind. It is absolute nonsense if anyone says this." An official of the Birla-owned Kesoram Spun Pipes echoed his statement, as did some others. They may have a case, but the majority is plainly guilty.

The Government slaps export obligations on companies that, among other things, seek to expand their production capacities, tie-up with foreign collaborators or obtain licences for new ventures. These generally stipulate that manufacturers have to export a percentage of their production, usually for five years. Companies have no option but to accept the obligations if they want their licences. But a good number of them—like Indian Dyestuff Industries, Shree Vallabh Glass and Lucas Indian Services—have not quite met their obligations, as the latest official revelation confirms.

The official records show that the Government had imposed a 10 per cent export obligation way back in 1977 on Voltas, which was keen on a sortie into water pollution control equipment. However, the company did not make much headway in exporting the equipment, forcing the Government to send it a show cause notice in 1981. Meanwhile, Voltas was asked to export the equipment through the state-owned Projects and Equipment Corporation (PEC). It did this, but claims it didn't receive a reply. Voltas also asked the Government for more time to meet its export obligation. Last August, it wrote to the Industry Ministry that some Rs 75 lakh worth of equipment supplied to a municipal corporation against a World Bank tender was a "deemed export" and so qualified for its obligation.

The matter is still pending with the Government, and a Voltas source argued that the company should not be on the defaulters list: "By virtue of asking us to approach PEC the Government has recognised the problem." Several others too have their explanations, even though they do not dispute the official contention that they are defaulters. Indian Dyestuff Industries, for example, was given a licence over a decade ago to turn out reactive dyes on condition that it exported some of them. "However, demand in the international market was sluggish," explains J.G. Patel, the company's joint managing director.

"We have been unable to fulfil our export obligations for the simple reason that our prices are not internationally competitive," asserts N.S. Murthy, executive director of Lucas Indian Services, a subsidiary of Lucas TVS. The Madras-based ignition coil manufacturer was dumped with a five-year export obligation in exchange for permission to import Rs 15 lakh worth of gauge wires from Japan, but Murthy claims that Taiwanese and South Korean competitors quote 40 per cent less for ignition coils.

There are of course a bevy of other sinners, and some of them have been put in the dock through official oversight. The list of defaulters was compiled by an arm of the Commerce Ministry. But other government departments had exempted some of the companies from their obligations without informing the ministry. Hindustan Lever, for instance, obtained a waiver on its obligation to export some Rs 18 lakh worth of fine chemicals for five years after it approached the Government. Official records show that another department failed to write to the Commerce Ministry about the waiver: the last letter the ministry received on the case from the department was in 1984. Such examples abound. "Our documentation is messy and is not updated," admits a government official.

Adding chaos to the confusion, companies themselves do not seem to have furnished all the required documents to the Commerce Ministry. HMM Ltd, the milkfood company, says that it has fulfilled its commitment to export Rs 50 lakh worth of malted milkfoods for five years, while Bayer India, the drug outfit, maintains that it is not guilty because it stopped producing in 1985-86 the anaesthetic injection on which it had a 20 per cent export obligation.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Frick adds that it has no obligation to export centrifugal pumps for which it had a collaboration with an American firm because it went back on a decision to manufacture them and informed the Government of this, and the Asian Paints case is similar. Says a puzzled K. Rajagopalan, director, Asian Paints: "How can we have an export obligation for a product we did not even start making and the licence for which was surrendered to the Government five years ago?" Commerce Ministry officials, however, claim that they have not furnished all the necessary documents to the ministry. So they remain on the list—again, a clear instance of the wing of the Government not knowing what another does.

NAMAS BHOJANI

"Government should stipulate that a company export say Rs 5 crore or Rs 10 crore and then leave it."

J.G. PATEL
joint managing director, Indian Dyestuff Industries

But however faulty the Government has, it has served to cast a harsh spotlight on a contentious issue. Last fortnight, the simmering debate over export obligations threatened to heat up, with several businessmen and officials of chambers of commerce arguing that the system was highly unfair, did not work and should therefore be scrapped—a viewpoint that many senior government officials privately share.

Among other things, such contentions centre on high local input costs pushing up product prices downstream and therefore making wares uncompetitive overseas. "Why should the world buy Indian products which are 20 to 30 per cent more expensive?" as an Escorts official puts it. So, the argument goes, slapping an export obligation is unrealistic. In fact, the Government partially conceded the point recently by permitting manufacturers in a number of industries to obtain raw material at international prices. Equally important, as D.H. Pai Panandikar, Federation of Indian Chambers of Commerce and Industry secretary general suggests, is the point that the country's poor infrastructure does not help foster an export culture. Pai Panandikar argues: "You cannot force someone to export. Why have the export obligation condition at all?"

But the rival viewpoint is not without merits: companies simply do not wish to export because selling in the domestic market is far more profitable. Remarks a

"We have no export obligation of any kind at all. It is absolute nonsense if anyone says this."

MANMOHAN SINGH
managing director, Frick India

senior bureaucrat: "The reason why businessmen are not looking at the export market is that they're used to looking at the domestic market." The statistics seem to bear this out. A study of the largest engineering companies with combined sales of over Rs 3,000 crore showed that 40 of the larger ones exported less than Rs 30 crore. And Reserve Bank of India reports suggest that for every rupee Indian companies spend abroad, they earn just 79 paise.

Against this backdrop, the export obligations scheme is understandable. And if it isn't working, one reason is that the Government cannot even keep track of the paperwork involved. Another is that it has balked at exercising its sweeping powers against defaulters. Companies have to post bonds and bank guarantees, and the Government can take them to court if they do not fulfil their commitments. The Government can also levy fines, cancel licences, confiscate goods in lieu of the exports and sell them to the State Trading Corporation of India. In turn, this public sector company is supposed to export them. But, as economist S.K. Goyal of the Indian Institute of Public Administration points out: "How many licences have been cancelled for non-fulfilment of export obligations? The export paraphernalia is falling flat on its face."

A senior Commerce Ministry official candidly concurs: "Even if action is initiated against a company, it runs to the

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

"How many licences have been cancelled for non-fulfilment of export obligations? The system is falling flat on its face."

S.K. GOYAL
Indian Institute of Public Administration administrative ministry which then intervenes and no action is taken. Nor can action be taken: the Government can't cancel the licence of a factory which is in production because jobs will be lost."

More to the point, the Government's approach to export commitments is grossly unrealistic. Apart from expecting companies that do not kick off production to export, it often imposes obligations without assessing whether a company can in fact hawk its wares abroad. A government functionary tells of how marble manufacturers in Rajasthan obtained clearances to import machinery only on condition that they export 25 per cent of their products. "How many foreigners buy marble from India?"

Then, government rules stipulate the

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"To her you can not say tomorrow... her name is today." —Garcia Peres—Mexican Poet.

For over a year, Love and Care, a band of dedicated volunteers, has been working quietly behind the scenes...changing the lives of an entire generation of underprivileged children.

We made a beginning in Tigra village in Haryana and in the slums of Delhi, bringing changes in the environment, medical care and education of children. We have immunized over 10,000 children and aim to immunize 1,00,000 by early '88. We have set up free clinics, schools, vocational training centres for children in slums. But our task is very large and our means, very little. We need help... your help. Please donate generously. You will be surprised at how much difference, just a little money can make.

Children's needs are very small. All you have to do is share a little.

Rs. 20/- will give a child a complete one year course of immunization.

Rs. 25/- will provide a child with nutrition, or a better environment, or medical care for a month.

Rs. 30/- will pay for a child's education for a month.

Rs. 100/- will provide a child with vocational training for a month.

Rs. 200/- to adopt a child.

Send as much money as you like and every month you will receive his/her progress and picture.

You can also specify the age and sex of the child.

Come, make a hundred flowers bloom...

Yes, I'd like to share a little Love and Care.
I wish to donate Rs. _____

Please use this amount for ☐ Immunization ☐ Vocational Training ☐ Nutrition

☐ Medicare ☐ Education ☐ Environment
☐ Yes, I wish to "adopt" a child. Please send me photographs and details.

Income Tax Exemption under Section—80G

* All donations may be sent by M.O., Cheque or Bank Draft payable to:

LOVE AND CARE
D-40, Defence Colony, New Delhi 110024.

Share a little Love and Care

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

manufacturers cannot offset their obligations by exporting some other items. This can lead to ridiculous situations. Examples: Indian Dyestuff failed to export the item for which it had made a commitment but more than offset this by exporting other dyes. Says an exasperated Patel: "What is the Rs 1 crore or Rs 5 crore we would have earned on reactive dyes compared with the Rs 25 crore we will earn this year? The Government should stipulate that a company must export say Rs 5 crore or Rs 10 crore and then leave it to the company." Similarly, Shree Vallabh Glass finds itself in the soup despite having bagged several export awards. Waving a bunch of certificates, C.A. Taktawala, director, angrily declares: "What sort of a joke is this? On the one hand the Government praises us for excellence in export performance and on the other puts us on a defaulters list."

Indeed, export obligations can boomerang. Over a decade ago, Triveni Engineering Works set up an export division, spent around Rs 1.25 crore on cultivating foreign markets, and eventually snared a Nigerian order to repair rollers for a sugar mill. There was of course the inevitable export obligation since the rollers came in duty free. The first lot of rollers was repaired and shipped, but the Nigerians stalled payment. Meanwhile, they shipped a second lot. Triveni sat on this since the Nigerians did not cough up cash. But the Government got on the company's back because it had not met its export commitment. The case dragged on for years, the company went in appeal, and when it finally got fed up of the red tape it decided to virtually shut down its export business. "We've withdrawn from the export market because of the harassment," says Triveni deputy general manager K.K. Bahl.

The sunny side of this dim scenario is that the Government has, even if belatedly, woken up to the problems inherent in the export obligations scheme. It is considering a Confederation of Engineering Industry proposal to permit exporters to bring in raw material that are not available here without paying taxes, provided they export three times the amount. Also on the drawing boards could be a "white list" of companies that stick to their export promises. They would be eligible for additional concessions. If nothing else, that marks a new willingness in official circles to consider alternatives to an old programme.

—PALAKUNNATHU G. MATHAI with PARTHASARATHI SWAMI and bureau reports

TIDCO

Unusual Track

IF you want to buy a good company, come to Tamil Nadu. A number of interested businessmen are turning to a state-owned outfit whose primary business is promoting new companies, spinning them off to the private sector and then starting all over again.

The Tamil Nadu Industrial Development Corporation (TIDCO), like its counterparts in other states, is pushing industrialisation and creating jobs by kicking off new enterprises. But TIDCO also puts up companies for auction—and makes money in the process. After promoting joint ventures at a blistering pace, it is now rapidly pulling out from at least five projects that have got off the ground.

> "We can only invest, and cannot and do not want to take on the task of management."
>
> E.V.K. SULOCHANA SAMPATH
> chairperson, TIDCO

Last month TIDCO started talking to private sector buyers on unloading its 26 per cent equity stake in four of its 24 joint ventures. The move itself follows the sale late last year of its 65 per cent shareholding in Tamil Nadu Chemical Products to liquor baron Ramasamy Odayar for Rs 4.69 crore. Since the face value of the shares was Rs 1.03 crore, that meant a cool profit of Rs 3.66 crore. The chemicals company was of course well in the black, its share price was looking up and TIDCO struck while the iron was hot.

The 21-year-old corporation's latest bid to sell companies is meant both to make fat profits and cut its losses. Up for sale is Tamil Nadu Chromates and Chemicals, which makes chemicals for the leather industry. TIDCO has been associated with the company for seven years, but the company had piled up a Rs 2.5 crore loss. But last year, it reaped a profit of Rs 45 lakh, and repaid Rs 35 lakh of the Rs 1.95 crore it owes TIDCO. So the timing is right. Says E.V.K. Sulochana Sampath, the AIADMK leader who has headed TIDCO for the last 18 months: "We are trying to find a buyer who will not only pay a good price for the company's shares but also agree to repay the loans in two years. If we can't get one we will hold on to the shares. After all, the company has started making profits."

TIDCO also plans to hawk its stake in three other units: Gangappa Paper Mills, Southern Hydrocarbon, and Southern Borax. Reason: It wants to infuse fresh management blood into these companies, apart from the lucre involved.

Behind such manoeuvres lies the concept of turning money around quickly and investing it in new ventures, a philosophy chairperson Sampath sums up by insisting: "We can only invest, and cannot and do not want to take on the task of management." Not surprisingly therefore, TIDCO is unloading 20 per cent of its 46 per cent shareholding in Tuticorin Alkali Chemicals to co-promoter Southern Petrochemical Industries Corporation (SPIC), the fertiliser giant.

SHYAM TEKWANI

"The mobility of TIDCO's funds is a good sign. TIDCO should not be an industry-running corporation but a real industrial development corporation. And that is what it is becoming now," says A.C. Muthiah, vice-chairman of SPIC.

Muthiah's admiration is only to be expected, but he is right. TIDCO's profits from peddling companies can plainly be expected to go into its new projects. It is executing 11 of them, including an explosives venture near Vellore in North Arcot district, and 11 more are in the pipeline. Also on the drawing-boards is an ambitious Rs 200-crore thermal power project at Manali, for which it has joined hands with Essar Shipping and applied for Central clearances.

Whether these come through or not, TIDCO has chosen a course of action other state corporations have shunned—and done so profitably.

—S.H. VENKATRAMANI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

WARDHA

Where trains from all parts of India
congregate
to despatch raw materials, take on finished products.
Where
semi-skilled, skilled and technical manpower form
the backbone of industry.

Come discover Wardha where SICOM is generating new industrial growth.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SICOM

Yes. SICOM invites you to invest in Wardha, one of Maharashtra's largest reservoir of semi-skilled/skilled manpower.

Situated just 70 km from Nagpur, Wardha's unique location in the centre of India is ideal from the marketing point of view. Road, rail and air links (from nearby Nagpur) to Bombay, Calcutta, Delhi and Madras, and a developed infrastructure, make Wardha a boom town for industrialists.

And quite a bit of it has been SICOM's doing.

In keeping with its 20-year tradition, SICOM is furthering Maharashtra's industrial capabilities... ushering in a second industrial revolution.
It's promoting Petrochemicals, Telecommunications, Electronics, Laser Technology, Computers, Synthetic Fibres, Processed Foods... and developing new growth centres in Chiplun, Jalgaon, Nanded, Paithan and other places, to provide the necessary infrastructure.

Here's how SICOM helps you start your industry in Maharashtra's developing areas:

SICOM – accompanies you at every step.
Right from conception to the post-production of your unit, SICOM is there to help you with technical consultancy services, feasibility studies and expert guidance in plant location. What's more, it co-ordinates with the concerned state-level agencies to get you a need-based mix of infrastructure – both industrial and social.

SICOM – assists you financially.
Whether it's term loan, seed capital, direct subscription to share capital, equipment leasing, equipment finance or venture capital and market development assistance for non-resident Indians, SICOM ensures prompt service.

SICOM – offers you an irresistible package of incentives.
As an agent for the State Government's Package Scheme of Incentives, SICOM offers various benefits depending on your plant location. These include special capital incentive as a grant for new projects and excellent sales tax benefits.

SICOM – invites you to pioneer.
Start a pioneer unit with a stipulated investment in a virgin taluka or invest over Rs. 25 crores in any taluka and you get maximum benefits as incentives.

SICOM – supports innovative ideas.
Apart from reduction in sales tax on electronic items, Maharashtra has created electronic industrial estates in Pune, Nagpur and Aurangabad. What's more, if you start an electronic unit, SICOM offers attractive incentives for a period of seven years under a special scheme.

SICOM – keeps you growing.
Your relationship with SICOM can never end. Whether it's expansion, diversification or modernization, SICOM's expertise provides all the necessary inputs to keep you growing.

Such personalised service explains why over 4000 SICOM-aided projects have come up in Maharashtra, with a total investment of Rs. 5,018 crores providing employment to about 2,70,000 people.

SICOM already shares Wardha with:

* Dyn India Ltd.
* Greenfield Chemoplast Pvt. Ltd.
* Marathon Footwear Ltd.
* Noble Explochem Ltd.
* Orient Flour Mills Ltd.

SICOM

THE STATE INDUSTRIAL AND INVESTMENT CORPORATION OF MAHARASHTRA LIMITED
Nirmal, 1st floor, Nariman Point, Bombay-400 021.
Tel: 2023018 Telex: 011-3066

Pioneering Maharashtra's Second Industrial Revolution.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

EXCISE OFFICIALS

Stalling Tactics

AGITATIONS by government employees in West Bengal are not unusual, but this one is different. In a rare display of ire, the excise officials in the state have vociferously demonstrated over the past few months, held press conferences, and swamped state Excise Secretary Kamalakar Misra with telegrams.

Their collective unhappiness flows from the dramatic arrest last December of three excise officials posted at the Asansol distillery of Carew and Company. Willy-nilly, the officials have been dragged into a controversial case in which liquor was allegedly sent out of West Bengal without paying Rs 1.45 crore in excise duties. And now there are unsubstantiated charges of a cover-up in high places.

Police investigations zeroed in on the Vijay Mallya-controlled company, its transporters, liquor agents, warehouse operators and the excise men themselves. Subsequently, the enforcement branch of the state police filed charge-sheets against nine companies and 61 individuals. Top Carew executives have obtained anticipatory bail, but liquor baron Mallya along with two senior Carew officials had to put in an appearance before a special court at Asansol last month. The three excise officials too came up before the special court, charged with having been involved in a criminal conspiracy to defraud the exchequer.

The three-year-old excise evasion case centres on the alleged squirreling out from the distillery of truckloads of liquor on the basis of forged indents. Since excise rates vary in each state, liquor manufacturers have to pay duty to the state where the liquor is consumed. (If the despatches were fictitious, manufacturers would pay duty neither to West Bengal nor to the state where the liquor was supposed to have been sent.) West Bengal's Excise Act prescribes strict procedures for sending liquor out, including a requirement that local excise men can hand out an 'export pass' only if the excise authorities in other states send them a copy of the indent.

As the state Excise Officers' Association tells it, excise officer Biswanath Bhowmick found on being posted to the distillery that both copies of the indents were given to him by the Carew management, instead of just one. When he objected, copies of indents began arriving by post from states such as Haryana, Bihar and Uttar Pradesh. The snag: all of them carried Asansol postmarks. Bhowmick checked with his counterparts in other states and found that the indents were forgeries. Alerted by Bhowmick's discoveries, the Excise Department put its sleuths on the job and unearthed 56 forged indents in all.

The Carew management, however, counters that it is innocent of any wrongdoing, and that it has been duped by an organised gang of unscrupulous traders, transporters and excise officials. "We have exported goods on valid export passes in every instance. We have acted in a bona fide manner," says T.R. Ghosh, general manager (legal and administration) of Carew.

The conflicting claims symbolise the welter of allegations and counter-allegations that have dogged the case. The Excise Officers' Association insinuated at a press conference last January that the arrest of their colleagues was "a subtle ploy" to get the real culprits off the hook. Pointing out that Bhowmick had filed the FIR against Carew, it argued that his arrest would deprive the prosecution of a key witness.

Joining the fray, The Coalfield Times, an Asansol-based weekly, went one better. It accused Special Inspector General of Police S.K. Singh, who heads the enforcement branch, of attempting to quash the case. Since Singh's charge-sheets rest on Bhowmick's FIR, the weekly claimed that Bhowmick's arrest undermined the entire case.

But both the newspaper and the Excise Officers' Association seem to be on a weak wicket in alleging hanky-panky by the head of the enforcement branch. Official files show that Bhowmick's discoveries and the subsequent investigations failed to turn up hard evidence against Carew. Ultimately, a special meeting of the state Cabinet decided to hand over the case to Singh.

Cartoon by AJIT NINAN

Singh's sleuths concluded that a massive conspiracy had attempted to defraud the exchequer and that the three arrested excise officials must have been involved. Independent observers claim that at least one of them failed to adhere to legal guidelines in issuing export permits. Instead of waiting to receive indents by post, he went ahead and issued passes. In some cases, reference was made to excise officials in other states. Intriguingly, even then, passes were issued without waiting for their replies.

The truth will be decided by the courts. The state Government, meanwhile, is beginning to suspect that the excise officials' agitation is meant to stall the case. And with one arm of the Government suspecting another, West Bengal's excise case could work itself to a standstill.

—INDRANIL BANERJIE

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THE MARKETS

See Saw

SLUMP, recovery, slump: that has been the history of the stock-markets in the first three weeks after the budget. The initial disappointment with Rajiv Gandhi's budget had resulted in the Economic Times share index plunging from a pre-budget high of 264.4 to as low as 245.8, a week later: a precipitous drop of about 7 per cent, in as many days.

Then, following some intervention by the financial institutions and helped by a ban on short-selling in specified shares, the index recovered to a hopeful 255.6 at the end of another week. But this recovery has proved unsustainable, and in the closing week of last fortnight, the market was depressed once again. The share price index, as a result, was back at 252.6.

Many shares have gained over the 2 fortnight, but most of these gains were notched up in the earlier part of this period. The partial recovery has, however, yielded to a slide and unless there is good news on the fiscal front, or reports of good corporate performance, the slide will continue. At the moment, even the corporate news is discouraging: several companies have reported lower profits, reflecting the pressure imposed by stiffer competition in several sectors.

There is still some hope of the minimum tax on companies being withdrawn or amended. And the proposal to deduct tax at source on professional payments may also be changed. Announcements on these will probably help some of the star performers' shares regain their lost glitter. Also, despite ITC, the expectation that the 'raid raj' has ended, may cheer the market.

Chart by B.K. SHARMA

But despite all this, there is little doubt that no one expects another share market boom in the foreseeable future. The political turmoil in New Delhi, continued Punjab problems and the message that the Government is not overly concerned about the cheerfulness of the stock-market, have all registered on Dalal Street. Indeed, the most obvious feature of trading last fortnight was the absence of buying support and the lukewarm attitude of investors.

Enthusiasm must also have been dampened by the widespread reports of paper companies floating shares and debentures and cheating investors, and of many such shares not being worth the paper they are printed on. If numerous punters have got their fingers burnt, the resultant lack of enthusiasm for more of the same is only to be expected.

Matters may improve once the new regulatory measures that have been promised by the Government are in place, and the small investor begins to feel that he has some protection. Indeed, this may prove a vital factor in ensuring the success of the several public issues of shares and debentures that are due in the coming months.

ACTIVE STOCKS

	1987 HIGH	LOW	CLOSE 20.3.87	Change in Fortnight
Ashok Leyland	35.50	28.00	30.75	2.75 +
Asian Paints	247.50	207.50	230.00	8.75 +
Associated Cement	241.50	202.50	210.00	4.50 +
Atlas Copco	150.00	112.00	141.00	9.00 +
Avery India	169.00	150.00	153.00	11.50 –
Bajaj Auto	4800.00	3950.00	4425.00	125.00 +
Baroda Rayon	250.00	205.00	227.50	15.00 +
Bata India	160.00	128.50	152.50	0.50 +
Bayer	780.00	600.00	660.00	60.00 +
Bharat Forge	74.00	63.00	72.00	9.00 +
Bihar Jute	50.75	47.00	49.25	0.50 +
Blow Plast	126.00	92.50	110.00	7.50 +
Bombay Dyeing	75.00	40.50	68.50	nil
Brooke Bond	99.00	77.00	95.50	1.00 –
Cast Tyres	600.00	480.00	595.00	10.00 +
Century Spinning	810.00	670.00	710.00	2.50 –
Chloride India	148.00	89.00	94.50	0.50 –
Colgate	377.50	327.50	365.00	16.25 +
CCM	39.00	29.75	29.75	1.50 –
Dunlop	77.75	71.25	74.00	0.50 +
Escorts	107.50	87.50	95.00	2.50 +
E.I. Hotels	56.00	44.50	45.75	0.25 –
Esmayef	84.00	49.00	49.00	27.00 –
Finolex Cables	240.00	171.25	221.25	8.75 +
Food Specialities	182.50	114.00	165.00	16.25 +
Garware Polyester	188.50	164.00	170.50	4.00 +
G.E. Shipping	97.00	69.50	82.00	3.00 +
Gujarat St. Fertilisers	22.50	16.75	17.50	nil
Grasim Ind.	183.50	120.00	145.00	21.00 +
Hind. Cocoa	95.00	80.00	89.00	7.00 +
Hindustan Lever	262.50	223.75	236.25	3.75 +
Hindustan Motors	188.00	165.00	184.00	14.00 +
Hindi. Dorr	35.35	27.20	28.20	1.40 –
Hindi. Aluminium	390.00	295.00	355.00	18.75 +
	126.00	71.00	120.00	3.00 +

	1987 HIGH	LOW	CLOSE 20.3.87	Change in Fortnight
IEL	61.50	53.00	54.00	0.50 –
Indian Organic	78.00	62.50	65.00	0.50 –
Indian Rayon	76.50	61.00	63.50	0.50 –
Indrol	510.00	260.75	282.50	17.50
Ingersoll-Rand	330.00	272.50	327.50	35.00 +
ITC	78.00	58.50	60.50	4.75 –
J.K. Synthetics	93.50	67.00	72.50	0.50 +
Kinetic Engineering	312.50	230.00	252.50	7.50 +
Kirloskar Cummins	810.00	670.00	800.00	20.00 +
Larsen & Toubro	100.00	82.00	84.00	3.00 –
Lipton	77.00	60.00	74.50	0.50 –
Lohia Machines	32.00	20.00	23.00	3.00 –
Madura Coats	71.00	66.00	70.00	2.50 +
Mahindra & Mahindra	46.00	38.00	42.00	2.00 +
Motor Industries	390.00	347.50	350.00	10.00 –
MRF	82.00	63.00	70.00	2.00 –
Mukand Iron	80.50	63.50	76.00	1.00 +
National Organic	577.50	490.00	625.00	27.50 +
Nirlon	26.00	18.00	19.00	3.00 –
Orkay Silk Mills	115.00	76.00	83.00	1.00 +
Otis Elevator	197.50	155.00	191.25	3.75 +
Peico Electronics	57.25	44.50	45.50	1.00 –
Ponds	375.00	325.00	362.50	12.50 +
Premier Auto	29.50	21.00	25.00	1.00 +
Ranbaxy	135.00	111.00	128.50	2.25 +
Raymond	79.00	68.00	71.00	nil
Reckitt & Colman	200.00	174.00	184.00	1.00 +
Reliance Industries	277.00	198.00	214.00	11.00 +
Shriram Fibres	36.00	27.75	28.50	0.50 +
Sandoz	140.00	87.50	100.00	2.50 +
SPIC	53.50	36.50	38.75	2.25 +
Siemens India	139.00	117.00	137.00	12.00 +
Tata Steel	1207.50	992.50	1032.50	12.50 –
Telco	665.00	550.00	590.00	5.00 –
Vulcan Laval	57.50	45.00	50.00	nil

WORLD VALUE OF RUPEE

COUNTRY	CURRENCY	UNIT	Selling Rates Rs	TT Buying Rates Rs
Australia	Dollar	1	8.9180	8.8306
Austria	Schilling	100	100.6851	99.8206
Bahrain	Dinar	1	34.7060	34.6280
Bangladesh	Taka	100	43.0298	42.9960
Canada	Dollar	1	9.8954	9.8155
Denmark	Kroner	1	1.8779	1.8618
Egypt	Pound	1	9.4290	9.3920
France	Franc	1	2.1276	2.1119
Hong Kong	Dollar	1	1.6629	1.6510
Indonesia	Rupiah	100	0.0798	0.0700
Iran	Rial	100	17.8930	17.8080
Italy	Lira	100	0.9900	0.9800
Japan	Yen	100	8.60	8.45
Kenya	Shilling	1	0.8190	0.8000
Kuwait	Dinar	1	47.2000	46.7220
Malaysia	Dollar	1	5.1455	5.1073
Mauritius	Rupee	1	1.0100	0.9980
Nepal	Rupee	1	0.5960	0.5800
Netherlands	Guilder	1	6.2497	6.2064
Pakistan	Rupee	1	0.7500	0.7439
Singapore	Dollar	1	6.0561	6.0064
Spain	Peseta	1	0.100	0.9000
Sri Lanka	Rupee	1	0.4580	0.4499
Sweden	Kroner	1	2.0232	2.0073
Switzerland	Franc	1	8.3779	8.3609
Tanzania	Shilling	1	0.2790	0.2700
Thailand	Baht	100	50.7430	50.6920
UK	Pound	1	20.7210	20.5930
USA	Dollar	1	12.9025	12.8125
UAE	Dirham	1	3.5628	3.5001
USSR	Rouble	1	20.1404	20.1008
W. Germany	Deutschmark	1	7.0877	7.0323

These rates were supplied by The Bank of Tokyo Limited, New Delhi and quoted between the banks on 23.3.87.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Uncomfortably Real

WHILE political films portraying the goings-on in the corridors of power are no longer new, a new Malayalam film, Itha Samayame, has been held up by the censors for being a little too real: the hero-villain, played by Jayaram, a Cochin-based chartered accountant, looks like former Kerala chief minister K. Karunakaran. The film was scheduled for release last fortnight just as elections were taking place in the state. Karunakaran, not surprisingly, apparently saw to it that the censors did not let it pass though, considering the poll results, he needn't have bothered. The film is an expose on the events in Thankamani village in Idukki district where a posse of drunken policemen had mass-raped village women.

Jayaram: deadly similarity

The chief minister in the film merely zips around in imported cars—killing two pedestrians in the process—flashing a toothy smile, inaugurating functions and praying at the Guruvayoor temple—just as Karunakaran does. The climax of the film shows the chief minister visiting the village, which in real life Karunakaran had not. One of the raped women lashes out at him: "Why do you pray in Srikrishnan temple Guruvayoor? You cannot wash away your sins. The sobs of the women in this village will ring in your ears when you pray there." The innuendoes go on right through and caused the censors to declare it a "problem film" and the hero-villain as Karunakaran's caricature. Viswambharan, the director of the film, though, says innocently: "This was purely coincidental." Incidentally, the meaning of the title of the film whose release was so perfectly timed is—It is the right time.

Rejecting Convention

LEGISLATIVE convention seems to go for a six quite regularly in Tamil Nadu as long as Speaker P.H. Pandian is conducting the proceedings. But last fortnight he outdid even himself. Pandian went on and on at DMK President M. Karunanidhi, explicitly blaming him for the bomb blasts in the state. Even as the DMK MLAs jumped to their feet, Pandian simply carried on. Finally it was left to Chief Minister M.G.Ramachandran to do the unbelievable: he asked the speaker to expunge his outburst. Still Pandian would not stop. Brushing the request aside, he said that his conscience would not allow him to erase from the record all that he had said. Finally, however, he relented and expunged an entire hour's proceedings.

The eraser of that length of proceedings was a record even by Pandian's own standards. During the budget session of the legislature, Pandian has often had to expunge portions of the proceedings including his own remarks. Said Karunanidhi: "Considering that he is a hot-tempered man, it is a surprise that Pandian was made the speaker in the first place." The DMK held protest meetings throughout the state for two days last fortnight demanding Pandian's removal.

A Gem of a Function

THE recent "Bihar Diwas" celebrations were held to honour 18 people who had done their bit to project a better image of Bihar. These "gems" (Bihar Ratnas) had been selected for three years—nine for 1984, six for 1985 and three for 1986—but were honoured only now because the state is celebrating its 75th year. It was the result of one man's untiring efforts: Subodh Kant Sahay, an activist from Jayprakash Narayan's days, and a Janata Party leader. The awardees included, among others, film star Shatrughan Sinha, economist L.K. Jha, historian Syed Hasan Askari, Statesman Editor (Delhi) S. Sahay, Lt-General S.K. Sinha (Retd) and Chairman of the Medical Council of India, Dr A.K.N. Sinha.

Shatrughan Sinha at the function: a political rebuke

But a couple of things stuck out oddly. The organisers did not disclose the name of the selectors and pointedly left out anyone from the state who was not a Bihari. Moreover, as a guest at the function pointed out: "If this policy is pursued, there will be no more "gems" next year."

The function is also being seen as a rebuke to the Congress(I) Government which has overlooked the state's platinum jubilee. Said an angry Shatrughan Sinha who is also supposed to have assisted with the function's organisation: "This government never does anything but pulls the legs of those who want to do something."

Public Outburst

PRIME Minister Rajiv Gandhi's lessons in public behaviour seem to have been well taken. Following Rajiv's example of humiliating his foreign secretary A.P. Venkateswaran earlier this year, Bihar Welfare and Jails Minister Mahavir Paswan has actually gone a step beyond. At a news conference he lashed out at his Welfare Secretary, G.R.Patwardhan, for indulging in corruption, making irregular appointments and awarding contracts worth over Rs 5 crore without the approval of the state Cabinet.

Paswan: a sorry show

The provocation for the outburst was a report in the Patliputra Times, a Hindi daily, carrying

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

charges of corruption against Paswan. The newspaper is owned by former chief minister Jagannath Mishra under whom Patwardhan had served. Suspecting Patwardhan's hand behind the report, Paswan said: "It should be obvious that the inspired newspaper report has been published to cover the black deeds of the coterie and smear my image." But in truth, Paswan's outburst has only tarnished his image further. The official denied all the charges and the bureaucracy rose up in arms saying that this was no way to treat a senior official.

Petty Politics

WHEN the 236-foot-high tower—the tallest in Asia—of the famous Ranganathaswamy temple in Srirangam town in Tamil Nadu, was consecrated last fortnight, politics made its appearance. The state Government had earlier tried to persuade the key-man, Swami Alagiasingar of the Ahobila religious math, to postpone the function. When that failed, Chief Minister M.G. Ramachandran, worried about

V.R. RADHA KRISHNAN

The Ranganathaswamy temple: breach of protocol having possibly hurt religious sentiments, announced he would attend the function which would be held as scheduled. MGR and his wife, along with Vice-President R. Venkataraman and his wife, witnessed the consecration of the Rs 1.4-crore tower on March 25. But quite in violation of protocol, AIADMK leader and Chairperson of the Tamil Nadu Industrial Development Corporation, E.V.K. Sulochana Sampath, was seated on the dais along with MGR and his wife. The municipal chairmen of Tiruchi and Srirangam, M. Balakrishnan and T.P. Mayavan, both of the DMK, were initially denied entry to the dais. But following a public uproar—there were an estimated eight lakh people present—the two were subsequently grudgingly allowed inside. Said Mayavan: "It is sad that politics lingered on even in this religious function."

Special Status

THE Bhopal Municipal Corporation claims that state Chief Secretary Krishna Chandra Sharma Acharya has not paid, since 1977, tax towards the palatial double-storied house he owns in town. According to municipal officials who understandably prefer to remain anonymous, Acharya owes the corporation about Rs 50,000. Acharya,

R.C. SAHU

Acharya and his house: privileged position who lives in a government bungalow on concessional rent after letting out his house to a public sector undertaking for Rs 3,000 per month, disputes the assessment of the corporation's property tax officer. He has made a "self-assessment" of the house on the basis of its rateable value, which he himself fixed at Rs 7,340 a year, and told the corporation that he would pay only Rs 902 per year. The property tax officer had fixed the tax at Rs 6,400 annually. The corporation dare not take punitive action against Acharya because he is not only the state's most powerful officer but also a favourite of Chief Minister Motilal Vora.

Scandalous Behaviour

GOVERNMENT doctors striking work has become a common affair. But an incident which occurred during a strike called by the Maharashtra Association of Resident Doctors sent ripples of outrage through medical circles in Bombay. For, about 50 striking doctors in the King Edward Memorial Hospital not only gheraoed Assistant Dean Shasiprabha Satoskar, but also subjected her to vicious and vulgar heckling for more than three hours. Still not satisfied with that, they also directed their ire against Satoskar's son who had not joined the strike, abusing him and telling that he would soon be dead. Satoskar broke down and the resident doctors' scandalous behaviour provoked the Municipal Commissioner S.S. Tinaikar to institute police cases against them. So far, 43 doctors have been suspended. According to hospital sources, the real reason for the doctors' rudeness with the assistant dean was because she had caught one of them taking medicines out of the hospital dispensary for selling it on the pavement outside.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THEATRE

Intense Portrayal

NOT for a long time had a theatrical event generated so much excitement in Bombay. After more than 22 years, Alaknanda Samarth returned to the stage in a city where she had initially established a reputation as an exceptional actress in plays with Ebrahim Alkazi and Satyadev Dubey. But this time Samarth did not team up with any figure from Indian theatre but with film-maker Kumar Shahani—to feature in two short one-woman plays, G. Shankar Pillai's Kunti and Jean Cocteau's The Human Voice.

In fact, the production, sponsored by the Alliance Francaise, brought together an unusual galaxy of talent. Besides Shahani, there was painter Akbar Padamsee as set designer, dancer Chandralekha as choreographer, costume designer Bhanu Athaiya (of Gandhi fame), film cameraman Piyush Shah in charge of the lights and Veenapani Chawla as the producer.

Shahani has spent years studying the Mahabharat as a Homi Bhabha fellow, and given his fascination with the epic form, his interpretation of the Kunti legend was expectedly on a sweeping scale, transcending an individual woman's dilemma. "The play," Shahani said, "destroys the stereotype of the Indian woman as a breeder. Kunti wages a kind of war for her desires, for her ambition, for herself. You do not weep for Kunti."

In his stark production—with minimal music, fixed lighting and an abstract sculptural creation by Padamsee dominating the backdrop—Shahani reins in Samarth's style to present an almost incantatory interpretation of the Kunti legend.

In Samarth's superbly controlled yet intense portrayal of Kunti, the elemental desire, the yearning for superhuman sublimation, is brought out in a ritualistically modulated form, rising ultimately to a crescendo in an extraordinary cry of anguish and desire, followed by the final moment of consummation in a blaze of light and music.

Interestingly, Kunti was written by Sahitya Akademi award-winning playwright Pillai specially for Samarth last year (it was premiered in Bombay last fortnight) after she expressed the need to perform Cocteau's play. The Human Voice is another monologue in which a woman desperately seeks to cling to a broken relationship by maintaining a frenzied conversation on the telephone with her estranged lover. Dissatisfied with earlier translations of the French play, Samarth had herself rendered it into English, recognising in it "the poetry of the trivial, an expression of one kind of female impulse".

While the lighting and stage design in Kunti evokes a sense of infinite space and the splendour of creation, The Human Voice presents a claustrophobic, dimly-lit interior, with Padamsee utilising slotted angles ingeniously to represent a confining, closed room. In this limiting space, Samarth, nervous, and almost suicidal, presents a chilling experience of a woman dissipating her life and energy in futile struggle to retain contact with the object of her desire. In the end, as she collapses exhausted in bed with her legs outstretched, seemingly incapable of giving or sustaining life, she is the perfect counterpoint to the Kunti who begins her impassioned search as a woman confidently containing the elements.

Samarth, who has been described by Dubey as "our only properly trained actress" (she studied at the Royal Academy of Art in London) has utilised her skills in recent years as a teacher, first at the National School of Drama in New Delhi and then at Pillai's school of drama in Trichur. In Kunti and The Human Voice she wanted to go beyond realistic theatre and explore a ritualistic, metaphorical theatrical style. It was for this reason that she went to Shahani for directing the play, and the production eventually became a kind of landmark in Indian theatre as it involved a variety of talents from diverse fields. But finally, it was Samarth who had to sustain the plays all alone on the stage for two hours, an experience she describes as "a terrific learning opportunity but more terrifying than anything I ever imagined". But with the two plays, one of Indian theatre's pre-eminent actresses chalked up yet another achievement in a distinguished career on the stage.

—M. RAHMAN

Samarth in Kunti (below); and in The Human Voice: versatile

Photographs by PATRICK BECK

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

bajaj

brings you a wide range of energy-saving Outdoor Luminaires.

BJPTI-80-125

BJEF-1000 H

BJSLA-140

BJMIP-250-400

BJEF-21 (S)

Suitable for Fluorescent, HPMV, HPSV Lamps, Bajaj Streetlighting Luminaires are designed for the wide and uniform illuminance of roads and traffic junctions — and to withstand all extreme weather conditions.

The other outdoor luminaires include Post Top Lanterns for entrances, parks, campus lighting, HPMV/HPSV/Halogen Floodlights for general area lighting, marshalling yards, airport apron lighting, sports, monument landscaping, etc.

Bajaj offers a total integrated lighting service from the designing to the electrification and installation of lighting fittings on a turnkey basis for any indoor/outdoor location.

For details write to:
Lighting Project Services
Bajaj Electricals Limited
45-47 Veer Nariman Road, Bombay 400 023.

Heros: BE-779 B

bajaj

The lighting people since 1938.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

KARNATAKA

A Notable Triumph

PEOPLE power is asserting itself in the most unusual of circumstances. Residents of over a hundred villages located along the Tungabhadra river in Karnataka have taken on the combined might of big industry and the state Government and succeeded in arresting the spread of a polluting stain that was threatening the river, their economic lifeline.

The battle, which began in the late '70s, is far from over but success, against all odds, is evident. The biochemical oxygen demand (BOD), an important parameter of pollution, has come down dramatically as has the chemical oxygen demand. The incidence of skin diseases has declined and, as a villager says: "Fish and crop yields are a little better now."

The credit for this must go to the villagers themselves. Last month, they took advantage of the Mylar Jatra, an annual festival in Bellary district attended by two lakh people, to stage an exhibition on what pollution means. On display were house tiles from Nalavagalu village, located near the offending Harihar Polyfibres (HPF) plant: the tiles had crumbled due to air pollution. Also on view were corroded nylon fishing nets, plus photographs of large-scale fish kills and affected villagers.

A majority of the people who came to the festival visited the exhibition and over 9,000 of them signed a memorandum to the authorities. They urged the Karnataka Government to take action against HPF and the neighbouring Gwalior Silk Rayon Manufacturing Company (GRASIM), both owned by the Birlas.

The poison entered their lives 15 years ago (INDIA TODAY February 1-15, 1981) when the Rs 38-crore Aditya Birla-owned HPF was set up at Kumarapatanam town in Dharwad district to produce 170 tonnes of rayon grade pulp every day. Then, in 1977, GRASIM was set up next door to turn the pulp into yarn. Effluents discharged by the two plants changed the life of villages located along the river's banks over a 50-km stretch that took the waters through Dharwad, Chitradurga and Bellary districts.

The results were disastrous: fish yields came down by 75 per cent; farm harvests declined by 30 to 40 per cent; and sheep began to abort, hurting sheep farming, a major industry in the area. Even villagers were affected by skin diseases and respiratory disorders.

After years of sporadic protest, the residents prepared for organised battle four years ago by setting up a voluntary organisation, Samaj Parivarthana Samudaya (SPS). Today, in the forefront of the SPS-led agitation are daily wage farmhands, fishermen and housewives.

The SPS became a catalyst for environment committees—Tungabhadra Parishar Samitis—which sprang up in several villages and meet regularly to chalk out new modes of agitation. Says Durgappa Bassapa Bargi,45, of Medleri village: "We started a samiti in our village four years ago with a membership of just 10. Now we number 40. Even a year ago, people were afraid to join any direct action against HPF. But now villagers readily come forward."

They have even taken HPF to court. In the past year they have filed more than 15 cases in the courts of the munsifs and the magistrate of Ranibennur, claiming damages from the factory owners and seeking criminal action against the factory management. They have also filed a writ petition in the Karnataka High Court urging the state Government to intervene and stop the pollution.

The constant pressure paid off and HPF went in for a modern effluent treatment plant, costing Rs 2.30 crore, in end-1983. The continuance of the agitation even after this installation has not been without reason: industry elsewhere is known to have kept treatment plants idle—to save costs—in the absence of public and government pressure. Keeping the environment clean is not cheap: HPF's plant costs Rs 37,000 per day to run. But it has been worth it. Surinder Singh Maru, vice-president of HPF, says: "We have been continuously upgrading and modernising our effluent treatment plant. We also have a business interest in pollution control, because we would like to recover as much waste as possible. We now recover 93 per cent of our waste, one of the highest for pulp factories in the country." HPF has also shifted its coal ash dump from Nalavagalu village.

Protesting villagers: sustained efforts

Even the state Government was forced to sit up and take notice. A full-fledged pollution control office, staffed by 10 people, has now been set up at Davangere town for day-to-day monitoring. Says S. Hanmanth Rao, chairman of the Karnataka Pollution Control Board: "All the parameters of pollution are within permissible limits now, except for negligible variations. Only the colour of the river continues to be black as there is no economically viable way of tackling that. But it will not cause any harm." From the look of things, though, it seems that the villagers are unlikely to give in until the Tungabhadra returns to its original purity.

—S.H. VENKATRAMANI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"Princely splendour... in casual whites"

"I've always believed that a man should blend with his environment. Even if one is surrounded by the architectural grandeur of princely India. Which is why I always wear Gwalior Suiting. Its sophisticated weaves and exquisite shades give the most casual outfit a regal touch. But then, class always tells – anywhere."

M.A.K. PATAUDI

Pataudi wears our latest fabric creation in exclusive whites. You too can choose from our wide range — SILVER TOUCH, SILVER LINE, SILVER STREAK, MILKY WAY, MEGHDOOT, PLATINUM TOUCH, GATSBY, SILVER SPRAY and PLAYMATE.

GWALIOR SUITING

IN A CLASS OF ITS OWN

A PRODUCT OF GRASIM INDUSTRIES LTD.

MA.PP.GR-87-01-209

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

WALL-TO-WALL UNCARPETING FROM JOHNSON.

available in selected cities only.

Ignore
■ Remain
They also instead, to and offices

Ignore the exceptional strength of Johnson's designer floor tiles. ■ And the fact that they're just one-third the weight of mosaic. ■ Remain unimpressed by their exceptional scratch-resistance. ■ And turn a deaf ear to their unique anti-echo property. ■ They also happen to be fire-proof, stain-proof, acid-resistant and dust-repellant. But don't let that sway you. ■ Allow yourself, instead, to fall hopelessly in love with their looks. ■ A glamorous alternative to mosaic, granite, marble or stone. ■ For homes and offices. Hotels and auditoriums. ■ Whether you follow your head or your heart, you'll agree: They're the best thing that's [illegible] since the wall-to-wall carpet.

JOHNSON

DESIGNER FLOOR TILES

The greatest cooling power under the sun.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Most airconditioners work well when it isn't too hot.

But when the mercury climbs over 40°C, they start to wilt from heat exhaustion.

And by 46°C, there's only one machine in India still going strong.

Amtrex.

The only one specially engineered to handle extreme heat.

Amtrex has airconditioners with capacities ranging from 0.5 to 5 tonnes. Seven models in window airconditioners and a selection of packaged airconditioners. As well as a range of water coolers and voltage stabilisers.

Amtrex airconditioners are now also available in split units. Which means you can have the cool-air outlet in your room and leave the hum of the machine outside.

Our sales executive will give you the details.

He'll tell you about our wide network of distributors and dealers.

He'll also tell you about our sales and service network. Thirteen sales offices. Seven-days-a-week service. Complaints attended to in 24 hours. And a standby machine if yours has to be taken for repairs.

Our sales executive may also be persuaded to disclose the names of a few Amtrex users like Reliance, Gwalior Rayon, Hoechst, Bank of India, Escorts, Bank of Baroda, Canara Bank and Diners.

Looks like everyone under the sun is using Amtrex.

Amtrex Ambience Pvt. Ltd.(An enterprise of Lalbhai Industries Consolidated), Rachana, Opp. Bombay Garage, Shahibaug Rd., Ahmedabad 380 004. Tel: 383035.

Branches/Offices at: Bombay: 233909. Calcutta: 448 507. Delhi: 387953. Madras: 440802. Hyderabad: 236104. Pune: 55483. Baroda: 322061.

AMTREX

Air conditioners

Now available on D.G.S. & D. Rate Contract

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Photographs by K.M. KISHAN

The Urdu Academy (left); and Magahi Academy: unholy mess

BIHAR

Foul Tongues

FROM a distance, Bihar seems to be immune to the language controversies that dog the rest of India. But nothing could be further from the truth. The state's language academies, nobly designed to promote language, literature and the arts, said state Education Minister Lokesh Nath Jha, "stink".

Last fortnight, when the Education Department launched a probe into the state of affairs in the language institutes—on which the Government spends Rs 50 lakh annually—it found an unholy mess. In most academies, chairmen and secretaries are openly feuding; grants meant for development of languages have been disappearing without a trace; and most of the 150-odd employees that staff these academies have not been paid their salaries for months.

The state Government has now announced a scheme that promises to streamline the institutions within three short months. The Urdu Academy, ironically the best of the institutes, is the first target. Set up in 1972 by then chief minister Kedar Pandey—with an eye on minority votes—it was pampered by successive governments with its annual grant soaring to Rs 12 lakh besides other favours from the Centre. Clearly, it had a special status and the chief minister was made its chairman. The academy's board is loaded with big names—journalists, intellectuals, literary figures, most of whom have solid political connections. But it was the only academy in the state that had some literary output.

There are, however, many more academies in the state and not one of them is doing well. Most were created in periodic bursts of enthusiasm to bring about national integration in the state.

State Education Minister Lokesh Nath Jha has announced a scheme to clean up the academies within three months.

In fact, barely two months ago, Chief Minister Bindeshwari Dubey promised a Punjabi Academy too. While the Urdu Academy may be first chosen for resurrection, the others are virtually in the morgue. There is the Hindi Granth Academy, the oldest, set up by the Centre in 1970, which was doled out a handsome grant of Rs 1 crore annually for the first five years. Then the Bihar Government took over and the grant was pruned down to Rs 3.8 lakh a year. The establishment costs Rs 10.75 lakh a year to run. Soon the inevitable deterioration began and the academy—set up to prepare textbooks for the universities—began compromising on its standards till in 1981, books worth Rs 50 lakh were dumped in its godown. Jha, who is its chairman, admits: "We still don't know what to do with these books."

The plight of the local language institutes is worse. Magahi is one of the major local languages of the area and is considered the mother of Hindi. The Magahi Academy was started in 1980 by the then chief minister Jagannath Mishra. But it soon became clear that it was going to be a political battlefield more than a language promotion centre. At every step Dr Kesari Kumar, the academy chairman and a Magahi lover, was opposed by Ramchandra Choubey, a government appointee. At one time, the director suddenly withdrew the chairman's stenographer, dismissed the entire staff and went off on leave himself. The chairman was never allowed to handle finances and was consistently overruled by the director.

Then there are the smaller academies: the Bihar Kala Academy, the Bhojpuri Academy, the Maithili Academy, the Bangla Academy. In each case, the story is the same although the lines may be different. The overpowering shadow of politicians looms large, staffers have not been paid wages for several months on end, there is no room to store anything, the state grants are erratic and unreliable, and some chairmen cannot even afford a phone. In some, like the Bhojpuri one, there is no chairman at all. In the Bangla Academy, the chairman is 92 years old. And in the Bihar Kala Academy, devoted to the arts, Chairman Bandhu Mahto did not know if Ravi Shankar was a musician or a singer.

Last fortnight, the Government was making new promises. Jha said uniform administrative rules would soon be formulated, chairmen would be selected according to literary prowess and it was proposed to set up a high-level coordination committee under the governor's chairmanship. "We will see that these academies are not politicised," said Jha. Famous last words, as the sceptic would say.

—FARZAND AHMED

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

A whole new concept in silent air conditioning.

Divide... and cool.

The new Voltas Crystal Split Room Air Conditioner consists of two units.

Now! Elegant new design. Enhanced cooling power.

The new 1.5 tonne Voltas Crystal Split Room Air Conditioner is unlike any other. In looks. And in performance.

It comes in two parts. The elegant, laminate-finished particle board Room Unit cools your room in silence. It can be installed at ground level on the floor, or against a solid wall.

The Condensing Unit, which is the noisy part, is kept outside. On a ledge. Or in the balcony. Anywhere up to 5 metres away from the room unit. There's no need to block a window. A 10 cm dia. hole through the wall allows the pipes to connect the two units. So it keeps noise out. Completely!

Want to know more? Just contact your nearest Voltas Crystal dealer. Or us.

VOLTAS LIMITED
Appliances Business Group
19, J.N. Heredia Marg
Ballard Estate
Bombay 400 038

VOLTAS
CRYSTAL
SPLIT ROOM AIR CONDITIONER
No.1 in keeping cool... silently

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

A CONNOISSEUR TAKES HIS PLEASURE AS SERIOUSLY AS HIS WORK

DIGJAM

A product of VXL India Ltd.
[WE EXCEL]

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

SUMMER SUITINGS FOR THE CONNOISSEUR

Give the devil his due.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

A truly envied TV doesn't happen just by magic. Not even black magic. That's why, when your neighbour envies your pride as an ONIDA owner, don't be too proud to discuss the reasons. You can begin by telling him about ONIDA's world-famous Japanese pedigree. And that itself will explain some of the features that you can then show him.

When he's floored by the mind-blowing clarity and sharpness of the picture, give him a helping hand by mentioning that the secret lies in ONIDA's much higher resolution than that of any other brand, and in the direct processing of signals within the TV.

Then when he's moved by the great sound, show him the sound features that make it possible. The novel Triple Speaker function where the tweeter lets you clearly hear all frequencies. And the unique adjustable ear flaps that invite you right within the acoustic field of the TV!

All this talk, mind you, is not merely to give credit where it's due. You have a major motive. Because, only when all your neighbours buy their ONIDA, can you stop worrying about their envy, and relax.

ONIDA with cordless remote. Neighbours' envy. Owners' pride.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection,

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

When it comes to the bottom line, Rohit Kapur knows that an investment is only as good as the returns it gives. Which is why he places so much value on his Diners Club card. For frequent travelling in India and abroad and checking into hotels almost anywhere, its benefits are incalculable. What's more, there are hidden assets dear to a commercial man's heart: streamlined accounting (you get a consolidated statement of account every month), personal cheque cashing facility, a generous purchase bonus, free flight insurance, commission-free travellers' cheques and attractive discounts at a variety of hotels abroad.

Rohit Kapur whose reputation has been built on making the right decisions, says he would put his money on the Diners Club card every time. It's an investment that appreciates — and one that appreciates his needs.

Financial Director Rohit Kapur recommends a capital investment

Diners Club
Welcome to our world

Diners Club India Pvt.Ltd.
Raheja Chambers, 213 Nariman Point, Bombay 400 021.

LINTAS DC 129 2417

For details contact The Sales Division: ☐ Bombay Tel: 244949 ☐ Delhi Tel: 602565 ☐ Madras Tel: 475112 ☐ Bangalore Tel: 563982 ☐ Hyderabad Tel: 822674 ☐ Calcutta Tel: 447280

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Created for people who know airconditioners can be made better.

The Usha Room Airconditioner. Just switch it on and you'll know it's unique.

In its design, the Usha Airconditioner incorporates the latest airconditioning technology to bring you a well balanced, more power packed and efficient appliance.

Usha Airconditioners offer the unique oscillating louvres to spread the air uniformly, all over the room.

And aesthetics. The Usha Airconditioner looks so good with its specially hand crafted wooden grill.

Usha Airconditioner : from the House of Shriram.

Acknowledged leaders in refrigeration and manufacturers of India's largest selling 'USHA' Water Coolers. Only Shriram Refrigeration could bring you an airconditioner like it.

And it's from Usha!

Usha. It's a name you've trusted for generations.

For quality and reliability.
And expert after-sales service.

The Usha Airconditioner. Just feel it perform.
And discover airconditioning at its best.

everest/d87/SRI/21

USHA
AIRCONDITIONERS.
Performance that speaks for itself.

SHRIRAM REFRIGERATION INDUSTRIES LTD., 19 Kasturba Gandhi Marg, New Delhi-110 001

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BONDED LABOUR

Loosening the Knot

As she tended the ripening watermelons in his field last fortnight, Dundya Zipar Lathad, 21, was quite oblivious to the fact that he had become a cause celebre in legal history. A few years ago, the tribal lad was a farm labourer bonded to the biggest landlord in Adne village in Maharashtra's Thane district. Today, he was not only free but the owner of two acres of land and a bullock-cart. Further, the landlord who had enslaved him for life after giving him a loan, had been convicted under the Bonded Labour System (Abolition) Act, 1976 and sentenced to three months imprisonment and a Rs 2,000 fine.

The Lathad case marks the first time since the Act was passed that a landlord had been sentenced for keeping a labourer in bondage. Madhav Bhau Jadhav was found guilty of enslaving Lathad after giving him Rs 360, five saris, five blouses, two towels and a cap in 1983 at the time of Lathad's marriage. The case was tried summarily by Vasai Executive Magistrate D.M. Shringarpure who ordered that after the recovery of the fine from Jadhav, Lathad be paid compensation of Rs 1,050—Rs 5 for each day he had been bonded to the landlord, as stipulated under the Act.

Like many tribals in Thane district, Lathad was dragged into "Lagangadi" (bonded after taking a marriage loan), forced to work in Jadhav's fields for 14 hours a day and prohibited from working elsewhere. And his wife Rukhama also had to work with Jadhav for Rs 4 a day, much less than the minimum wage for agricultural labourers.

Fortunately for Lathad, seven months after he went into bondage, the Shramjivi Sanghatana, a social organisation begun by Vivek and Vidyulata Pandit, organised 300 bonded labourers into registering complaints with the Vasai tehsildar in a dramatic challenge to the local landlords and administration. Says Vidyulata: "We have been able to keep up the pressure on the administration and it has finally led to the first conviction in the country under the Bonded Labour (Abolition) Act."

It is the efforts of such organisations in the district that have brought a major breakthrough in the struggle against bonded labour. The Gandhi Peace Foundation estimates that, of the 50 lakh bonded labourers in the country, about five lakh are in Maharashtra with Thane having nearly 5,000. "Till February this year," says Thane Collector Bhaskar Patil, "we have freed 828 bonded labourers, of which 641 have already been rehabilitated." The administration has also launched prosecutions in 245 cases.

Dundya Lathad: making legal history

Photographs by M. RAHMAN

"We have been able to keep up the pressure on the administration and it has finally led to the first conviction."

VIDYULATA PANDIT
social worker

For the Pandits, this is justification for years of struggle on behalf of the poor and landless labourers in Thane district. Giving up secure office jobs in Bombay, they began work in Dahisar village in Vasai taluka, about 80 km from the city, in 1979. They soon realised that rural reconstruction was not possible without launching a struggle for social justice, and set up the sanghatana in 1982. Among the issues they took up were those of bonded labour, minimum wages and land restoration. In spite of being beaten up publicly and threatened with death they refused to give up.

They found, expectedly, that none of the provisions of the Act were being implemented in the district. The act existed only on paper. A vigilance committee set up in 1976 had not held a single meeting though it was granted important functions in identifying, releasing and rehabilitating bonded labourers. In 1984, Vivek filed a writ petition in the Supreme Court, which appointed two commissioners to investigate the situation in Thane district. Their report was damning, pointing out that though the bonded labour system was widespread the identification of bonded labourers was being done by social activists; the state had done nothing to rehabilitate them; and that prosecution under the Act was dilatory and had not led to any convictions.

But in Thane now a large number of bonded labourers like Lathad have been released and rehabilitated. For the Pandits as well as for the bonded labourers, the conviction has come as another step forward in the struggle against an old and unjust system. —M. RAHMAN AIRCONDITIONERS. Performance that speaks for itself.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

And to think you can fly there on Alitalia...6 times a week.

All roads still lead to Rome, but after we fly you there, we can then fly you to New York almost immediately. Six times a week, every week, a sleek Alitalia 747 leaves Delhi and Bombay for Italy. With our convenient worldwide network, we connect you to key cities in Italy and Europe, as well as Chicago, Los Angeles, Montreal and Toronto.

Take an Italian airline? Certamente if you want convenience. The ultimate, if you want to be pampered in the luxury of our Top Class or Prima Business Class. Call Alitalia, or see your travel agent and book your flight today. Six flights a week ... 312 flights a year, make it so easy.

Alitalia

The airline of Italy

daCunha/ALT 18

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

New tyres for your Maruti?

Get the tyres that Maruti chose first

MRF NYLON TYRES

Among all car tyres in India, MRF NYLON TYRES were the first tyres chosen by Maruti – for whom nothing but the best will do.

Today, more Marutis run on MRF TYRES than on any other tyre.

So when you need new tyres for your Maruti, why take any risks : Stay with MRF NYLON TYRES.

The makers of the Maruti know what's best for your car.

Over 40% of all Marutis are on MRF Nylon Tyres

MRF TYRES

Tyres with Muscle

TAS M MRF NCT 53 2418

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

RELIANCE CUP 1987
CRICKET FOR PEACE
Reliance CUP 1987
The cricket event
VIMAL
The Official Fabric for Reliance Cup 1987
Fabric PERFECTION ONLY VIMAL
VIMAL SUMMER

CC-0. In Public Domain.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SUMMER'S NEW FORMALITIES

This season, celebration - dressing calls for new dash. And the coolness of crisp white.

Here, a cropped-at-the waist double breasted jacket is worn over cuffed trousers, double pleated on either side in front, single pleated at the back. Traditional satin stripes trace trouser's outer seams.

Shirt is pleated, wing-collared pin-tucked. Matching white tie, leather pumps and you're ready to take on town.

A lot of course depends on the fabric. Choose only the best. Only Vimal Suitings. The season's hottest fashion news.

ONLY VIMAL

VIMAL®
A RELIANCE PRODUCT

POLYRICH
Suitings

ENSATIONS

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

One photograph by Glamour Photographer Adrian Steven, says more about a beautiful woman than a thousand words.

Adrian transforms the fashion model from a mere clotheshorse to a warm, intelligent, exciting woman, one who celebrates the glamorous life. That she is beautiful to boot merely adds to her desirability.

With what does Adrian work his wizardry?

A battery of cameras, though his favourite format is the 35mm, which he says gives him the sharpest results.

I notice, not without pleasure, that there are a few cartons of Konica color film on his table.

I ask him how he finds Konica.

"You tell me", says Adrian.

He opens a folder and carefully removes a set of new portraits he says he's just done on Konica film, Konica paper.

I whistle softly. Glowing skin, soft red mouth, silken fabric... they look almost touchable. I leaf through the prints slowly.

When I look up, Adrian is loading a camera for another assignment, due in minutes.

And joy of joys, he's using Konica.

Konica
SR-V 100
COLOR FILM

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

MADHYA PRADESH

Nun on the Run

THE affair of Induprabha, the runaway Jain nun who renounced her religious order earlier this year to live a normal life (INDIA TODAY, January 31) and earned the wrath of the influential Jain community, has now ballooned into a major political issue in Madhya Pradesh. Last month, the Government detained her friend and lover Radheshyam under the National Security Act (NSA), adding an unnecessary and explosive political element to the already volatile issue. Induprabha herself was forced underground in an attempt to escape from the administration seeking to hand her over to her community.

The administration's volte face on the issue was all too clearly because of political pressure. Earlier, it had filed an affidavit in the high court saying that the 20-year-old nun had gone with Radheshyam on her own. But now, it had ordered the detention of the 31-year-old milkman on the grounds that he, a married man with three children, had "kidnapped" Induprabha on January 4 and kept her in his custody. The administration also conveniently ignored the fact that it had given Radheshyam custody of the nun: the detention order said that as the affair had created tension among the Jains his arrest would help in maintaining law and order.

The detention stirred a hornets' nest. Several civil liberties groups and prominent Indore citizens denounced it as a blatant violation of human rights. Radheshyam's wife, mother and other women from Dudhia, marched to the commissioner's office with a memorandum demanding his release. The police, they said, had detained a man who has never been involved in a criminal case. Radheshyam's supporters have filed a writ against the detention order.

Meanwhile, a habeas corpus petition filed for Induprabha's presentation in court was turned down by the high court on the grounds that: "Induprabha was neither in the custody of the Government nor had she been illegally detained by Radheshyam." But the Jain lobby has now filed another petition in court as proof of their determination to get the former nun back into their fold.

Jain delegations from all over the country called on Chief Minister Motilal Vora, the prime minister and the President, complaining about the harassment of a minority community and the "mishandling of the case by the district administration". And a Jain priest, Abhay Muni, announced a fast unto death if Induprabha was not returned.

The threat worked and Vora decided to intervene. Indore's collector and the superintendent of police, briefed by Vora in Bhopal, called a meeting of prominent Jains and assured them that Induprabha would be "handed over". Announcements to this effect were officially made in Indore newspapers and at the venue of Abhay Muni's fast. The police brought Induprabha to Indore and asked her to "surrender" herself to the Jain priests and apologise publicly to the community. But the former nun refused to leave Radheshyam, threatening to commit suicide if forced to do so. Soon after, the couple absconded.

Bent on pacifying the orthodox group, the police issued a warrant for Radheshyam's detention under the NSA. Operating from Dudhia, they combed the adjoining jungles and raided the village every night—beating and abusing the local people—in search of the couple. In retaliation, the villagers decided to blockade roads if the offenders were not punished. Indore's superintendent of police was forced to institute an inquiry. Though Radheshyam was picked up from a relative's house on Indore's outskirts, Induprabha is still in hiding.

VIMAL GUPTA

(Above) Sood announcing probe at fast site; (top left) Induprabha; and Radheshyam: political drama

Immediately after the detention, Indore Commissioner S.K. Sood met Abhay Muni and informed him of the state Government's decision to hold a judicial inquiry into the "disappearance" of the Jain nun. To the administration's obvious relief, the muni called off his fast. The report, expected to be submitted in three months, will also look into the role of the district administration. But whatever the outcome, rather than the missing nun, it is the state Government that appears to be on the run.

—N.K. SINGH in Indore

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Shiva's Shadow

THE ENIGMA OF ARRIVAL
by V.S. NAIPAUL
Viking
Price: £10.95; Pages: 318

AT first there is this strange, dreamlike surrealistic painting by Giorgio de Chirico. Titled The Enigma of Arrival, it portrays a Mediterranean scene "depicting a sunlit sea journey ending in a dangerous classical city". In the enigmatic painting, there are two muffled figures in the foreground, one perhaps who has arrived, the other, perhaps a native of the brightly-lit port. The scene is one of desolation and mystery. The title of V.S. Naipaul's first novel in eight years is derived from this painting which is reproduced on its dust cover. It also almost inspired the protagonist-narrator in the "novel" to write a lustrous story based on the painting.

Naipaul's subject is his own arrival, as eternal stranger and writer, on English and other assorted alien shores, confident only of his own craft. The Enigma of Arrival is Naipaul's 20th book (11th novel). But can this complex work be described a novel as it states on the cover? Its composition has perplexed critics and the public alike since it follows no formalistic structures of a plot as in a novel. Instead, it is a deeply contemplative work, or more accurately, a meditative autobiography.

The narrator never identifies himself. But we are told he is of Indian origin, a Hindu born in Trinidad, mid-fiftyish, educated at Oxford. A globe-girdling writer. The veil of fiction is pellucid. Who else could this be but Vidya Naipaul? For a writer who has straddled the world's flashpoints from South America and the Caribbean to Africa, Middle East to India, this latest journey is quintessentially English: progressing from London's Earl's Court bedsitters to a rented cottage in Wiltshire in the heart of pastoral England. The narrative evolves in concentric circles. The outer story concerns the writer's special journey from the far off colony of Trinidad at the mid-point of the century. That story, Naipaul presents in his masterly style: the slow and painful development of the writer's way of observation.

Within that account is a "fiction" set in this richly endowed rural England, near the Salisbury plain, not far from Stonehenge. The characters arrive unhurriedly, observed scrupulously from a distance by the narrator.

The radiant descriptions of the English countryside are evoked in spartan prose and in fastidious detail. Just as we are lulled with a sense of security into this seemingly rhapsodic world we are suddenly wrought with changes—and accompanying blight. With his almost unforgiving prose Naipaul deftly introduces death and despair into this entrancing rural backwater.

The book has been variously described as "sad", "melancholic" and permeated "by a sense of weariness and exhaustion". There is indeed a forbidding shadow of death over the book. It is dedicated to his prodigiously gifted brother Shiva who died at the age of 40 in London two years ago. A dearly loved younger sister Sati died and Naipaul attends the Hindu cremation rites in Trinidad. Watching the pundit, he says that he had discovered that his father had been intended by his grandmother and mother to be a pundit. Instead he became a journalist and his literary ambitions seeded the literary desires of his two sons. In the final section, "The ceremony of farewell," he writes: "My theme, the narrative to carry it, my characters—for some years I felt they were sitting on my shoulder, waiting to declare themselves and to possess me. But it was only out of this new awareness of death that I began at last to write. Death was the motif: it had perhaps been the motif all along. Death and the way of handling it...."

Although there is an indefinable air of despondency and melancholy in Naipaul's latest work, it is, however, a memorable achievement, parts of which make hypnotic reading. Each new work of Naipaul is heralded as a publishing event in Britain and the United States. A blue ribbon band of reviewers have hailed his latest, Arrival, with generally mixed reviews: "There is a haunting twilight about this book, an autumnal scent that presages a hard winter" (Bernard Levin). "It is one of the saddest books I have read in a long while" (Salman Rushdie). "It has great dignity, compassion and candour. Instead of diminishing life, Naipaul ennobles it" (Anthony Burgess) and writing in the New York Times Book Review, Irving Howe described Naipaul: "He resides in England. But no one could take him for an Englishman, what then is he? I would say: the world's writer, a master of language and perception, our sardonic blessing. For sheer abundance of talent there can hardly be a writer alive who surpasses V.S. Naipaul."

It almost seems an impercipient folly that even after the publication of such a stylishly crafted and elegaic work as Arrival, a literary Nobel prize could continue to elude him for so long.

—RAMESH CHANDRAN

EXTRACT

"In my late thirties the dream of disappointment and exhaustion had been the dream of the exploding head: the dream of a noise in my head so loud and long that I felt with the brain that survived that the brain could not survive; that this was death. Now, in my early fifties, after my illness, after I had left the manor cottage and put an end to that section of my life, I began to be awakened by thoughts of death, the end of things; and sometimes not even by thoughts so specific, not even by fear rational or fantastic, but by a great melancholy. This melancholy penetrated my mind while I slept; and then, when I awakened in response to its prompting, I was so poisoned by it, made so much not a doer (as men must be, every day of their lives), that it took the best part of the day to shake it off. And that wasted or dark day added to the gloom preparing for the night."

Naipaul: meditative prose

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The lush, emerald jungles, the golden-glittering sands, the vast stretches of wildlife. Growling, roaring tigers, or sambars, cheetals, wild boars and porcupines moving stealthily in the meadows. Herons, graylag geese, flamingoes, painted storks fluttering their myriad-hued wings in the marshes. Visit some of the most spectacular wildlife sanctuaries in the country. Keoldeo National Park (Bharatpur), Ranthambhor National Park (Sawai Madhopur), Sariska Tiger Reserve (Sariska) and sanctuaries at Jaisamand and Mount Abu. Have a thrill and a chill running down your spine when you suddenly encounter a ferocious tiger looking straight into your eyes. Shoot it. With your camera.

RAJASTHAN TOURISM

Hunting for excitement? How about shooting a roaring tiger?

Accessibility : Jaipur has direct air connections with Agra, Ahmedabad, Aurangabad, Bombay, Delhi, Jodhpur and Udaipur. All major places in Rajasthan are linked by rail and road with various tourist centres in India.

Accommodation : Many palaces in Rajasthan have now been converted into luxury hotels. Also, there are moderate hotels and economical tourist bungalows in major cities and towns, run by RTDC.

For detailed information, write to: Director, Tourism, Art & Culture, Government of Rajasthan, 100 Jawahar Lal Nehru Marg, Jaipur 302004 Tel : 74857, 73873

Or contact our Tourist Offices at : New Delhi Tel : 322332, 321820 Agra Tel : 64582 Calcutta Tel : 279051 Bombay Tel : 2044162 Ahmedabad Tel : 405289 Madras, Commander-in-Chief Road Jaipur Tel : 69714 Alwar Tel : 3863 Amer Tel : 86264 Bharatpur Tel : 2340 Ajmer Tel : 21626 Bikaner Tel : 5445 Jaisalmer Tel : 106 Chittaurgarh Tel : 2009 Bundi Tel : 301 Kota Tel : 26527 Udaipur Tel : 23605 Sawai Madhopur, Project Tiger Office Jodhpur Tel : 25183, 21900 Mount Abu Tel : 51

ITDC/RT-106

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Punwire. Meeting the tough standards of the defence forces. In wireless communication.

"Alpha Company to station Charlie... Identify position. Over."

"... Charlie calling... position 20° North- West... awaiting command. Over."

"Roger. Over and out".

India's defence forces.

It's no secret that life is tough out there. Alert. Watchful. Ready-to-strike... It's a task-force discipline everyday for our men in the Army, Navy and Air Force.

Here, the operative words are reliability and precision—something Punwire is quite at home with.

Punwire : the widest range of wireless radio equipment to meet defence standards.

From Punwire comes a diverse range of radio communication equipment to meet the stringent requirements of the three defence forces.

Every single instrument is tested and put through a host of gruelling quality control measures which simulate almost every conceivable environment and operational severities faced by these premier sentinels in action.

And for special purpose applications in defence, Punwire's R&D and design engineering cells have developed sophisticated communication networks.

The Punwire product range includes :

- Military Squad Radio.
- HF — SSB Tactical Transreceivers
- High—power HF Transmitters and Receivers for static or mobile role.
- Speech secrecy equipment.
- Options for voice, teleprinter, fax and data communication on wireless.
- Subsystems for area grid communication network.
- Turnkey wireless and line communication systems.

A flawless reputation among other users too !

The CRPF, BSF, ITBP, NSG, CSIF, Coast Guard, RPF, Police forces in 24 states, and Traffic Patrol in 12 major cities apart, leading Govt. and Commercial organisations such as ONGC, Port Trusts, Coal Mines, Airport Authority, Railways.Irrigation department, the Forest Vigilance cells, industrial enterprises like L&T, Orkay, Markfed, Rajshree Cement Ltd. and several others also feature in the Punwire list of satisfied customers.

You're right. When it comes to wireless communication, for thousands of people Punwire provides the survival kit.

Battles or no battles!

PUNWIRE

Spearheading communications.

Punjab Wireless Systems Limited

(A State Government Undertaking)

SCO 165-166 Sector 8, Chandigarh-160 008.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

RAGHU RAI

Govinda: signs of acceptance

◆ He was dismissed as the poor man's Mithun Chakraborty. But no longer. Govinda, 23, has gyrated himself straight into the record books by signing a staggering 70 Hindi films, an unprecedented feat even by Bombay film standards. "I am a workaholic," he shrugs by way of explanation. But in tinsel town, it is a sure sign that the star has arrived and can now sell a picture on his very own. The hip-swivelling star is however, hardly content with resting on his laurels. Govinda is now planning on a new role—that of a producer, no less. He has just bought the Hindi rights to the Tamil hit Poo Vizhi Vaasalile and is ready to make his debut—with himself in the lead, of course.

◆ Tennis ace Vijay Amritraj is practising diff'rent strokes these days. Despite his smashing performance against Argentina in the recent Davis Cup, Amritraj is nowadays concentrating more on his lobbing. Or rather, lobbying. In Delhi, he scored points with Rajiv, discussing a film on Indira Gandhi produced by his Los Angeles-based Amritraj Productions, and his own leading role in the efforts of the Anti-AWACS Education Committee in the US to stop the spy plane sale to Pakistan. He has already roped in John Forsythe—of Dynasty—to help. Said Amritraj: "Knowing Reagan's past connections, the best way was to mobilise the entertainment community to send a message to the White House." He then came up with consecutive aces—he first met Secretary of State George Schultz for 40 minutes and then Democratic presidential contender Gary Hart to get his support. Hart needed help too. As he told Amritraj: "I've got problems with my backhand."

PRASHANT PANJIAR

Amritraj: lobbying hand

◆ By any standards, it is an exceptional feat. Or rather, feet. Actor-politician Sunil Dutt and his band of footsore fellow-marchers arrived in Delhi last fortnight to a tumultuous reception, before setting off on the final leg of their Bombay to Amritsar padyatra for peace in Punjab. Co-starring in the blistering walkathon was daughter Priya Dutt, 20, who missed her B.A. final exams because, as she says, she hoped to "learn more from the walk than by getting a degree".

But the real test is yet to come—they have already received threatening letters from terrorist groups. Still, the dogged Dutt is determined to reach the Golden Temple on April 13, Baisakhi Day. By then, he hopes, "it will become a call of the people".

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

Dutt with Priya: miles to go

◆ It was, as the ad said, her crowning glory. But Priyadarshini Pradhan, 19, wasn't plugging soap. The 5 ft 8 inch tall part-time model was crowned Miss India '87, a title she accepted like a veteran. Which she is, having been Navy Queen runner-up and Jaycees University Queen. But behind the blase was modesty: what she wants is an MBA and "work in some silly office". Right now, she's off to Singapore with Air-India for a food festival and in April will bid for the Miss Universe title.

Jackie-Ayesha: happy ending

SHIRISH G. SEN

Pradhan: winning streak

◆ No wonder it's called the seven-year itch. The seven-year romance between film-star Jackie Shroff and model-cum-one-film-actress Ayesha Dutt, is finally headed for matrimony. After some false alarms, Shroff finally admitted last fortnight that the wedding would take place and also volunteered that D-Day is June 3, Ayesha's birthday—though that was not the only reason. Says Jackie: "My father's decided on the date because he is an expert astrologer." It's all in the stars, it seems.

Photographs by PETER MARTIN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SHIRISH G. SETH

nning streak

ndia '87, a title
ke a veteran,
having been unner-up and ity Queen. But e was modesty;
is an MBA and
e silly office".
's off to Singandia for a food
pril will bid for rse title.

it's called the
n. The seven-between film-off and modelctress Ayesha
eaded for matome false alar-y admitted last the wedding
e and also vol-
-Day is June 5,
nday—though
e only reason.
My father's dee because he b loger." It's al seems.

hs by PETER MART

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

13008

13007

13006

13005

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

e Taming of V.P. Singh

nder orchestrated attack from members is own party, his role in the Fairfax tangle er judicial probe and revelations of a ious defence deal boomeranging on him, nce minister V.P.Singh finally quit office week with his image in disarray.

OVER STORY 28

New Terrorist Targets

Punjab extremists have launched a new campaign which is heavily laced with morality. Among other things, the militants are demanding a ban on liquor and meat shops. The key to the success of the strategy is however based on terror.

CURRENT EVENTS 43

"I have been tainted for life"

Amitabh Bachchan claims that his enemies have cast him in the role of a villain in the Fairfax affair. In a long interview he answered some questions about his brother Ajitabh's Swiss residency and the controversy over his own closeness to the prime minister.

INTERVIEW OF THE FORTNIGHT 78

hite Collar Slum Dwellers

ombay's filthy slums also house a surpris- number of white-collar workers from the ated middle class. Though hating every ute of their slum existence, Bombay's e housing shortage leaves them with no ce.

PECIAL FEATURE 96

Riding The Rapids

A rafting festival down the Ganga gave a much-needed fillip to the exciting water sport in India. The participants also included a reporter and photographer from INDIA TODAY. A photo-essay captures the unique experience.

PHOTO FEATURE 140

Divine Sensation

Seldom has a television serial aroused such a phenomenal response as producer Ramanand Sagar's Ramayan. Reactions from all over the country testify to the kind of emotional and religious chord the serial has struck.

TELEVISION 170

TENTS

MENT 11
CES 14
ANOTES 19
ITALOOK 22
FORTNIGHT THAT WAS 27
ER STORY
Taming of V.P. Singh 28
RENT EVENTS
dent-PM: Shadow Boxing 38 ab: New Terrorist Targets 43
ayal Municipal Library: story Lesson 50
ville: Clean Chit 55
il Nadu: Arresting Affair 56
r Pradesh:
ow of Strength 58
Bengal: Red Ahead 65
dhya:
mmunal Confrontation 66
r: Fun with Figures 70
ughan Sinha:
ngun Blast 71
ENOTES 72

INTERVIEW OF THE FORTNIGHT
Amitabh Bachchan:
"I've been tainted for life" 78
LAW
Supreme Court: Women's Way 84
GLOBE TROTTING
Pakistan: The London Blitz 93
SPECIAL FEATURE
Bombay:
White Collar Slum Dwellers 96
TRADE WINDS 105
BUSINESS
Airline Boards: Troubled Experiment 106
East India Hotels: Branching Out 109
Audio-Cassettes:
A Supersuccess Story 110
Indo-Soviet Collaboration:
A New Thrust 114
Detective Agencies: New Role 119
SCL: The Blue Chip Turn Around 121
LIVING
Central Proof Establishment:
Tribal Testing Range 133

CRIME
Bombay: Underworld Hit 139
PHOTO FEATURE
Ganga White Water Festival:
Riding the Rapids 140
AVIATION
Vayudoot: Engine Trouble 148
CINEMA
Films: The New Breed 154
HEALTH
Leucoderma: Cuban Cure 158
BOOKS
The Language of Dance 163
LIFESTYLE
Astrology: Computer Kundlis 165
TELEVISION
Ramayan: Divine Sensation 170
ENVIRONMENT
Gujarat: Red Curse 172
EYE-CATCHERS 176

Cover Photograph By BHAWAN SINGH

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ITDC/87/B

Ministry of Tourism
Government of India

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Air-trek to the Himalayas

There's no experience quite like it.

Skimming past mountain tops in an 18-seater Dornier, where every seat has a window—it's almost like flying in your own aircraft! Special service and breakfast en route. What a wonderful way to start a Sunday!

Take your cameras and bring back memories of this rare experience—clicking the Himalayas from close range—from above!

Air-trek takes off every Sunday, from Delhi and Dehradun. Don't miss out on the Himalayan experience of a lifetime!

For bookings, contact Vayudoot offices:

Malhotra Building
F-Block
Janpath
New Delhi-110 001
Ph: 3312587, 3312779, 3315768

Commercial Department
Vayudoot Headquarters
Safdarjung Airport
New Delhi-110 003
Ph: 699272

Delhi Airport: 391351, 391361 Ext. 2268, 391470

Dehradun:
Ph: 23400, 27776

वायुदूत
Vayudoot
Himalayan Air-trek

Scheduled Flight	: Every Sunday
Departure Delhi	: 7.20 am
Arrival Delhi	: 10.10 am
Tariff	: Rs. 850
Departure Dehradun	: 8.20 am
Arrival Dehradun	: 9.10 am
Tariff	: Rs. 350

20% off for children & students.
Charter facility also available.

Flight Route:
Dehradun, Rishikesh, Pauri, Rudraprayag, Karnaprayag, Kanol (close to Nanda Devi peak), Gopeshwar, Kedarnath, Dehradun.

Check-in time: 30 mts before departure.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

The 10 Chapters of a Record Breaking Story

Hindi India Today becomes the first Hindi magazine to achieve a print run of 2,00,000 in less than 5 months.

Right from the very first issue Hindi India Today has created a never before excitement amongst its discerning readers.

It has met a long felt need for a high calibre and thought provoking Hindi newsmagazine that is fresh, bold, comprehensive and incisive.

No wonder the print run has doubled from the 1st issue to the 8th – and is still growing fast creating Media history issue after issue.

That just goes to prove that great journalism is great journalism — in any language.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri
CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

to achieve a print run of 2,00,000 in less than 5 months.
It has not a long run. Since it is thought provoking Hindi newsmagazine that is fresh, bold, comprehensive and incisive. journalism — in any language.

INDIA TODAY
THE COMPLETE NEWSMAGAZINE
VOLUME XII NUMBER 8
FOR THE FORTNIGHT APRIL 16-30, 1987

EDITOR
AROON PURIE

EXECUTIVE EDITOR T.N. NINAN
PICTURE EDITOR RAGHU RAI
FEATURES EDITOR INDERJIT BADHWAR
DEPUTY EDITOR DILIP BOBB
SENIOR EDITOR PRABHU CHAWLA

CORRESPONDENTS

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENTS RAMINDAR SINGH, SHEKHAR GUPTA
NEW DELHI PALAKUNNATHU G. MATHAI, RAJ CHENGAPPA, MADHU JAIN, JAGANNATH DUBASHI, SREEKANT KHANDEKAR, TANIA MIDHA
AHMEDABAD RAMESH MENON
BHOPAL N.K. SINGH
BOMBAY M. RAHMAN, PARTHASARATHI SWAMI
CALCUTTA INDRANIL BANERJIE
HYDERABAD AMARNATH K. MENON
LUCKNOW DILIP AWASTHI
MADRAS S.H. VENKATRAMANI
PATNA FARZAND AHMED
TRIVANDRUM SREEDHAR PILLAI
LONDON RAMESH CHANDRAN
NEWS COORDINATOR RADHIKA ROY
ART DIRECTOR M.G. MOINUDDIN
CHIEF OF PRODUCTION SHIRLEY JOSHUA, ANURADHA KAPOOR
COPY DESK SIMRAN BHARGAVA, ANN NINAN, MOHAMMED ASLAM
CHIEF PHOTOGRAPHER BHAWAN SINGH
PHOTOGRAPHERS PRAMOD PUSHKARNA, PRASHANT PANJIAR, NAMAS BHOJANI
CARTOONIST AJIT NINAN MATHEW
CARTOGRAPHER B.K. SHARMA
LAYOUT ARTISTS ANUP GUPTA, PEALI DUTTA GUPTA
MARKETING DIRECTOR MOHINI BHULLAR

ADVERTISING MANAGERS
BOMBAY ANOOP ZUTSHI
DELHI NAGINDER RISHI
CALCUTTA MEERA PAUL
MADRAS R. ANAND
BANGALORE S.J. NAIDU
GENERAL MANAGER CHANDER RAI

● EDITORIAL OFFICE LIVING MEDIA INDIA PVT LTD. F-14/15, CONNAUGHT PLACE NEW DELHI 110001. PHONE: 3315801-4, 331-1245 INTO IN CABLE: LIVMEDIA. NEW DELHI ● SUBSCRIPTION INDIA TODAY SUBSCRIPTION DEPARTMENT. POST BOX 149 FARIDABAD HARYANA ● TRADE CIRCULATION: INDIA TODAY CIRCULATION MANAGER. F-14 CONNAUGHT PLACE. MIDDLE CIRCLE NEW DELHI. PHONE: 3313076-8, TELEX: 31-62634 INTO ● ADVERTISING OFFICES: 28 A&B JOLLY MAKER CHAMBER-II, NARIMAN POINT, BOMBAY-400021. PHONE: 2026152, 2029326, 2040-5. TELEX: 11-5373 THOM IN. CABLE: LIVMEDIA. 14 CONNAUGHT CIRCUS, NEW DELHI-110001. PHONE: 352378, 351273 AND 351323. TELEX: 31-2651 THOM IN. CABLES: LIVMEDIA NEW DELHI ● FAGUN CHAMBERS, 26 COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF ROAD, MADRAS-600105. PHONE: 477188, 477770, 479163, 569094. PHONE: 568446 ● 74/1ST MARKS ROAD, BANGALORE-560001. PHONE: 579037, 579089. CABLE: LIVMEDIA. BANGALORE ● 12 EVEREST, 46 CHOWRINGHEE ROAD, CALCUTTA-700016. PHONE: 445398, 447726. CABLE: LIVINMEDIA. CALCUTTA ● COPYRIGHT 1984 LIVING MEDIA INDIA PVT LTD. ALL RIGHTS RESERVED THROUGHOUT THE WORLD. REPRODUCTION IN ANY FORM IS PROHIBITED. PUBLISHED BY CHANDER RAI FOR LIVING MEDIA INDIA PVT LTD. NEW DELHI AND PRINTED AT SOMAIYA PRESS INDIA LTD. FARIDABAD HARYANA ● INDIA TODAY DOES NOT TAKE RESPONSIBILITY FOR RETURNING UNSOLICITED PUBLICATION MATERIAL ●

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

FALL FROM GRACE

The cover story ("The Crumbling Citadel", April 15) has brought to light how Rajiv Gandhi has failed to establish an image that can inspire the people. He has fought a lone battle in his election campaign in Bengal and Kerala hoping to achieve an impossible success. But he only impresses himself more than anyone else. Most of us realise he is doomed.

Calcutta PRAHLAD GHOSH

■ The prime minister's appeal has been rejected outright because his citadel has proved to be one only of rosy promises. It is obvious that a young and inexperienced hand should never have been catapulted to the top spot merely due to his family background.

New Delhi KANWALDEEP SINGH

■ Your objective cover story depicting the devastating defeat of the Congress(I) must make Rajiv realise that he should do his homework well before casting aspersions on political giants like Jyoti Basu and the educated voters of Kerala.

Calcutta U.S. SAHASRANAMAN

■ It is remarkable how a person who generated so much goodwill and optimism in the country can fall from grace in the space of a few months. The Rajiv Government has now acquired the reputation of being the Government that can do nothing right.

Hyderabad JAYSHREE GURURAJ

■ By rigging the elections in Jammu & Kashmir, the NC-Congress(I) alliance has lost the sympathy and good wishes of many people in the country. Even if the elections weren't rigged, they would have got a majority in the Assembly. A clean election would have been a triumph of Indian democracy. Now there has emerged a new youth force, angry and disillusioned by the election fraud.

New Delhi MAHESHWAR NATH KAUL

CHECK MATE

Your special report on the rift between the President and prime minister ("Unresolved Crisis", April 15) was an impartial analysis of the situation. It is true that Rajiv has not been complying with Article 78. But Zail Singh too is not above criticism. By disclosing his letters to the press and making public statements, he too is breaking conventions. Whoever might be responsible, the confrontation is sad and unfortunate.

Ahmedabad NILAY V. ANJARIA

■ By stating that "it was for the Government to decide what information was to be made available to the President", Rajiv Gandhi is acting contrary to the provisions of the Constitution. Had he made the statement as the president of the Congress(I) and not as the prime minister of the country, it could still have been overlooked. Rajiv should henceforth seek advice from an expert before making any statement.

Calcutta TARAK CHANDRA SAHA

UNDEMOCRATIC RAID

With reference to the special report on the Indian Express case ("Pandora's Box", April 15), we will now have to redefine widely used terms like 'official secrets' and 'public interest'. The present situation punishes sincere workers trying to expose law violators who are protected by the administration.

Ludhiana PUNEET MOHINDRA

■ The recent raid by the Government on the Express after the publication of the President's letter is perturbing: it is very akin to the commands of some tinpot dictator ruling a banana republic. Where is the freedom of the press? India may have come a long way as a democracy but it still has a long way to go.

Washington D.C. AMIR C.TUTEJA

COUNTER THREAT

Your report ("Pakistan's Nuclear Bomb", March 31) was an eye-opener. It is high time India took up concrete measures to counter the threat. The country cannot exist only by peaceful means when threatened on all sides.

Calcutta OJIT SINGH

■ India's efforts to prevent a nuclear

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

arms race on the subcontinent have failed in view of Pakistan's adamant attitude to build a bomb. Now, India has to synthesise a new policy taking into account the fact that Pakistan has got a bomb. Opposition parties as well as the people will support a move for India to go nuclear for security reasons. However, I think India should negotiate with Pakistan on the nuclear weapons issue but not from a position of weakness.

Pant Nagar — ARUN SAXENA

■ Had our defence planners been smarter, then Pakistan's claim that they were about to acquire a bomb would have made no difference to us. We too should have joined this exclusive club when China went nuclear in the 1970s, instead of now being held hostage by the Muslim bomb. The Government should take a mature view of the problem and not act in haste.

Nairobi — K.K. SOLANKI

NEEDY OPPOSITION

Your Comment ("The Unbalanced System", March 31) was thought-provoking. It is unfortunate that today we don't have a political party that can be an alternative to the Congress(I) at the national level. The voter is therefore compelled to vote for the Congress(I). Lack of unity and mutual understanding among the opposition parties is chiefly responsible for this. Democracy will be in danger if no strong and viable opposition party emerges soon.

Vijayawada — S. ABDUL KHALIK

■ Your timely comment presents an accurate analysis of the state of our opposition parties which have failed to gain the confidence of the people. The constant failure of our leaders in arriving at a consensus at the time of elections has left us without any unified opposition to counter the political monopoly of the ruling party. As long as regional and linguistic chauvinists continue to stand as bottle-necks, the concept of a united opposition will remain a wild goose chase. A common commander capable of weaving an effective strategy is the need of the hour.

Lucknow — D.V.S. PRATAP

INSECURE FATE

Your story ("Trial by Terror", March 31) deals with judicial officers who deliver unfavourable judgements leaving their fate to God. Judges are demoralised not only in Punjab but also in Assam, where they are responsible for trying illegal immigrants.

While the Government promised to provide all sorts of facilities including tight security for them, it has done nothing. The judges are left to their own fate, without security guards, cars and at low salaries. The Supreme Court should, at the very least, look after its own people, especially those who are serving in sensitive areas.

Vishakhapatnam — MARELLA CHALAPATI RAO

WELCOME MOVE

The take-over of the Vaishno Devi shrine ("No Holds Barred Battle", March 31) by an independent board is the best step that could have been taken to eliminate corruption in this holy place. For the last six years I have noticed that the pujaris inside the cave temple are very swift in pocketing alms offered by the devotees. Kudos to Governor Jagmohan for taking such a drastic step.

Bombay — B.B. SHETTY

■ In the report on Vaishno Devi, the document filed in reply to the Dharmarth affidavit has been described as the Government counter-affidavit, thus giving the impression that it was filed by the Jammu & Kashmir Government. This is not correct. The state of Jammu & Kashmir has not so far filed any counter-affidavit.

The document, filed in the court, claims to be on behalf of Mata Vaishno Devi Board, of which the governor is chairman. As far as I am aware, the state Government was not consulted before the affidavit was filed. Further, the document was filed without consultation with me (I am vice-chairman of the board for life), and was not approved by the full board before its issue.

New Delhi — DR KARAN SINGH

The counter-affidavit is signed by the chief executive of the board. —Editor

NATIVE NEED

Regarding your story ("Path of Deviation", March 31), I was shocked to learn that IIT boys don't find any challenge in India. It is pathetic that they are supposed to be super brains. A brain that cannot work in one's own country is hardly a brain. Funds should not be diverted to institutes which can't produce engineers to work in India.

Sultanpur — SANJUL SAXENA

UNHOLY ALLIANCE

Your story on Chandraswamy ("The Political Search", March 31) made me feel that politics and religion are the worst cocktail which can ruin any society. It has already happened with devastating effect in Iran, Sri Lanka, West Asian countries and now in our own Punjab and Gujarat. The so-called god men are much more power hungry than the professional politicians and their alliance today must be broken.

Coimbatore — J.V.V. MURTHY

PEOPLE PLAYER

Every Indian must honour Srikkant ("Explosive Entertainer", March 31) for he plays for them. "Bang, bang" is his way of life, and he takes on problems with a wink, a shrug and a smile.

New Delhi — ASHOK VISWANATHAN

DOON DOOM

It might be a "Doon Boon" (March 31) but for Pachmarhi it will only mean doom. Setting up a Doon School might bring in revenue to the Government. But the sudden increase in population will irreparably damage the way of life of the people in this natural hill station. The 'Queen of the Satpuras' should be left alone.

Dehra Dun — RAJAT BAIJAL

■ It is sad to see the Madhya Pradesh Government bending backwards to give out 200 acres of land for another Doon School. The forest minister believes the forest area will not be disturbed in the project but this is possible only if the school is built on the trees.

Chandigarh — ARUN SAWHNEY

REALISTIC PORTRAYAL

Your article ("Rule by Whim", April 15) is an apt portrayal of Tamil Nadu politics. There is virtually one-man rule here. Opposing Hindi, free noon meal scheme, free chappals and free note books—these 'important' schemes occupy the government. Issues like unemployment, drought, the indiscriminate felling of trees or bureaucratic corruption are not recognised. And now the leader of the House has moved a resolution treating a magazine editor on par with a criminal. The Indian press must continue to play an impartial role in reporting the priority issues.

Madras — S. RETNASWAMY

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The things you notice make you choose TWA's Ambassador Class.

I noticed how I sailed through the airport for a start.

I had my boarding card and seat reservations before I got there. Dropped my bag at the special Ambassador Class desk. Got a lovely smile. And I was off to the plane.

You notice the friendly welcome from the crew there. A real, warm TWA American welcome.

Then the seat. Called a 'Business Lounger.' You can't miss it—the widest business class seat across the Atlantic, no less. Only six across you notice. Two by two. So there's a lot of room in the cabin. Spacious luxury.

You notice how you can really stretch. Tilt back. Sit up. Relax or work in comfort. Or both.

And that marvellous TWA American service. Everyone notices that. Flight Attendants who really know how to look after you. Attentive. But know how to leave you in peace if you want it.

Interesting menu and very good cuisine. Some nice wines, too. Drinks whenever you want them.

When you arrive, you know, they give Ambassador Class luggage priority. So you don't have to wait around at the carousel.

TWA flies to almost 100 US cities. And you can enjoy the quiet, relaxed comfort of TWA's superb service all the way.

There's such a lot you'll notice about TWA's Ambassador Class. All of it good. And it's the things you notice that make you like it.

For further details contact your favourite Travel Agent or call TWA (Bombay) at 223081.

TWA-438/86 R

Leading the way to the USA.

TWA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

RELIANCE CUP 1987
CRICKET FOR PEACE
Reliance CUP 1987
The cricket event
VIMAL
The Official Fabric for Reliance Cup 1987
Fabric PERFECTION
Polyester Viscose

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Champ

To his old school boys, he's the daredevil who'd pick up a challenge anytime.

To his sports club, he's the whiz-kid whose game is worth a watch.

To his business associates, he's the strategist who knows when to move in for a kill.

To his parents, he's a chip of the old block, good humour and all.

To the woman in his life, he's the confidence that the good times will never end.

He works and plays to win.

He's a champ.

Champ condoms. Ribbed in texture and lubricated. For extra feel, extra sensation. Like never before.

Champ. For the pleasure of being one.

A TTK PRODUCT

TTK-1962 B

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Diversionary Tactics

THE appointment of the Thakkar Commission last fortnight is a classic case of how not to seek the truth, and how not to misuse commissions of inquiry. If the Government has nothing to hide vis-a-vis the Fairfax affair, the direct and straightforward way to handle the questions raised by it would have been to make a full disclosure in Parliament, and if necessary, to show clamouring MPs the relevant file(s), so that they could see for themselves that what the Government was saying was the full and unalloyed truth. There the matter would have ended, quickly and cleanly.

Instead, the subject has been referred to a two-judge commission of inquiry with terms of reference that smack, more than a little, of intra-government politicking. The circumstances in which the commission was appointed also point clearly to diversionary tactics, and an effort to buy time in the face of pressure from opposition MPs on the floor of the Lok Sabha. Buying time may be an acceptable objective in the context of a communal riot, when inflamed passions have to be cooled by the promise of a manifestly impartial inquiry. But when a similar strategy is deployed in wholly different circumstances, it amounts to a violation of the purpose that inquiry commissions are supposed to serve. Indeed, it might even indicate a certain contempt for the judicial process.

Cartoon by AJIT NINAN

Even before this latest episode, such commissions had become an over-used (and somewhat devalued) weapon. The Kudal Commission went on for five long years with its nit-picking and pointless inquiry into some voluntary organisations, and gave every impression of being a witch-hunt. The commission had little reason to be appointed in the first place, yet it was given repeated extensions of life in a manner that pointed to the motivating force being political hostility to organisations linked with the late Jayaprakash Narayan.

The Sarkaria Commission—now in its fifth year—was another stratagem devised by Indira Gandhi to buy time, because she sought to defuse the increasingly contentious issue of Centre-state relations by referring the matter to a commission. This was in January 1983. But even as Justice Sarkaria has persisted with his labours, the political context has changed dramatically and his report—when it is finally ready—might well turn out to be irrelevant. Punjab, somewhat tellingly, has not even responded to the commission's questionnaire so far, although this was sent out more than three years ago.

Several other commissions, appointed in different circumstances, have been equally counter-productive. The Ranganath Misra Commission was set up somewhat belatedly to make up for the Delhi police not having acted decisively to first prevent the riots in November 1984, and then to bring the culprits to book. But the commission's report—submitted after nearly two years—is patently inadequate, lacks conviction and has served practically no purpose. The Mathew and Venkatramiah commissions were two other futile exercises. Both panels went into the question of land to be given to Haryana in lieu of Chandigarh. One came up with no solution at all and the other turned in an unacceptable verdict. Both instances pointed to the basic lesson, that the Punjab issue is one that has to be sorted out politically, not judicially. In essence, it is after all a political problem.

This list can go on. Practically every communal riot is followed by the prompt appointment of a judicial commission of inquiry. But there is virtually no case where the report of such a commission has been followed by the booking of the culprits who set off the riot or fanned its flames. Such exercises may as well have not been undertaken for all the good they did.

There are several costs attached to this proliferation of pointless commissions. They take up building space, need secretarial staff, draw on people's time, and cost money. They also create a situation where people are tempted to prolong their tenure in order to continue drawing a salary and enjoying the perquisites of office. And a government that should be vigilant against this, has often chosen to turn a blind eye.

However, the biggest price to be paid will be through loss of credibility. Already, the amendment to the law last year—enabling the Government to withhold the report of any inquiry commission if this is deemed to be in 'public interest'—has by definition, devalued all commissions of inquiry. For how does one know what fate will greet their findings? But going beyond this, if it becomes routine to reject the findings of judges who sit on such commissions—either because the procedures were not properly followed, or because events have overtaken the inquiry process, or because the issues were too contentious in any case, or simply because political parties want to make capital out of a handy situation—then what was once seen as an exercise conducted from a respectable pedestal with wisdom and impartiality, will stand reduced to the level of street politics.

Indeed, if the latest Thakkar Commission has been appointed as a result of political manoeuvres, then it has willy-nilly become a part of street politics. Its findings may eventually be unobjectionable, but it can nevertheless become a target of political attack that will, once again, do no good to a valuable constitutional device that has already been steadily devalued.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

PAITHAN

Where 1.3 million gallons/day of spare water capacity is ready to be tapped.
Where
the close proximity of Aurangabad opens
new vistas of trade.

Come discover Paithan where SICOM is generating new industrial growth.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Yes. SICOM invites you to invest in Paithan, a satellite growth centre in close proximity to Aurangabad.

At Paithan, land comes cheap. And the spare capacity of water and power, will amply meet your needs.

Today, Paithan is more than just a growth centre. It's a growing township, where you have easy access to communications, housing, medical and education facilities.

And quite a bit of it has been SICOM's doing.

In keeping with its 20-year tradition, SICOM is furthering Maharashtra's industrial capabilities... ushering in a second industrial revolution.

It's promoting Petrochemicals, Telecommunications, Electronics, Laser Technology, Synthetic Fibres, Computers, Processed Foods...and developing new growth centres in Chiplun, Jalgaon, Nanded, Wardha and other places, to provide the necessary infrastructure.

Here's how SICOM helps you start your industry in Maharashtra's developing areas:

SICOM – accompanies you at every step.
Right from conception to the post-production of your unit, SICOM is there to help you with technical consultancy services, feasibility studies and expert guidance in plant location. What's more, it escorts you by co-ordinating with the concerned state-level agencies to get a need-based mix of infrastructure – both industrial and social.

SICOM – assists you financially.
Whether it's term loan, seed capital, direct subscription to share capital, equipment leasing, equipment finance or venture capital and market development assistance for non-resident Indians, SICOM ensures prompt service.

SICOM – offers you an irresistible package of incentives.
As an agent for the State Government's Package Scheme of Incentives, SICOM offers various benefits depending on your plant location. These include special capital incentive as a grant for new projects and excellent sales tax benefits.

SICOM – invites you to pioneer.
Start a pioneer unit with a stipulated investment in a virgin taluka or invest over Rs. 25 crores in any taluka and you get maximum benefits as incentives.

SICOM – supports innovative ideas.
Apart from reduction in sales tax on electronic items, Maharashtra has created electronic industrial estates in Pune, Nagpur and Aurangabad. What's more, if you start an electronic unit, SICOM offers attractive incentives for a period of seven years under a special scheme.

SICOM – keeps you growing.
Your relationship with SICOM can never end. Whether it's expansion, diversification or modernization, SICOM's expertise provides all the necessary inputs to keep you growing.

Such personalised service explains why over 4000 SICOM- aided projects have come up in Maharashtra, with a total investment of Rs. 5,018 crores providing employment to about 2,70,000 people.

SICOM already shares Paithan with:
* Devidayal Rolling Mills Pvt. Ltd.
* Fouress Engineering (India) Pvt.Ltd.
* Hindustan Ferodo
* Jain Spinners Ltd.
* May & Baker (India) Ltd.
* Rolloy Metals Ltd.
* Universal Luggage Manufacturing Co. Ltd.

THE STATE INDUSTRIAL AND INVESTMENT CORPORATION OF MAHARASHTRA LIMITED
Nirmal, 1st floor, Nariman Point,
Bombay 400 021.
Phone: 2023018. Telex: 011-3066.

Pioneering Maharashtra's Second Industrial Revolution.

SICOM

CLARION/B/SM/41/238

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

INDIA TODAY
INTERNATIONAL EDITION

GIFT INDIA TO SOMEONE YOU CARE FOR...

GIFT FOR
ADDRESS
CITY CODE
COUNTRY

Please send one year's subscription of INDIA TODAY, International Edition and my gift card to the person named above. Enclosed is my cheque/DD/M.O. for Rs_____ payable to Living Media India Pvt. Ltd.

MY NAME
ADDRESS
CITY CODE
COUNTRY

Send this advertisement and payment to:
Living Media India Pvt. Ltd.
Subscription Department
P.B. No. 69, Delhi-Mathura Road
Faridabad 121007, Haryana, India

Annual Airmail Subscription Rates

Rs 585
ABU DHABI, AFGHANISTHAN, ANTIGUA, AUSTRALIA, BAHRAIN, BAHAMAS, BARBADOS, BELGIUM, BRAZIL, BULGARIA, BURMA, CANADA, CHINA, CHILE, COLOMBIA, DENMARK, EGYPT, ETHIOPIA, FIJI, FRANCE, W. GERMANY, GHANA, GIBRALTAR, GREECE, GUYANA, HAWAI, HONG KONG, HUNGARY, INDONESIA, IRAN, IRAQ, IRELAND, ITALY, JAMAICA, JAPAN, JORDON, KAMPUCHEA, KENYA, KUWAIT, S. KOREA, LAOS, LEBANON, MALAYSIA, MALAWI, MALDIVES, MEXICO, MORROCO, NETHERLANDS, NEW ZEALAND, NORWAY, OMAN, PAKISTAN, PANAMA, PHILIPPINES, POLAND, QATAR, ROMANIA, SAUDI ARABIA, SEYCHELLES, SHARJAH, SIERRA LEONE, SINGAPORE, SOUTH AFRICA, SPAIN, SRI LANKA, SUDAN, SWITZERLAND, SYRIA, TAIWAN, TANZANIA, THAILAND, UAE, UGANDA, UK, USA, VENEZUELA, YUGOSLAVIA, YEMEN, ZAMBIA, ZIMBABWE

Rs 185
BANGLADESH, BHUTAN, NEPAL

NH 943

The Times of India

- To use a jargon, it is sheer verbal calisthenics reeking of garlic from every pore.
  ■ AMITABH BACHCHAN, refuting allegations against his brother and himself in the Lok Sabha

- I am convinced that our investigation has hit a raw nerve. Consequently, someone is out not only to get Gurumurthy but us as well.
  ■ MICHAEL HERSHMAN, president of Fairfax, in The Telegraph

- I think Gianiji is too wise, too shrewd, too down to earth, too matter of fact for all of them (the Opposition). At the appropriate time, he will frustrate their evil designs.
  ■ A.R. ANTULAY in The Illustrated Weekly of India

- Over the one hundred years that it (the Congress-I) has been in existence, it has developed a certain flabbiness.
  ■ RAJIV GANDHI in Newsweek

- I don't believe in the personality cult. Yet I know that the leadership quality of a person is very crucial if he is to guide the nation and take it ahead.
  ■ ZAIL SINGH in The Illustrated Weekly of India

- I couldn't care less how well they (the MUF) do in the elections. I am still going to crush them—whatever methods I have to use. I am going to wipe them out.
  ■ FAROOQ ABDULLAH in The Sunday Observer

- Muslim ministers, open your eyes and your ears. Or I will have your kothis burnt. We will...break your legs.
  ■ SYED ABDULLAH BUKHARI, Imam of Jama Masjid, at the New Delhi rally organised by the Babri Masjid Action Committee

- These 53 days (of the peace march) have taught me more than 53 years of an actor's life.
  ■ SUNIL DUTT in The Sunday Observer

- I don't know how clean he (Rajiv) is. He started saying it but is he Mr Clean? Spending crores of rupees on his safety is not cleanliness.
  ■ MORARJI DESAI in Onlooker

- We no longer want to be ruled. We want to be the rulers in a society in which all will have equal status and self-respect.
  ■ KANSHI RAM, chief, Bahujan Samaj Party, in Indian Express

- Show me a professional who does things for love. I am a professional; I want cash for anything I do.
  ■ SUNIL GAVASKAR in Sportsworld

- My vocation in life was to be a nun. After I have had my share of men and films, maybe I will become one.
  ■ KIMI KATKAR in Cine Blitz

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

ALLWYN NISSAN

CABSTAR

Mini Bus

The only 16-seater with state-of-the art Japanese technology

A winner from Allwyn Nissan. Deluxe comfort for travellers : plush seats, softer suspension for the smoothest of smooth rides ... Truly, a superb vehicle built on the proven design of Nissan that has introduced an unthinkably low noise and vibration level ever known in a passenger vehicle. Plus, the option of airconditioning with overhead fans for free circulation of air.

For the operator, it's a new high in operational economy.

Highly fuel-efficient. Virtually maintenance-free.

Also available, the 9-seater Luxury Coach with high fidelity stereo system. And, a host of thoughtful features that make it the ultimate in passenger comfort : tinted glasses; reclinable seats with foam; rectangular roof lamps; carpet; curtains; quartz clock; luggage boot, and to top it all, a fully insulated saloon.

ALLWYN NISSAN
CABSTAR
the right commercial vehicle

NISSAN

ALLWYN NISSAN LIMITED
Allwyn Bhavan, Sanathnagar
Hyderabad 500 018

Also available on DGS&D rate contract

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri
CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

a Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Someday all cameras will be like the Minolta 7000.

MINOLTA

The Minolta 7000 has changed SLR photography forever with an astonishing standard of technical innovation. It gives you Minolta's Hi-Tech autofocus with computer controlled accuracy, so fast and precise that it becomes an extension of your eye, even in flash photography. Automatic Multi-Program Selection, so intelligent that it automatically makes all exposure decisions and settings for you, even selecting the right program for the Minolta AF lens you're using. Fully automatic film control that ends film loading, winding and rewinding worries. Touch control operation that assures quick, precise settings for all camera functions. And the world's widest array of AF lenses, from 24mm to 600mm. All in all, the Minolta 7000 lets you capture the split-second experiences of life as they happen, instantly, accurately and exactly the way you see them. Someday all cameras will be like the Minolta 7000. But for now, this is the one to own.

The Hi-Tech Autofocus SLR

7000

Minolta Camera Co., Ltd. 30, 2-Chome, Azuchi-Machi, Higashi-Ku, Osaka 541, Japan

For information

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Cartoons by AJIT NINAN

CONMAN UNCOVERED

■ Clothes make the conman. But then, they can also unmake. Witness the beribboned gentleman in fatigues who decided to sell his services in a not so honourable way. Going by the premise that there is a sucker around every corner, the glib talker, with ramrod back and stiff upper lip and armed with forged receipt books and rubber stamps, went hunting for unsuspecting civilians. On cornering a likely mark, he would promise him access to military canteens where goods are available at prices cheaper than the market and take him there, ask for an advance, and make him wait outside since "civilians were not allowed in".

But while the customers were cooling their heels outside, the 'good samaritan' had already vanished—in search of another sucker, obviously. And he found many willing to part with their money and in various cities.

But it was his clothes that undid him. And his penchant for daredevil driving. Caught for speeding, it was the immaculately creased uniform beside him that aroused suspicion. The police discovered the man was a clever crook whose only contact with the army was the uniform he had obtained. Moral: not all officers are gentlemen.

MINIATURE MISSIVE

■ Engrained in this little kernel is a lot of substance. To be precise, 428 words. Gangaram Soni, an artist from Baroda, has written what ranks as the smallest letter ever written to date, and in the process, has turned what the average man would make a morsel of into a work of art. For this letter has been written on one single grain of rice, and addressed, quite appropriately, to the publisher of the Guinness Book of World Records.

The diminuitive epistle, which took its author more than a month to pen down, is supposed to be at least one hundred times smaller than the existing record-holder mentioned in the Guinness Book—a miniature which measures just 1.75 square inches.

But that is not all that appears to have flowed from the brush-strokes of the talented engraver. His unique gallery of miniscule art includes multi-coloured portraits of such diverse personages as Mahatma Gandhi, Indira Gandhi, Pope John Paul II, and Sheikh Khalifa Hamad Al Thane, Emir of Qatar—all etched on granules of rice or mustard seed. Seeds of a great talent, there.

DUNG STRUCK

■ It is rare indeed to find politicians trying to set the bureaucracy right. And those that use novel methods of persuasion to make their victims penitent are an even rarer species. An MLA from Maharashtra was, however, obviously inspired to such heights when he barged into the office of an accounts officer, notorious for his excesses, in the Maharashtra State Electricity Board.

Taking the law into his own hands and fired by the noble principles of defending his constituents' interests, the MLA then launched into a tirade against the startled public servant, asking him questions like: Why do people get bills for electricity they haven't used? Why did you tell poor so-and-so to get out? Why do you harass customers unremittingly?

The barrage of questions was met by an electrifying silence. And then the MLA let loose his parting shot. Producing a lump of cow dung, he flung it right at the official's face. "This isn't the last of the dung, if you don't reform your ways," he threatened the dung-struck official before stalking out. Last heard, the accounts officer was registering a police complaint, while the MLA was, presumably, collecting more of his deadly missiles.

FIERY FEUD

■ The gospel lays down the law: do not covet thy neighbour's wife. Or his house for that matter, as a hapless arsonist in Mancheriyal in Andhra Pradesh realised.

The fracas started in the guise of a mere difference of opinion over which party to vote for in the coming elections. When one hot-headed man asked his neighbour his preference, he discovered to his horror that the latter favoured the ruling party—which he strongly opposed. In decidedly unneighbourly tones clearly audible to all in the vicinity, the irate villager threatened to set fire to the neighbour's home if he voted for the ruling party.

Threats notwithstanding, the neighbour decided to stick to his political beliefs. After election day was over, he proudly announced that he had voted as he pleased. His vengeful neighbour then started to shore up his determination with liberal amounts of liquor before carrying out his fiery threat. But when the deed was done, and the arsonist sat back to survey his handiwork, he discovered that the fingers that had been burnt were his own—in his inebriated state, he had set fire to his own dwelling.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BHADRACHALAM PAPERBOARDS LIMITED

An enterprise promoted by I.T.C. Limited.

"Your Company has relied on the merits of technology development indigenously and in-house and sought to create conditions of enterprise, freedom to explore and facilities to experiment, and in short, set up a technology culture within which technological advancement flourishes."

PERFORMANCE HIGHLIGHTS

The Report and Accounts of your Company including the Notice to Shareholders are already with you and I hope you have had the opportunity to peruse them. You would have observed that operating results, in the context of the paper industry's difficult environment, have again been satisfactory, enabling your Directors to recommend a step-up of the dividend rate.

In addition, I would like to draw your attention to three particular developments that are welcome. Firstly, the Government of Andhra Pradesh and your Company were able to arrive at a mutually acceptable basis of settlement on all outstanding issues of incentives and concessions. I would like to thank the Government for their willingness to engage in a dialogue, and their goodwill and objectivity in resolving these matters.Secondly, your Company's stand on depreciation treatment until the previous year has been validated by the Department of Company Affairs circular issued in May 1986, serving to set at rest related uncertainties. Thirdly, with the repeal of the Paper Control Order the prejudice that your Company had faced in recent years and was threatened with in the future, has now been removed.

Three years ago at such a meeting, I had touched on the paradoxical situation where your Company, despite sustained high productivity levels, was unable to create surpluses for distribution. I would like to assure you that with perseverence and continued productivity, that phase is behind us and your Company is now in reasonably secure financial health. I would like to thank you for your patience, understanding and support in the interim.

PRODUCTIVITY AND TECHNOLOGY

Productivity is the call of the nation. Much has been said about productivity in the recent past and much remains to be said. The Hon'ble Prime Minister, introducing the Finance Bill in the Lok Sabha in February this year has again expressed the Government's determination to provide a framework of sustained growth on the basis of modernisation of India's agriculture and industry. He has reiterated that "efficiency and productivity have to be increased. Existing technology has to be upgraded. New technology has to be absorbed and further developed indigenously." He has added "we are encouraging economies of scale in production, induction of modern technology and greater competition to increase production, reduce costs and improve quality."

The paper industry is one of the technology driven industries in the world. I would like to take a few moments of your time to share with you how much your Company has progressed through increasing production, reducing costs and improving quality by the use of science and technology.

Your Company recognises that technology is a form of resource endowment, a body of scientific and technical knowledge, an amalgam of know-how and know-why, that is available for the production of cost and value efficient goods of today and for tomorrow. It believes that technology can become the vital input for engendering growth, provided it can be properly marshalled and internalised, along with adequate stocks of human and physical capital, within an environment that creates the necessary conditions for optimum utilisation.

THE TECHNOLOGY MISSION

Accordingly, the technology mission of your Company is premised on twin pillars of continuous technology assessment and dedicated technology management. In outline, its thrust lies in:

Technologically oriented marketing, which means striving to visualise niches and gaps, designing or redesigning products with properties and uses both needed and wanted, and arranging the most fertile interface between customer requirements and product development.

Management of indigenous research and experimentation, with in-house efforts directed towards establishing modified process technology parameters using existing and alternative combinations of principal raw materials and inputs, for cost-efficient product quality assurance and enhancement, towards new product design engineering and in areas of energy conservation, pollution control and waste recycling.

Technical engineering and operating systems for optimum performance of high technology and expensive capital equipment, as well as augmentation of plant capabilities through additions, modifications, and balancing for improved machine performance and efficiencies, product line versatility and outputs, enhanced product quality properties and overall cost effectiveness.

Management of scarce national resources by conservation and substitution, and taking required initiative in their regeneration, where vitally important.

Technological intelligence and knowledge gathering for an ongoing assessment of upgradation needs and technology related opportunities, simultaneously with expansion of knowledge horizons and updating of technical skills of manpower on a broad front for productivity.

APPROACH TO TECHNOLOGY – PROJECT PHASE

The first expressions of BPL's approach to technology are to be found in the project phase of your mill at Bhadrachalam. The greatest attention was given to design, development, and process flow. Internationally proven technology was chosen for the pulp mill and the pulping process and facilities expressly adapted to accept mixed hardwoods, supplies of which were sent abroad for extensive laboratory tests and equipment manufacturers' pilot plant trials. The other noteworthy event was the selection of a combination paper making machine capable of producing grades of both paper and paperboard. This machine was custom-designed and adopted the most uptodate technological features at every stage for production versatility and quality manufacture. Care was taken to ensure that high performance main machinery and equipment did not suffer for want of support systems. Automation and sophisticated instrument control were given the highest importance. Energy conservation systems under the 'total energy concept' were designed as an integral part of the total configuration. Effluent treatment and discharge systems were developed at standards exceeding mandatory requirements.

Project management was entrusted to BPL's own technical and supervisory team. The project was completed three months ahead of schedule, enabling totally satisfactory technology validation and transfer during trial production by the equipment suppliers and transfer agents. The stabilisation of the combination papermaking machine in the manufacture of the grades of paper and paperboards for which it was designed in an incredibly short time, happily proved the efficacy of technology infusion in the plant design and successful induction at launch.

Technology management, as will be seen, was introduced at the highest levels possible at the time and laid on solid foundations for economic quality manufacture, within boundaries of capital cost and mechanical capability. Recruitment of technical personnel with experience as well as academically qualified personnel was completed ahead of time, training was imparted to semi-skilled and unskilled

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Harnessing Technology for Growth

Speech of Shri S. Ghosh, Chairman, at the 11th Annual General Meeting held on 25.3.87.

employees, machine crews and teams were established, thus paving the way for smooth and effective technology absorption.

TECHNOLOGY APPLICATION — OPERATIONS PHASE

With the commencement of commercial operations in 1979, the technology potential of the installation turned 'live'. Business strategy had to be designed in order to attain economic viability in the shortest possible time and the power of technology had to be unleashed to subserve this objective. It was clear that operational superiority compared to competition had to be established very quickly in order to overcome the financial burdens of a new plant at prevailing prices compared to fifteen year and older established mills with capital costs almost one third of ours.

The optimisation of operational superiority demanded that products for manufacture had to be chosen carefully, customer acceptance of competitive quality of each product had to be ensured at competitive prices, production of better quality products had to be cost effective through high capacity utilisation and maximisation of outputs, together with economic and efficient conversion of raw materials into finished goods.

By and large, natural growth in the market-place during the past seven years has been discouraging. Paper and paperboards are intermediate industrial products, and undergo further conversion into end-products for end-uses before reaching the marketplace. In a protected market within a high cost economy, customer demand has been unstable, and the market has shown very little resilience. Regular demand for sophisticated or substantial value added quality products has been narrow, when compared to acceptable quality of commodity grades on considerations of price.

In this scenario, BPL had to adapt its technology strengths to manufacturing cost efficiency and superior competitive quality of a wider product range than earlier envisaged. In addition, it undertook to vigorously pursue product development and probe the market with new and differentiated packaging products.

Product quality is governed by a string of property determinants, some physical and some cosmetic. The relative importance of each determinant varies from customer to customer, and is dependant upon his value addition process and his customers' end-use. The technological constituent of design is the marriage of raw materials with various stages of property providing process on plant and equipment. Since these multiple stages of property transfer to the product are not mutually exclusive, the essence of technology lies in obtaining an optimal balance.

Considerable investment has been made on the process line by your Company, subsequent to the original installation to enhance its property providing attributes, and has resulted in continuous technology upgradation. Milestone achievements include substantial expansion of capability to manufacture higher substance products economically. Stepping up successfully the output levels on a consistent, quality reliable basis has been another major achievement, as this has meant removal of the slightest operating limitation at each stage of the process line. Indigenous solutions have been found to complex problems, where imported solutions have been found to be impractical or uneconomic. Furnish management has been a third major achievement area. Under Indian conditions, a multiplicity of non-standard raw materials are drawn into use, posing unique problems of product inconsistency endemic to Indian industry. That your Company's products enjoy the reputation of high consistency is testimony to the technical answers developed after long hours of research and experimentation. Inevitably, such technological upgradation has resulted in stable and standard product properties, coupled with higher outputs, minimal unplanned down-time and high operating efficiencies, all leading to tight manufacturing cost control.

Founded on these achievements, product development has received great encouragement. Differentiated products with specific property parameters have been developed for existing applications and the level of consumer acceptance has generally been high. Some of these products have resulted in better economies for the convertor-customer. In some cases, new end-use opportunities have also appeared, and traditional paper usages for specific applications have been partially displaced. For large customers, dedicated programmes of joint development have been undertaken and some unique product configurations have emerged, which competitors have not yet been able to emulate. Not only have technical solutions been found for the customer, but sizeable gains been shared with him. Your Company has also come to the rescue of customers, whose source of supply for specific products have dried up, by developing viable alternatives, and thus exploited market opportunities. The impulse for improved products or new products have not always been generated from external demands. Initiative for the development of new products expected to substitute traditional usage of other materials have sometimes been triggered by market intelligence and forecasting. Launches of such products tend to expand the market, with obvious advantages to the first entrant.

TECHNOLOGY CAPTURE AND CULTURE

Your Company's attitudes towards technology have expressed itself in many ways. In the first place, it has believed in capturing technology in curbing inflation and arresting price escalation as a major step to enlarging demand. Secondly, by employing technology, it has sought to upgrade the floor level of quality in the Indian market and encouraged competition to follow suit in the belief that the Indian consumer too has a right to quality. Thirdly, it has embraced technology in the widest sense, including scientific knowledge and technical know-how, and sought to direct it in the application mode predominantly. Fourthly, it has integrated technology in the mainstream of management and anchored it in its rightful place within the totality of business activity. Fifthly, it has relied on the merits of technology development indigenously and in-house and sought to create conditions of enterprise, freedom to explore and facilities to experiment, and in short, set up a technology culture within which technological advancement flourishes. It uses international expertise to conduct technology audits and inducts foreign technology with discretion. And finally, it has tended to direct its technology focus more and more towards higher value added new and sophisticated products to realise the maximum potential of its upgraded installation in the shortest time.

However, your Company's pursuit of technology has not always been strewn with achievements. There have been failures and disappointments too. The important thing to remember is that the zeal of the mission has not flagged and we have been winners more often than losers. What better testimony than the achievement of being awarded the National Award for highest productivity in the paper industry, for three consecutive years, in addition to numerous awards at other levels and on other dimensions.

THE FUTURE TECHNOLOGICAL CHALLENGE

My statement to you would not be complete without mention of the future. It is well known that the packaging industry is poised for growth, and it is forecast that by the turn of the century, at least half the paper industry's output will be used for packaging purposes. However, the demand for paper-based packaging materials will fragment into mushrooming end-uses, each requiring technology-based special features. It will face stiff challenge from synthetic substitutes and cost-competitiveness will continue to exert a strong influence. Your Company is presently particularly strong in packaging papers and boards, and I can foresee greater technological concentration in this area. You will perhaps agree, that the Company's current programme of modernisation, capacity enhancement and product diversification into an even wider range of value added products, on the verge of completion, is timely. It will bring in its wake, another round of technological challenge. Add to this, the overdue thrust on plantation technology, and the technology picture is complete. May it prosper. May you prosper, too.

Ladies and gentlemen, I thank you for your kind attention.

This does not purport to be a report of the proceedings of the 11th Annual General Meeting.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

More Discord

● The Congress(I) high command, already uneasy about the malaise within its ranks, is doubly troubled over serious dissidence it will encounter from within another quarter of the party over yet another burning issue. A bill to enact a new uniform civil code is soon to be introduced in Parliament and, in view of the massive rally held at the Delhi Boat Club over the Babri Masjid issue at which inflammatory speeches were made, important members of the ruling party are in no mood, they say, to give in any more to communalists. Already the dissidents have begun to attack the incipient legislation, supported by the prime minister, as "pandering to minorities and religious fundamentalism," on the grounds that participation in the code will be optional. Critics of the legislation are insisting on the compulsory inclusion of all religious communities. And in this battle, the dissidents have as their leader veteran Congressman Bhanu Prakash Singh, a former cabinet minister in Indira Gandhi's government. Singh has already dashed off several acrimonious letters to Rajiv warning him not to "appease the minorities" in enacting the civil code or to give in on the ticklish Babri Masjid-Ramjanmabhoomi issue. He wrote recently: "People are apprehensive of some of the decisions taken by you. This apprehension is reaching the level of alarm and hostility."

Closet Spies

● Now that the word is out that the Government of India—particularly the Finance Ministry—dishes out sackfulls of money to all shades of local and international "informers", a la Fairfax, for providing surreptitious leads designed to help in law enforcement investigations, a whole bunch of people have started knocking at government doors promising to shed light on Watergates yet unknown. And many of them are hanging around with outstretched palms demanding their pound of flesh for information they claim to have provided in the past.

But the most outrageous example is that of a prominent member of Parliament. This eminent worthy has now written a letter to the Finance Ministry demanding to be handsomely rewarded as an informer. He claims that on the basis of certain issues he raised in Parliament, the ministry's enforcement sleuths were able to crack a criminal case successfully. The ministry is quite Fairfaxed about how they should react.

Desert Chill

● The Ministry of External Affairs has found itself in a quandary over the sudden chill that has crept into India's relations with the Arab states, thanks to the serious gaffe made by Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi regarding Pakistan's nuclear bomb.

In an informal chat with Delhi-based American correspondents last fortnight, the prime minister made the rather insensitive, off-the-cuff remark that Pakistan's Islamic bomb was funded by Arabs and therefore would be made available to them.

The ministry's anxiety is understandable since India's excellent relations with the Arab countries are one of the high points of its foreign policy. The Arab countries have given India solid support during India's leadership of the Non-Aligned Movement and look upon New Delhi as a spokesman of the Third World. The Arab League has already come out with a strong statement condemning Rajiv's statement as "uncharacteristically hostile, deeply disconcerting and particularly distressing" to the Arab world at large. The Arab League spokesman further added: "I strongly hope that Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi will realise the damage that can be caused to Indo-Arab relations by these sort of unfortunate remarks." Sentiments which the Ministry of External Affairs understands and fervently shares.

Cartoons by AJIT NINAN

Key Advisor

● The question everybody seems to be asking everybody else in the capital these days is: who is advising the prime minister? Whom does he listen to? Who is the chosen one? Insiders say Rajiv prefers to depend now on fewer and fewer people; almost none of them are politicians and certainly no one belongs to the old guard.

So it doesn't come as a surprise that Rajiv has been leaning more and more of late on the advice of NRI telecommunications genius Sam Pitroda, who is here to help fix the country's dilapidated telephone system. Sam, it will be recalled, was recently called upon to advise senior government secretaries on how to make audio-visual presentations to the Prime Minister's Secretariat. Friends of Sam say that he is about to get a new assignment from the PM's office—helping draw up a blueprint on how to reorganise the Congress(I). This, even by Sam's standards, is a really tall order—he being no politician—and one which he is likely to politely refuse to obey.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Now, the way to beat holiday inflation once and for all...

in style!

Ansals Holiday Resorts Plan

The best locales for a life-time, at one-time expense.

Imagine spending 7 fun-filled days by the sea one year. And the very next year, exchanging it for 7 bracing days up in the coolness of the hills, or changing over to a week of big-time fun in a big-time metro... And in each place, availing exclusive accommodation —furnished, equipped and impeccably maintained. All reserved for you, for life. Yours to enjoy. Or to exchange, transfer or even bequeath.

Just imagine, paying for all these only once! At today's rates. And not at the rates that are rising year after year.

Starting 1988, you'll have a choice of five exquisite holiday resorts. But starting today, you have the option to book any of these places. At today's cost!

The Ansals Holiday Resorts Plan is backed by 30 years of the Ansals building expertise, innovation and foresight in real estate. And Rs. 500 crores worth of current building projects.

- Initially a choice of 5 resorts—Goa, Kulu Manali, Mussoorie, Nainital and Delhi.
- 'Floating' weeks for holidays anytime of the year. 'Flexible' weeks to be chosen within a fixed month. 'Fixed' weeks for a fixed span every year.
- Option to bank or prepone your week.
- Professionally managed.
- Two bedroom 'Apartments'. One bedroom 'Suites'. Efficiency 'Studios'. Each luxuriously furnished.
- Option to transfer or exchange your Resort accommodation. Prices from Rs. 14,000 upwards.

ansal resorts & hotels ltd.

Regd. & Head Office:
UG Floor, Indra Prakash,
21, Barakhamba Road, New Delhi-110 001.
Phones: 331-7466, 331-8195, 331-6975
Telex: 031-62626 ANSL IN
Cable: ANSALHORT

ON-LINE/ARH/87D

Sales Offices: ★ Ahmedabad: 1864/6; 'Dwarakesh' Khanpur Road, Ph: 393525; ★ Bangalore: 91/1, Infantry Road, Ph. 562479; ★ Bombay: 1211, Maker Chambers-V, Nariman Point, Ph. 225405, 232633; ★ Calcutta: Todi Mansion, 3rd Floor, P-15, India Exchange Place Ext. Ph. 278084; ★ Chandigarh: SCO 112-113, Sector 8-C, Madhya Marg, Ph. 20263, 20866, 29793; ★ Cochin: XXXVI/1544, Mahatma Gandhi Road, Ernakulam, Ph. 353904, 353878, 353853; ★ Lucknow: 9, Rani Laxmi Bai Marg, Ph. 48554; ★ Madras: "Anand House" 2nd Floor, 51, Armenian Street, Ph. 24161, 23550; ★ Hyderabad: 107, Park Lane, Secunderabad, Ph. 77910.

SEAL OF ansals DEPENDABILITY

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

YOU EXPECT MORE FROM PAN AM

AND YOU SHOULD.

There are few names left in commercial enterprise that still raise expectations among their customers.

Pan Am is one of them.

And we intend to live up to our name.

At a time when airlines shout about price and whisper about service, Pan Am is determined to provide both low prices and fast, courteous, reliable service as well.

To begin with, our maintenance staff has been diligently scrubbing and polishing our entire fleet of planes, redecorating our Clipper® and First Class with new upholstery and carpeting.

Our Engineers have installed new electronic headsets and are working on bigger, roomier storage space, new lighting and new video equipment.

We're introducing an all new reservations system which will mean faster ticketing, and shorter lines at the airport.

And, once you're comfortably on board we're working harder than ever to get you down the runway and to your destination on time. Currently, Pan Am is providing one of the most impressive on-time performance records in the industry.

Starting today you can expect even more from Pan Am, because we expect more from ourselves.

For information and reservations see your Travel Agent or call Pan Am, New Delhi 345222, 345244 or Bombay 2029048, 2029020.

Systems 395

EXPECT MORE FROM PAN AM

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The Ides of April

A shadow of sadness seemed to have darkened the fortnight that was. Darkened it, and, in not inconsiderable measure, demeaned it. After a hiatus of hesitant hope, politics was once again a dirty word. In profile, the fortnight resembled nothing more than a political menopause in the life of the country, the dividing line between a certain innocence and calloused decrepitude.

Sunil Dutt's courageous odyssey into Amritsar was a timely testimonial to peace.

And, if the main events of the fortnight appeared somewhat melodramatic and staged, it was entirely in keeping with the mood of the moment—like watching the final act in a Shakespearean tragedy: an Indianised version of Julius Caesar. Betrayals and conspiracies, plots and counter-plots and decadent palace intrigue. "An honourable man" rendered impotent and some, like Caesar's wife, rendered above suspicion. And then, the final tragic scene punctuated with the plaintive cry of "Et tu Brute". Above all, in the bloody entrails of last fortnight's happenings lay dark prophesies for the future.

V.P. Singh's political emasculation was also the emasculation of Indian politics.

Not one member of the cast enacting the drama that dominated centre-stage last fortnight emerged untainted from the experience. Neither did the audience. The significance of that cannot but be alarming. For, in the end, it was a collective loss. India's loss. Vishwanath Pratap Singh was a sacrifice to appease an immoral God. His political emasculation was also the emasculation of Indian politics. However questionable and inept his own handling of the situation, he was a symbol of something positive, of honour and integrity and half-forgotten principles. Vox Populi Singh was an apt appellation. That his honour was eventually the weapon of his defeat is a stark and sorrowful comment.

In that context, last fortnight represented the most revealing signpost to the long and slippery road that stretches ahead. It marked an ignominious end to political pretence and brought the country face to face with the precipice of reality. That, ironically, may not be such a bad thing after all. There is—as recent events have indicated—no profit in harbouring false hopes and misplaced optimism.

The increased frequency of meetings between Zail Singh and Rajiv appeared forced.

But if the issues that dominated the fortnight were depressants, there was, fortunately, a measure of dilution. Amritsar, for a short and shining moment, seemed to revert to its status of a holy city as a courageous odyssey came to an end. The emotional outpouring to film star Sunil Dutt's entry into the state and finally, the Golden Temple, was a timely testimonial to the tendrils of peace that still flourish and flower in the battlefield of Punjab.

The Indian cricket team crashed to a demoralising defeat in Sharjah.

Much of last fortnight's headlines seemed obsessed with vindication and honour. In Karnataka, Chief Minister Ramakrishna Hegde found himself hoisted on an embarrassing petard when a commission of inquiry exonerated Congress(I) leader Veerappa Moily on the charge of bribing potential defectors. Hegde had made considerable political capital from the 'Moily Tapes' in 1983 which now seem to be playing a different song.

Equally off-key was the forced reconciliation between the prime minister and the President. Their meetings may have increased in frequency but the relationship still resembled a long-divorced couple making a futile attempt to live together again. And, in Sharjah, the Indian cricket team also flattered to deceive by crashing to a demoralising defeat, thus setting the seal on a fortnight that epitomised an exceedingly unappetising slice of Indian history.

—DILIP BOBB

Introducing a new column that will endeavour to summarise the major trends of the fortnight all over the country.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The Taming of

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ng of V.P. Singh

BHAWAN SINGH

IT was a short four-minute drive, but it made instant history. Shortly after returning home from a formal dinner on the night of Saturday, April 11, defence minister Vishwanath Pratap Singh asked his son Abhay to drive him round the corner to the prime minister's residence. Singh had decided that his official Ambassador and its complement of gun-toting security guards would not be used for this particular journey.

Abhay took a break from his preparations for an MD exam and drove his father in their white Maruti van for the distance of 2 km, using the roundabout route made unavoidable by security roadblocks. The son already knew that his father's chequered political career was going into an eclipse. Because Singh carried with him a handwritten two-page resignation letter in a sealed white cover, marked simply 'Prime Minister'.

But the prime minister was out for dinner, and Singh left after handing over the envelope to an aide in the Rajiv Gandhi household. Two hours later, at midnight, Singh's multi-function telephone rang: Rajiv wanted to see him at 11 the next morning, an appointment that was subsequently re-scheduled for noon. When the two finally met for the last time as cabinet colleagues, it turned out to be an occasion for cleansing mutual suspicions and clearing the air—with the tone having been set by the defence minister's 'personal' letter. Singh was calm, Rajiv was 'gracious', and the two men whom no cabinet was large enough to accommodate together parted, seemingly, as friends.

If that was anticlimactic, after weeks of the most far-fetched and often bizarre political melodrama, it marked yet another milestone in the political evolution of Rajiv Gandhi. Another 'potential rival' had been cut to size, another once-trusted lieutenant had made his exit from the council of ministers, and after weeks of speculation about the prime minister losing control and support in the Congress(I), Rajiv Gandhi had once again shown unmistakably who was boss. Certainly, his reputation as Mr Clean took a severe beating, but Singh's failure to drum up support for his own crusade showed how little the issue mattered in Congress(I) politics.

THE RESIGNATION COUNTDOWN

January 24: Singh shifted from Finance Ministry.
March 12: Bhure Lal shifted from Enforcement Directorate.
March 13: Raid on Indian Express and Gurumurthy arrested.
March 14: CBI discloses it was looking into Fairfax affair.
March 21: Fairfax chairman declares he was engaged by government.
March 31: Lok Sabha debates Fairfax issue. Congress MPs attack Singh.
April 4: Rajiv announces a Supreme Court inquiry.
April 5: Singh reaffirms responsibility for appointing Fairfax.
April 7: Judicial panel with terms of reference loaded against Singh.
April 9: Singh announces inquiry into Rs 30 crore defence deal pay-off.
April 10: Buta Singh interrupts Singh during his statement in Lok Sabha.
April 11: Ministers criticise Singh in cabinet meeting for ordering probe.
April 12: Singh resigns from the Government.

Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The prime minister may have still rated poorly on several counts, and a severe test lay ahead in the Haryana elections. But at least in this instance, he had effortlessly outsmarted V.P. Singh, shown himself to be a politician with some manoeuvring skill, and nipped in the bud any immediate challenge to his leadership and authority. As for those dreaming of a grand phalanx moving against Rajiv—V.P. Singh, Arun Nehru and perhaps President Zail Singh—their visions lay ground in dust.

V.P. Singh himself was a suddenly transformed man. Only two days earlier, he had been a tormented politician, wanting to fight but not sure of the best method to choose. Facing attacks from his own partymen (both in Parliament and outside), finding almost no one coming publicly to his side, his defence against Dinesh Singh proving abortive and his final desperate offensive—a probe into a defence deal—boomeranging ignominiously on him, Singh had come close to breaking point, the stress showing even as he swore unfailing loyalty to Rajiv Gandhi.

With Rajiv a day before resigning: drama and intrigue

Finally he capitulated, sooner than even his supporters and well-wishers had bargained for. And amazingly—after foreclosing all future claim to government office—he suddenly became a man at peace with himself, seemingly thankful that he had been spared ambition, power and the fight required to fulfil one and seize the other. To V.P. Singh, it seemed, it was more important to prove his critics wrong, even if it was at a heavy price to himself. In words that might come back to dog him in the years ahead,

INTERVIEW

"I've rightly resigned"

ONCE the battle was over—and had been lost—Vishwanath Pratap Singh was a changed man. He was at peace with himself, was behaving (and speaking) as though the battle had never even been fought. There was no evidence of bitterness. There was not even a sense of loss. He was either an extremely good actor, or perhaps he was happy with what he had done and had therefore no demons to battle with in his mind.

Yet, only days before that, he had been a tormented minister of defence, his brow furrowed, his eyes red, his voice breaking in mid-speech. There was desolation too, that partymen were not rallying around him. It was a battle that he found he had to fight alone, and he finally decided not to fight at all.

If his mood swung so sharply within the space of a week, his answers to questions just two days before and immediately after his anticlimactic resignation from the Union Cabinet were also often at variance. Earlier, he had insisted that the question of resigning just did not arise, that his continuing in government office was in itself a measure of the trust that the prime minister had reposed in him, that he would raise in party forums, the question of Congressmen attacking him, that he fully knew when to fight, where to fight and whom to fight, indeed that he still had the fighting instinct left in him.

After Singh resigned, however, there was no question of a fight (except with the Opposition), and despite his resignation, the core of his friendship with Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi remained unaffected. Or so he felt.

Excerpts from the interview that Singh gave to INDIA TODAY a few hours after the prime minister accepted his resignation from the Union Cabinet:

Q. You seem relaxed today, in contrast to your mood earlier.

A. You do what you want to do and you're relaxed.

Q. Nevertheless, you have been going through very difficult times.

A. You are in a difficult situation if you don't know your mind.

Q. Why did you have to resign? Did you do anything that was wrong?

A. There was nothing I did wrong, and I've rightly resigned.

Q. Isn't it a tragedy that you do no wrong and still you have to quit?

A. What is the tragedy? It's no tragedy. One individual does not matter. I'm immaterial.

Q. Did you have to resign because the hiring of Fairfax and the announcement of the defence probe embarrassed the Government?

A. I do not contribute to the view that exposure of economic offenders and middlemen will in any way embarrass the Government or the party. The pursuit of economic offenders and middlemen is the policy of our party, doubly reinforced by the prime minister. This will increase the credibility of the party. How does this inquiry embarrass the Government or the party?

Q. The charge against you is that you did not consult the prime minister or the Cabinet before taking the steps that you did, and that you therefore violated the principle of collective responsibility.

A. Let the Government make a statement on this. What transpired between me and the prime minister is not for me to discuss with others.

Q. But did you or didn't you consult the prime minister?

A. There are nuances to this, and I don't want to discuss them.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Singh said: "I have quit from office to nail the lie that I was over-ambitious and sticking to the chair. I hereby publicly declare that I will not hold any government office in my life."

Singh's exit from the Government, of which he had become the shining star, came after his crusade against economic offenders had reached a stage where it was beginning to test the system itself. In the end, he found himself ranged against powerful businessmen, the majority of his own partymen—who criticised him for trying to build for himself a holier-than-thou image at the cost of the Congress(I) and the Government—officials willing to do the bidding of their political masters and even a section of the press. Singh bowed out when his announcement of a probe into an apparently scandalous defence deal (see box) led to a rising crescendo of criticism for not consulting the prime minister and the Cabinet.

The day that Singh made the announcement, he faced the embarrassment of being decried in the Lok Sabha by Home Minister Buta Singh who said that V.P. Singh's spontaneous statement in the House was "unprecedented". Later that same day, he was pilloried at a meeting of the Cabinet Committee on Political Affairs, with the attack being led by Buta Singh and Commerce Minister P. Shiv Shanker. Human Resource Development Minister P.V. Narasimha Rao maintained a neutral silence.

Then at a full meeting of the Cabinet, Singh was attacked yet again by his colleagues for not taking them and the prime minister into confidence on the defence deal probe. Singh stuck to his guns, arguing that those who said the probe embarrassed the Government or the prime minister were only providing grist to the Opposition mill. Through all this, Rajiv Gandhi did not extend support to a beleaguered Singh. By the end of the day, the Rajput raja from Manda was a shattered man, with not even psychological defences left. And some time that evening or night, he finally decided to resign.

THROUGH all this, Singh was unable to prevent the debate from getting deflected away from his own chosen mission: the rooting out of corruption. Although both the prime minister and the newly-appointed Minister of State for Finance Brahm Dutt made a point of stressing that the raids against economic offenders would continue, it was clear that this was one particular campaign which both the Government and the party felt should not be taken beyond 'reasonable' limits.

But as the Government showed divisions within its ranks—with even back-bencher Congress(I) MPs picking up the courage to speak against a ranking cabinet minister—the Opposition gleefully seized its chance, though only after hopelessly bungling during the debate on the Fairfax affair (by alleging, for instance, that Brahm Dutt had secretly visited Switzerland when he had not). On subsequent occasions, however, the Opposition was more effective. And when the Rajya Sabha reassembled after a three-week recess on April 13, a sustained bid by the combined opposition for a discussion on Singh's resignation sparked off pandemonium in the Rajya Sabha, compelling Chairman R. Venkataraman to adjourn the house twice and finally till

BHAWAN SINGH

"I will be in politics on my terms"

Q. Why did you raise the issue of loyalty, which does not go well with the kind of image you have?

A. It was not a loyalty question. It was a question of political faith.

Q. But your harping on the loyalty business diverted the issue, didn't it?

A. All sorts of things were being said. I was over-ambitious, I was scheming, the dissidents would split, I had passed papers on to the President...All kinds of nonsense. Now this is my reply.

Q. But you were out-manoeuvred in this whole episode?

A. I wasn't out-manoeuvred because I was not manoeuvring. The defence inquiry was not a manoeuvre.

Q. But the details that have come out of how you called for this particular defence file and how you sat on it till the appropriate moment....

A. They build up stories that I cannot deny. I can weather these stories.

Q. Do you think it would have been better if you had resigned earlier?

A. I was not weighing with weighing scales.

Q. People now say that you are a paper tiger. Kalpnath Rai has called you that.

A. Kalpnath Rai has called me worse things than paper tiger. He has called me one shoe.

Q. But aren't you now proved to be only a paper tiger?

A. It is according to the geometry you use.

Q. Haven't you created a history of running away from the battle, and done so again?

A. How am I running away from battle? I'll battle with the Opposition. I have chosen to be a party soldier.

Q. Why did you have to declare that you will never accept government office again? Wasn't that overreacting to the situation?

A. I will be in politics on my terms, and I will live my life. This is my way of communicating in politics. And on the mode of communicating in public life, there are no rules.

I need not have resigned, even as chief minister of Uttar Pradesh. All the leading dacoits had been eliminated, and there was just another incident. It did not mean I had to resign. So it is a question of how you communicate: it's not just through

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

April 15—when the Congress Parliamentary Party was scheduled to meet and discuss Singh's resignation. Clearly, the shockwaves created by Singh's exit would take a while to subside; indeed, pressure mounted in the party for Singh's expulsion.

MEANWHILE, the Opposition used the opportunity to try and tar the Gandhi Government. Said Jaipal Reddy, deputy leader of the Janata Parliamentary Party in the Lok Sabha: "Singh's resignation confirms that there is no place for an honest man in Rajiv Gandhi's Government. It is evident that Rajiv Gandhi has given up even the pretensions of cleanliness." Added Bharatiya Janata Party President L.K. Advani: "I think it is very difficult for any Congressman to be anywhere near the top and remain clean. I think Mr Singh has made a sensible choice."

The fact is that Singh had no choice at all. His days in the Government were numbered the day he was moved from the Finance Ministry on January 24 to take up the defence portfolio. Within hours of his departure from North Block, his trusted officials in the Finance Ministry were put under surveillance, and Singh's own actions as finance minister were confidentially scrutinised by the prime minister's aides. And once the Fairfax affair blew up in everyone's face, enforcement director Bhure Lal was swiftly moved out and revenue secretary V.C. Pande divested of his Enforcement Directorate charge.

As the Fairfax issue snowballed, the Government began to expose the divisions in its own ranks, failing to come together in order to face the Opposition unitedly. Singh was made to feel as if he had committed a crime, though the odd Congressman did speak out against this. Said former minister Arif Mohammed Khan, the fiery MP who quit last year over the Muslim Women's Bill: "Instead of defaming those who were chasing corrupt people, the Government would have done well if it had booked those who were committing crimes against the country."

Operation Bulldoze actually began against V.P.Singh with the forming of a strike force comprising Buta Singh, Shiv Shanker, Minister of State for Personnel P. Chidambaram and the prime minister's political aides Satish Sharma and Makhan Lal Fotedar, plus a few senior officials from the Prime Minister's Secretariat. Parliamentary Affairs Minister H.K.L. Bhagat was also roped in. A few hours before the crucial Fairfax debate, a dozen Congress(I) MPs were selected to speak on the discussion. Among these were the former external affairs ministers Dinesh Singh (the man who inducted V.P. Singh into the Congress in the late '60s) and Bali Ram Bhagat. Their briefing in Bhagat's room was attended by Finance Secretary S. Venkitaramanan (who was not liked by Singh), the ubiquitous Buta Singh and Minister of State for Parliamentary Affairs Shiela Dixit Throughout, people favourably inclined to V.P. Singh were not given any role.

The party line was that none of them would defend Singh; instead they would raise questions about national security and how this was breached by allowing government information to pass into foreign hands. Dinesh Singh finally set the ball rolling statements in the press.

Q. Nevertheless, wasn't it a case of overreacting?

A. Those who don't have the courage to act think so. Politics is not only office.

Q. But why did you have to foreswear government office for life?

A. It is not a resignation, it is a transformation of my way of life. I don't play games, and I am very clear what I want to do in life.

Q. What will you do in politics, now that you have sworn not to accept any government office in future?

A. I will continue doing my party work. The Congress(I) is a vast field; there are lakhs and lakhs of people in the party, and they are our strength. To be one of them is also a continuation of public life.

Q. What kind of political activity will you participate in?

A. I will identify and convey the problems of the people, farmers, the landless, the problems that the states have with the Centre.

Q. You have sworn not to accept any government office. But will you accept a party post?

A. The question is hypothetical. I haven't made up my mind...I don't think I'm inclined for a party post either.

Q. Why?

A. Because I am what I am.

Q. Will you accept the presidency of the country?

A. No.

Q. In the last two weeks, what have been your saddest moments?

A. As you can see, I am happy.

BHAWAN SINGH

"It is a transformation of my way of life"

Q. Yes, but what were your saddest moments?

A. I don't remember.

Q. Whom did you consult before you took the decision to resign?

A. On these matters the whole world doesn't matter to me.

Q. Did you consult your wife?

A. I informed her. She has got accustomed to all this.

Q. What did your son say about your resignation?

A. He is also resigned to what I do.

Q. When did you decide to resign?

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Cartoon by AJIT NINAN

when he asked "whether the purpose of this agency was to go into any kind of economic investigation or prepare a political case against the Government, against the prime minister, against various other people?" Referring to the suggestion that the finance minister did not consult the prime minister before engaging Fairfax, Singh said: "Now this is a serious insinuation that he is making. That means that the finance minister was doing something behind the back of the prime minister which would embarrass the prime minister and he would not divulge it that time but would cook up a story at the end and present it to the prime minister as a kind of blackmail. This is a very serious insinuation."

Brahm Dutt himself told Parliament that the Finance Ministry never hired Fairfax, whose status was only that of an informer. But this seemed to contradict what Singh said, that he "shared responsibility"—a point that was quickly seized by the Opposition. But the prime minister continued to show trust in Singh. He used him for laying the foundation of his meeting with the President, with Singh meeting Zail Singh a couple of days ahead, almost like an advance guard. But when the intra-party

A. I decided day-before-yesterday (Friday, April 10), maybe even before. The process of thinking in that direction had started. Yesterday I wrote out my resignation. I went to the prime minister's house at 10 p.m. My son drove me in our Maruti. The prime minister was out for dinner. I left the letter for him.

Q. If you decided to resign day-before-yesterday, why did you wait till last night to hand in your letter?

A. Because yesterday was the investiture ceremony for defence officers, and last night I had to be the host at a dinner for the officers. I didn't want to upset these arrangements.

Q. You have said in the past that you carried your letter of resignation in your pocket. Did you hand over this letter, or did you write a fresh one?

A. I don't think I have lost the ability to write.

Q. Was it a typed letter, or handwritten?

A. All my resignations have been handwritten, as commerce minister, as Uttar Pradesh chief minister, and now.

Q. Did it take you long to write the letter?

A. No, but I made out a fair copy.

Q. When did the prime minister get back to you?

A. I got a call around midnight, asking me to meet the prime minister today at 11 a.m. Then it was pushed to noon. We met for nearly half an hour. We had a heart-to-heart talk, there were some very touching moments. He said we talk as Rajiv and Vishwanath. He has been very graceful. You feel it person to person.

Q. Were you surprised by his reaction?

A. I've never had problems with the prime minister. My problems have been elsewhere.

Q. What did the prime minister say when you met him?

A. Between a prime minister and a minister, what has happened can be public. But what transpires between two friends cannot. In all this humdrum, there is a corner of personal relationship....In the last two months a lot of water has flowed under the bridge, and gone waste.

Q. Will you move out of this house, now that you are no longer a minister?

A. I do propose to move to a house to which I am entitled to as MP. My son, who according to my critics is supposed to be abroad, is sitting for his MD examination in May. After that, I will move.

Q. Will you go back to your office, to collect your personal effects?

A. I have no personal effects there. I only want to pick up my clock, it is programmed to buzz four times in the day.

Q. How will you spend your time now? Will you paint, and go back to your photography?

A. I'm out of touch with painting, I don't think I can paint again. Photography, I don't know. Now it's just lingering on. I'll just read and write.

Q. Do you sense greater support from your party people today, than before?

A. I have never gauged my support. I have known how to do my job.

Q. Do you think some of the measures you followed so doggedly will now slow down?

A. My successors will do a better job than I.

Q. Don't you think your resignation leaves the Government short of honest and efficient ministers?

A. There are others there, and there is no dearth of talent.

Q. How do you look back on your record in office?

A. I'm fairly satisfied.

Q. What do you think were your major achievements?

A. It is just the general sense of satisfaction that I have.

Q. And what were your failures?

A. I don't have...Various problems have been attended to; it's not a question of success and failure, and one should not see

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Dinesh Singh asked if the purpose of Fairfax was economic investigation or to prepare a case against the Government.

Buta Singh led the attack against V.P. Singh for not taking his colleagues and the prime minister into confidence on the defence deal probe.

criticism continued, Singh finally reacted and told Rajiv that he would not tolerate criticism, either on the question of his loyalty to the prime minister or his nationalistic credentials. Interviewed aboard an Indian Air Force plane, he said: "Do I have to certify my loyalty to those who were out of the party when we were languishing in jail? I take full responsibility for the Fairfax affair. Anyway, since when has it become anti-national to nab economic offenders?"

But this did not help. Dinesh Singh was not prevented from continuing his diatribe. In fact, Singh spoke to Rajiv twice the same day about Dinesh Singh's attack through press statements and interviews. The prime minister told him to hold himself back and assured him that Dinesh Singh would be asked to stop. But the next day's newspapers carried yet another highly critical statement against Singh.

Meanwhile, when the Opposition heat began to singe the Government, the prime minister had to make a diversionary move. Rajiv then announced that a judge of the Supreme Court would look into the Fairfax issue. But when the terms of reference were finally made known a few days later, they turned out to be heavily loaded against Singh and his officials in the Finance Ministry. The commission was asked: "Was the security of India prejudiced in any manner in making such arrangements?"

The commission's report was to be submitted in three months—by which time the budget session of Parliament would be over. And by the time Parliament meets again for the monsoon session, another hurdle—the crucial presidential election—would be over too, and a 'probing' Zail Singh would be out of office. The prime minister had moved with consummate political skill and machination and the stage was set for Singh's eventual it in individual terms.

Q. What about your fight for honesty in economic activity?

A. I will continue to fight on this.

Q. What about the role played in the last couple of weeks by people like Dinesh Singh and Buta Singh?

A. I have given my word to my leader that I will not comment on all this.

Q. Will you appear before the Fairfax commission of inquiry?

A. Most probably.

Q. But hasn't your case become weak because of your resignation?

A. How can truth be weakened? People see through all the layers.

Q. What do you have to say about the commission's terms of reference? Aren't they weighted against you?

A. Now it is there, I will not comment on this....But I do think the central issue of economic offenders and their modus operandi should be exposed by the material we have, and we should doggedly continue—as the prime minister has said—in bringing them to book, because they're not only sapping the resources of the country but spreading their tentacles. Whatever be the dust and din of debate, the focus of debate should continue on the activities of economic offenders and the scrutiny of all rules and regulations and procedures that they violate.

Q. But don't you think your campaign on this score brought about a crisis in the Government?

BHAWAN SINGH

"I will do it again"

A. I don't think it provoked a crisis, because the prime minister has said the raids have continued. There is no crisis in government.

Q. If you had to face similar situations again, how would you react?

A. If I have to blow myself up doing the right thing, I'll do it again. I've blown one side of my political life, because I wanted to.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

DEFENCE DEAL

Kickback Row

ON February 16, the then defence minister Vishwanath Pratap Singh slid athletically down the conning tower of INS Shishumar to mark the induction into the navy of India's first SSK (Submarine to Submarine Killer) built by the Howaldt Deutsche Werke (HDW) shipyard in Kiel, West Germany. In his speech, Singh remarked: "In politics too, one has to negotiate ladders. They too are steep and a lot more slippery."

Nothing could have been more ironical. The issue which appears to have finally torpedoed V.P. Singh was his hasty and seemingly suicidal anouncement of a probe into the very same deal signed with HDW for the supply and indigenous manufacture of submarines for the Indian Navy. The issue at stake, however, was not so much the acquisition of the SSK—which was in itself a controversial purchase—but the announcement that an Indian agent had been paid a staggering Rs 30 crore as 7 per cent commission on the deal.

The West German submarine in India: awkward questions

There is some mystery about the agent in question. The West German manufacturer, HDW, after a board meeting following Singh's resignation last week, issued the carefully-worded statement: "HDW states that it paid no commission to any person or firm in India in connection with the submarine contract." The key phrase is obviously 'in India'. INDIA TODAY contacted the Indian ambassador in Bonn who sent the telex regarding the Rs 30 crore commission to South Block in February. Ambassador Ajmani declined to comment, "since the matter is under investigation."

Indian newspaper reports of the time had mentioned the London-based Hindujas whose name was being circulated in defence circles at the time the submarine purchase question surfaced in April 1980 and throughout the tortuous negotiations which finally culminated in the agreement being signed in December 1981. The senior Hinduja brother, Shreechand P. Hinduja, was in Houston. His brother Gopichand was in Paris and refused to comment on the controversy until he received an okay from Shreechand on the telephone. He, however, denied that they were involved in the deal. "We totally deny that we had anything to do with earnings or any commissions on the reported submarine deal," said Gopichand.

The initial agreement was for two Type 1500 subs to be built at Kiel and two others to be built under the transfer of technology clause at Mazagon Docks. The total package, including spares, modifications and cost escalation, was to cost around Rs 450 crore.

What has churned up the political waters is the question of why Singh picked this particular deal which was signed when Mrs Gandhi was the prime minister. The implication explicit in the probe was that the Rs 30-crore commission was in turn used to pay kickbacks to key people involved in the negotiations. Even more curious is the fact that the man who represented the Defence Ministry in the final negotiations in Bonn on May 5, 1981, was S.K. Bhatnagar, the current defence secretary, who has been appointed to head the inquiry committee to probe the deal. Bhatnagar was then additional secretary in the Ministry of Defence.

However, Congress (I) members have accused Singh of trying to embarrass Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi directly by ordering the probe. The only connection that the Rajiv Gandhi Government has with the deal is that fresh talks are currently on with HDW for the purchase and construction of more SSK submarines to replace the ageing fleet of Soviet Foxtrot submarines. The new negotiations—offered as an option in the original deal—started late last year and a decision is yet to be taken.

In any event, the SSK submarine deal has been engulfed in controversy from the start. The decision to go in for more subs from western manufacturers (excluding the US) was taken in April 1980. In May, a defence team led by Bhatnagar and including the then vice-chief of naval staff and officials of the ministries of finance and law visited West Germany and Sweden. In West Germany, they visited the HDW shipyard in Kiel and the Thyssen Nordseewerke in Einden. In Sweden, they visited the Kockum shipyard. The delegation had, in fact, subsequently recommended the Swedish subs. The objection to the West German deal was that the diesel-engined subs were far too noisy, that HDW wanted major changes in the transfer of technology clause and was also not willing to give a written guarantee for supply of spares.

The deal ran into further snags when HDW representatives, who flew into New Delhi in September 1981 to finalise the agreement, announced that they were not prepared to sign the Memorandum of Understanding but instead preferred a 'Note Verbal'. This absolved them of the obligation for the supply of spares as well as modifications the Indian Navy had demanded, including reduction in the noise levels. A cabinet subcommittee was then formed to study the deal. The committee comprised the then foreign minister P.V. Narasimha Rao, finance minister R. Venkataraman and minister of state for defence, Shivraj Patil. And in December 1981, the agreement was finally signed. The Opposition had made serious allegations of kickbacks at that time and now, after six years, V.P. Singh has uncorked the genie from the bottle. But having resigned the day after announcing the probe, it is more than likely that any investigation will be consigned to the deep.

—DILIP BOBB

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"Instead of defaming those chasing the corrupt, government should book those committing crimes against the country."
ARIF MOHAMMED KHAN
former Union minister

"Our party is committed against economic offenders. All those involved must be brought to book."
ARUN NEHRU
former Union minister

ouster. Every effort was made to tarnish Singh's reputation. Favourable international press clippings were cited as evidence of his being aligned with foreign powers. Sleuths from the Central Bureau of Investigation (CBI) were unleashed to locate objectionable material about Singh, and income tax officials were directed to dig into his tax returns. A journalist who wrote a story in a Hindi magazine on Singh's trust was contacted for documents. A Lucknow newspaper alleged that the file relating to Singh's land holdings mysteriously disappeared after Singh's visit to Allahabad, suggesting that Singh was responsible for removing the files. Finance Ministry officials sacked by Singh were contacted by a senior CBI official and asked to hand over any incriminating information they had against Singh. Uttar Pradesh Chief Minister Bir Bahadur Singh was asked to study decisions taken by Singh during his chief ministership to look for wrong-doings. And it took a senior Uttar Pradesh official to point out the obvious: "It is childish to look into the deeds of a person who was suspicious of his own shadow." Added Nirmal Khatri, a former Uttar Pradesh Youth Congress(I) president and MP: "Those who are attacking V.P. Singh represent vested interests out to demolish the credibility of the Government."

MEANWHILE, Singh continued his own investigations in the Defence Ministry, and soon stumbled on what he saw as a major case of corruption. A telex message from the Indian ambassador in Bonn landed on his desk, saying that an Indian agent had been paid a commission of 7 per cent on defence equipment bought by India. The commission totalled a staggering Rs 30 crore. Since the payment was in violation of the agreement which any defence supplier signs with India—that no agent would be paid any commission on the deal—Singh followed up the matter and finally ordered the inquiry that boomeranged on him—with Rajiv Gandhi saying that there was nothing wrong with the deal, that he had not been informed, and that Singh had short-cut normal procedure. While sources close to Singh maintained that the vital telex from Bonn was sent to the prime minister, Rajiv's confidants say Singh kept the telex to himself.

But no sooner did the announcement appear in the newspapers than it was interpreted as an offensive by Singh against the prime minister and the Government: Legislative history was created the next morning in the Lok Sabha, when a minister tried to prevent another minister from making a statement in the house. As the opposition leaders rose to attack the Government, Singh offered to make a suo moto statement in the house. But Buta Singh asked the chair whether the minister was allowed to place the statement. In the din of shouting and counter-shouting, the pay-off question got drowned. Instead of an agent, it was again Singh who was the target of attack by his own partymen and ministers.

After the attacks on him in the Cabinet and

BHAWAN SINGH

Singh after resignation: at peace with himself.

CC-0. In Public Domain.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"This confirms that there's no place for an honest man in Rajiv's Government and it has many other skeletons."

JAIPAL REDDY
deputy chief, Janata Parliamentary Party

"It's very difficult for a Congressman to be anywhere near the top and remain clean. Mr Singh has made a sensible choice."

L.K. ADVANI
president, Bharatiya Janata Party

Cabinet Committee on Political Affairs, the growing criticism in other party circles and the mounting (if orchestrated) media criticism, Singh finally decided to call it a day and quit office. The only comparable case of a politician virtually taking sanyas was Jayaprakash Narayan in the 1950s, at a time when many saw him as a rival to Jawaharlal Nehru. Narayan went into political oblivion for a decade-and-a-half.

One section of the ruling party believes that with Singh's ouster from the Government, a possible threat to Rajiv's leadership has disappeared. And certainly, some of the prime minister's friends had been worried at the possible clout of a V.P.Singh-Arun Nehru combine. But when the crunch finally came, not even half a dozen legislators came out openly in Singh's support. Nehru himself refrained from public comment, except when he made an angry remark against those who spoke in Parliament against Singh. Some Congress(I) chief ministers were also perturbed over the Singh episode. Said a chief minister from north India: "Singh's exit will cause a great deal of embarrassment to the party and the Government. It could have been handled more carefully." Nevertheless, Singh was clearly an isolated and beaten man.

Most Congressmen find it difficult to defend his resignation in public. And the Opposition is likely to use this against the party in the Haryana election. For though Rajiv may have emerged stronger within the party, the prime minister will find it difficult to counter the popular belief that Singh was pushed out of office because he was looking into the accounts of both Amitabh Bachchan and his brother Ajitabh, who shifted his residence to Switzerland last year.

Inevitably, there was some pressure on the prime minister to take some action against the Bachchans. Said Arif Mohammed Khan: "A large number of Congress(I) MPs are of the opinion that if the Bachchans are the real friends of the party and the prime minister, they should offer themselves for investigation. If they have nothing to hide, then nothing will come out in the probe as well."

Meanwhile, Singh is unlikely to keep quiet in case he is asked to explain his stand. Having failed to get support among his fellow-MPs, he has already decided to address public meetings, starting in Allahabad, from where Amitabh Bachchan was elected and which has been a sparring ground for the two politicians. Said Arun Nehru: "Our party is committed to take action against economic offenders. I am confident that the Government will take every step necessary to recover the money lying abroad and give the harshest possible punishment to those involved. If any companies or individuals, irrespective of their status or reputation, are involved in this they must be brought to book."

SOME of the party MPs are now planning to meet the prime minister and urge him to attack all tax evaders so that they can neutralise opposition propaganda in the Haryana election. But whether he does or not, V.P. Singh has made his unexpectedly early exit from high office. In the process, he has acquired the reputation of a man who runs away from battle, of a man who is so sensitive to criticism and to his image being tarnished that he bends over backwards to prove his critics wrong. As a result, he seems to lack the malleability and tensile strength that a politician requires to survive the rough and tumble of politicking, the ups and downs that are part of any political career. And the odd thing late last fortnight was that V.P. Singh did not seem to mind. He had determinedly turned his face away from one phase of his life, and was looking ahead bravely to a quieter way of life. Defying all logic and human psychology, V.P. Singh seemed happy. Whether he would stay that way was the question, as his critics continued to be active and gave notice that they would not rest till he was thrown out of the party. Pressed to the wall, and left with no option, Singh might well be forced to strike back.

Rajiv Gandhi, however, has a problem on his hands. Although he quickly allotted K.C. Pant the vacant chair in the cabinet room that Singh had left behind, that still left vacant another chair vacated last month by law minister Asoke Sen, while Tourism Minister Mufti Mohammed Sayed waited for his own resignation to be accepted. No full-time finance minister existed either, nor was there a regular steel and mines minister. If all this indicated the urgent need for a major cabinet reshuffle, it also pointed to the growing shortage of trusted and capable lieutenants whom Rajiv could call upon for their services. Arun Nehru was still out of the reckoning, and only Arjun Singh and Shiv Shanker seemed to have been partially rehabilitated after they were cold-shouldered in a cabinet reshuffle last October. But that was clearly not enough. And if Rajiv Gandhi had shown his political muscle over the last six months by cutting to size ministers who had become too big for their boots, and showing party dissidents where they got off, his next political challenge (after the daunting Haryana election) must be to find or build up a new crop of lieutenants who can shoulder responsibility and make for a broad-based government.

—PRABHU CHAWLA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

PRESIDENT-PM

Shadow Boxing

THEY have met four times during the last fortnight. President Zail Singh and Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi dined together as well, when Zail Singh played host to members of Parliament from Uttar Pradesh. Two days after that, Rajiv deputed senior ministers, P. Shiv Shanker and Buta Singh, to brief the President on the controversial defence pay-off deal of Rs 30 crore.

Despite this flurry of activity, however, a meeting of hearts and minds is still to take place. Both the President and the prime minister continue to suspect each other and refuse to yield ground on even well-defined constitutional provisions. And when they met for 45 minutes last fortnight, the question of the presidential right to be informed and briefed on all national and international issues remained unresolved.

The first sequel to the two-hour meeting between the two in late March was in the form of another presidential letter. The prime minister had promised that he would see the President regularly, but it was Zail Singh who wrote to Rajiv asking him for a meeting to take their discussions forward. And in another letter, Zail Singh formally asked the prime minister to officially contradict a defamatory report against him in a Bombay weekly, Blitz, which is known for its proximity to South Block. The report implied that the Thakkar Commission had recommended a probe into Zail Singh's role in the events leading to Indira Gandhi's assassination. The President told the prime minister that one of his aides may have 'planted' the report, and demanded that the prime minister either show him the Thakkar report or the Government write to the editor.

Zail Singh had raised the issue during their first meeting, and Rajiv had assured him that he would look into the matter. The letter was despatched when there was no follow-up action. Said a presidential aide: "On the one hand they talk of respect for the President, on the other hand they turn a blind eye when a highly provocative statement against the President appears in the press. On substantive issues Rajiv has not conceded anything to the President."

At the second meeting, Zail Singh once again asserted that he would not surrender his right to be informed. He made one concession when he agreed that it was for the prime minister to decide what was to be sent to the President. But he disagreed with Rajiv's contention that the Government could deny him any information or report even after it was sought by the President in writing. And going beyond the legal technicalities, Zail Singh protested that slander was being spread against him by Rajiv's aides and by journalists briefed by them.

T.S. ASHOK

Rajiv and Zail: playing games

Though Zail Singh did not insist on the Thakkar Commission report being shown to him, he told the prime minister that he would quit office if there was even an indirect reference to him in the report. And he expressed his annoyance to the prime minister that his close proteges were circulating rumours that if the commission's report was sent to Rashtrapati Bhawan it would be leaked to the press. Said a former minister in Zail Singh's cabinet in Punjab: "They want to hold the commission report over the President's head, like a Damocles sword. Why don't they show it to him and ask for his resignation, or stop playing games with the head of state?"

Besides the Thakkar Commission report, Zail Singh also discussed the pending Postal Censorship Bill with Rajiv, and suggested that he withdraw it voluntarily so that he would not have to refer it back to Parliament. Rajiv said he would consider the suggestion.

Following the meeting, however, an attempt was made by a senior party member and Rajiv's aide to mollify the President by indirectly suggesting to him that his daughter could be given a Rajya Sabha seat and even a ministership, while his proteges in the bureaucracy and politics could be rehabilitated. On top of everything else, Zail Singh was offered facilities to live in Delhi after his retirement. Observers interpret this as a move to keep the President in good humour so that he would not create further difficulties over the Thakkar report or the Fairfax issue. But the President angrily reacted to these blandishments and told his aides and some ministers that "some people are trying to belittle the office of the President by floating these rumours. The issue is not personal, and the prime minister realises that no one can insult and humiliate the President." Zail Singh also announced during a visit to Andhra Pradesh that he would not be a candidate again for the presidency.

Meanwhile, the prime minister's camp was worried about presidential moves that seemed to be aimed at trying to gauge the mood of the dissidents in the Congress(I), by meeting V.P. Singh in particular. Apart from a formal meeting they had in March, the President called Singh aside for a 20-minute private discussion after a defence investiture ceremony last fortnight. And from the President's side, it has been made known that Rajiv's trips to Rashtrapati Bhawan are seen as little more than public relations gimmicks. Clearly, the parleying between the two will continue for a while yet.

—PRABHU CHAWLA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

From 3 key qualities and a 200 year old name...

Solidity Diversity
Dynamism

Parry's

Parry's

Parry's

Parry's

Ilkan
AL 30

EHDC/171/87 A

Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

A power packed ride and a beauty to see LML Vespa 150 NV...

In a class beyond compare.
Anywhere in the world.

Ride ... LML Vespa Ride ...
LML Vespa ... Just ride one and see.

SRISHTI/AMU37

Vespa Car Company Limited. A joint venture of Lohia Machines Limited and Piaggio of Italy.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

....evolved the new Corporate symbol.

A symbol that represents Solidity, Diversity and Dynamism – the 3 key qualities of the Parry Group today.

PARRYS

Estd. 1788 Into the future with a bold new thrust.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ambiprincess

All that is supple and graceful and magnificent, thy style and majesty doth surpass in your royal arrival, on the fashion scene. IN A WORLD APART

Ambiprincess Dress Materials

Shri Ambica Mills Ltd.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

PUNJAB

New Terrorist Targets

THE boys appeared outside a liquor shop in Amritsar just as dusk was falling and shortly after a police patrol had done its round. Nobody paid them much attention and even the attendant in the liquor shop mistook them for customers coming for their evening supplies, till the revolvers were pulled out, and the diatribe began about the terrible consequences that would befall those who persisted in plying trades that were not permitted by the Sikh religion. Before anyone knew it, they had vanished and it was only then that the group of stunned spectators realised that they had just been witness to the beginning of a new phase in Punjab's terrorist campaign: morality through the barrel of a gun. In Kartarpur, two youths with naked swords and saffron turbans walked through the bazaar telling shopkeepers that if they wanted to live, they must find other things to do than sell meat, liquor or cigarettes.

The posters appeared as insidiously as the moralists and if there were those who saw the people who put them up, they were not prepared to talk about it afterwards. The posters, which have appeared simultaneously in the vicinity of liquor and meat shops throughout Punjab's 12 districts, list 13 points that constitute the terrorists new morality. They are signed by 'Lt-General' Harjinder Singh Jinda and 'Chief General' Labh Singh of the Khalistan Commando Force. They begin with a warning that the force will fight to death the 'Hindu samaj' which is trying to mislead Sikh youths. Then follow the 13 commandments: no drinking, no tweezing of eyebrows for girls or snipping of beards for boys, no selling or eating of meat, liquor or cigarettes, no dancing and music at weddings, no baraats that include more than 11 people, no participation in Hindu jagratas or all-night prayers, no fraternising with Radhasoami Sikhs, no school uniforms that are not saffron, black and white (for girls and boys) and no wearing (or making) of 'fashion clothes'. Those disobeying the commandments, the poster states clearly, will be burned alive and if there are those, it adds, who know of officials who are corrupt or take bribes would they please come to the All-India Sikh Students Federation (AISSF) office (Gurjeet faction) in the Golden Temple with their complaints.

For a state whose people are famous for their weakness for the good life and where the good life is considered non-existent without sharab aur kabab (liquor and meat) the terrorist campaign has been remarkably successful. In the villages and smaller towns of the state there are few who dare to openly disobey the commandments. Meat shops have closed in rapid succession and the

ਖਾਲਿਸਤਾਨ ਕਮਾਂਡੋ ਫੋਰਸ ਵਲੋਂ

ਚਿਤਾਵਨੀ !

ਭਾ: ਹਰਜਿੰਦਰ ਸਿੰਘ ਜਿੰਦਾ ਭਾ: ਲਾਭ ਸਿੰਘ

The poster (left); and a closed liquor shop: burning campaign

RAVI BHANDARI

Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

only liquor available is illicit hooch.

If the aim was to terrorise people into obedience then the extremists have more than succeeded. Even for a state which has in the past four years got accustomed to terror, a new heightened level is now almost tangible in the atmosphere. In Subhanpur Chowk, a small village on the G.T. Road, near Kartarpur, the liquor shop was open but the attendant had vanished. People said he had gone to the next village and had not been seen for a few days, ever since two liquor kiosks had been burned in the nearby village of Khilchian. When asked what they thought about the terrorists enforced morality, the group of youths (both Sikh and Hindu) fell silent and some began to move away. Finally a Sikh youth who refused to identify himself said: "If we say anything, can you guarantee that you will protect us when the boys come back? First you protect us then we will talk." Asked if the village sarpanch would be prepared to talk, the same youth replied that he was a Hindu and was even less likely to talk since he was afraid for his life. In other villages, the reaction was almost exactly the same. Some people were prepared to

SUNIL DUTT

Journey's End

THE padyatra had shades of Bombay cinema right from the start. There was the actor himself setting out on a mission which, rather like the film Guide, could end up with his life on the line. Then there was his pretty young daughter, marching bravely in front with the Indian flag held aloft. And there were the motley collection of youths from Bombay, who spouted high-flown dialogue.

It was, in other words, easy to be cynical about the elements of melodrama in Sunil Dutt's Mahashanti Padyatra—until it crossed the border into Punjab last fortnight. It was then that the melodrama actually began. But this time, it had become real. Suddenly, the emotions stopped being celluloid and the 2,000 km of walking seemed to become purposeful and even necessary. Despite the sincerity of his endeavour, even Dutt could not have been prepared for the massive outpouring of emotion that greeted him once he crossed the border into Punjab.

Dutt was welcomed like a long-awaited messiah who could magically bring peace wherever he trod. Thousands lined the route and showered him with rose petals and garlands chanting, with the padyatris, "Bharat mata ki jai" and "jo boley so nihal", in one breath. Women fell weeping at his feet crying, shanti, humko shanti chahiye (we want peace), and held out their babies to be blessed. Without question, Dutt had touched a chord buried deep in the state's collective psyche—everywhere, there were as many Sikhs as Hindus—and this had resulted in a catharsis. Dutt's padyatra is the closest anyone has come to doing a vox populi in Punjab since the 1985 elections. And if the reactions are anything to go by, there is little doubt that everyone wants peace.

Dutt makes it a point to emphasise that he is not a politician. His padyatra is really his penance to purify himself. Talking to INDIA TODAY, while sheltering from rain in the shadow of a tubewell shed en route to Amritsar, he talked only of what he had learnt during the journey and how moved he had been by the response of the people. Said Dutt: "I am an actor. We are emotional people, perhaps more so than other people, and I cannot tell you what I felt when an old Sikh woman—she was 115 years old—told me she had waited two hours by the roadside to try and see me. I nearly wept when she hugged me and said that Wahe Guru would listen to me because I had walked so far for peace."

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

Sunil Dutt in Golden Temple

He explained that he had started his journey because he had read about a disabled girl who had been killed by terrorists. The incident had shocked him so deeply that he felt the need to do something himself: to find out what had gone so drastically wrong with his home state. After meeting several Sikhs, he felt that somewhere along the line their honour had been profoundly hurt and they were unable to deal with the fact that people treated them with suspicion and questioned their patriotism. "This is very wrong and I cannot understand it," said Dutt. "But I also cannot understand the hatred among Hindus and Sikhs. How can Punjab forget that Guru Govind Singh, whose father and sons were killed by the Moghuls, never once uttered a word against Islam? His fight was only against the suppression of the freedom of thought."

Dutt had just then received news that the thousands of policemen who had protected him from the moment he entered Punjab, would be removed and he would enter the Golden Temple on his own. But this, he said, did not worry him. This was the most important mission of his life. So, no matter what dangers it entailed, it would not deter him from entering the Golden Temple.

All along the journey, especially on days when the blisters on his feet had hurt and the going had been rough, it was the image of the Golden Temple and the desire to pray there for peace that had goaded him to carry on. Last week, Dutt's incredible 78-day odyssey ended emotionally when he prayed at the Harminder Sahib and held discussions with the head priests and the militants. And though the discussions yielded little of note, Dutt had made his point. His entry into the Temple was greeted by tumultuous crowds joined together for that moment in a common desire for peace.

—TAVLEEN SINGH

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

SPARTEK FLOORS: Elegant, tough, easy to maintain

SPARTEK FLOOR TILES are now made in India, in collaboration with CeramicUS of USA...leaders in ultra-modern Ceramic technology. Technology that offers you unlimited decor options - in terms of colours, designs, textures, sizes and shapes - in a flooring material that has the most advanced physical anti-wear properties till date. Including the incredible advantage of being so easy to lay that it's ready for live-in use in a matter of 48 hours.

For more details write to:
SPARTEK CERAMICS INDIA LIMITED
52 CHAMIERS ROAD,
MADRAS 600 028.

SPARTEK
Now made in India in collaboration with CeramicUS.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Kinetic Honda. You deserve nothing less.

Kinetic Honda.
With each component engineered with the belief that perfection is a need, not a luxury.
Kinetic Honda.
Now, at the touch of a mere button, leave the others behind.

Contact your nearest dealer today, for a test ride.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

24 Carats is it !

Live up to it. Or be left out.

Created & Perfected by

POLAR

makers of the SUPER fan

Available in Ivory, Ebonite, Matt Brown. And in 1050 mm, 1200 mm and 1400 mm sweep.

Pavitra DLH.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

express support but they appeared to do so out of fear rather than conviction, and everyone begged not to be identified.

Between Amritsar and Phagwara, a random survey revealed that there was virtually not a single meat or cigarette shop open anywhere along the G.T. Road. In Khilchian, a small roadside restaurant that used to be quite well-known for its non-vegetarian menu denied that it had ever served meat or chicken. The restaurant was situated directly behind the spot where two liquor kiosks were burned, but the owner denied having seen anyone or anything. "They came after 11 p.m. when the whole village was asleep," he said.

In the cities, shops selling liquor and meat have remained open, but this was because they had no choice. Said a butcher in Amritsar: "Only about 5 per cent of those who own meatshops in the city can afford to survive for more than 10 days without opening shop. Most people live on what they earn daily, so they face the choice of death by a bullet or death from hunger."

Since the extremists timed their campaign to begin immediately after liquor licences were auctioned, even the more prosperous liquor shop owners face the same sort of choice. A rich businessman who owns 12 liquor shops in Amritsar said that he had to pay the Government over Rs 12 lakh a month for the licence and in excise duty. Therefore, he could not afford to close. He admitted that if the terrorist call had come before the auction of licences he may have thought twice about taking on so many shops.

In the cities, shop owners are more vocal about their anger against the enforced new morality, and surprisingly, the most volatile reactions come from the Sikhs. Said the owner of a meatshop: "Even Guru Govind Singh didn't tell us to stop eating meat, so who are these boys to decide what we should do? Their whole aim is to make money, everybody knows that those who can afford to are paying them lakhs of rupees just to be allowed to stay open."

Most shopkeepers are naturally very bitter about their livelihood being threatened. Their bitterness is directed mainly against the police and the Government although they are unable to come up with any suggestions about what can be done. In Amritsar, over a hundred owners of affected shops met SSP Izhar Alam and suggested measures like deploying gunmen outside all endangered shops and increasing patrolling in the city. Alam pointed out that there were already 42 mobile patrols in the city at any given time and that it was simply not possible to provide armed guards at every shop. The only solace he could offer was that licences would be provided at double speed to those shopkeepers who wanted to keep their own weapons in their shops. Said Alam: "Our biggest problem all along has been that people refuse to give evidence against the terrorists. We have even come across situations when sons refuse to identify their fathers' killers."

Another problem, according to A.S. Siddiqui, additional deputy inspector general of police in Jalandhar is the fact that the campaign does have widespread support in the villages. "Women seem to be pleased with it," he said, "and there is also the fact that the AISSF has been on a massive recruitment drive through their amrit prachar (baptism into Sikhism) meetings. There is one meeting a day in the state, and after every meeting an estimated 200 youths pledge themselves to the service of the panth."

There is evidence of the recruitment drive even at the AISSF (Gurjeet) office which these days is crowded all day with youths seeking to become members. There is also an air of smugness. As originators of the morality campaign (this group is closely allied to the Khalistan Commando Force), they are justifiably pleased with its success. Nirmal Singh, an AISSF office-bearer, said that the campaign was popular because it was right. "No avatars, Hindu or Sikh, ever did these things. To eat meat is the job of rakshasas (demons) and we don't want people to become rakshasas."

The Punjab Government has responded to the campaign by arresting nearly 500 AISSF activists. However, with the new recruitment drive, the arrests will make very little difference since there are thousands of new recruits all eager to win their colours in the service of the panth. Chief Minister Surjit Singh Barnala has condemned the campaign in the strongest terms saying: "They are talking about meat and liquor but they have no qualms in quenching their thirst with human blood. What they are trying to do now is to distort a very progressive (Sikh) religion, and they will not be allowed to do so."

However, there are not too many bright ideas around on how this can be done. The Akali Dal plans to counter the move through their own propaganda. The Amritsar police have already made a beginning by introducing to the press youths who claim to have witnessed instances of torture and sexual perversion in the Golden Temple. Whether this eventually succeeds or not, it will seriously affect the state's economy if liquor shops continue to lose business since the state collects over Rs 200 crore a year from the trade.

—TAVLEEN SINGH in Amritsar

RAVI BHANDARI

A closed meat shop

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

HARDAYAL MUNICIPAL LIBRARY

History Lesson

A tussle for control, a squeeze on funds, procedural wrangling and petty controversy—a sure-fire recipe for the death of a 100-year-old library, a treasure-house of thousands of invaluable manuscripts, some dating back to the 17th century.

The politicking over Hardayal Municipal Public Library, the oldest in Delhi, is creating a flutter in literary circles as it houses some of the rarest texts in Asia, including: History of the World in five volumes by Sir Walter Raleigh (1676), A Voyage Around the World by John Francis Genielli Careri (1705), Tezkereh Al Vakiat (Private Memoirs of Mughal Emperor Humayun) by Charles Stewart (1828), Travels in India by William Hodges (1794), Rigveda Sanhita by H.H. Wilson (1854), Woman in India by Mary Frances Billington (1895). The library also houses rare Hindi texts like Satik Mahabharatha (1879), Satyartha Prakash by Dayanand Saraswati (1881), and thousands of Sanskrit, Prakrit, Urdu, Arabic and Persian texts, as also historic paintings and sketches of 19th century India.

Secretary Seth and Mayor Saathi

The politicking over Hardayal Municipal Public Library, the oldest in Delhi, is creating a flutter in literary circles as it endangers some of the rarest texts—some dating back to the 17th century—in Asia.

And today it is slowly crumbling under the dust raised by the office of the mayor of Delhi in a tirade against the secretary of the library's managing committee. Mayor Mahinder Singh Saathi, as ex-officio president of the library, has directed the Secretary, Dr R.K. Seth, not to hold any more meetings of the managing committee and has held in abeyance allocation of grants to the library—already a pittance—for 1987-88. The library, which runs entirely on grants from the municipal corporation, is yet to receive any intimation of the funds, even for the first quarter, April-June.

The secretary, in turn, has stopped virtually all expenditure on the library besides payment of salaries since the last week of March. In an explanatory letter to the mayor, Seth wrote that this had been done "to avoid any further scope of misunderstanding by any inadvertent action on our part". As a result, even day-to-day work like payments for periodicals, binding, repair, photocopying and fumigation has been affected.

The dispute is petty enough, and the mayor's main grouse is that the secretary has not been inviting the six nominees of the municipal corporation on the library managing committee for its meetings. Seth says it is up to the mayor to call a committee meeting. Saathi has also wanted to have his way in appointments, but Seth has resisted. And in recent months the mayor has been blocking grants on minor issues, ordering appointments, summarily summoning records, membership lists, rulebooks, alleging neglect without elaboration and springing surprise audits. The torrent of notes from his office to the library have created a wave of terror among the library staff.

Before the conflict erupted, Seth had been doing well for the library, whose membership grew to over 2,100 from just 184 in 1970, and the collection of books from 42,000 to 1,32,000. Seth and his team also screened and reclassified each and every book to begin a separate Rare Books Section, which could then be taken special care of. Nearly 12,000 rare texts were discovered—dated 1900 and before—lying neglected in various corners of the library.

But even before Saathi began withholding grants, the funds for the library had been inadequate. The annual grant was Rs 6 lakh six years ago, and today it is about Rs 7 lakh—unchanged for the last three years. The salary bill alone works out to Rs 6,76,500 annually, after the Fourth Pay Commission report. So the library has little left for preservation after routine payments for periodicals and establishment expenditure. A detailed demand note presented by the library seeks Rs 12 lakh. But in the absence of such a sanction, Seth says they should at least be provided project-specific grants for preservation.

Despite the financial squeeze, a thymol chamber was created to fumigate the rare books. Two special mobile steel storage systems were procured for dust-proof storage. But thymol can only check fungal infestation. To prevent decay, the manuscripts need chemical processing or lamination and binding. Microfilming and photocopying would preserve the matter—although not the original text. But they do not have the money for any of this.

In a letter to the mayor last year, Seth wrote: "Hardayal Library is in urgent need of additional financial resources. The non-availability of additional resources will not only cripple the institution, its valuable, rare books section—an extraordinary collection in India—

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Cathay Pacific. Your business connection to the world.

The kind of connection you dream of each time you embark on a business trip.

Fly any of our 4 flights a week to Hong Kong and make convenient connections to over 400 Cathay Pacific flights worldwide, including major destinations in Japan, Korea, North America and Australia.

Add to that computerised reservations and smooth ground handling, with in-flight service provided by our flight attendants who combine the grace and beauty of 10 Asian lands.

All this and more — designed to help you arrive in better shape.

Call your travel agent or Cathay Pacific at 2029112/9113.

Arrive in better shape

CATHAY PACIFIC

The Swire Group

Rediffusion/CX/5427

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by eGangotri

LET'S TAKESI

LET'S TAKE THEN

D

That's right. Dunlop's turnover from tyre operations is the largest in India. The undisputed No.1. And rapidly growing.

Take the international scene. Take the published list of the world's top 30 tyre and rubber companies. It has only one Indian company listed. Dunlop India. No small achievement. No.1 in India—the world says so.

Take range. No.1 again. Farmer or Jet fighter. Car tyres or Earthmover tyres. It's Dunlop all the way.

Take Industrial Products. No.1 in its field. And planning to stay that way. The first to manufacture hi-tech steel cord belting in India.

Dunlop. Started No.1. Remains No.1.

DUNLOP

KESIZE
IENUMBER ONE

Dunlop is Dunlop. Always ahead.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

NOW WEAR
THE NUOVO LOOK

Now fashion is computer co-ordinated by Dinesh.

To create a whole new generation of premium safaris.

With special S 'n' Z effects that reflect a play of light and shade.

With the new co-ordinated look, aptly called Nuovo.

With lightweight fabrics in quiet colours and shades.

The effect is remarkable.
The fashion is trend-setting.
The name, of course, is Dinesh.

dinesh
Safaris

Designs programmed for fashion.

everest/86/SDM/576R

CC-0. In Public Domain. Panini Kanya Maha Vidyalaya Collection.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

may also be lost in due course and that shall be a colossal national loss."

But the mayor has remained unmoved. Seth says he is willing to compromise for the sake of the library and has again requested the mayor to fix a time for a meeting of the committee and to provide the names of the nominees of the municipal corporation. "I have no objections to the mayor taking interest in the library. After all he is my president. I am only concerned about the interest of the library," he says.

But the mayor says he is trying to work out plans for either the library's take-over by the corporation or tighter control. Going by the track record of other corporation libraries, this could well mean the final nail in the coffin.

—TANIA MIDHA

AUROVILLE

Clean Chit

THE Central Government's controversial take-over of the international township of Auroville near Pondicherry is starting to resemble a ride on a hungry tiger. Last month, P. Prabhashankar, the chief judicial magistrate of Pondicherry, acquitted the Sri Aurobindo Society (SAS) of the charge-sheet filed against it of misappropriation of Auroville funds by the Central Bureau of Investigation (CBI). This was the third criminal case filed by the CBI regarding SAS administration of Auroville that had been dismissed by the lower courts.

The CBI and Central Government had a vested interest in proving the cases against the SAS. The Centre had taken over Auroville—managed by the SAS—through the Auroville (Emergency Provisions) ordinance on November 10, 1980 which became an act a month later, on the grounds that funds meant for Auroville were being diverted for other purposes. The take-over was initially for two years, but was later extended to November 10, 1987. Though the Supreme Court upheld the act, CBI and the Centre were honour-bound to prove that the stated grounds for the take-over were at least superficially tenable.

The judgement delivered last month on the CBI's criminal complaint that the society had no account of some Rs 18.74 lakh of Auroville money—indirectly suggesting that the money had been misappropriated—squarely indicted the CBI and fell just short of calling the criminal prosecution a motivated witch-hunt. Delivering the judgement, Prabhashankar declared: "The irresistible conclusion is that the prosecution did not want to look into the accounts since the scrutiny would prove that money is properly accounted for. I am in perfect agreement with the contention raised on behalf of the defence that the prosecution in a truncated manner refused to take into account all the accounts submitted by the accused."

Elated by the judgement, Ajay Virmani, the young SAS activist who has been handling the court battles on behalf of the society, commented: "The judgement knocks the bottom out of the Auroville (Emergency Provisions) Act of 1980." The damage to the CBI's reputation was even more damning because it came quick on the heels of the verdict made last year on another case which had cleared the society of a charge-sheet filed by the intelligence bureau for wrong utilisation of a Rs 2-lakh donation the Orissa Government had made to Auroville. Earlier, the first CBI case had also been dismissed as the judge did not find even "a whisper of evidence" to suggest that SAS had made a double payment for a piece of land in Auroville.

The judgements have cast a serious slur on the credibility of the Government's taking over of Auroville. The CBI has filed appeals in the Madras and Orissa high courts against the earlier two lower court judgements. While the Orissa High Court is yet to admit the appeal, the Madras High Court has. Meanwhile, there are hopes of a possible patchwork agreement between the society and the Aurovillians. This augurs well for the future of the 2,200-acre project after the Central Government possibly steps aside in November this year. "The Government has not announced that it is going to withdraw from Auroville in November, but there is nothing to suggest that the Government is not going to withdraw," says L.P. Nigam, who has been appointed administrator by the Central Government. The society has suggested to the Government that the project could be managed by an independent committee of representatives selected from amongst residents of Auroville, Sri Aurobindo Ashram, the Central Government and SAS. Aurovillians are not averse to the idea. Alain Bernard, one of the 12 members of the Auroville Executive Council, says: "We have no objection to working with the society if the members of the society also live and work in Auroville with us."

As things stand, it looks as if the Government, which had intervened in favour of the Aurovillians and against the society, might ultimately be left in the lurch. As K.K. Tewari, member of the Auroville Executive Council, said: "It is now for the Government to decide which way to dismount the tiger."

—S.H. VENKATRAMANI

Photographs by SHYAM TEKWANI

"Though it has not said so, there is nothing to suggest that the Government is not going to withdraw from Auroville in November."

L.P. NIGAM
Central Government administrator

"The judgement (aquitting the SAS of charges of misappropriation of funds) knocks the bottom out of the Auroville Act of 1980."

AJAY VIRMANI
SAS activist

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

TAMIL NADU

Arresting Affair

IT was a caricature of Tamil Nadu politics. The controversial arrest, detention and subsequent release of S. Balasubramanian, editor of Ananda Vikatan, a popular Tamil weekly, last fortnight marked yet another messy episode in the battle between the press and the Government headed by M.G. Ramachandran.

The furore raised by the latest sequel has escalated the battle to a higher plane. A cartoon, of a couple of villainous-looking individuals, published on the cover of the 59-year-old weekly (circulation: 2.5 lakh), incurred the wrath of the state Assembly. It did not show a specific state Assembly, but the people's representatives were not amused. The provocative caption stated that the one who looks like a pickpocket is a member of the legislative assembly and the one like a dacoit is a minister.

Assembly Speaker Paul Hector Pandian lost no time in taking cognizance of a protest lodged by a Congress(I) member and directed Balasubramanian to publish an apology. But when the latter refused to do so, the leader of the Legislative Assembly, Finance Minister V.R. Nedunchezhiyan, moved a resolution to sentence the editor to three months' rigorous imprisonment. It was passed, thanks to the majority of the AIADMK in the Assembly.

Within three hours, Balasubramanian, 51, was picked up from his farm-house in the city suburbs and lodged in Madras central prison as a 'B' class prisoner. But what the Government was not ready for was the ferocious uproar by the fourth estate. For the first time in the history of Tamil journalism, the entire press corps boycotted the Assembly for a day. The editor of the satirical Tughlaq, Cho Ramaswamy, called it: "a cowardly act of blackmailing the press". Madras Reporters Guild Secretary N.V. Sankaran charged: "If what was published in a lighter vein could be viewed as offensive by the speaker, serious and concerned reporting could be considered worthy of the death sentence."

Political parties voiced equally strong denunciations. Said DMK leader K. Manoharan: "Magazines like Punch, periodicals and newspapers poke fun at ministers, legislators and politicians, but they are taken in the right spirit by the subjects of the cartoons. But this harsh sentence constitutes a grave violation of freedom of the press."

Even the Congress(I), whose legislator had sparked off the row, felt it necessary to redress the party's image. Explained TNCC(I) President M. Palaniyandi: "Our party did not realise that the speaker would come down so heavily on the editor." Even Union Minister of State for Home P. Chidambaram, a reader of the magazine for 25 years, tended his apologies on the editor's behalf.

The next day Pandian announced that the chief minister, in all his magnanimity, had requested the house to reconsider its sentence. And in deference to MGR's request, he was using his residuary powers to free the editor. But it was only too obvious that it was not MGR's magnanimity but the public outcry which brought about the volte face. There was also little doubt as to who orchestrated the arrest. Said Cho Ramaswamy: "In this case the real culprit is MGR himself and not Pandian."

Balasubramanian was not exactly MGR's favourite editor. He had incurred MGR's displeasure earlier by publishing the name of DMK leader K. Karunanidhi twice on an invitation card for the 1980 golden jubilee celebrations of the magazine while MGR's name figured only once. To display his ire, MGR had not shown up at the function which he was scheduled to inaugurate. He had also not taken kindly to criticism aired against him in the magazine's columns.

The Balasubramanian episode is, however, seen as yet another manifestation of the MGR Government's attempts to browbeat the media. Earlier, it had earned notoriety for denying government advertisements to publications which did not toe the leader's line. In 1980, MGR, in an imperious gesture, forbade officials from talking to the press. Two years ago, the assembly speaker sentenced the editor of the Tamil trader's journal Vaniga Otrumai, A.M. Paulraj, to two weeks' simple imprisonment.

The list is long and damning. Even now, the privileges committee of the Assembly is said to be considering motions of breach of privilege against Tughlaq and a Madras fortnightly, Aside, for their daring expose of the goings-on in the Assembly, the calibre of MLAs, and shady happenings in the MLAs' hostel in central Madras.

The latest episode has, however, rattled the normally docile Tamil press, which is now talking about codifying legislators' privileges. Says Balasubramanian: "Considering the extent of illiteracy in our country, vesting so much immunity in our assemblies is dangerous." Adds Ramaswamy: "We should breach the privileges of the legislature as long as they threaten the freedom of the press." With the press in a fighting mood and the MGR Government's record of media-baiting, this latest affair is obviously not the final round.

—S.H. VENKATRAMANI

MGR (left); Balasubramanian; and disputed cartoon: unsavoury episode

BHAWAN SINGH

SHYAM TEKWANI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Sintex The only reliable and time-tested READYMADE WATER TANKS

For every water storage application under all Indian conditions.

SINTEX has proved its performance against all the tough and rough Indian conditions for more than a decade now. Dotting the Indian scene with lakhs and lakhs of installations-from Kashmir to Kanyakumari and Kutch to Kohima-Sintex Tanks are proving popular for all water storage and carriage applications.

Made by a unique moulding process on computer aided machines, Sintex Water Tanks offer a set of advantages unbeatable by others.

★ Lightweight ★ Easy to install ★ Strong and Durable ★ Maintenance-free ★ 100% Leakproof and Rustproof ★ Most Hygienic ★ Available in wide range from 100 lits. to 20,000 lits capacity in different shapes ★ Backed by excellent installation and after sales service through a wide network of dealers.

For further information contact:

SINTER PLAST CONTAINERS

Plastics Division: The Bharat Vijay Mills Ltd.,
KALOL (N. GUJARAT) 382721.
Phone: (02764) 2228, 2274, 2352, 3144, 3145.
Gram: "SINTEX", Telex: 0121-296 BVM IN.

Sintex-The World's largest selling moulded polyethylene Water Tanks

OFFICES AT

● AHMEDABAD : 179, New Cloth Market, Ahmedabad - 380 002, Tel : 365157/361045 Gram : SINMOULD. ● BARODA : 10, Vishwakunj Society, Near MIG Quarters, Kareli Baug, Baroda - 390 001, Tel : 556406. ● BOMBAY : 18, World Trade Centre, Cuffe Parade, Colaba, Bombay - 400 055, Tel : 211653/217869, Gram : ROTOPLAST, Telex : 3171 SINT IN. ● BHOPAL : E-4/115, Arera Colony, Bhopal - 462 014, Tel : 65894. ● CALCUTTA : 230 A, Acharya Jagdish Chandra Bose Road, Calcutta - 700 020, Tel : 434596, Gram : ROTOMOULD. ● DELHI : GF-3, Osian Building, New Delhi - 110 019 Tel : 6445911/ 6431188 Gram : SEAMLESS, Telex : 31 62338 SEAM IN. ● HYDERABAD : 6-3-856, Ameerpet, Hyderabad - 500 016, Tel : 220821. ● JAIPUR : Plot No. E-40, Jamuna Nagar, Sodala, Ajmer Road, Jaipur - 6, Tel : 64713. ● MADRAS : 123, Angappa Naicken Street, 3rd Floor, Madras - 600 001 Tel : 20070, Gram : ROTOPLAST, Telex : 41 8189 SPC IN.

Bidhan-SP-111A

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BHAWAN SINGH

Mahendra Singh at Shamli: battle cry

UTTAR PRADESH

Show of Strength

CHOWDHRY Mahendra Singh Tikait, 52, is the perfect portrait of a Jat leader. A proud, fearless man, who stands over six feet tall in his sandals, his family has ruled over 84 villages in Muzaffarnagar district in western Uttar Pradesh for generations. By last fortnight, he was standing even taller—at the head of a snowballing farmers' agitation that poses a major threat to the chief ministership of Bir Bahadur Singh.

"We will not allow the people sitting in Lucknow or Delhi to decide our fate. We will do it ourselves." With that battle cry, Mahendra Singh and his Jat brethren have launched a protest movement that has already seen three lives lost—two farmers and one police constable.

That the farmers were in no mood for compromise was only too evident. The agitation was originally launched in protest against the hike in power tariffs from Rs 22.50 per horsepower (hp) per month to Rs 30 per hp per month. But even a downward revision ordered by the state Government (from Rs 30 to Rs 25) failed to cool their militant mood. Last fortnight, in a massive show of strength, over three lakh Jats poured into Shamli in Muzaffarnagar district at the call of Mahendra Singh, who has emerged as the most powerful Jat leader in western Uttar Pradesh.

The meeting, described as the largest-ever by officials, had ominous overtones for the state Government—and confirmed the kind of power Mahendra Singh is capable of wielding. Says Major Ishwar Dayal Tyagi, former president of the Bharatiya Kisan Union (BKU), the organisation under whose banner the agitation has been launched: "His orders are gospel for the people here. If he says that we have to fight till death, the people here will do it."

A further measure of his influence is the fact that Mahendra Singh spurned offers of support from the political elements that profess to control the Jat vote. Lok Dal (A) leader Ajit Singh and Lok Dal (B) leader Virendra Verma, who approached Mahendra Singh with offers of help, were bluntly told to first resign from their respective parties and then join hands. Offers of monetary help were also refused.

Significantly, the farmers' agitation has gathered momentum only after Mahendra Singh stepped into the picture on January 14 this year—the day when chowdhries (heads) of 18 Jat clans, representing some 40 lakh Jats in the eight western districts of Uttar Pradesh and some areas of Haryana met. The unique 'panchayat' was held in Sisauli village, Mahendra Singh's home town, some 17 km from Shamli. There it was decided to fight for their rights.

The first major confrontation came on March 1 when, during a dharna at Shamli, country-made bombs were hurled on the police and shots fired. The violence resulted in three casualties. Jat farmers then turned Sisauli into a fortress. A 24-hour patrol was mounted by the farmers armed with lathis and spears, who ran a parallel administration for almost a week. The sight of policemen was greeted by the blowing of 'ransinghas' (war bugles).

But what gave legitimacy to the movement was the April 1 gherao of Shamli sub-station. The town was inundated by overloaded tractor-trolleys flying the green-bordered white flags of the

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Thums Up makes it great!

Artificially flavoured. Contains no fruit juice or fruit pulp.

The refreshing Cola

Thums Up

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Hero presents its exciting ange of 16 bikes.
Or, great bodies
o fit any body!
Racers.
Sportsters.
Regulars.
Juniors.
For the big.

And small.
Tall.
And short.
Slim. And the not-so-slim!
16 bikes.
All ready to take off on any kind of adventure.
On any kind of road.
Rough or tough.

SHAPES. TO FIT ALL SIZES.

Hero Cycles Private Limited, Ludhiana

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Or smooth.
All with world-class features.
Precision-built frames of the finest steel.
Excellent suspension.
Strong 'cold forged' friction parts.
Perfect braking systems.

And of course, all very attractive.
Perfect handlebar geometry.
Gleaming good looks.
In a fantastic range of colours.
But that's not all.
Hero Cycles is No.1 in sales in the free world.
Or, somebody big out there.
So, shouldn't you get your body on a Hero out here?

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Long before your clothes were rolls of cloth, we thought up the drape and handle of your trousers, the sharpness of the crease, the soft comfort of your shirt, the richness of shades...

Because all this is determined by the quality of the fibre used for the yarn used for the fabric.

Jailene.

The premium Polyester Staple fibre, imparts the desired feel and appearance to your clothing.

Your dream clothing. Swadeshi Polytex makes it possible.

jailene®

SP

Swadeshi Polytex Limited

creating tomorrow's fibre today.

Shems/2271

Style courtesy : Kalamandir

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BKU. All vehicular traffic along the town's border was blocked by volunteers wearing green caps. And as the Chowdhry, who walked on foot most of the 17-km from his village, arrived there was thundering ovation. His earthy stance seemed to strike a common chord. He would come on the stage whenever he felt like and say ab meri baat suno...tali mat peeto, baat suno (Now listen to me. Don't clap, just listen). And the crowd would listen with rapt attention.

Their collective grouse is the power situation. Stated Atar Singh, a small farmer of Morana village in Muzaffarnagar: "We have been paying a flat rent for years without getting power for the money we pay." All the farmers complained that power is not available for more than two to four hours even during the peak irrigation periods or threshing time, though industries seem to be getting power on a continuous basis. Said an agitated Sukhvir Singh Barot, a Jat chowdhry: "The industries keep running round the clock but our tubewells remain dry for most days."

Even Uttar Pradesh State Electricity Board (UPSEB) officials in the state capital concede that much of the power meant for the rural areas is being illegally diverted into the industrial sector. According to them, however, the hike in power tariff had become imperative as the per unit cost of supplying power to rural areas had gone up from 63.80 paise in 1982 to 83 paise today. The farmers, in contrast, were paying only 23 paise per unit (at the rate of Rs 22.50 per hp per month)—a difference of 60 paise per unit. Even with the hike to Rs 30 per hp per month the farmers would have been paying a meagre 33 paise per unit—a loss of 50 paise per unit for every unit consumed in rural areas. Now with the Government having moderated it to Rs 25 per hp per month UPSEB's hopes of tiding over part of its losses have been further eroded. As Energy Minister Sunil Shastri stated: "The revision of the rates is going to cause a loss of Rs 25 crore per year to the UPSEB."

But it has already caused the Government considerable loss—of face. The farmers are obviously in no mood to let up on their agitation, which shows signs of getting even more violent. So far, the threshing season has prevented them from coming out in full force. But if Mahendra Singh were to decide to go on the warpath, even that preventive would no longer be available to save the state Government from more embarrassment.

—DILIP AWASTHI

LAST WORD/RAJINDER PURI

The Dynasty

THESE days the real money for writers is in television serials. So I went to work and produced what I thought was a masterpiece. Armed with the manuscript I called on Doordarshan and met with the director. "You realise of course," he said with a worried voice, "Doordarshan is very particular about quality! We entertain only high, realistic scripts."

"That's exactly what I've brought," I said confidently. I've called it Dynasty.

"The hero is a former airline pilot who belongs to the most distinguished political family in the country and becomes PM!"

"Oh," he said with disappointment. "One of those dull political stories, is it?"

"Not a bit," I said quickly. "It has lots of glamour. You see, the hero is married to an Italian girl whose family lives in Europe. And the President of the country is an old family friend! In spite of that, the prime minister and the President fall out. Meanwhile the hero appoints a finance minister who is zealous about uprooting corruption!"

The director stifled a yawn. "What next?" he said.

"Well, the President and the prime minister start a fierce constitutional crisis, at the same time the finance minister falls out with the PM because he hires a foreign detective to look into the accounts of corrupt businessmen."

"I don't get it," he said with a puzzled voice. "What has the constitutional crisis got to do with corrupt businessmen?"

"There are two sub-plots going on simultaneously," I said impatiently. "The foreign agency stumbles on the misdeeds of a famous film star who is a close family friend of the prime minister and has also entered politics to help his friend."

"Wait," he exclaimed. "To which sub-plot does the film star belong—to sub-plot one or two?"

"Neither," I said irritably. "This is sub-plot three of the same story. However, the prime minister takes advantage of a war threat from a neighbouring country to get rid of the zealous finance minister."

"Hold it," he screamed. "What war threat? Is this sub-plot three?"

"You are disturbing my train of thought," I complained. "The war threat belongs to sub-plot four. Anyway, it soon disappears, but relations between the prime minister and the former finance minister are ruined. And they get worse when the foreign detective speaks out of turn to make the parliamentary privilege crisis more acute."

"Stop!" he shouted, tearing at his hair. "What parliamentary privilege crisis? Is this part of sub-plot one or three?"

"Don't be dense," I said irritably. "This is sub-plot five. Now listen to this, we approach the climactic sub-plot six of my drama serial..."

"Don't, please don't," he wailed piteously, placing his hands over his ears. "You are wasting your time. One serial with six sub-plots! An airline pilot-turned-politician, Italians, film stars, a constitutional crisis, a war threat, foreign detectives—you must be crazy! Doordarshan could never run a serial like that, we believe in projecting real life!"

"Give me a chance," I pleaded. "You've no idea how hard I worked."

"You can try some Bombay masala film makers if you like," he said coldly. "But I doubt if even the most daring among them would ever buy such a wildly impossible story...!"

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

JAPAN'S LEADING COMMERCIAL BANK

Sanwa Bank

opens its New Delhi Representative Office on March 27.

Sanwa Bank demonstrates its commitment to this growing nation, with the opening of its newest representative office in New Delhi.

As a leading commercial bank with one of the strongest networks in Asia, Sanwa is perfectly positioned to serve India's fast growing economy.

Now that we have established our new foothold in New Delhi, Sanwa's global network and financial expertise are closer to you than ever before.

Your Sanwa banker is now just around the corner.

New Delhi Representative Office
Room 1262 Maurya Sheraton,
Diplomatic Enclave, New Delhi, 110021
Tel.: 3010101 Ext. 1262
Telex: 031-61447
General Manager: Motonori Katsuki

pratap/87

Sanwa bankers are working for you everywhere.

Sanwa Bank

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

WEST BENGAL

Red Ahead

LEFT Front big brother, the CPI(M), is exhibiting a new-found jauntiness in West Bengal having been returned to power with an overwhelming mandate: it alone has a brute majority of 187 MLAs in the state's 294-member assembly and faces a relatively weaker ruling party at the Centre. Not surprisingly, the Marxists returned to their cubby-holes of power, last fortnight, with more confidence and determination to tighten their stranglehold over all aspects of life in the state.

One of the first Marxist moves was to whittle down the importance of its smaller Left Front partners, while at the same time ensuring that this move did not evoke any major revolt as it did after the 1982 assembly elections. In the new 32-member ministry sworn in last fortnight, as many as 22 were from the CPI(M), four from the Forward Bloc, three from the Revolutionary Socialist Party (RSP), two from the CPI and one from the West Bengal Socialist Party. The three smaller front parties, the Revolutionary Communist Party of India (RCPI), the Marxist Forward Bloc and the Democratic Socialist Party were not even invited. A smaller ministry, the CPI(M) leadership claimed, would be more effective and easier to handle.

Next, the Marxists rearranged important portfolios, with the crucial ones like commerce and industry and higher education being taken by Marxist Chief Minister Jyoti Basu himself, who today controls a host of critical departments, including home, hill affairs (Darjeeling district), public undertakings, housing and industrial reconstruction. This shift, according to CPI(M) insiders, indicates the new priorities. A principal concern is to provide employment by increasing industrial investment in the state and in the process, consolidating the party's influence over the politically volatile urban unemployed. Surprisingly, however, controversial RSP Minister Jatin Chakraborty was allowed to retain the Public Works Department with the additional responsibility of looking after jails and social welfare. And, the high budget department, irrigation, was left to RSP Minister Debabrata Bandyapadhyaya.

Some Left Front leaders believe that the CPI(M)'s preferential treatment to some parties is directly related to their electoral performance. West Bengal Socialist Party leader Biman Mitra, for instance, says: "We were given a berth in the Cabinet because we won all the four seats we were allowed to contest."

Unlike their Kerala counterparts, the West Bengal Marxists are determined not to stop at land reforms to maintain their support among the peasantry that swept them to power for a third term. An important new Marxist slogan today is to unite the different streams of movements in rural Bengal and build up a common monolithic "krishak" movement, that will include sharecroppers, small and marginal peasants, fishermen, artisans and craftsmen. Simultaneously, the state Government has launched an ambitious and potentially radical plan to decentralise planning and execution of village projects right down to the panchayat level, where a vast army of newly-trained technical workers will work in tandem with the 56,000-odd elected panchayat representatives. As the CPI(M) party newspaper, Ganashakti's Mridul De puts it: "The idea is to build an unbreakable bond between the state Government and the krishak (kisan) movement."

At another level, the Left Front is expected to step up its pressure on the Centre to wrest major concessions on long-pending demands. It now realises how well its alliance with the largest parliamentary opposition party, the Telugu Desam, can pay off. The chief minister is likely to press for certain demands soon, including greater devolution of resources to West Bengal; the scrapping of the freight equalisation policy on iron and steel; reversal of the decision to lower interest rates on small savings tapped by state governments; and assurances that the Centre will not consider scrapping sales tax which contributes about 60 per cent of total tax revenues to the West Bengal exchequer.

While these postures appear positive, the ominous aspect of the Marxists' new jauntiness is their concentrated power. And the first target has been the press. At a student rally in Calcutta on April 6, CPI(M) central committee member and state organisation man, Biman Bose threatened to gherao Doordarshan and All India Radio offices until they adopted a truly "neutral" and "unbiased" newscasting style. While the Marxists' ire at the media is somewhat understandable, their new found capacity to retaliate against the press—at times even physically through their supporters—presages an ominous future. For this presupposes that "red" is always good and will be so in the next five years of West Bengal's Marxist era.

—INDRANIL BANERJIE

JAYANTA SHAW

Basu at a meeting: renewed vigour

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

AYODHYA

Communal Confrontation

ONCE again last fortnight, communal claws were bared as Hindu and Muslim organisations staged massive shows of strength in New Delhi and Ayodhya. And what caused more than the usual concern was the blatantly aggressive postures adopted by the leaders of the two opposing armies. On April 5 in Ayodhya, over two lakh Hindus pledged their lives for the cause of Ramjanmabhoomi. In Delhi, an equally large number of Muslims swore to secure Babri Masjid. Underlying the muscle-flexing was an uglier message: neither of the communities would stop short of an actual physical confrontation.

The message was rammed home in no uncertain terms. In Ayodhya, the attitude adopted by Hindu fundamentalists was no less militant. Shouting provocative, and at times even abusive, slogans, large groups of rallyists roamed the streets of Ayodhya before assembling for the public meeting on the shores of the Saryu river in the afternoon. The leaders of the groups were armed with trishuls, spears or axes and among the slogans they raised were Hum hain Hindu saath karod, haddi pasli denge tor (we are sixty crore Hindus, we will break your bones).

Even the Hindu leaders made no effort to cool passions. Almost all, including Jagatguru Shankaracharya, Swami Vishnu Devanand, Mahant Avaidya Nath, Paramhans Ram Chandra Das and BJP leader Vijaya Raje Scindia, called upon the Hindus to shed the last drop of their blood to protect Lord Rama's birth place. Said Mahant Avaidya Nath, president of the Ramjanmabhoomi Mukti Yagya Committee: "Who is more important for India? Ram or Babar? If the Muslim leaders make a mistake in realising who it is who comes first, they will be doing a great disservice to their community and will pay a high price for it."

To give the rally emotional overtones, the Vishwa Hindu Parishad (VHP), had selected April 5—the day on which the traditional festival of Ram Navmi begins—to hold the rally. Such was the enthusiasm that the actual devotees were totally engulfed by the crush of slogan-shouting VHP activists.

Meanwhile, in Faizabad, Ayodhya's twin city, Munir Ahmed Qureshi, convenor of the district unit of the Babri Masjid Action Committee, stated: "It does not belong to them and we are not going to give it to them. If the Government does not intervene, the day is not far when Muslims all over the country will assemble in Ayodhya and will be compelled to offer a mass namaz in the Babri Masjid." Said Karamvir Singh, senior superintendent of police of Faizabad: "In such a situation even the slightest provocation can spark off trouble."

Qureshi seemed to reflect the tone adopted in the Delhi rally organised by the Babri Masjid Action Committee. There, the Shahi Imam, Maulana Abdullah Bukhari, and Janata leader Syed Shahabuddin had exhorted the Muslims to be prepared to fight to death. At the end of his vituperative address to the Delhi gathering of Muslims, Syed Abdullah Bukhari, the imam of Jama Masjid, warned: "Muslim ministers, open your eyes and your ears. Or I will have your kothis (houses) burnt. We will break your legs."

Hindu and Muslim organisations staged massive shows of strength in New Delhi and Ayodhya...

With every fourth Muslim in the country living in Uttar Pradesh, the tension was palpable all over. Chief Minister Bir Bahadur Singh convened a meeting of top officials a day before the VHP rally and ordered a special vigil in 14 ultra-sensitive districts in the state.

Much of the state Government's apprehensions arose from the response that the March 29 bandh called by VHP had evoked. Though special vigil was mounted following intelligence reports that communal riots may break out, trouble did erupt in half-a-dozen districts. The most serious of these was in Kanpur, where the army had to be put on alert following a pitched battle between the two communities. The bitterness gained a new edge when an unscheduled bandh call was given by the Muslims the day after the VHP bandh.

And in the sensitive city of Faizabad, this bitterness was most evident. The city, for the first time, witnessed a communal flare-up on the day the VHP had organised the state-

VHP rallyists outside the disputed shrine in Ayodhya: mood of militancy

Photographs by PRASHANT PANJIAR

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

wide bandh. Later, green flags were raised provocatively against the saffron flags of the VHP. It was not before the night of April 3 that they were finally taken down. Even more serious was the intention of one section of the Babri Masjid Action Committee to hold a meeting in Faizabad on the day of the rally. It was only on April 4 that the meeting was called off. Though Qureshi explained that "we decided to call off the meeting as it would have caused ill-feeling between the two communities", the secular waters of the district had been muddied too much by then.

With both the Ramjanmabhoomi Mukti Yagya Committee and the Babri Masjid Action Committee refusing to back down, the state Government finds itself in an unenviable situation. Moves to initiate an across-the-table dialogue have met with blunt rebuffs. While the Babri Masjid Action Committee leaders want a restoration of the situation prevailing before 1949, the Hindus want possession on the grounds that the Mughal Emperor Babar had destroyed the temple to build a mosque.

The Ramjanmabhoomi Yagya Mukti Committee is therefore demanding that the control of the shrine be handed over to the Ramjanmabhoomi Nyas, a trust set up by the committee, headed by Ramanandacharya of Varanasi, and that the Government receivership should end. On the other hand, the Babri Masjid Action Committee has demanded that the Government should intervene and transfer the case from the Lucknow bench of the Allahabad High Court to any southern state. Home Secretary Mata Prasad, while ruling out any state intervention, says: "It was a court decision and we will let the issue be sorted out by the judiciary."

Ironically, it was a judge who had unwittingly let the communal cat out of the bag about five years ago. The then district judge of Faizabad, K.M. Pande, had ordered the opening of the locks of the shrine on February 1, 1986, after hearing an application by a local advocate, Umesh Kumar Pandey. But he had no inkling of the kind of religious monster that he would be unleashing.

In fact, the disputed portion of the shrine had been under government lock and key since December 23, 1949, when an idol of Lord Rama was discovered in the inner-most chamber of the building, which was being used as a mosque by the Muslims. At that time, the Muslims held charge of most of the building, but for a cement platform known as the "Ram Chabutra" near the entrance. However, following the controversial appearance of the idol of Lord Rama, the then district magistrate confiscated the property and appointed a government receiver. Neither the Hindus nor the Muslims were allowed to enter the disputed part of the property. But the Hindus, however, were allowed by the concerned authorities, to hold kirtans on the Ram Chabutra, take darshan of the idol from a specified distance and take parikarama (walk around) along the outer ring of the building.

The Ramjanmabhoomi Action Committee, which came into being on October 7, 1984, launched a Tala Kholo (open the lock) agitation on the same day. The first major step by the committee was to organise a 130-km march from Ayodhya to Lucknow on October 8, 1984, where a memorandum was presented to the then chief minister demanding the opening of the locks of the shrine. On October 15, the committee launched a 'Rath Yatra' to mobilise the community. The Yatra was discontinued when it was near Delhi following the assassination of the late prime minister Indira Gandhi on October 31. But it was then revived from 25 spots in Uttar Pradesh on October 23, 1985, and continued for 119 days, during which donations over Rs 3 crore were collected and the masses were educated about the struggle.

...The underlying message was that neither would stop short of an actual physical confrontation.

The Rath Yatras were finally banned by the state Government following communal clashes in nine districts that erupted on March 27, 1986. One of the major reasons for the clashes was that the Babri Masjid Action Committee, which launched its agitation on February 14, 1985, had also stepped up its activities.

But after last fortnight's show of militancy by both sides, the situation has assumed alarming proportions. Says Uttar Pradesh Home Minister Gopinath Dixit: "Unless leaders of both the communities realise that a communal outburst is imminent, it will prove quite difficult for us to control passions for a long time." But with both Hindu and Muslim community leaders themselves showing no signs of restraint in the near future, belling the communal cat will require much more than vocal official warnings.

—DILIP AWASTHI

Imam Bukhari and Shahabuddin lead the namaz in Delhi: aggressive postures

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

"Another contract gone with the lights," cried Joshi

But Patel's tender was ready on time. His Little Genie genset lit up the office when the lights went out.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

It takes forever to find files in the dark. And sweating over complicated calculations, without lights or fans, doesn't hurry things either.

Loadshedding and power cuts certainly help you lose a lot of business.

Not any more!

The magic answer !

Did you know, whenever the lights go out, you just have to give one tug to the Little Genie's starter, to light things up again. Anytime, anywhere. At home. In a shop or showroom. In offices, workshops, clinics or banks. And for outdoors too– mobile vans, camping sites, film/video shooting units ... you name it.

Little Genie – specially designed to suit Indian conditions

The Little Genie is a unique, tropicalised genset.

It functions silently and efficiently, even at high temperatures. Individual cooling fans for the alternator and the engine, and a special open construction, make sure of that.

All parts are corrosion resistant, so it can withstand the roughest weather.

And a special compact design makes it easier to handle and maintain.

Protects your expensive gadgets too

A brushless generator design, perfected by Yamaha engineers, ensures constant output. So when you switch on the Little Genie, your valuable electronic gadgets like personal computers, TVs, videos, electronic typewriters ... will never get damaged by voltage fluctuations. We even have a built-in voltmeter on the genset, to set any doubts at rest.

A range of models to suit your needs

We have a range of handy models from 0.5 KVA to 2.35 KVA, with easy-to-maintain, dependable two-stroke engines or powerful 4 stroke engines. One will be just right for you.

A one year guarantee and fully equipped service centres

With Birla Yamaha gensets you get a one year guarantee, efficient after-sales service, and readily available spares, if you ever need them. Fully equipped service centres all over the country and our skilled service personnel make sure of that.

Why wait until dark !

Thousands of Birla Yamaha gensets are already with their happy owners.

And now, you too can get the better of power cuts and loadshedding. Just fill in the coupon below, and rush it to us.

Because with a Little Genie, you'll soon be watching your business grow. And grow!

Yamaha of Japan. A Company with so many achievements.

Yamaha Motor Company, one of Japan's largest corporations, is backed by advanced, innovative technology. And it is involved in a wide range of activities. From robotics, motor cycles, outboard motors and multipurpose engines, to fibreglass reinforced plastic boats and of course gensets.

Yamaha has a string of impressive achievements to its credit.

- It is the first company to introduce the oil warning system for its gensets.
- The only company to manufacture in-house, both the alternator and the engine for its gensets.
- The first to adopt the brushless generator design for all its models.

And that's not all! Yamaha is the first to produce fibreglass reinforced plastic boats in Japan. And it is a world leader in motor cycles, outboard motors and snowmobiles too.

Please rush me:

☐ Free information folder ☐ Order form

☐ Name and address of the nearest dealer

I want a Little Genie for my:

☐ Home ☐ Office ☐ Workshop ☐ Shop ☐ Clinic ☐ _____

Name _____

Occupation _____

Address _____

_____

Name of Magazine _____

Marketing Division

BIRLA YAMAHA LTD.

A-7, South Extn Part-1,
Ring Road, New Delhi-110049.

Sista's-BYL-227/87

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BIHAR

Fun with Figures

ON paper, and if the latest public pronouncements of Chief Minister Bindeshwari Dubey are to be believed, Bihar has become a model of fiscal discipline and economic progress. Last fortnight, the "state committee of Congress(I) parliamentarians" headed by Krishna Pratap Singh, MP, took special note of these achievements at a special meeting in New Delhi and showered praise on the Dubey administration for having managed to boost the state's per capita income from Rs 929 in 1980-81 to Rs 1,547 in 1985-86.

Dubey quickly followed suit by patting himself on the back and displaying an even more impressive set of statistics. State resources: up from Rs 650.8 crore in 1985-86 to Rs 891.6 crore in 1986-87; plan outlays: raised from Rs 851 crore in 1985-86 to Rs 1,150 crore in 1986-87; per capita income: up from Rs 1,285 in 1984-85 to Rs 1,547 in 1985-86. But the moral of this story is that behind the statistics bandied about by politicians often lies the more sordid truth of failure.

And such is the case with Bihar. The state started with a surplus in 1985-86 of Rs 96.6 crore. The year ended with Rs 500 crore lying unutilised in the Reserve Bank of India and another Rs 250 crore spilling over into the next plan period. The truth is that with all this money lying idle in the banks, Bihar still has the lowest per capita income in the country and the lowest per capita investment in such vital areas as power, communications, and industry. And when asked by opposition leaders, that considering the worsening job situation, what his statistics on the per capita income rise were based on, Dubey could offer no explanation. Dubey's political foe, former chief minister Jagannath Mishra, an economist, was quick to pounce on his rival and criticise him for not having even the basic knowledge of what he was talking about.

While Dubey reasserted these successes in his budget speech in the Assembly, neither he nor his aides have yet been able to explain why there is no physical evidence within the state of these "financial achievements". In fact, Mishra, who believes that the official statistics have been deliberately designed to cover up evidence of financial bungling which has taken a heavy toll of economic growth in the state, shot off a letter to Rajiv Gandhi. He demanded a high-level inquiry by experts from outside the state to go into the reasons for the "gap between physical and financial achievements".

The figures themselves smack of statistical jugglery. According to official figures, the state spent Rs 500 crore on various schemes until last December—the first nine months of the fiscal year. But between January and February, which had only 27 working days in view of the 32-day-long crippling strike by over six lakh employees, the Government claimed to have spent Rs 374 crore, and by March-end, another Rs 147 crore of the total budget. This last-minute spending still left Rs 250 crore to be transferred to the new year. According to official explanations this idle money is the result of the state's "poor absorptive capacity".

But these glib explanations cannot wipe out glaring examples of mismanagement. The Government failed to spend even the requisite amount of money on vital anti-poverty programmes. According to a report of the cabinet sub-committee on the implementation of Rural Labour Employment Guarantee Programme (RLEGP), Rs 65.57 crore was allotted to Bihar for 1985-86 for rural link roads, but only Rs 13.75 crore could be utilised. Likewise, Rs 105 crore was earmarked for 1986-87 for rural road construction. The utilisation till March 15 this year was only Rs 13.15 crore.

Again, under RLEGP's minor irrigation programme, Rs 13.46 crore was allotted for 1985-86, but financial achievement was only Rs 4 crore. For the last financial year, it was to the order of Rs 25.32 crore and utilisation was just Rs 2 crore.

In the high-sounding Harijan welfare component of the plan, Rs 84.25 crore was sanctioned for last year but only Rs 6 crore was utilised. In the previous year, Rs 67.68 crore was sanctioned and Rs 29 crore used.

"Achievements" and "successes" like these, Dubey's crit-

Dubey: statistical juggling

K.M. KISHAN

Chart by B.K. SHARMA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ics point out, sarcastically, hardly lend credence to Dubey's fantastic claim that the state had achieved more than 100 per cent of the plan outlay. And on the basis of this claim no one believes that the Government has approached the Planning Commission to consider enlarging the size of its current Rs 5,100 crore seventh plan.

Despite the state Government's regular claims that plan targets have been exceeded, the fact is that the very schemes in which these targets are supposed to have been exceeded remain unimplemented. During last year's budget speech, Dubey had announced that work would start on a Ganga bridge at Bhagalpur, specific development schemes would be launched in the Kolhan region of Singhbhum district, a Rs 5-crore fund would be created for the upkeep of universities and colleges buildings, and one with an equal sum created for the maintenance of medical colleges and hospitals in the state. None of these projects have so far been implemented, except on paper. And the new industrial policy announced recently hasn't taken off the ground. If anything, things are worse. New private sector investment in Bihar is lower than what it was more than a decade ago.

Bihar-watchers point out that one of the main reasons for financial mismanagement is Dubey's inability to energise the bureaucracy and administration. During the last two years, more than five commissioners have gone in and out of the 20-Point Programme Department. Reckless transfers and postings of IAS and IPS officers has left district-level administration in a shambles. In most of the districts, IAS collectors are on the verge of retirement. With uncertainty at the secretariat level among the senior officials and most of the collectors just whiling away time awaiting retirement, work has ground to a standstill. And most of Dubey's initiatives at securing accountability and efficiency from the bureaucracy—through the creation of "sectoral heads," and new monitoring procedures—have failed to show results.

In this atmosphere, Bihar can expect to be financially torn asunder in the coming years. Dubey's friends have been advising him to get rid of his present financial and administrative advisers, break the convention of "paper achievements" and set up a team of impartial experts to monitor the financial and physical achievements. "This is the only way out if Dubey is really interested in ushering Bihar into a more prosperous era," said a senior Finance Department official.

—FARZAND AHMED

SHATRUGHAN SINHA

Shotgun Blast

LIKE his illustrious peers in the Congress(I) the man they call the 'Bihari Babu' is backpacking the political trail. And though Shatrughan 'Shotgun' Sinha takes pains to dispel any political motivations, the cinematic villain-turned-hero's actions speak otherwise.

Last fortnight Sinha travelled to Arwal, where barely a year ago the police had massacred "extremists". The ostensible reason for the visit: to commiserate with the victims. In reality, the meeting fits into a much bigger matrix. The stocky star has been hitting the road with metronomic regularity, chatting with the rural poor, sharing their woes, eating at roadside dhabas, and lashing out at the Bindeshwari Dubey Government.

Before Arwal, he toured through the poverty-stricken districts of Palamau and Gaya, addressing 10 to 15 meetings at both places. Said Sinha: "The tour is to contact the masses and create a sense of Bihari pride among them." Almost all his meetings attracted 40,000 to 50,000 people, most of them starry-eyed fans.

At one meeting in Gaya, Sinha came closest to taking the lid off his real motives. Said Sinha: "The whole purpose of my travels is to prepare a blueprint for my future career in consultation with the masses." The star, who was bestowed with the title of "Bihar Ratna" and "Jana Nayak" by his enthusiastic fans led by youthful Janata leader Subodh Kant Sahay, plans to launch a movement in Palamau to liberate the bonded labourers. Even more ambitious is his plan to launch a padyatra across the state to see the plight of the people and lead the students and youth a la Loknayak Jayaprakash Narayan. To further prove that he means business he has despatched a team of doctors to launch a door-to-door campaign in Deogarh as part of his call to people to observe 1987 as "Year of Constructive Work".

Sinha's sudden outburst of populistic zeal is being attributed largely to his desire to level scores with state Chief Minister Bindeshwari Dubey. Sinha came into conflict with Dubey in 1985 when Dubey withdrew support to a Filmstars Nite planned to raise funds for a hospital in memory of Sinha's father B.P. Sinha. Dubey also went back on his promise to provide land for the proposed hospital. Last year Dubey transferred the district collector of Siwan for "allowing" Sinha to unveil the bust of the late President, Dr Rajendra Prasad, despite reports of the then chief secretary and the divisional commissioner that Sinha had not unveiled the bust. He had only garlanded it.

K.M. KISHAN

Sinha addressing meeting: suspense drama

To observers, however, Sinha has always been an enigma as far as politics is concerned. He has openly praised Bharatiya Janata Party leader Atal Behari Vajpayee, joined Janata leader Chandra Shekhar's padyatra but has also made no secret of his friends in the Congress(I). Even more significant is the support that has always been extended to him by the Kayasthas, who want him to champion their cause. Now with the Janata Party ardently wooing him and his fans waiting with bated breath for their star to make the official plunge, it is up to Sinha to deliver the punch line in his carefully-crafted and suspense-laden script.

—FARZAND AHMED

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Clean Crusader

MAJOR Vijay Singh Mankotia, a Congress(I) MLA in Himachal Pradesh is a somewhat quixotic character who, taking the promises made by his party of ensuring a clean government in deadly earnest, has been tilting at the windmills of local corruption for the past three years. His lance, blunted by past forays against the state's timber mafia, was pointed last fortnight against his own party and plunged the Government into somewhat of an embarrassment. Having worked for and developed a solid base of ex-servicemen as his supporting cadres, Mankotia recently organised a "clean government" rally, to which he also invited Chief Minister Vir Bhadra Singh, which was attended by a staggering 50,000 people in Bilaspur. This turnout naturally sent waves of jealousy coursing through ministerial ranks.

HARI OM GULATI

Mankotia: lone battle

But what fanned this envy into outright hostility was Mankotia's speech in which he said that in order to ensure honesty at the lower rungs of government, the highest must begin an immediate house-cleaning. This process should begin with ministers who had been misusing their offices for personal gain, and top bureaucrats who have been acquiring expensive property and who, on transportation and official petrol bills alone last year, chalked up an expenditure of Rs 7 crore.

Party members began to howl for Mankotia's head and have been urging Vir Bhadra Singh to take disciplinary action against him for anti-party activities. Mankotia offered to resign voluntarily but the chief minister, who personally has a clean image and has taken tough measures against the forest mafia in the past directly persuaded him to remain. Says Mankotia: "I don't see how this can be construed as anti-party. I am simply attempting to fulfil our party's campaign pledge—given by the prime minister himself—of a clean and open government."

Double Faced

THERE are different rules for different land grabbers. At least that's the way it appears in Gujarat. When Rajkot Collector Rajiv Takru recently arrested some BJP leaders and prominent supporters of that party for alleged illegal acquisition of land worth crores of rupees in the city, Chief Minister Amarsinh Chaudhary backed him to the hilt and countered heavy criticism from the BJP-controlled Rajkot Municipal Corporation that the action was politically motivated, as so much nonsense.

JAYESH CHAUHAN

Takru: cleaning up

But now the shoe is on the other foot. During the last few weeks Takru has been closing in on Congress(I) leaders, corporators, financiers and workers for the same reasons. Among the party stalwarts arrested are corporators Darji Parsana and Manuben Sugarwala and well-known workers, Hardasmal Motwani, Jivabhai Mori, Vasram Lamba and Chonda Rude. And Choudhary is livid. During the past few weeks he has been spending a lot of time obtaining the release of these party people on parole, even against suggestions by the Home Ministry that they be detained for further questioning.

Paper War

A family feud within Bhaskar, the fast expanding newspaper chain in Madhya Pradesh, is threatening the existence of the Jabalpur edition of the Hindi daily. In a bizarre move, Bhaskar proprietor Ramesh Chandra Agarwal has moved an application in the court of the district magistrate, Jabalpur, under Section 8 B of the Press and Registration of Books Act, seeking cancellation of the declaration filed for the Jabalpur edition of the daily and requested an immediate ban on its publication.

In his complaint Agarwal alleged that his uncle, Bishambhar Dayal Agarwal, made a "false declaration" at the time of launching the edition nine months ago, and that he had been indulging in "unauthorised" publication of the daily without obtaining the authority from the owners of the title.

दैनिक भास्कर

फेयरफेक्स को जांच कार्य नहीं सौंपा था- ब्रम्हदत्त
प्रधानमंत्री ने जांच से इंकार नहीं किया-वी.पी.सिंह

ब्याज दर: बैंक ऋण पर कम, जमा पर ज्यादा

मुस्लिम नेताओं के उत्तेजक भाषणों

A copy of Bhaskar; (inset) B.D. Agarwal (left) and Ramesh: family feud

This is the first sign of serious trouble inside the Bhaskar group which has been expanding at break-neck speed in the past few years. The chain has blossomed into five editions, with plans to start a sixth edition from Raipur by year end. Plans to bring out English and Urdu publications are also in the pipeline. It has acquired sophisticated, computerised printing facilities and its Bhopal headquarters is probably one of the most futuristic and best designed newspaper offices in the country. But the simmering family feud threatens to tarnish this bright future.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Papa said Colour
I said Eurocolor
Papa said Hi-tech
I said Hi-gain
Papa said TV
I said Telerama

Wasn't I right, Papa?

You bet you are.
Because Telerama is a stylish, world-class TV with advanced features. And outstanding performance!
Hi-gain. Fully tropicalized. With Video games and cable TV facilities. Use an adaptor... and wow! you get teletext and a home computer monitor.
Telerama Colour TV—it's the smart choice!

TELERAMA
HI-GAIN COLOUR TV
Clearly the best
Ask the wise guy!

TELERAMA
AUTHORISED SERVICE CENTRE FOR ITT COLOUR TVs

Currently available in West Bengal, Assam/N.E. States, Bihar, East M.P., Varanasi, Tamil Nadu.

TT-6400

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

The Business Trip

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

For the creative manager, innovative solutions are not always the result of a sequential working out of management syllogisms. They are very often the result of patterns formed out of millions of bits of information (not necessarily business-oriented) scattered over the vast expanse of his unconscious mind. This, of course, is a truism.

Innovation therefore seems to get bullied out of its rightful place by the tyranny of the well-ordered, step-by-step routine of corporate existence—of time-consuming maintenance and fire-fighting. Today the executive realises the need to switch on another process of 'thinking' that will compress time and jog his intuition to arrive at that moment of illumination. The office and the home may not always be the best environmental stimuli for this kind of thinking.

Many have confessed however, to a surprising glimmer of intuition on particular occasions—those corporate errands outside their work city. Forced out of the discipline of commercial routine the mind seems to free-float to possible illumination. "You travel to this other city on a pressing matter, which you are going to sort out," said an executive, "but the pleasant surprise is that you suddenly seem to see answers to questions that troubled you on quite another matter. This comes as a kind of bonus on such trips. I don't know how it happens, but it does."

The concept of the business trip as creativity jogger prompted another idea—the hotel room as creativity jogger.

The hospitality designers of Welcomgroup asked themselves the question: "Can we create an environment that will encourage this creativity jogging?"

They realised that this would call for more than the plushness and luxury of the five-star deluxe experience or the obvious provision of executive facilities

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

as Creativity Jogger.

and access to equipment. It would require the creation of an atmosphere of a different kind of exclusivity which allowed for uncluttered mental room combined with quiet intellectual stimulation.

It meant shaping a whole new quality of property and services. It involved programmes of executive life-style study and intensive training for a new breed of hotel personnel.

Maurya Sheraton Towers

Thus was born the idea of the Maurya Sheraton Towers which is now an international reality.

To describe the Maurya Towers it is necessary to dispel the traditional notions associated with five-star hotels. The hyperbole and the superlatives (that come to mind if you view the 'Towers' in the context of other hotels) are inadequate, for the simple reason that the Maurya Towers is another genre in the art of executive hospitality.

The exclusivity of each floor, the elegant design of the rooms; the Business Centre and conference rooms; the intellectual stimulation of the Tower Club with its library and bar, the dining room and the health club; the exquisite taste with which every corner is designed...all these are incomparable, but in a way not the real discriminators.

The real difference is in the intangibles which the sensitive and mature intellect will perceive; in the finesse, the unobtrusiveness of the service, the charm and the flair with which the personnel allow you that much-needed quiet and freedom (from even the smallest of irritants) to do your intuition-jogging.

Admittedly the Maurya Towers is not for everyone. But for you and your nucleus of brilliant people it certainly could be an investment in creativity.

The Maurya Sheraton Towers, at the Welcomgroup Maurya Sheraton, Diplomatic Enclave, New Delhi-110 021

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Nalini begins the day with a smile, snuggling in the comfort of her Bombay Dyeing towel and sheets.

Indulge in the complete Bombay Dyeing experience.
All day long and well into the night.

It's afternoon. Karan and Rhea have designs on each other. From the Bombay Dyeing Shirting Collection.

Vidya and Aliya, sheer poetry in their Haiku saris, set the evening on fire.

Karan takes on the night in his suit from the Cezari Suiting Collection.

AVAILABLE AT THE BOMBAY DYEING SHOP

SUITINGS, SHIRTINGS, SARIS, DRESS MATERIALS, TOWELS, SHEETS AND FURNISHING FABRICS.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

BOMBAY DYEING

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Left in a Corner

THE controversial play Christuvinte Aaram Thirumurivu (The sixth sacred wound of Christ) based on Kazantzakis's masterpiece which was banned in Kerala by the earlier UDF government has now become a hot potato for the new LDF Ministry in the state. Soon after the new Government was sworn in, the play was to be staged in Alleppey. But top church leaders threatened to start a 'liberation struggle' and take the issue to the streets if the new Marxist Government hurt their religious sentiments by allowing the drama to be staged. Chief Minister Nayanar and the

A scene from the controversial play: new threat

Marxist 'think-tank' panicked and extended the ban.

P.M. Antony, the producer and writer of the controversial play, said: "When it was banned a few months back the leftist intellectuals in the state made a hue and cry and blasted the then Karunakaran government for succumbing to religious pressures. Today all these intellectuals are silent." The new government is caught in a predicament from which it will be hard to wriggle out.

Hard Lessons

IT was clearly intended to teach the lecturer-turned-politician a lesson. On April 8, the Secondary School Certificate question papers were leaked out in Hyderabad in a well-organised manner, leading to the resignation of state education minister Galli Muddukrishnama Naidu, 41.

Front page press reports of the sale of the mathematics question paper at Rs 10 a photocopy appeared in local dailies on the very morning of the exam. A Telugu daily even reproduced it in full. Naidu sent his resignation to the chief minister who promptly accepted it. He also ordered an inquiry into the leak.

BABJI

Naidu: victim of intrigue

The leak itself could emerge only from the Government treasuries, police outposts where they are stored, or from the Commissionate of Examinations in Hyderabad. The manner in which the students, including Telugu Desam activists, gave photocopies to newspaper offices, shows that it was part of a plan to malign Naidu. Though he has a spotless track record, his attempts to improve the quality of education and to crush strikes have alienated him from teachers and college managements. Moreover, Naidu's relations with NTR's son-in-law and party General Secretary N. Chandrababu Naidu have been strained following the ex-minister's increased clout in their native Chitoor district.

NTR's prompt acceptance of the resignation is clearly an attempt to give a freer hand to Chandrababu in Chitoor. But with Naidu's sudden exit, NTR may soon find his partymen no longer willing to toe the line as they did in the past.

Merger Stir

AFTER several months of quiet, the agitation for the merger of Marathi-speaking areas in Karnataka with Maharashtra was revived in Bombay last fortnight. And interestingly, besides opposition leaders like S.M. Joshi, president of the Samyukta Maharashtra Seema Samiti, Shiv Sena's Bal Thackeray and the Peasants and Workers' Party legislator N.D. Patil, the morcha taken out to the state Assembly also included Sharad Pawar, who had spearheaded the stir last year as the Congress(S) chief but has since joined the ruling party.

Pawar made it clear that the state's political leaders would "forfeit the right to represent the people of Maharashtra" if they failed the Marathi-speaking people residing in Karnataka's border areas. Thackeray went a step further and warned the Government that the Shiv Sena would prevent trucks heading for Karnataka from being loaded in Bombay if the boundary problem was not solved expeditiously.

Photographs by SEBASTIAN D'SOUZA

Activists in Bombay; Pawar (left) and Thackeray: agitating

Last fortnight, after a meeting with Chief Minister S.B. Chavan, the Seema Samiti agitation leaders unexpectedly agreed that the boundary dispute should be resolved "on principles and people's wishes within a time-bound framework". The demand has been made for the appointment of another commission to go into the Maharashtra-Karnataka border dispute with a framework similar to the one used for the Punjab-Haryana tangle.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

AMITABH BACHCHAN

"I have been ta

THE spotlight was on V.P. Singh and his resignation. But in the wings the murmurings about his arch-rival, Amitabh Bachchan were also increasing. And these rumblings appeared to indicate that the spotlight may now shine squarely on the role played by the man most closely identified as having influenced his friend, the prime minister, against Singh—Amitabh Bachchan.

The Fairfax affair, which has raised troubling accusations about Amitabh and his family—particularly Ajitabh (Bunty) Bachchan who, along with his wife, Ramola, is also a personal friend of Rajiv and Sonia Gandhi—was hardly buried with the exit of Singh. It threatens, once again, to explode into the open with Amitabh squarely in the dock. And in this situation, even many of the prime minister's friends say, his deep friendship with the Bachchan family could wind up becoming a political liability for him.

Even as the Fairfax debate was raging in Parliament last fortnight, Bunty and Ramola quietly flew in from Geneva to their New Delhi farmhouse where Bunty met with several advisers for long strategy sessions. He also flew to Bombay for several hours of discussions with Amitabh. In this surcharged atmosphere even senior party members, who did not hold any particular brief for Singh, were saying that unless Rajiv orders an independent inquiry into the financial affairs of the Bachchans, Rajiv Gandhi and the Congress(I) would continue to be the targets of public opprobrium that they were part of a conspiratorial cover-up. As one Congress(I) MP put it: "All this tamasha, and tension within the party and Parliament seems to be the result of trying to protect one man—the prime minister's friend, Mr Amitabh."

The controversy swirling around the actor stems from accusations made in the press and in Parliament that:

- Bunty's exit to Switzerland may be to handle money siphoned illegally abroad.
- Amitabh had reason to lobby against Singh because the Finance Ministry was looking into his taxes and his business dealings.
- Amitabh has used his closeness to the prime minister to exercise unprecedented muscle in the film world and in Uttar Pradesh politics where there is now a political revolt against him.

The actor-politician agreed to a lengthy interview covering these subjects. But despite his known rivalry with V.P. Singh, he consistently evaded or would not answer questions about the ousted defence minister. He referred to him only in cordial cliches but occasionally his guard slipped and hints of antipathy would show. Initially Amitabh refused to admit that he was in the eye of a controversial public hurricane, saying cryptically, "I too go out in the public, I have some fans, and I don't sense any hostility," but later admitted that he was under hostile pressure.

> "If the party feels I'm an embarrassment I'll withdraw. And I can assure you I'll be answerable to any inquiry. I've already spoken about these matters in Parliament—the highest forum—and I'm not afraid to speak about this again."

Throughout the interview in his well-appointed study in the front of his two-storey rented Vasant Vihar house, the superstar, dressed in an immaculate white kurta pyjama, a gold pen sticking out of his breast pocket, maintained a cool composure, his famous baritone voice occasionally rising to an emotional pitch, his gaze level, unflinching, and tinged now and then with a sense of hurt and indignation. Excerpts of the interview with Editor AROON PURIE and Features Editor INDERJIT BADHWAR:

Q. Many people, including some close to the prime minister, seem to believe that your friendship with Rajiv may have become a political liability to him.

A. If I'm a liability, it is because of the press, which has tried to make me into one. They have made me into a victim of rumour, allegation and gossip.

Q. But there is a general feeling that some embarrassing questions have been raised that must be answered.

A. If the party feels that way, or if the prime minister feels that I'm an embarrassment, I'll withdraw. And I can assure you, I'll be answerable to any inquiry. I've already spoken about these matters in Parliament—the highest forum—and I am not afraid to speak about this again.

Q. But it seems as if the focus, since V.P. Singh's exit, is now on you.

A. My name has been abused and misused and it will continue to be so because of my position.

Q. But of late, you have been on the defensive.

A. There was a time when I used to take all this like any other gossip. I've been in public life for 20 years. I'm used to gossip. I know how things work. So when things started appearing about me within days after I won the MP's election from

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

en tainted for life"

Photographs by PRASHANT PANJIAR

> "Yes, Rajiv is a friend. Am I going to be ostracised for that friendship? Do I stop meeting him? If I'm a liability to him it's only from the media's point of view which has made me into a victim of rumour, allegation and gossip."

Allahabad, I just ignored it. But as time passed, things started building up. Maybe I should have contested all these allegations earlier, and I would not have been involved so wrongly as I am now.

Q. But don't you feel you have to clear the air because you are in public life?

A. My conscience is stronger and bigger than the whole world. If my conscience is clear I'll be the winner in the end. The strength of my character is the strength of my conscience. An attack on my character is an attack on my conscience. In this controversy what am I supposed to do, fight for the development of my constituency or waste my time confronting allegations?

Q. Since you gained your position because of Rajiv do you feel you are being used as a stick to beat him with?

A. Do you sincerely believe that? Do you sincerely believe that I'm a politician or that I've come into this line to look for positions? I knew nothing about politics.

Q. Then why did you get into it in the first place?

A. Because I felt deeply emotional about it. Yes, Rajiv is a friend. Am I going to be ostracised for that friendship? Do I stop meeting him? What do I do? If he were to ask me to get out, I'd do it.

Q. But there is an impression within the party, and in the public, that you're treated as very special.

A. I've gained nothing. I've never asked for a position. I'm one Congress(I) MP, who worked to collect Rs 2 crore during the Gujarat drought relief programme. Why should I have done it? I slogged for two days. I danced, I sang, I spoke and got the money for the people who needed it. And can you imagine what I got in return? A bloody court case in which people falsely alleged that this joker got the money for himself.

Q. You've been controversial since you entered politics. But now there's the new factor about Bunty.

A. Well, I'll tell you about him. He's four years younger to me. Has three daughters and a son. He joined Shaw Wallace after college. But he wanted to strike out on his own. He started slogging, making cans in a shed in Bombay. He did well. I was a struggling actor then, but when Zanjeer made it big, Bunty began to manage my financial affairs. I really have no head for finances. We bought into Raymond paints, and then we purchased the pharmaceutical company, IPCA, a sick unit, which now has a turnover of Rs 40 crore and which has won government awards for record exports. We also have foreign collaborations.

Q. But if he was so successful what made him go abroad?

A. He has good business acumen. He's a low-profile chap. People with smaller businesses make a bigger deal of it. But which young person doesn't want to go out and seek more opportunity. He's been in business all along. But only now people are talking.

Q. But, he had shifted to New Delhi, had he not, to be with you?

A. Yes, he shifted to Delhi, partly because my parents are here and my mother keeps indifferent health.

Q. Then why the sudden move to Switzerland?

A. Well, that had been on his mind for several years. But he finally decided to go last September or October.

Q. But he had a flourishing business right here.

A. Look, he's an independent minded person. If he wasn't, logically he would have got into films and become a film producer with me. And now that I'm in politics he could have joined me and helped me. But he likes business. He has a head for business. And he just wasn't interested in politics. He never once came to my MP's flat at 2-A, Motilal Nehru Marg.

Q. The move doesn't convince a lot of people.

A. But who would not want to go and get going if such an opportunity beckoned. For him, it was an opportunity to expand his business.

Q. But why, of all places, Switzerland? You know the kind of images that raises—Swiss bank accounts and all. Did you think it would cause such a commotion?

A. At the time he left, no. But his move there was pure coincidence. He's employed by a firm there. They screened his credentials carefully. He'll be involved in marketing and manufacturing and we'll

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"People think there's an alternative to Rajiv Gandhi. They're sadly mistaken. I'll always fight for him. And I'll leave politics if he ever did."

provide raw material from here.

Q. Don't you think it rather odd for a person who has a flourishing business, high social connections, and is generally well-settled to uproot himself and go and live in a foreign country?

A. Business opportunities are better there than in India. He often felt stifled here. I mean, look, other people go abroad all the time.

Q. Yes, but not people who run a Rs 40-crore business already.

A. Why is it that just because he wants to stand on his own feet, we get clobbered for it? I rose from scum. I slept on benches and on roads without a roof while looking for a break in films. No one backed me then. Where was the media then?

Q. You mean there was no inheritance or family money?

A. No. Father was a professor. Nehru sponsored him to Cambridge where he got a Ph.D. for his work on the poetry of W.B. Yeats and occultism. Then he got a job translating English texts into Hindi in the External Affairs Ministry . There was no property or financial inheritance.

Q. Were you aware that among the names to be referred to the Fairfax agency for investigation was that of the Bachchans also?

A. Let them investigate. But, first let me ask, aren't there any rights a citizen has before he's investigated? If there is a question of evidence, what is the evidence? I say, if there is no evidence, then let the assets of all 10 million Indians living abroad also be investigated. There can't be a different law for Amitabh and one for the rest of the country. That's what makes me believe that there is an obvious move to defame me.

Q. But you can't blame Parliament and the country for asking questions. After all, you are in public life.

A. Rumours were planted by the media, and with time these rumours were presented as crystallised fact. And now the press questions me on the basis of rumours they started themselves.

Rajiv Gandhi and Amitabh Bachchan: personal commitment

Q. But why have you been so reticent in answering questions about Bunty?

A. He is a private person. Do I ask about you or about your brother.

Q. But there is a difference. You are a prominent political figure, close to the prime minister, and your silence on the issue only raises more questions.

A. All right, all right. He lives in Montreux. The kids go to a school called Aiglon, in Villars. He does not live in any fancy mansion. He lives in a two and a half bedroom flat on 900 sq ft that is paid for by his employers. They pay him a salary and take care of his kids' education.

Q. What is his status? If he applies for residency or citizenship does it not entail paying a large sum of money there?

A. No. There's no question of citizenship or residency. That is virtually impossible to get in Switzerland. What he is in the process of getting is a work permit. It doesn't involve payment of any money.

Q. What is the name of this firm?

A. Why do you want to know that? These firms are highly conscious of their privacy. It's simply a question of business ethics. They would be flooded with harassing queries if I gave you the name.

Q. So what would have been wrong in clarifying these things earlier?

A. Because if I have to give these clarifications on the basis of rumours I feel I'm being weak. And I will not do it. But if I'm asked specific questions in Parliament, I will first demand to know on what basis these questions are being asked, and whether it is in the public interest before I will provide the answers.

Q. But if you, for a moment, look at the

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"Bunty lives in Montreux in a two and a half bedroom flat on 900 sq ft that is paid for by his employers. They pay him a salary."

unfolding scenario with the Fairfax agency, then your name comes up, and next a defence minister resigns. Don't you think the questions it raises are significant?

A. Of course. It's a beautiful screenplay. I must ask Salim-Javed to write it.

Q. But people have a right to know what the truth is.

A. Yeah, but nobody wants to believe the truth. Very simply, Bunty likes the business world. He likes the system there. It's free of bureaucratic hassles and there is no waiting for hours in government offices for licences. And he's thinking of launching several projects from there. He's not the only Indian there. There are at least 20,000 in that country. And he started from scratch. I'd like to see others, even V.P. Singh, try and start a business from a shed in Bombay like he did.

Q. When they talk of political embarrassment, people point out that you used your clout to get the Uttar Pradesh chief minister to remove the Allahabad University vice-chancellor from office. Most of the MLAs from Allahabad are in revolt against you and have signed a petition against you.

A. I have not seen this petition. But I had representations from the students saying they wanted a change. They were in total revolt. In fact they prevented the prime minister from visiting the university. Don't you think it is a matter of concern for an MP from that area? So, when his term expired, the chief minister did not renew it. I simply passed on this information to the chief minister.

Q. There are also allegations that your Allahabad Fans Association has become politicised and you have given preferential jobs to members.

A. So what? If there is someone in the fans association who is politically inclined and wants my help, what's wrong in my helping him? The trouble is that no matter whom you appoint, whatever the position may be, people are going to scream special favours. There are so many jealousies all around. I did what any MP does. So why is Amitabh always singled out?

Amitabh and Ajitabh Bachchan: controversial move

Q. Again, it has been pointed out that it is because of your clout with Rajiv you were able to get the chief minister to your house for a meeting at which you gave him a long list of officers—19 is the stated number—whom you wanted transferred.

A. The terms of three main officials were expiring and I felt new administrative officers were needed for the betterment of the city. Again, that is what any MP from a city does.

Q. Similarly, your own colleagues in the film world accuse you of having let them down when you participated in handling the strike settlement. They say you sold out to the powers in Delhi.

A. Again this is a question of people picking on me for the heck of it. My role in settling that strike was that of an MP and a representative of the people. I did not get elected as an MP from the film world. But that doesn't mean I disown them. And no one is willing to say that with my help, for the first time in 50 years, the film industry got a reduction in excise. This was a great relief. It wasn't all they wanted, but in which labour bargaining situation does a group ever get all it wants? Even Sunil Dutt participated in the final settlement in which the chief minister was also involved, but four days later Dutt began to criticise me and said he was not a party to the settlement.

Q. But several studios circulated letters calling for your boycott and these letters, producers say, were withdrawn after high-level pressure from Delhi.

A. I know. I was labelled as a traitor. I

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"I don't even smell anybody as an alternative. Not even a rat. Rajiv is a good, noble soul. But people he trusted have let him down."

wanted to call off the strike because the workers were suffering. And there was no pressure from Delhi to withdraw the letters. It just seems to me, I've been born to attract controversy. I guess I'll have to resign myself to the fact that I'll always be the loser, always be on the wrong side of things. But I'm also a fighter. And I'll keep fighting when I believe I'm right.

Q. There are also reports that just before the Fairfax probe started, you took Dhirubhai Ambani, Reliance chairman, to meet Rajiv in order to assist him in settling some of his problems with the Government arising out of the Finance Ministry's investigation of that firm.

A. Not true. According to the gossip he was supposed to have paid me Rs 5 crore for arranging the meeting. Well, why Rs 5 crore, why not Rs 10 crore? The truth is I don't even know Dhirubhai Ambani. I have only met one of his sons socially. I suppose in the next round my name is also going to figure in the defence deal probe that was ordered by V.P. Singh.

Q. But do you think that Rajiv Gandhi has suffered and his position weakened because of all this?

A. If people in the country or the party think there's an alternative to Rajiv Gandhi, they're sadly mistaken. I'll always fight for him. And I'll leave politics if he ever did. I'm here only because of him.

Q. But that's the usual party line. Alternate leaders emerge just as Rajiv Gandhi did.

A. I don't even smell anybody. Not even a rat. But Rajiv was always there, the whole country sensed him. He is a good, noble soul. And people he trusted, and entrusted jobs to, have failed him. They have let him down.

Q. Who? And if this is so, it appears Rajiv must be lonely for good advice and support. If you are in politics because of him don't you think you should help him more rather than pretending to be just another MP nursing his constituency?

A. I don't want to name names, but I do feel badly about this. But the moment I go to his help I get knocked on the head by a Fairfax or some other issue. Anyway, it's good to be knocked around a bit because that brings change. I still have faith and confidence in him.

Q. Do you believe that V.P. Singh exceeded his brief in ordering the probe into Fairfax?

A. Only the commission of inquiry will be able to establish that.

Q. But don't you think V.P. Singh's resignation had a negative effect on the Government and the party?

A. Many times I have felt in the past that our party in Parliament was disjointed and disorganised. But during the Fairfax debate we were cohesive and worked like a team. We beat the Opposition on every point with a great deal of dignity and poise.

Q. Government sources say that you once rang up V.P. Singh to try and call off a tax investigation of Rekha.

A. Why don't we pick up the phone and check with V.P. Singh? I've never

Rajiv Gandhi and V.P. Singh: unfriendly probe

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Hari

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"I'll never be able to wipe out this stain. This whole country prayed for my life in 1982 when I was nearly dying in hospital. And now they fling shoes at me."

rung up Mr Singh on any raid episode on any artiste. Once, in Parliament I talked to him about a petition regarding some taxes that had been filed by Dharmendra and Hema Malini. I asked him if he would listen to them. He told me that I should refer the matter to Janardhan Poojari (minister of state for finance), which is what I did.

Q. What about the constant controversy about your own taxes?

A. I have never had any income tax outstanding. And I've paid record amounts since 1984. You can check on that. This charge keeps cropping up against me because they want to see my name up there with Sivaji Ganesan, NTR, Dharmendra and Hema Malini. Why don't people ever ask how much the Government has earned from what I've earned? The crores that have been made from my films for the Government treasury? I'll invite you to go over my tax returns with a microscope.

Q. In 1980-81 you showed Rs 33.50 lakh as professional income and claimed a tax deduction of more than Rs 21 lakh. Ultimately, your taxable income that year came down to a little over Rs 4 lakh.

A. I do give to charity. What's wrong with that? Look, my work is documented in 75 films. The fallacy is that I make crores of rupees. I was paid Rs 1 lakh for Zanjeer. I was paid just Rs 1 lakh for Sholay. I had to beg for a role in that film. All that period is coolly forgotten by everyone.

Q. But why do you think you are constantly under attack? Do you think it's orchestrated, and if so, by whom?

A. I don't know. You tell me. I suspect that because it is happening so constantly it must be organised. Maybe it is because I'm a self-made man. I took nobody's help. I struggled for every penny I've earned. And in this country calling yourself successful, or being successful, is like having committed a sin. Look, what did I have before? I graduated from Kirorimal College in Delhi, and someone told me, if you learn to play golf and sip beer in the afternoon you can land yourself a nice, firm job in Calcutta. So I put on my raw silk jacket and went from office to office putting on my best English accent, and got a job with Bird and Co—Rs 470 a month was my salary. I was interested in films and we saw this ad in the papers for new talent. Bunty took a box camera picture of mine outside the Victoria Memorial and we sent it to a studio. K.A. Abbas signed me up for my first picture, Saat Hindustani, for which I got Rs 3,000.

Q. But despite your success, you seem to be more and more on the defensive.

A. That is the trouble. I can no longer say anything to prove my credentials to my dying day. My face has been blackened and I'll never be able to wipe out this stain. It's difficult being a 'have' in this country. Even moneyed people pose as have-nots. The moment you 'have' it, you've had it. That's what I feel about my own success. This whole country prayed for my life in 1982 when I was nearly dying in hospital. And now they fling shoes at me.

Banner during Amitabh's illness: mood change

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

PRASHANT PANJIAR

SUPREME COURT

Women's Way

IN the Supreme Court, women's issues quite literally seem to be the order of the day. The past few weeks have seen three judgements in quick succession on matters close to the female heart: upholding equal pay for equal work, clarifying that daughters are equally responsible as sons for the maintenance of parents, and finally, sustaining a Muslim woman's right to live separately with maintenance from her husband if he takes a mistress or marries again.

In the first, stenographer Audrey D'Costa won a six-year battle against shipping giant Mackinnon Mackenzie and Co to wrest a salary at par with her male counterparts.

In the second case, Kashirao Sawai was granted maintenance from his married daughter Vijaya Arbat, a doctor. Arbat had appealed against it, saying the law made it obligatory only for sons. The judges ruled otherwise, but said the daughter must have sufficient income independent of her husband.

Lawyer Indira Jaising welcomed the judgement, stating simply, that if women want equal rights, they must have equal responsibilities too. But others had reservations. "There are certain lacunae the verdict ignores," said Prabeen Grewal of Saheli, a women's rights organisation. Grewal felt that when inheritance laws favour sons, the onus of maintaining parents too should be on the sons. Besides, Grewal pointed out: "This verdict will cause tension in the daughters' matrimonial homes."

The third judgement—the Begum Sabanu alias Saira Banu vs Abdul Ghafoor case, vindicating the rights of married Muslim women under Section 125 of the Criminal Procedure Code—threatens to provoke a sequel to the Shah Bano controversy. That episode had resulted in the Muslim Women (Protection of Rights on Divorce) Act, excluding divorced Muslim women from the purview of Section 125 Cr.PC.

In ordering maintenance for Saira Banu, the court made two substantial points. On claiming maintenance, they said, from the point of view of the neglected wife, the law "places the second wife and a mistress on the same footing...." They also said that if a husband has contracted marriage with another woman or keeps a mistress, his wife can justly refuse to live with him—and that this applied to Muslim women as much as to women of any other religion. The Muslim Women Act did not apply as Saira Banu was not a divorcee.

> The Saira Banu case, vindicating the rights of married Muslim women, threatens to provoke a sequel to the Shah Bano controversy.

The judgement was "an eloquent vindication of two of the most vital principles enshrined in the Constitution: equality before the law and dignity of the individual," editorialised The Times of India. Arif Mohammed Khan, who had vehemently opposed the Muslim Women Act, stressed: "The verdict has upheld the earlier view that Section 125 is a secular law that is applicable to all citizens of this country." Daniel Latifi, the leading lawyer in Shah Bano's case, and Kirti Singh, noted lawyer on women's rights, pointed out that the judgement was "merely a clarification of the existing law". But others felt its significance lay in its timing—just before the pending case challenging the Muslim Women Act itself was taken up by the Supreme Court. Yet all of them had one fear: what would be the position if Saira Banu's husband were to divorce her now, bringing her into the fold of the Act?

But Muslim fundamentalists appeared to be taxing their minds on a different plane altogether. Syed Shahabuddin, the Janata MP who had also led the campaign against the Shah Bano judgement, maintained that "the judges have only widened the conflict between the Shariat and the Criminal Procedure Code by remaining silent on certain issues." According to the Shariat, he said, the first wife would be entitled to separate residence and maintenance only if she can accuse the husband of "unequal treatment" as compared to the second wife. Moreover, the first wife can demand maintenance only till she continued to have conjugal relations with her husband, he said.

Interestingly, Shahabuddin's initial reaction was quite different. For, earlier he had told The Statesman: "We never objected to a husband paying maintenance to his wife or a son to his parents. These are Islamic duties under the Shariat and not just legal duties under the law of the land." But he has obviously changed his mind. The squabbling it seems will go on, till the Supreme Court makes up its mind on the petition challenging the Muslim Women Act.

—TANIA MIDHA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Enjoy a great dip beside the pool.

Relax in our garden restaurant beside the pool. Dip into creamy chick pea homus accompanied by succulent seafood, superb salads and a host of fresh tastes from The Mediterranean. Esmeralda — because your family deserves the best the world has to offer.

Esmeralda

The Oberoi
NEW DELHI

Open 12:00 to 3:00 p.m. and 7:30 p.m. until 11:00 p.m.
For lunch or dinner reservations, please call 363030 ext. 1192.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SUN CONTROL
Garware Polyester Film

Beauty that comes alive on your windows

So cool, so calm, so soothing ... an atmosphere without heat, glare or harmful ultra-violet rays from the sun. That's the way Sun Control Film keeps you. Wherever you are — at home, office or in your car, let the light in — keep the heat out.

GARWARE
गरवारे

GARWARE PLASTICS & POLYESTER LTD.
50-A, Swami Nityanand Marg, Western Express Highway, Vile Parle (East), Bombay-400 057
Phone: 634-6381 (4 lines) Telex: 011-71525 GPPL IN, 011-72358 GPPL IN Telegram: "GARWARECAR"

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"Pity, we can't have Rasna parties everyday!"

Mudra:A:PI: 3355

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Rasna

SO ORANGIE-ORANGIE!

INDIA'S LARGEST SELLING SOFT DRINK CONCENTRATE

Manufactured by: Proma Industries, Asarwa, Ahmedabad 380 016.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

You won't find the Bull in a common herd.

Smash
International

After raging abroad, the Bull has returned. Smash international quality T-shirts are now available in India.
The rare match of the cool comfort of classic cotton with the elegance and style of high fashion.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"Now I see what I'd been missing."

TC-2160MR
PAL-System Colour TV
- 21 (54 cm) Grey Square Corner Picture Tube
- 35-Key TV/Video Dual Remote Control
- Top Tuning
- Deluxe On-screen Indication
- Audio/Video-In Terminals

*TC-2160XR 8-System Model Also Available.

"Watching TV is important to me because it's part of my profession ... so I just naturally want to watch the best quality whenever possible. That's why I watch National. The 54-centimeter (21) TC-2160MR, for example, has a square-cornered picture tube that virtually eliminates distortion and image cropping ... and a cool, grey screen makes viewing easier on the eyes. Auto Tuning allows preset tuning of up to 30 channels. And a 35-key infra-red remote control controls not only the TV, but many National videos, too. And if something does go wrong, the National Service Network is there to back me up. Now I see what I'd been missing. You can see it too, at a shop that sells quality National electronics."

Mithun Chakraborty

National Authorized Service Centres in India

Indus Airconditioning Pvt. Ltd. (For home appliances only)
• 371, Cadell Road, Prabhadevi, Bombay 400 028 Tel: 4303719/4309270

Associated Electrical Agencies (For audio/video products only)
• Anugraha Apartments, "B" Block, Ground Floor 19, Nungambakkam High Road, Madras 600 034 Tel: 478559

Esquire Distributing & Servicing Co. Pvt. Ltd.
(For video-related products only)
• Unit No. 1A & 1B Ground Floor, Rehmat Manzil, Dr. Ved Nakhan Road, Churchgate, Bombay 400 028 Tel: 234226/230311

National

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

PAKISTAN

The London Blitz

THE vociferous band of Pakistan People's Party supporters ranged outside the Foreign Press Association in Carlton House in London, kept up a deafening din, "Bhutto, Bhutto", almost drowning out Mohammed Khan Junejo, prime minister of Pakistan, as he rose to address a gathering of journalists. Although clearly discomfited, the mild mannered prime minister, to his credit, bravely ignored the shrieking cries of "Junejo, go back to the barracks" and "go back to your general".

His predicament was symptomatic of the vexatious situations that had confronted him and his imposing delegation throughout their week-long visit to Britain last fortnight, intended to convince this country as well as the world, that democracy in Pakistan was now a firmly entrenched reality. Unfortunately for Junejo, his Foreign Minister, Sahibzada Yakub Khan and for the rest of the entourage bristling with military brass, they spent much of their time on the defensive—defending the questionable, non-party elections through which he came to power, the hundreds of political prisoners languishing in Pakistani jails, the dubious role of the army in the country's affairs and his own ability to stand up to the pressures imposed on him by General Zia-ul-Haq. And never too far away, was the menacing question of the nuclear bomb..

At the Foreign Press Association, Junejo blithely fielded questions about the authenticity of Pakistani democracy. To his bemused audience, he remarked: "After eight years of martial law, since 1985, I have been able to give complete democracy in Pakistan. You sitting in London, cannot dream what is happening in Pakistan. The freedom of the press currently enjoyed in the country has never been witnessed before, in the past 15 years"—a sentiment that the hapless editor of The Muslim, Mushahid Hussein, would no doubt, find hard to agree with. Junejo went on: "So far we have had only two fair elections in Pakistan—in 1977 and in 1985."

It was only when he was quizzed about the nuclear bomb that a benumbed audience came to life. Asked Junejo: "How much credence would you give to a report made by an Indian journalist, sitting on Indian soil, about a Pakistani nuclear bomb? Regarding the Time magazine interview in which our President was attributed as saying we have nuclear bomb capability, I myself asked President Zia, 'tell me Mr President, is the story true?' He said that what has been reported in Time magazine was totally wrong. The President has instead said Pakistan has no capability to make a bomb." It is debatable as to how many journalists present found it easy to believe Junejo.

Junejo with Thatcher: seeking support

SHAHID AHMED

Junejo's visit to Britain, though intended to convince the world that democracy had returned to Pakistan, turned out instead as an exercise in defence of the Government.

Expectedly, the hour-long talks between Margaret Thatcher and Junejo at No. 10, Downing Street, were dominated by Afghanistan. It appears that both were convinced that the Soviet Union wished to withdraw its 115,000 troops from Afghanistan, but the thorny question was to find a government acceptable to everyone. The British prime minister and her visitor wanted a "neutral, non-aligned regime in Kabul", and would have nothing to do with the present ruler of the country, Dr Najibullah who has called upon the Mujahedin-led resistance to join a government of national reconciliation.

While Afghanistan was the key issue, Indian observers here were tuned to the reports that Pakistan was once again seeking entry into the Commonwealth—a move steadfastly opposed by India. Some astute lobbying was done by the Pakistan delegation led by Yakub Khan. Although little was forthcoming from their meetings with Commonwealth Secretary-General Shridath Ramphal, it appeared that most western nations, led by Britain, would be glad to have Pakistan back in the club. And though Junejo denied that any formal application had been made for their re-entry, he indicated that they would gladly consider a "formal invitation". But he added: "India opposes us." What this seemed to mean was that informal bilateral discussions would be carried on by Pakistan and other Commonwealth nations, while Ramphal would sound out all members how they felt about Pakistan's re-entry. But what would happen should one country, say India, be adamantly opposed? A Commonwealth Secretariat spokesman said: "It is difficult to say anything now since there has never been any precedent of a member nation quitting and wishing to rejoin."

Independent observers feel it was now reasonable to expect, throughout western Europe, a Pakistani public relations barrage on three counts: the Afghan question and the increasing burden of the three million refugees; the "non-existent" Islamic bomb; and the grave problems confronting the country's eastern borders—viz India.

—RAMESH CHANDRAN in London

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

WASHINGTON

Pitching for Pakistan

FOR several weeks it had shaped like a cliff-hanger cricket Test match, with fortunes swaying almost on an hourly basis. But last fortnight the signals were getting clearer, and somewhat depressing for India. The pitch on Capitol Hill had turned distinctly in favour of Pakistan.

The Indian camp had still not conceded defeat but there was now a sense of helplessness, with even a supposedly pro-Indian Congressman like Democrat Stephen Solarz of Brooklyn deciding to float with the right-wing mainstream. Said an Indian lobbyist: "What we have been up against is not Pakistan but the US Administration. Make no mistake about that."

As the desperate lobbying entered its penultimate phase, it was clear last fortnight that, barring a miracle, Pakistan was going to get all of its proposed $ 4.02 billion aid package, including much of the modern weaponry it had demanded. Perhaps the only question that still remained was what kind of Airborne Warning and Control Systems (AWACS) the US Administration will finally be able to supply Pakistan. "That something of the sort will be given to Pakistan is beyond any doubt," said a State Department official.

While the optimists on the Indian side still hope that Pakistan may finally have to settle for a lesser system than the E-3—perhaps the Grumman Hawkeye—the Congress has left the option entirely with President Reagan. It has authorised him to sanction the AWACS if he certified that "there is no other cost-effective alternative and that the system would provide effective air defence against attacks from Afghanistan". Since this had been the Administration's line to begin with, it is unlikely that Reagan would dilute his own, original recommendations.

In the complicated American system of decision-making, it will still be some months—perhaps till September—before a final arms package is approved. And, even if a little dispirited, the Indian side is praying for a reversal of fortunes in the Senate. The next step in the decision-making process is the consideration of the aid package by the Senate Foreign Policy Committee, where India has some influential supporters. In fact the only good news from the Indian point of view in recent weeks came from the Senate committee last fortnight, when the committee's secretariat circulated a draft of amendments in the Pakistani aid package. The suggested amendments include a stipulation that Pakistan should not be given any military hardware that introduces new, higher technologies in the region, that there should be a yearly slashing of $ 100 million in arms aid and

Photographs by USIS

Reagan: full authority

$ 45 million in economic aid, and, most vitally, that the aid package should not be approved unless Reagan has verifiable assurances that Pakistan is not pursuing a nuclear weapons programme.

The term "verifiable" survived on the draft after a lot of haggling, and this, from India's point of view, is a key factor since a common interpretation of verifiable assurances is that it would involve inspection of Kahuta by American officials. But it is still only a draft and could end up looking very different in its final form, after a complicated series of discussions, votes and, possibly, some hard bargaining at the Senate-Congress conference.

Indian officials admit that they have

US CONGRESS

India Bashing

NOT for a long time had American decision-makers sent such a nasty signal to New Delhi. In a step that shocked Indian policy planners and surprised even the US State Department, the House Foreign Affairs Committee decided last fortnight, to slash by $ 15 million the proposed $ 50 million development assistance to India. Worse, in the run-up to the amendment, some Democrat Congressmen joined arch-Republicans in condemning India for its proximity to Nicaragua's Sandinista regime, its close defence ties with the Soviet Union and its lack of opposition to the Soviet occupation of Afghanistan.

So intense was the assault on India that Congressmen even accused the Indian Government of hurting US farmers' interests, by selling their surplus wheat to the Soviets. While the Republicans, led by William S. Broomfield of Michigan, out-Ramboed Reagan, Democrats Robert Torricelli and Peter Kostmayer also castigated India for its attitude towards Israel, a "sister democracy". In the past, both Torricelli and Kostmayer were considered generally sympathetic towards India.

While the Republicans attacked India on almost all aspects of its foreign policy, the Broomfield assault was directed specifically at the $ 10.4 million assistance pledged by India to Nicaragua in September last year, when President Daniel Ortega visited New Delhi. So strong was the feeling on this issue that Stephen Solarz's plea, that it was after all not American dollars that India was

Broomfield: sharp attacks

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Capitol Hill: depressing signals little chance of stopping the aid package. But they also see some consolation in defeat—in the fact that the Indian effort has had some impact this time. This is unlike in the past, when the $ 3.2 billion package to Pakistan was approved without any problems. Said Ambassador P.K. Kaul: "We have taken this seriously. We have had two of our people working almost full-time on the Hill."

But given the current mood in the US, it is apparent that whether two or 20, even the most brilliant Indian diplomats can do very little to turn around the new McCarthyism that stalks the American establishment (see box). So strong is the anti-communist tide that even liberal Democrats can't swim against it. The Indian lobby's task was made even more difficult by the timing of the alleged Soviet-Afghan air raids on border villages in Pakistan, just when the deliberations on the Hill were at their most crucial stage. The bombings were followed by the shooting of an Ilyushin transport aircraft by a Pakistani F-16 (the Pakistanis claim the aircraft was spying and was escorted by a fighter, while Kabul asserts that it was an airliner). "A few more incidents like this and India would have to blame the Russians for giving Pakistan the AWACS," said a State Department official.

In this atmosphere, even the Indian supporters have found it convenient to equate India with Pakistan. At one stage, even Solarz, who had once sought financial help from Indian settlers in the US for his fight against the arming of Pakistan, said at a subcommittee meeting: "The truth is, if we sell arms to Pakistan, Indians are going to object....They might even object to sling-shots, for all I know."

But Indian officials believe that the Pakistani arms shopping list includes, besides the AWACS, a large number of M-48 tanks, P-3 Orion maritime reconnaissance and anti-submarine warfare aircraft and Vulcan-Phalanx rapid-firing guns for naval ships. The Pakistanis also want to reserve 15 per cent of the aid package for their ambitious armament production programme. Top priority is placed in Pakistan on the plans to manufacture an upgraded version of the Chinese F-7 fighter and the T-59 tank.

In the current situation, it is unlikely that there will be any major changes in the aid package. Though the Indian effort could move to higher levels, with the forthcoming visits of Indian ministers—External Affairs Minister N.D. Tiwari and his deputy K. Natwar Singh—there will be no stopping the Pakistanis from getting what they have demanded. That will push up the arms race in the subcontinent.

On yet another level, it will leave Indian policy planners with the uneasy realisation that, with American and Pakistani strategic interests converging almost completely now, there will be no knocking the Pakistani lobby in the US till either the Soviet Union leaves Afghanistan or India discovers or builds a lobby of its own. Neither seems likely just now.

—SHEKHAR GUPTA in Washington

giving Nicaragua, fell on deaf ears.

For once, even the US Administration tried to plead the Indian cause. The State Department's deputy assistant secretary for Near Eastern and South Asian affairs, called it a "very wrong signal" and warned the committee that India would view it as a "punitive" action and could "react very strongly". Broomfield and his supporters said that they couldn't care less, and that the cut was indeed meant to be that kind of a signal.

There was dismay in the Indian Embassy, where an aid cut was anticipated, but not the kind of criticism that the debate involved. "Once again, senior leaders in the American political system have proved how little they know of India," said an Indian diplomat, pointing out that a $ 50 million aid package was of no consequence to India anyway. And while New Delhi was yet to make its mind known on the cut, there was speculation that India might simply turn down even the remaining $ 35 million.

Indian officials ascribe the sudden attack on India to the hawkish mood on the Hill and among the American establishment. This was evident last month, in the testimony before the Congressional subcommittee by Marine General George Christ, who heads the US Central Command. Asked about the likely impact of Pakistan's acquisition of nuclear weapons capability on American defence projections, Christ clearly remarked that it would be a useful deterrent against the Soviet Union.

It is the return of such obsessive fear of communism and the consequent inclination to treat every non-ally as an adversary, that makes the going so much more difficult for India. Similar fears have also hardened Pentagon's resistance to the proposed super-computer sale to India and, consequently, the US Administration's offer of a lesser super-computer than India wants.

Observers here are still a little surprised by the lack of obvious reaction from India to these developments. It seems that South Block is still weighing the situation and will wait for the outcome of the visits of N.D. Tiwari and K. Natwar Singh, besides the outcome of the Senate subcommittee deliberations on the Pakistan aid package, on April 24. But unless damage control is initiated quickly, the aid cut, taken together with the generosity towards Pakistan and the new hesitations on the super-computer sale, could easily take Indo-US relations back to the chilly days of 1971, making it the most expensive $ 15 million the US taxpayer ever saved.

—SHEKHAR GUPTA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BOMBAY

White Collar Slum Dwellers

BOMBAY slums have always been associated with menial labourers, small-time tradesmen, pavement hawkers, petty thieves, and the flotsam and jetsam of the lumpen proletariat. It hardly occurs to even the most immunised Bombayite that within the filth and grime of the city's jhopadpatti colonies also dwell cringing members of the educated middle class—engineers, bank officers, advocates, doctors, airline crew, schoolteachers—living two parallel lives. They hate every minute of their slum existence but are helpless in the face of the acute housing shortage in Bombay. They have the money to rent respectable dwellings but there simply aren't any available.

Senior Correspondent TANIA MIDHA spent a week in the slums tracking down the lives of these inhabitants. Her report (some names have been changed on request):

NINE-to-five they are members of the white-collared salaried class. Then they quietly switch over to their nocturnal roles—that of slum dwellers. Torn between embarrassment and anger they lock themselves up inside their cubby-holes and never let their children out to play. Still, they try hard not to be aliens among their neighbours. But they never bring their friends home. Some suffer sleepless nights each time a friend drops in. Many have still not told their office colleagues where they live. Others who do not have this cloak of anonymity, are shunned by both sides.

When Manhar Patel, an officer in the Bank of Baroda, told his office that he lived on Pali Hill, he was not really telling a lie. What he had not specified was that he lived in a slum—Pali Pathar—right near that posh area. He was scared that the fact that he lived in a slum might be considered a job disqualification since he dealt with crores of rupees in the foreign exchange department of his bank. But he couldn't keep this hidden for long. Patel had an accident while riding his scooter and telephoned his office for leave. Concerned colleagues decided to pay him a visit. Since he had not divulged his residential address to anybody in office, they took it out of his personal file. For Patel, the mortification hurt more than his wounds that evening as he saw half a dozen of his colleagues trooping down the narrow gali that led to his hutment. "They were very nice and understanding about it. But obviously I was terribly embarrassed for, after all, peons and clerks in my office must be living in better places," recalled Patel.

Sunil Prabhakar (false name) is a member of an international airline crew. Drawing an average salary of more than Rs 3,000 a month, he stays in Dharavi, Bombay's most infamous slum. Having to report for flights in the early hours of the morning, Prabhakar had to reveal his address for the office car to pick him up for duty. Initially, like all other crew members, the car reported at his residence for

Photographs by PRASHANT PANJIAR

Sanjeev Chopra, an engineer from Jalandhar, works as an electrical designer but lives in slums near Cuffe Parade.

'Nobody in his right mind would like to live here. We're here only because we are helpless.'

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

flights. Then, one day when he was being dropped home, air hostesses being dropped by the same car complained against having to go through Dharavi on their way. Next, even the drivers refused to pick him up and the cars stopped coming altogether. Today, Prabhakar has to find a taxi in the wee hours each time he takes a flight. "I hate this place," says his wife Mandakini, "Ek ek din, ek ek saal ke roopik nikalta hai (Each day stretches on like a year)." She refuses to make friends with any of her neighbours notwithstanding her husband's tireless efforts to convince her that just because the people living around them are illiterate it does not necessarily make them "bad people". Prabhakar has learned to take in his stride the jarring phenomenon of flying straight out of the five-star Hotel Lexington in New York and crash-landing in Dharavi.

Shobha Sharma, a schoolteacher grossing over Rs 2,500 a month, has come to terms with her slum at Sion Koliwada. Shortly after they moved into their jhopdi, her husband managed to obtain a telephone connection for them. During those early days, both parents used to call their children at home to remind them not to step out of the house after coming home from school. But after seeing how much the neighbours helped out after her husband's untimely death, Shobha has changed somewhat over the years. She says: "Their values may be different, but they are always there to help in times of emergency."

Yet that middle class ego is difficult to suppress. Says 26-year-old Sanjeev Chopra (false name), an engineer working on contract as an electrical designer in Development Consultants (Pvt) Ltd: "When you move around in a particular circle, you have some sort of respect. In any case I don't have the time to mix around here." Chopra switches between his Nariman Point office and Dr Babasaheb Ambedkar Dalit Nagar, a slum at Cuffe Parade, and is extremely uncomfortable at home. His neighbours just look at him sympathetically and understand his problem. "He doesn't mean any harm. He just sticks to himself," they say.

APART from the mental torment, there is of course the sheer physical discomfort of living in a slum. If the wives gradually get used to collecting water from a common tap or handpump in the area, the families are unable to accept living without electricity in a metropolitan city like Bombay. So, like most slum dwellers, these people too have learned the ropes and have managed to get unauthorised electricity connections. Open drains and gutters are inescapable for most, but some have managed to cement the paths outside their houses, and used their influence to get the drains covered.

Subhash Sawant, municipal councillor in the corporation of Greater Bombay, who stays in the Dawri Nagar slums in Santa Cruz (East), may not have been able to muster the clout to get himself a house outside this colony but has managed to collect all the basic amenities possible inside a slum dwelling. He has even managed to get the Telephone Department to allot him his councillors' special category telephone. And he has replaced the steel, asbestos, tile and polythene used in the construction of regular tenements with concrete, brick and cement walls. But all is not hunky-dory. For Sawant still has to contend with floods and water overflow into his house during monsoons.

Sawant, however, does not consider his residing in the slum an act of political gimmickry as some are ready to suggest. "People feel that since I have become a councillor, at least now I should be able to ask for and get a better place. After all, if I can't look after myself, how will my voters expect me to look after them?" asks Sawant glumly.

Many of these elite slum dwellers have constructed imaginative first floors within their huts, which are accessible by wooden ladders going through a false ceiling. Down the lane from Sawant's house lives H.I. Surti, a supervisor in R.K. Industrial Insulation. Surti's hutment sports what he calls his mezzanine TV room—just large enough to accommo-

Shobha Sharma, a schoolteacher, lives in the Sion Koliwada slums with three convent-educated daughters who speak French fluently.

'Their values may be different but they are always there to help you in times of emergency.'

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

NAMAS BHOJANI

Subhash Sawant, municipal councillor, has managed to get his special category telephone in Dawri Nagar slum tenement.

> ‘If my voters feel that I can't even look after myself, how will they expect me to look after them?’

date a crouching family of four and the television. The evenings are generally spent up here. "It's our way of escaping the crowds. Even if we are not watching TV, I read my newspaper, my wife cuts vegetables for dinner and my daughter gets some peace to study," says Surti, for what these people crave for most is some form of privacy.

Because most of these people can save more money than regular city dwellers for luxuries, not having to pay water and electricity bills and prohibitive rents, their dwellings, equipped with televisions, videos, refrigerators, telephones, LPG connections, fans and electrical fittings, full-length mirrors and even glazed tiles on the walls and floor, suggest a middle class ambience. But step outside and the dream is shattered.

But many of them still wax philosophical about their condition. Says Kiran Gaikwad, an income tax inspector who lives in Dharavi: "Dignity comes from within the person, not from the surroundings." But his brother, Rajan, a police sub-inspector, is quick to add: "All the same, I frankly don't like staying here and prefer not to bring my friends over."

A lot of couples admit that it is easier for them to live with their predicament because their wives are also working. Says Patel, whose wife works for the Maharashtra State Electricity Board and has office hours as long as his: "If she were to live here alone all day, we wouldn't last long." Gaikwad too admits that his wife would have found it "claustrophobic" if she were to stay home. "At least this way we both are out of these surroundings for a major part of the day," he says.

BUT what deeply troubles most of these residents is having to subject their children to such contrasting worlds. And they hate to burden their offsprings with the embarrassment they themselves face in combining the two worlds. Their children invariably come home from school and demand to know why they live in dirty colonies as compared to their school friends. Eleven-year-old Daksha Surti is no exception. "I point to the building being constructed across the main road and say we will be shifting there when it is ready—I dread the day when it actually is," confesses her father.

Shobha's daughters have all studied in convents. They have all been taught French and each aspires for a professional career. While Deepika intends to join hotel management, Arti is trying for commercial art and Sheetal, the youngest at 14, wants to be an air hostess. Their style of dressing—jeans and casual T-shirts—invites comments when they return home in the evenings, and although Shobha feels bad about it, she rationalises things: "The girls are least bothered by it now—they have hardened themselves to become immune to such remarks." They have been taught to be friendly with their neighbours, so Sheetal has friends in the colony. But she says: "They're different. They speak filthy language and their parents don't teach them manners."

Prabhakar has bought a video for the house so that he can keep the children home with new movies every day. "It had become difficult to convince them that they must study even though the other children don't. And if I asked my neighbours to call their children in to study, they would say: 'You bother about your own child. We don't want to make our child an officer'", says Prabhakar. But Shobha feels that some of her neighbours, following her example, have now begun to send their children to school, even English-medium ones. Gaikwad too says his family has become a trend-setter in the colony. His neighbours are now thinking in terms of a good education for their children and are saving for it. Yet, says Gaikwad: "My friends ask me what future my children have in Dharavi. If I sincerely think about it, they are right. These are not the surroundings I want my children to grow up in. Ultimately when they grow up a little, I will have to move out." Patel has the added problem of his neighbour running a liquor business from home. He has had several embarrassing moments with drunkards hanging around outside his house. Obviously, he doesn't want to bring up his children in the area.

All these people consciously make a special effort at creating an agreeable domestic atmosphere at home to offset the contrary values imbibed from the neighbourhood. But beyond that, the question

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

S.Y. Sherkhane, a high court advocate, picks his way through the lanes of Dharavi on his way to the courts every morning.

> ‘It's no joke getting space in Bombay. It's easier to find a wife here than a house to live with her in.’

remains: "Where do we go from here?"

Patel's background is similar to that of S.Y. Sherkhane, a high court advocate living in Dharavi. Both, in an attempt to break out of the circle of poverty were able to complete their education despite heavy odds. Both secured Bachelor of Law degrees. But having broken through inherited barriers and successfully joined Bombay's army of educated white-collar workers, they have had to succumb to the simple logic offered by Bombay—there are no middle class houses going at middle class rates. So they stay put in the slums.

Sherkhane says he has tried his "very level best" to shift out of Dharavi, but with no success. "It's only the lucky few that get away," he says. A conservative man with daughters in their late teens, Sherkhane is desperate to move out as he says his daughters cannot step out without being greeted by whistles and comments. "How long can a father watch this?" he asks.

The lucky few who managed to break away, people like Kishore Tamhankar, an agent for Life Insurance Corporation and also working for National Organic Chemical Industry Ltd, looks back in wonder on the years of struggle. Says Tamhankar, who recently shifted out of a slum in Santa Cruz to a flat in Borivili: "I've learnt a lot about community living and caring for neighbours from the slums." In his new building, nobody has the time to bother about each other's well-being, he says, pointing to the fact that in the first fortnight of his stay in Borivili his house was broken into in broad daylight and none of the neighbours even noticed anybody slipping in or out. "Such a thing would be impossible in the slums," says Tamhankar.

BUT security is cold comfort for the odds that go against it. "Nobody in his right mind would like to live here. We're here only because we are helpless," says Chopra, who has seen much better days when he lived with his father, a retired army captain in Jalandhar. Chopra wants to get married soon and is desperately looking for a flat. "I thought I would just stay here for a few days. It's been a year now," he recalls bitterly, adding: "And all I want is one room."

All each one wants is a room somewhere. But with virtually no houses being offered on rent anymore in Bombay, they have to buy that room. And the property market in Bombay being a sellers' market, buying a room at market rates is unthinkable for middle class pockets. Even the smallest and the worst tenement in a jhopadpatti colony comes for a minimum of Rs 20,000. The better ones with first-floor contraptions range right up to Rs 1 lakh and even more if they are concrete structures. Inflation knows no class barriers and according to a rough market assessment, tenements that were for the asking at just Rs 200 to Rs 300 in 1970 today fetch anywhere between Rs 30,000 and Rs 40,000. There is no rent system in the slums—the regularised ones pay a pittance of around Rs 25 to the municipal corporation and the others just sit pretty on their land with no rent, water or electricity charges till the demolition squad comes along. You either buy it straight off or take over occupation by paying a lumpsum as pagdi to the previous occupant. "It's no joke getting space even in the slums today," says Sherkhane. "In Bombay it's easier getting a wife than a house to live with her in."

The only way out seems to be to become members of self-financed group housing societies. Each of the middle class slum dwellers is making desperate attempts to get membership in one—and many have got duped by dummy societies in the process. In the genuine ones, what they can afford are one-room apartments in housing schemes as distant as Virar and Andheri—far enough to make a man think whether a renovated tenement in a conveniently located slum is not as good or as bad as one concrete room in the back-waters of Bombay.

The hot young-bloods, Chopra, for example, would go anywhere to get out of what he calls his present hell. But for those who have mellowed with age, a certain fatigue has crept in. As Surti says: "Ab himmat nahin hoti. (Now I don't have the will anymore.)" They have fought and they have lost. They are not sure if they have resigned, but have postponed the next bout, maybe indefinitely, for they see no hope.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

When cardiac arrest comes, are you ready for the rescue?

BPL medical electronic equipment ... for life-saving reliability.

Medical electronic equipment from BPL. For diagnosis, monitoring and therapy of cardiac diseases. With reliability built into every product and state-of-the-art technology into every innovation. The BPL cardiac medicare range. One step closer to comprehensive coronary care.

The Cardiart range of ECGs for accurate diagnosis. Bedside Monitors for constant surveillance. Cardiac Resuscitation Systems for ultimate therapy. Central Nursing Stations for multi-bed monitoring. And dependable consumables and accessories.

Prestigious technical tie-ups. Constant product development. A comprehensive manufacturing infrastructure. Rigorous research. And around two decades of invaluable experience. That is BPL's contribution to coronary care. That is BPL's commitment to life-saving reliability.

The BPL range

- Cardiart ECGs
- Bedside Monitors
- Central Nursing Stations
- Cardiac Resuscitation Systems
- Supplies and Accessories

For more information, contact any of our Sales Offices.

everest/S/86/BPL/42 A

BPL-INDIA

In pursuit of perfection

CENTRAL MARKETING ORGANISATION: BANGALORE: Phone: 572321/2/6

SALES OFFICES: • BANGALORE: Phone: 561598/574787 • BOMBAY: Phone: 4938704/4938392/4925398/4925361/4922933/4922918 • CALCUTTA: Phone: 431658/448566 • COCHIN: Phone: 361619 • COIMBATORE: Phone: 34921 • HYDERABAD: Phone: 231091 • MADRAS: Phone: 474309/471378/479420 • NEW DELHI: Phone: 6433689/6433865/6431886 • PALGHAT: Phone: 3241.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

and eGangotri

Graviera has it made for you.
For your shirts.
For your trousers.
For your safaris.
For her.

The newest weaves.
The latest textures.
The last word in design and style.

Graviera.
Great value for money.
Always.

You've got it made with Graviera.

GRAVIERA
FASHION FABRICS GR®
BHIWANI TEXTILE MILLS, Bhiwani, Haryana.
(A unit of Grasim Industries Ltd.)

Karishma/BTM/2/2790

everest/S/86/BPL/42 A

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

It takes three wings to carry the outdoors to the indoors

ASP-OGI-112B/87

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

doors

ORIENT
A lifetime of refreshing air.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The frenzied bird-call starts again... what strange visions disturb the peace of the papiha?

Perhaps it dreams of the beautiful forests sunk fathoms deep beneath the spreading waters of the Periyar Lake. Maybe it fears the occasional glimpse of the elusive tiger as it stalks its prey... no one will ever know for sure. But the papiha calls unceasingly, while the world dismisses it as the "brain-fever" bird. All other inhabitants — the elephants, antelopes, bison, sambhar and the monkeys seem restful enough. Come, cruise around this lake and become a part of this peaceful co-existence.

ACCESSIBILITY
Thekkady (the entrance to the Sanctuary) is accessible by road from its nearest airport at Madurai (145 km). Other convenient airports are Trivandrum (272 km) and Cochin (190 km). The nearest railhead is Kottayam, 115 km away.

ACCOMMODATION
Three hotels are run by KTDC at Thekkady. For reservations contact the Managers of Aranya Nivas, Tel: Kumali 23, Lake Palace, Tel: Kumali 24 and Periyar House, Tel: Kumali 26. There are also Forest Rest Houses inside the forest. For further details contact: The Field Director, Project Tiger, Kanjikuzhi, Kottayam, Tel: 8409.

TOURS
KTDC conducts Tours from Trivandrum and Cochin every Saturday. For reservations contact: Tourist Reception Centre, Thampanoor, Trivandrum, Tel: 5031 and Shanmugham Rd., Cochin, Tel: 33234.

SEASON
All through the year, except in the monsoons.

PERIYAR
Discover India
Discover yourself

Department of Tourism
Government of India

In India you'll see the world.

Rediffusion/DT/5345

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ELECTRONIC MARVEL

SHARP policy turn-abouts are round the corner in electronics. The Government has decided to throw open to the organised private sector the manufacture of both digital watches (restricted so far to state undertakings) and pocket calculators (now mostly assembled from imported kits by small-scale units). The idea is to license five manufacturers to turn out up to 20 lakh calculators each (the present ceiling is one lakh), on condition that they do not import components.

Meanwhile, the Department of Electronics is also proposing that a private company be allowed to start a joint venture with a Central government undertaking. Indian Telephone Industries (ITI) has tied up with the California-based Equitorial Pacific International for a Rs 7-crore satellite communication equipment venture. A new company is to be launched in which ITI will hold 49 per cent of the equity, the Unit Trust another 11 per cent and the Californian company the remaining 40 per cent. If cleared, the shareholding pattern will represent an extension of the joint sector concept from state government enterprises to Central government undertakings.

PR PROPOSALS

ADVERTISING agencies have found a new avenue for growth: the public relations business. Several agencies are suddenly busy setting up satellite units to handle a range of public relations functions for corporate clients. First off the mark was Ogilvy, Benson and Mather, which launched O and M Publicity last year and already has some 15 clients on its roster. Sistas already has an in-house outfit, Marketing and Advertising Associates has launched its Corporate Voice, Trikaya will be kicking off a unit called Profile, and both Lintas and Enterprise are considering taking the plunge.

LOSING BID

VIJAY Mallya's McDowell & Company has lost out in its bid to annually manufacture one lakh tonnes of methanol (used for aviation fuel and as a raw material for the plastics industry). The proposed Rs 55 crore project in Andhra Pradesh has been shot down by the Government on the ground that sufficient production capacities are already in the pipeline. This decision marks a victory for two public sector companies, Rashtriya Chemicals & Fertilisers and Gujarat Narmada Valley Fertiliser Company, both of which produce methanol. They had opposed McDowell's application, using the same argument that the Government finally cited. Mallya has also been trying to get a license to manufacture linear alkyl benzene at Vishakhapatnam, so far without luck.

RIGHT CHORD

AFTER many years of stagnation, DCM has finally got the green signal from the Government for one of its many proposed projects. This one is for a Rs 65-crore project to produce nylon industrial yarn and tyre chord, most of which will be converted into fabrics at Kota in Rajasthan, for supply to the tyre industry. The Government had turned down a similar proposal almost two years ago, arguing that the Shriram group already had a licence to manufacture rayon tyre chord. But this time, DCM argued that rayon tyre chord was an obsolete item with shrinking demand, that another unit making rayon tyre chord had already closed down because of this, and that some existing facilities at Kota could be used for making nylon tyre chord.

STABLE STAPLES

THE Government's decision to increase the issue price of wheat by Rs 5 per quintal, to Rs 195, emphasises once again the relative stability in foodgrain prices, due to the accumulated foodgrain stocks. Over the last six years, wheat procurement prices have gone up less than 30 per cent

Chart by B.K. SHARMA

(from Rs 130 per quintal in 1981-82 to Rs 166 this year). Paddy prices have also risen modestly, from Rs 115 in 1981-82 to Rs 146 last year, while coarse grains procurement prices rose the least, from Rs 116 to Rs 132 in the same period (less than 15 per cent). For other commodities like groundnut, urad and moong, however, the procurement prices have risen faster.

SHOE SCRAMBLE

THE new corporate El Dorado seems to be shoe exports: a host of big companies are scrambling to enter the burgeoning overseas market, in the light of the government decision to allow manufacture if 75 per cent of production is exported. The latest to apply for permission is Indian Hotels (the Taj group). This Tata company has tied up with the US-based Wolverine to set up a plant in a backward district in Karnataka to produce seven lakh shoes a year.

The project is yet to be cleared, as is a Bata proposal involving a collaboration with Adidas (Bata is seeking a 50 per cent export obligation). But Larsen & Toubro has recently got permission to launch a shoe venture in Gujarat, while another Tata proposal to make finished shoes at Dewas was cleared last year. Meanwhile, Ponds India seems to have expanded shoe upper production capacity in Pondicherry.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

AIRLINE BOARDS

Troubled Experiment

SIX months ago, Ratan Tata was in his Bombay office when Jagdish Tytler, minister of state for civil aviation, came on the line from New Delhi. Would Tata become chairman of Air-India? "I was taken aback, but thrilled," Tata recalls. "I fly myself, and I have always been interested in aviation." He promptly accepted.

On the same day, Rahul Bajaj was attending a seminar in Italy when he got a call from his Pune office. Tytler had apparently called Pune and said that Bajaj was being made chairman of Indian Airlines. The two-wheeler tycoon didn't quite know what to make of this offer. He called his uncle in Bombay to find out what it meant, and was advised to accept—which he did. "In any case, how could I refuse?"

Thus started a bold, new experiment in public sector management. For this was the first time that public sector boards would have government officials in a minority, and people from the private sector dominating the show. Apart from the two chairmen, the other new private sector inductees were Yogi Deveshwar (president of the Welcomgroup chain of hotels), Ritu Nanda (managing director of Niky-Tasha), Russi Mody (chairman of Tata Steel), Pratap Reddy (chairman, Apollo Hospitals), Z.R. Rangoonwala (chairman, Mercantile Bank), Vivek Bharat Ram (executive director, DCM-Toyota), and Arun Nanda (Rediffusion).

But six months after the experiment began, the mood in both boardrooms is uncertain, many of the new directors are not sure what exactly they have achieved, there have been unexpected conflicts with Tytler's ministry, and a lowering of hopes. Although a cheerful Ritu Nanda argues that "private sector people in a public sector situation will yield better results, because hybrids always do", there is little doubt that this particular experiment in industrial genetics—being conducted by Rajiv Gandhi himself (for it was his idea)—has got off to an uncertain start.

"They ask a lot of questions, they are certainly eager to do something," said a doubting member of the Indian Airlines management. "But why don't you ask the passengers and the Indian Airlines staff, whether they have found any difference." Added a full-time director in Air-India: "Do we need to be told by the new board that our ground service is poor, or that we are now only an ethnic airline? We already know all this. The point is, what are they doing about it?"

If these questions and comments reflect the skepticism that still prevails in the head offices of both Air-India and Indian Airlines, most board members argue that it is still early in the day for results. Ratan Tata is cautiously optimistic—"Our initial expectations may still be fulfilled"—and rattles off a long list of what he has found wrong with Air-India: stagnation and a poor growth record, very old fleet of aircraft, poor industrial relations, failure to move with the times and introduce non-stop flights, de-motivated staff, in-house politics, and so on. His board has already played a role in getting the new Boeing 'Combi' aircraft (planes that combine both passenger and cargo loads), pushed through a plan to acquire younger planes, and decided to introduce non-stop flights instead of the multi-stop milk runs that it now specialises in. Even the image of the airline may be changed in the total revamp effort. Three specialised agencies have been asked to make presentations on the subject, and in the next few months the Air-India Maharaja might finally give way to an altogether new airline image. Also, expansion is being sought more aggressively, and aircraft will be leased instead of bought in order to get around the shortage of money.

Indian Airlines too has begun to show some changes under its revamped board. The first priority has been passenger service. One area of action has been to speed up check-in and flight boarding and to avoid the irritation of repeated queues. Thus, Airbus passengers between Bombay and Delhi now go straight into security check after checking-in, avoiding a second queuing up as well as baggage identification near the aircraft. Soon, checking-in will be done at any counter, for any flight, so that passengers can choose the shortest queue counter.

In the air, stewardesses have been given new uniforms (sarees in pastel shades) and will also get work aprons so that their sarees don't get soiled while serving food. And for the executive class, new frills are being added and the fare being raised, so that those flying 'J' class feel they are in fact getting something special—including a greeting by name when they board the aircraft.

That is not very much, but it is a beginning. If more has not been achieved already, one reason is that a board of directors in a public sector context has severe limitations on what it can do—as

Ratan Tata

Rahul Bajaj

Ritu Nanda

Vivek Bharat R

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

After private sector stalwarts moved onto the Air-India and Indian Airlines boards, the directors are not sure what they have achieved, there have been conflicts with Tytler's ministry, and a lowering of hopes.

some of the private sector stalwarts now admit. Also, matters have not gone very smoothly with the ministry, headed by Tytler, who clearly likes to take a direct and day-to-day interest in the affairs of both airlines.

Inevitably, there have been differences. The new Managing Director of Indian Airlines, G. Pais, was not Rahul Bajaj's first choice, only his second, and was really Rajiv Gandhi's appointee. The word in the Air-India headquarters is that Tata too did not want his new Managing Director, Rajan Jetley, and that he had been in favour of an in-house promotion. But Tata denied this, and said he had only suggested two possible choices—one in-house and the other a man brought in from outside—and that Jetley was an excellent choice as a man-manager.

In a more forthright difference of opinion, the Indian Airlines board wanted to charge the market value for the turboprops that it was handing over to Vayudoot, but Tytler put his foot down and said only a nominal book value would be paid. In Air-India, Tytler has seen to it that some items on the agenda for the board meetings have been removed.

Inevitably, there has been some tension between the boards and the ministry. Initially, the boards seemed to be under the impression that they would be the decision-makers, and that the ministry's role was far more circumspect. Indeed, both Bajaj and Tata suggested to Tytler that he and the ministry should restrict themselves to broad policy issues, and leave the rest to the board. Tytler apparently agreed in principle, but (and this is the way the boards see it) has then continued to do what he has wanted. Recently, he sent letters to both airlines with suggestions on the minutest detail, down to in-flight menu.

The view from the ministry is that the boards themselves have debated several issues but not actually done very much, and that it is the ministry that has had to take the initiative in order to get things moving. Several examples are cited to prove this, including the buy-back deal being negotiated with Boeing to save foreign exchange, and the networking that has been done between the Air-India and Indian Airlines computers. A board member, however, contested this and said that several suggestions in Tytler's letter had already been approved by the board—implying that Tytler was trying to pre-empt credit.

Bajaj declined comment on the relationship with the ministry, while Tata, picking his words carefully, said: "This experiment won't succeed through either confrontation or acquiescence. It needs independence, and mutual respect." He added that the ministry had been used to functioning in a certain manner—taking the board for granted—and that it would only be fair to give it some time to change. "I would need time if I were suddenly asked to change my style of functioning." But others are not quite so hopeful. Said a new director: "The fact is that the board meets about once a month, whereas the ministry is there every day and so is the airline management. The two will naturally interact without the board. I don't see how this can change."

That little dilemma points to another discovery that many of the new appointees have made: the company boards in the public and private sector function differently. The latter have to deal with their shareholders only once a year, but in the case of the public sector the shareholder (the ministry) is there every day, and is used to calling the shots.

Said a director of Indian Airlines: "I don't know how much we can actually achieve. We have no role in the appointment of the managing director, our investments are limited by the funds that the Planning Commission chooses to provide, any decision that we take on the aircraft must be ratified by various government bodies like the Public Investment Board, and practically anything that you want to do seems to need the ministry's clearance." Retorted a public sector nominee on the board: "In their own companies these people are used to being rajas, with their word being law. But now they find that they can't really do very much."

Nevertheless, most of the new directors have taken their role seriously. Ratan Tata says he spends two or three half-days every week at the Air-India head office. He has visited several of the airline's offices

Diagram by B.K. SHARMA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

You may not know too much about home computers.

But, did you know that all over the world, over 20 million families are using home computers today?

To prepare themselves for the world of tomorrow.

To help their children know the basics of computers — so that they can easily fit into a computerised world when they grow up.

It's easier to learn about computers if you have a home computer at home. It helps you bridge the gap between ignorance and knowledge about the way computers function.

It can teach you BASIC, the first language to know in computers. It can teach your children Maths or Geography or other subjects in an easy, entertaining way. It can help you keep your household and office accounts. It can entertain you and educate you. With hundreds of intelligent games that help you develop your decision-making abilities.

And it costs so little, every family can buy one

Yes, a home computer is an important part of every modern home today.

Because it helps you and your children bridge the gap between today and tomorrow.

Come to Computer Point for more information and a free demonstration of home computers. And start feeling at home with computers. Right away!

COMPUTER POINT

Bangalore: 43, Dickenson Road. Tel: 578718/578452 ● Bombay: 227, Dr. Annie Besant Road, Worli. Tel: 4936716/4930543
Madras: 92, G. N. Chetty Road, T. Nagar. Tel: 441192 ● New Delhi: F-41, South Extension Part I. Tel: 624370/698548

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

around the world, been to airports, checked on the engineering and other facilities, and also done some spot night visits. Bajaj is reticent about how much effort he has put in, but his fellow-board members say he has shown a tremendous interest in the job at hand. Others, like Ritu Nanda, have talked to loaders, supervisors, pilots, and asked for a security card so that she can have unhindered access to all the civil airports. Indian Airlines has also run special work sessions so that the new directors become familiar with the aviation industry. Indeed, one of the new directors was so enthusiastic as to ask for a full-time office in New Delhi's Airlines House—prompting the then managing director, Captain K. Chadha, to offer his own and another director to say that people should know the difference between full-time and part-time directors.

Said a government official who is used to being on airline boards: "On balance, I think it has been a good thing to do. Civil aviation is a service industry, and when it becomes a government monopoly we tend to forget the passenger. These people are very conscious of passenger service." Others are more critical. Said a public sector director on one of the boards: "Frankly, I don't think these boards have been able to do anything as yet. I think Tytler as minister has made his presence felt more."

But one particularly depressed member of the Indian Airlines board said: "Looking back, I feel we have achieved hardly anything. There is no money, there is too much ministerial interference. The managing director is threatened with transfer unless he does something the ministry wants, and the board is nowhere in the picture. I keep wondering, should we complain, or just resign?"

With such a sharply varying mixture of assessments and moods, it is impossible to predict what will happen in the months ahead. Both boards have an initial term till the end of June. Logically, the prime minister will want to give his experiment in industrial genetics time to succeed. Meanwhile, the ministry is suggesting to him that both Air-India and Indian Airlines have a common board of directors so as to bring about greater cohesion and common use of facilities. If this goes through, the Tata-Bajaj experiment will very quickly have been aborted. If not, they may still get time to show passengers, airline staff, the Government and their critics that private sector techniques can deliver results in the public sector.

—T.N.NINAN

EAST INDIA HOTELS

Branching Out

QUESTION: What do hospitals, processed foods, fruit juices, air taxis, edible oils, computer software and computers have in common? The answer, surprisingly, is the Oberoi group of hotels. Bent on setting a blistering pace of growth, the Rs 200-crore-turnover hotel chain is readying to leap into all these and more.

"We don't want to put all our eggs in one basket. We are branching out into related fields—food, drink, and transportation," explains hotel baron P.R.S. Oberoi. At the sprawling 80-acre farm on Delhi's outskirts from where he directs his empire of 30-odd hotels, the dapper vice-chairman of East India Hotels flicks the ash off a cigar, pushes his spectacles up onto his forehead and talks of setting up food preservation plants and launching mid-market hotels.

The group is negotiating with a British company on a food irradiation project, meant to prolong the shelf life of food products. It is actively seeking a tie-up with a US outfit for processed foods, with a good chunk of the herbs and spices from the Rs 10-crore venture meant to be sold overseas. A Rs 25-crore upscale general hospital on Delhi's border is to be followed by hospitals in other cities, if the first succeeds. And computers are certainly coming soon, a tie-up already having been negotiated with Hewlett Packard to hawk hotel industry software world-wide. The Rs 6.5-crore project is expected to notch up annual sales of over Rs 11 crore three years from now. "We can piggyback on the Hewlett Packard name," says Avijit Datta, general manager, computer systems.

Cartoon by AJIT NINAN

The Oberois have also signed up with a Canadian consultancy firm for edible oils extraction technology, with the project cost expected to be anything from Rs 60 crore to Rs 120 crore. "We will be marketing oils and all the derivatives such as oil cakes, and can get into soaps, although no firm decisions have been taken. We may form a new company and go to the public to raise funds," says Keshav Prasad, vice-president of East India Hotels.

Also on the anvil is a Rs-140 crore proposal to blanket 21 smaller towns with four-star and three-star hotels over the next decade (a beginning was made at Bhubaneswar in Orissa over a year ago). With the market for five-star hotels being limited, going mid-market could help tap new clientele. The new hotels are expected to bring in almost Rs 100 crore a year in sales.

The new projects put together will call for an investment of roughly Rs 300 crore. Where will the money come from? The group will not have to ante up all the cash (it can go to the public and the banks). Also, all the projects may not materialise. Already, the Oberois have given up their plans for an ambitious foray into fast foods (the real estate prices were forbidding), and the air taxi venture has been kept hanging for want of government clearance. Some of the other ventures may be iffy too. But the sorties into edible oils and hotels stand a good chance of being cleared, and the Hewlett Packard deal is already on. Clearly, the Oberois will soon be playing host to a lot of non-hotel business.

—PALAKUNNATHU G. MATHAI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Photographs by BHAWAN SINGH

Arora with artistes: version recordings

AUDIO-CASSETTES

A Supersuccess Story

LATE in the evening, a stroll through Old Delhi's Daryaganj fruit market will take a visitor past Gulshan Arora's nondescript stall where, twice a week, he tends languorously to his wares. Arora, 32, a curly-haired baby-faced man with dreamy eyes looks like the quintessential stallwalla. There is little about his appearance and demeanour to betray Arora's other life—that of a jet-setting tycoon, owner of two sleek Mercedes limousines, a mansion in a swank south Delhi suburb, a house in Bombay's fashionable Juhu and a man who, by all accounts, is India's uncrowned audio-cassette king.

Barely 15 km from his fruitstall, which he attends to ritualistically—because this was the economic mainstay of his family only six short years ago—lies Arora's miraculous electronics empire housed in some four small factories in the new industrial townships of Noida and Okhla. Here, Arora and his brothers have created a mini-Japan.

Some 2,000 skilled workers employed in three shifts and paid a minimum monthly wage of Rs 900—plus a 20 per cent bonus, free home-cooked lunches and tea, and free transport aboard deluxe coaches—churn out between 75,000 and 80,000 music cassettes a day using the most sophisticated machinery in the business. This is the home of Supercassettes, now marketed in shopping centres all over India under the 'T-series' label. A recent visitor to Japan who was invited to tour the Sony establishment remarked after he had visited Supercassettes: "The only difference I saw was that in Japan workers wear uniforms. Here they don't."

Supercassettes has cornered 70 per cent of the music market for new films. Within five years the total investment of this firm in plant and equipment has grown from around Rs 10 lakh to about Rs 20 crore, and its executives are already talking about diversifying into the production of 14-inch black-and-white TV sets to be retailed at about Rs 1,300. Its total turnover from sale and export of magnetic tapes, empty cassettes and components is about Rs 80 crores. Sale of recorded cassettes is already estimated at about Rs 25 crore, leap-frogging the company ahead of established giants in the field such as Gramophone Company of India, Music India, CBS, and a host of smaller companies.

Despite the growth of Supercassettes, it is not easy to pin down its precise position in the Indian audio-cassettes market, estimated at between Rs 150 crore and Rs 200 crore—way above industries such as typewriters, ball-bearings and fluorescent tubes. Much of the cassette market in the country is still in the hands of thousands of fly-by-night operators who do a thriving business on piracy.

Market competitors shrug off Supercassettes' success as but one more example of successful piracy. They claim that the company has been able to undercut the established businesses by subsidising its legitimate operation through unaccounted earnings through the sale of pirated tapes. But Supercassettes executives bristle at even a suggested hint of this. "If anything," says Pinki Kumar, senior technical manager, "it is we who face the biggest problem from pirates. We have turned over pirated tapes to the cops, we have helped conduct raids on pirate establishments, but this does not stop them." In order to hammer home its bona fides, Supercassettes not only brands its 'T-series' label and address of manufac-

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

A Supercassettes factory (above); and some new releases: hi-tech operations

tures on the cellophane wrappings of its cassettes and on the casings but also has it printed in mini-type—a process only available in Japan—on its tape leaders.

Supercassettes, which has now sold crores of tapes since its inception, paid more than Rs 2 crore in corporate income tax this year, and has been paying excise duty of Rs 1 crore every six months on the production of magnetic audio-tapes from its modern sister company, Tony.

So tight is the quality control within this unit—that not a single inch of tape is allowed out until it is screened before special lights by the naked eye and put through special magnetic purifiers to erase even a trace of ambient sound. "I can say without any hesitation," maintains Arora, "that this quality is as good as, if not better than, any made in the world."

Because Supercassettes now itself manufactures almost every part that goes into a cassette—cases, components, magnetic tape, and even the machines, such as high-precision rollers, which are used in the manufacturing, and because it also prints its own labels and ad posters on its own printing press—the company is able to sell a C-60 (one-hour tape) for Rs 10 wholesale. Other companies, which have to buy or import components, often sell a 30-minute cassette at an ex-factory price anywhere between Rs 15 and Rs 18. Dealers almost unanimously admit that Supercassettes is almost impossible to undersell.

The sheer volume of production is mind-boggling. On one floor is a giant Otari machine capable of recording at 64 times the normal speed. It accounts for 400 one-hour cassettes every 20 minutes. In tape-to-tape cassette duplication—through several hundreds of such machines—43 cassettes are reproduced every six minutes. And in every corner of the production areas are sound-proof rooms equipped with high-fidelity stereophonic systems where batches of tapes are tested by engineers for quality before being labelled and packed into containers for shipment.

But since the proof of the pudding is in the eating, what of the final product? And here, most observers believe, lies Arora's marketing genius, for he was among the first to hit upon the idea of what he calls "version recordings". Bringing the evergreen oldies to life was a problem that Arora had mused over for long. Hit songs sung by Gita Dutt, Suman Kalayanpur, Mukesh, Rafi and Hemant Kumar had

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Arora, in Mercedes, parked in front of his family fruit stall continued to retain their old magic, but now, recorded from one generation to another, they sounded awful. Most of them had not been recorded on stereo with all the latest sound mixing technology available. Arora soon solved this problem.

In an air-conditioned mixing and control room sits an engineer, manipulating the levers of a high-tech Swiss-built Studer machine. Two JBL speakers, 350 watts each, are belting out Mukesh's Dost dost na raha in faultless stereophonic sound with almost no harmonic distortion. The music score is the same, the orchestral arrangement identical, and the voice, well, it has to be Mukesh. But it isn't.

A peep through the control room window into the recording studio shows an orchestra in full swing with a young man in the singer's booth lost in song. He is Babla Mehta, almost an exact double for Mukesh's voice. What is happening here is a "version recording". An orchestra assembled in Delhi is playing the music almost exactly as it was recorded in the original, but this time it is in stereo. And Babla Mehta is singing the oldie as if infused by the late Mukesh's soul. The end product is a brilliantly recorded piece of music—which will perhaps be made into a C-60 called "The Best of Mukesh, sung by Babla Mehta," or inserted into a cassette containing songs by other similar "double" artistes singing popular oldies in dazzling stereo sound.

By visiting campuses and local talent shows around Delhi, and advertising in newspapers, Arora has managed to collect more than a dozen talented singers who double for the original artistes—including doubles for Kishore and Lata. Vipin Sachdeva sings Rafi and Vandana Vajpayee does an incomparable Lata. When P. Mukherjee sings Hemant Kumar's Ye nayan dare dare, or Alka Shankar belts out Geeta Dutt's Babuji dheere chalna, the effect is magnetic. Using the living greats like Lata or Kishore to rerecord their old songs in stereo would be economically prohibitive due to their high fees. But Vipin and Vandana, who are locked into exclusive contracts with Supercassettes, are paid between Rs 10,000 and Rs 15,000 per C-60 cassette recording. The only other costs are of the music and the studio. The total production costs per recorded cassette vary from between Rs 15,000 and Rs 30,000, but the volume of sales ensures a good profit. Supercassettes does original recordings as well. For example, Manhar has just recorded 16 original ghazals for a special release by Supercassettes to take place within the next two months.

"The funny thing is," says Arora, "that when these old songs start selling again there is also a renewed demand for those old movies as well." Increasingly, the music scores from new movies, or movies still under production, are sold by the producer to Supercassettes. The company, having paid a lump sum for the rights to the music then produces the tapes in its own studios—either mixing them for better quality, or, as it did in the case of Ram Teri Ganga Maili, using its own artistes to sing the songs with better stereo recordings. As several producers have attested in their letters to Supercassettes, the release of their music scores have helped fan demand for their films. Today, Supercassettes has made outright purchases of music scores from all the leading new films including Dance Dance, Kalyug aur Ramayana, Loha, Ek Chadar Maili Si, Nagina and dozens of others.

And all this is legitimate under the Copyright Act which requires only that proper royalties be paid to the producers who own the sound-track and that the songs and music not be distorted or their tunes changed from the originals. Last year, Supercassettes shelled out about Rs 2 crore in royalty for outright purchases as well as for individual "version" songs.

Arora does not like to talk about his business acumen. He ascribes his success entirely to a miracle performed by Mata Vaishno Devi whose shrine he visits five or six times a year and whose statues adorn every factory and compound he owns. The 'T-series' is derived from the Devi's symbol—the Trishul. "Even when I was in college," he says, "I hated studies. I loved entertainment and music and each time I went to Vaishno Devi I prayed to her for a job and success only in a field involving music."

Even as he helped his father in the fruit business, Arora rented a small shack in Delhi's Gulmohar Park in 1979 where he tinkered with radio repairs and a small time cassette retail business that earned him between Rs 50 and Rs 100 a day. His brother Gopal, a self-taught electronics wizard, would borrow money to travel to Hong Kong, Korea and Japan to study state of the art machinery (he is the genius behind the Supercassettes hi-tech establishment).

As business improved, the brothers bought a Sony-123 high-speed duplicator on which they began to record original Garhwali, Bhojpuri and Punjabi songs in makeshift studios. The investments were low, the sales high. With their profits they began to trade in imported components like magnetic tape and silicon paper, again with good profit margins. Meanwhile, the cassette market boomed and the Aroras began parlaying their profits into manufacturing ventures.

"The most important thing," says Arora, "is that we can do anything the foreigners can do and do it better. For us it is only a question of getting the know-how. Once we get the know-how, there's never any looking back."

—INDERJIT BADHWAR

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

letters to their music nd for their has made scores from nding Dance
n, Loha, Ek
dozens of

under the s only that producers nd that the ted or their ginals. Last out about tright pur-dual "ver-

k about his es his suc-rformed by shrine he and whose and coms' is derived he Trishul.
' he says, "I
nment and to Vaishno and success sic."
ther in the small shack
1979 where and a small that earned 0 a day. His electronics to travel to n to study (he is the ttes hi-tech

he brothers
ed duplicato record and Pun-udios. The sales high.
to trade in magnetic with good he cassette oras began anufactur-

ning," says ything the tter. For us the know-ow, there's

T BADHWAR

And to think you can fly there on Alitalia...6 times a week.

All roads still lead to Rome, but after we fly you there, we can then fly you to New York almost immediately. Six times a week, every week, a sleek Alitalia 747 leaves Delhi and Bombay for Italy. With our convenient worldwide network, we connect you to key cities in Italy and Europe, as well as Chicago, Los Angeles, Montreal and Toronto.

Take an Italian airline? Certamente if you want convenience. The ultimate, if you want to be pampered in the luxury of our Top Class or Prima Business Class. Call Alitalia, or see your travel agent and book your flight today. Six flights a week ... 312 flights a year, make it so easy.

Alitalia
The airline of Italy

daCunha/ALT/1/87

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

INDO-SOVIET COLLABORATION

A New Thrust

THE Russians are coming—and this time they are hotly wooing the private sector and taking on the Japanese and the West. After years of offering technical expertise to state-owned power and steel companies, the Soviet Union is sewing up deals in cars, computers, colour television sets and trucks. What is more, it is for the first time putting up part of the money for these ventures.

Spearheading the new push are over a dozen Soviet delegations which have hit the country in the last one year. Last month, a scientific delegation led by Guri Marchuk, president of the USSR Academy of Sciences, signed two working papers on cooperation in science and technology. And last fortnight, Deputy Prime Minister V.M. Kamentsev paid a visit to India.

The Soviets have good reasons for this new push. Moscow has a hefty trade deficit with India, mainly due to a sudden fall in the prices of oil—which comprises 70 per cent of its exports to India—and the difficulty in finding products acceptable here.

Compounding the problem, private companies account for 85 per cent of India's exports to the USSR but they buy just 15 per cent of the total goods from them. Says former commerce minister Manubhai Shah, who now heads the India-USSR Chamber of Commerce and Industry: "The Government's capacity to import from Russia has peaked. The private sector must now buy from there if the two-way trade target of Rs 13,000 crore is to be achieved by 1992."

Traditionally, Indian entrepreneurs have treated Soviet technology with caution, preferring the West to fulfil their needs. Bureaucratic bottle-necks and a communication gap about the latest advances in Soviet technology have added to their scepticism. As Abid Hussain, member of the Planning Commision, says: "Indian industrialists and bureaucrats have had many misconceptions about Soviet capabilities." But perceptions are changing. Says V.I. Nazarov, head of the economic division in The Trade Representation of the USSR in India: "Indian entrepreneurs have realised that they can deal with the Soviets on the same basis as with the West."

(Clockwise from above) computer, TV and Lada car: wooing India

And, on the other side of the fence, "with Gorbachev, the Russians have become open to the idea of joint ventures with the private sector," says H.S. Sandhu, managing director of Chinar Exports, which trades heavily with the USSR.

Indeed, a new notification permits Soviet manufacturers to deal directly with private concerns. Last year, the Soviets signed up with Asian Vehicles Industries Ltd to make two models of Lada cars, and promised to invest in 30 per cent of the shares. They hope that the Government will clear the one-lakh-cars-a-year project because of the low foreign exchange content. Even if it doesn't, contingency plans provide for a 100 per cent export unit. And truck manufacturer Ashok Leyland sees advantages in Soviet trucks that use cheap gas for fuel. Says M. Sodhi, its chairman: "A memorandum of understanding has been signed last year with Gosplan (the Soviet Planning Commission)."

Even in hi-tech areas like computers, the Soviets are notching up lucrative deals. Computronics India, a leading importer of computers from the USSR, is negotiating for the manufacture of personal and mini-computers with a 40 per cent Russian equity participation. Says company President Vivek Singhal: "While in the '70s, the US was ahead in computers, today the Soviets are just as good." In fact, the Soviets are wooing India to buy theirs at a price lower than the US one.

Even in the television industry, dominated until now by the Japanese and the West, the Soviets are breaking new ground. Chinar Exports is negotiating a joint collaboration for the manufacture of electronic guns for television sets. Says Sandhu: "The advantage is that the Soviets have also agreed to a buy-back arrangement." And Moscow Rubin enterprise is tying up with Sonydive International to manufacture colour television sets.

Even in their traditional areas of strength—like the power sector—the Soviets are now tying up deals with the private sector. For instance, Technopromexport has teamed up with Birla Technical Services (BTS) and has jointly bid for the Rs 730-crore Bakreswar power project in West Bengal. Ironically, their competitor here is Bharat Heavy Electricals Limited (BHEL), a public sector undertaking the Soviets had helped set up. Says a senior BTS official: "The Russians are offering us proven technology and it will save us scarce foreign exchange."

Technical experts also discount apprehensions of Soviet technology being inferior to the West. S.P. Singh, BHEL's technical director, in fact, says their technology is as good—if not better—than the West. Adds T.M. Malkani, managing director of Advani Oerlikon, which has tied up with the Soviets for a transfer of technology in welding gas pipes: "They have the world's most advanced research institutes for developing heavy duty welding applications."

Despite the spurt of activity, it is too early to judge how far these projects will rectify the trade imbalance. But with many other joint projects on the anvil, Indo-Soviet economic relations are clearly headed for a new phase.

—SURAJEET DAS GUPTA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Leela Penta

— the masterpiece

Bombay hasn't quite seen anything like it yet.

☐ India's first computerized key cards, sprinkler and smoke detection systems ☐ Championship 'Amritraj' tennis, squash, badminton courts ☐ Blue Lagoon pool with water slide ☐ Jogging trail ☐ Health & Racquet Centre ☐ Designer furnished rooms with mini bars ☐ Business Centre with word processor, telefax

Leela Penta Hotel

Penta HOTELS

BOMBAY INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT, BOMBAY 400 099 Telex 011-72204 72339 PNTA IN

For reservations, call the Hotel direct 022-636 3636, your travel agent, any International Penta Hotel or Sales Office, Utell International or Lufthansa. Or along with your flight bookings on British Airways and Swissair.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

America's a lovely place, it really is.
Bob Dylan. Levi's. Apple pie. Spielberg.
Cowboys. Bowling alleys. And shrinks.
Also TV commercials. Breakdancing.
Peanut butter. McEnroe. And sneakers.

Today, the postman slipped in a crisp, white envelope.
The sender's address read Cornell.
You started opening the letter.
Beads of sweat fringed your forehead.
You'd got into Cornell the next semester.
Tra-la-la. Attaboy. Hip, hip, hurray.
Hello baseball.
Hello Brooke Shields.
Hello McDonald's.

From McDowell
CONTAINS NO FRUIT JUICE OR FRUIT PULP.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"I think I'll have a Thril," you said.

Enterprise D/McD/17 A

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Just one emblem on the door says how much you care for your family

Fire, burglary, theft, personal accident—your home is vulnerable to so many threats. But our peacock stands guard at your door.
The peacock from National Insurance.

NIC has a number of schemes to protect yourself, your valuables and your home.

Beyond the domestic sector,
NIC brings security to the lives of farmers and rural artisans through various Rural Insurance Schemes.
It also ensures the interests of the entire industrial sector.

So, whenever you need protection, just call us. With its growing network and professional expertise,
NIC offers you personalised service at every level.

National Insurance Company Limited
(A subsidiary of General Insurance Corporation)
3, Middleton Street, Calcutta 700 071.

Putting service first

CLARION C-NIC-10

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

DETECTIVE AGENCIES

New Role

THEY used to specialise in divorce cases, snooping around for evidence on the basis of which a husband could divorce his wife, or vice versa. Now, however, the name of the game is industrial espionage. Indian counterparts of Fairfax are mushrooming, and doing extremely well for themselves too.

Two decades ago, there were not more than two or three detective agencies nation-wide. Today there are over 150 of them: big and small, good, bad and indifferent. Says Tapan Ganguly, general manager (western zone) of Globe Detective Agency, the leader in the field: "We are growing at about 40 per cent per annum."

The increasing variety of services that these agencies provide for the corporate sector mirror the reasons for their mushroom growth: keeping tabs on labour unions, watching for pilferage, scouting for spurious products, to screening new recruits, and providing security. Many factories today have undercover agents who keep tabs on their employees.

As the director of a large Delhi-based company says: "Nowadays we have to be very careful about the type of people who work with us. Detectives help us not only to keep an eye on the mood of the labour but can also be used to check out a salesman who puts in claims for any extraordinary expenses."

As this list of services makes obvious, most of the clients are companies, both state-owned and private, many of which once looked upon agencies with suspicion. Says P. Ali, director of Security Intelligence Services in Bombay: "Ten years ago only 50 per cent of our clients were from the corporate sector. Today they make up 80 per cent of the total."

Adds V.J. Nathan, who runs Top Professionals, a small Delhi agency: "Industrial growth means more fraud cases—and therefore more work for us." Veteran private eye K.B.S. Gopal also points out that "the failure of the police to deliver the goods has forced people to come to us."

Banks and insurance companies also call in detective agencies in fraud and embezzlement cases while simultaneously lodging a first information report with the police. Says an insurance official: "The agencies try to solve cases faster as they are concerned about their profits, unlike the police who take their own time."

Now, the name of the game is industrial espionage. Indian counterparts of Fairfax are mushrooming.

Big business too is not averse to roping in agencies for a little industrial espionage. Notes P.R. Menon, vice-president of the Association of Investigators and Security Organisations of India: "We do a lot of foreign work, like finding out details of companies in India with whom multinationals are planning to sign collaborations."

Growth has also been propelled by the fact that private eyes do not need a licence to operate. As Ganguly notes: "Anyone can put up a board and claim to be a detective." But things are changing. A bill now before Parliament seeks to make it mandatory for all detective agencies, security guards and sleuths working in these outfits to obtain an annually renewable licence from the police.

The bill is being supported by a clutch of agencies who fear that professional standards could fall with the proliferation of fly-by-night operators. And if it comes into force, complaints from concerned quarters may even result in licences being cancelled.

In spite of all the forays into new areas, however, detective agencies are not ignoring their traditional areas of business, such as divorce cases. And many individuals come to agencies requesting them to gather information on a family into which a son or daughter is to be married.

These services do not come cheap. Though rates vary widely, shadowing a person for one day—depending on the number of operatives and vehicles used—could cost anything from Rs 1,000 to Rs 2,400. Planting a mole in an organisation could cost about Rs 4,000 per month—plus the undercover agent's salary depending on the part he plays—and in the region of Rs 15,000 if he is to be planted at the managerial level. But quite clearly, people who want information increasingly find that the price-tag is no deterrent.

—SURAJEET DAS GUPTA and PARTHASARATHI SWAMI

Cartoon by AJIT NINAN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

CLARION C-NIC-10

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Why have Usha Water Coolers remained the undisputed market leaders over the years?

The reasons are obvious...

Usha Water Coolers have always been best-sellers.

For years now, Usha has been quenching more thirsty lips than any other water coolers.

A fact that itself speaks volumes for Usha quality and reliability. Backed by exclusives which make Usha your obvious choice.

Usha Water Coolers come to you from Shriram Refrigeration Industries Ltd. A company that has long established its credentials in the refrigeration business with products that are recognised as synonymous with quality.

Also consider the Usha range. From mini desk type models that give you 50 glasses of cold water per hour to heavy duty models which give you upto 1200 glasses per hour. Usha has it all. So whatever your specific requirement, you're sure to find it with Usha.

Efficient and prompt service is a top priority with Usha. Whenever you need it. Wherever you need it. Over 270 Service Outlets all over the country make sure there are no service delays. Ever.

Now when you feel the big summer thirst, you know which name to turn to.

A name that always offers you the best value for money. USHA.

Widest range available on DGS & D Rate Contract

USHA
WATER COOLERS.

You can't be No. 1 without good reason.

A high quality product from Shriram Refrigeration Industries Ltd.

Marketing Division : 19, Kasturba Gandhi Marg, New Delhi-110 001. Tel : 3319010/11/12/13, Telex : 031-65335 SRI IN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SCL

The Blue Chip Turnaround

WHEN the chips are down, Semiconductor Complex Ltd (SCL) gets going. Confounding its critics and bouncing out of the red, the state-owned enterprise has posted a profit of over Rs 83 lakh, doubled its capacity utilisation and ended the year with orders worth Rs 13 crore in its pocket.

The country's sole manufacturer of large-scale integrated (LSI) circuits—the miracle chip that has revolutionised electronics worldwide—can expect even better times ahead. So far the domestic market has been too small to permit full use of SCL's production capacity, and exports have been unattractive. But with the rupee's gradual devaluation pricing out imported competition and making exports easier, the market has suddenly burgeoned. "For the first time customers are complaining that we aren't supplying them enough," says company Chairman and Managing Director Virendra Mohan.

The market could get still bigger in the future. For the Government is about to allow big business to get into user industries like digital watches and pocket calculators (reserved so far for the state sector and small-scale units). And best of all, the Government will stipulate that both watch and calculator manufacturers cannot import the key input: the chip. SCL will, as a result, be able to hawk at least an additional Rs 6-crore worth of chips and modules every year. Indeed, it has already tied up with a Tata watch venture to supply up to two million watch modules. "The deal will be very lucrative," admits SCL's Mohan.

Certainly, all this heralds a long overdue blossoming for the chip manufacturer. Kicked off nearly four years ago, the Rs 50-crore project was expected to spearhead the electronics revolution, supply chips for the nascent telecommunications sector and spin-off a host of wares such as low-cost watches and home computers. But SCL has not quite attained its full potential, partly because it was caught between high costs and low volumes of production. The telecommunications market failed to expand as originally envisioned, and computer manufacturers who use 16-bit microprocessors cold-shouldered the company's 8-bit microprocessors. "Companies abroad have declined to sell us the technology for 16-bit chips," explains Pushpendra Mankad, SCL's deputy general manager for marketing.

The result, predictably enough, is that barely 40 per cent of SCL's production capacity has been utilised, and sales have hovered between Rs 7 crore and Rs 9 crore for the last three years. "We were at a dead end in the market and went through a period of gloom," admits Mohan.

Despondency, however, has given way to a renewed burst of hope at SCL's futuristic plant at Mohali, on the outskirts of Chandigarh. As Mohan puts it: "We see the light at the end of the tunnel. In three years time, we should be a Rs 40-crore company." Others too endorse the point. Electronics Secretary K.P.P. Nambiar believes that the chip market will burgeon so rapidly in the next couple of years that the country will have to go in for another SCL-type unit.

The scenario might have been altogether different were it not for the German mark and the Japanese yen soaring in relation to the rupee, as a result of which foreign modules have become prohibitively expensive for watch manufacturers. Expectedly, they have turned to SCL over the last few months, and the company has had to harness 95 per cent of its production capacities, a far cry from last year's 40 per cent. And even this may not be enough: SCL's chairman talks of augmenting capacity with marginal investments.

For the longer haul, however, SCL has snared orders from Hong Kong for 6 million chips a year, equivalent to almost a third of its current capacity, and this is expected to pep up capacity utilisation at the upstream wafer fabrication facility. Then, a defence services order for advanced circuits to be used for shells and guided missiles is in the bag, and the telecommunications market is looking up. "We expect between Rs 40 crore and Rs 42 crore worth of business from the telecommunications sector over the

SCL plant research lab: bright future

Photographs by PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

"For the first time customers are complaining that we aren't supplying them enough."

VIRENDRA MOHAN
chairman and managing director, SCL

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

next four years," maintains Mankad.

Unquestionably, SCL has flourished in recent months because of the rise in foreign currency values. But successful attempts at upgrading technological processes have also cut costs and contributed to profits, while simultaneously expanding capacity at virtually no additional cost. After using 5 micron (equivalent to one tenth the thickness of human hair) geometry to manufacture chips, SCL switched to 3 micron know-how last year.

"With 5 micron technology, we used to get 800 chips from a four-inch silicon wafer," explains M.J. Zarabi, the company's general manager for research and development. "Now we are getting an average of 2,000, using 3 micron. So for the same amount of money we are getting two-and-a-half times more." The upshot: capacity has expanded from around 9 million chips to 20 million chips. Even newer technological processes are in the pipeline: 2 micron geometry by next March and then 1.5 micron knowhow by 1988-89.

For all the innovation, observers put SCL on the firing line for going the whole hog into low-tech items like watches rather than operating on the frontiers of technology. Argues a former member of the SCL board: "SCL's main purpose was to supply chips to the telecommunications, process control and defence industries. This it has not done fully." Critics also accuse it of having failed to hawk its wares aggressively. "SCL's biggest problem is weak marketing," says the former board member. Secretary Nambiar too echoes the point: "They've not had sufficient interaction with customers."

But Mohan counters: "Is there anyone who's using chips which SCL is not supplying?" Also, in order to stay alive financially, SCL has been forced to hawk its own as well as imported clock and watch modules (for which it was made the canalising agent) and Unicorn computers in order to generate sales volume. But with the market for its own products now picking up, the sales volume may be big enough to help the company stand on its own feet—and to devote more attention to hi-tech areas like space and defence applications.

The biggest point of criticism when SCL was launched was that there would never be a large enough market in India for the chips the new venture would turn out. Now, however, that criticism is being answered. And hi-tech may finally be proved to be viable.

—PALAKUNNATHU G. MATHAI at Mohali

KERALA LOTTERY

Unlucky Draw

THE Kerala police is attracting media attention and not, for once, because of its failures. On the contrary, the problem is that one of its ventures is doing far too well. The latest controversy revolves around the Kerala Bhagyamala Weekly Lottery which the Police Department has been running since September last. It has developed into something of a rage in a state which first started the tradition of the government-run lottery. But the Finance and Tax Department is unhappy because its own monthly Kerala State Lottery has been seriously hit ever since Bhagyamala appeared on the scene. And now the police organisers are being accused of violating Reserve Bank of India (RBI) guidelines for the business.

The Bhagyamala was started in the hope of off-setting the Rs 2-crore expense the Police Department had incurred in not only sponsoring last year's Nehru Cup football tournament but in also renovating the Chandrasekharan Nair Police Stadium in Trivandrum for the occasion. Former chief minister K. Karunakaran gave the project the go-ahead and a right to conduct 52 weekly draws, overruling the Finance Department's objections.

Bhagyamala was a runaway success and it is not difficult to see why. Eighty-three per cent of the Rs 1.05-crore collected every week from the sale of 21 lakh tickets is given back as either prize money or agents' commission. Though its ticket is priced at Rs 5 compared to Kerala State Lottery's Rs 2, the top prize is seven times higher at Rs 7 lakh.

The effect on the other rival government lottery has been unnerving. In September 1986, when Bhagyamala started, Kerala State Lottery's monthly profit was Rs 17.75 lakh but by February 1987, it had already sunk to Rs 5.1 lakh.

The Finance Department's frustrations spilled out last month after former finance minister Thachady Prabhakaran was denied an assembly ticket. Before resigning, he prepared a report on Bhagyamala's flouting of RBI regulations and circulated copies. For one, the report said, the first prize was in excess of RBI's latest stipulation of Rs 1 lakh. Second, though permission had been given to the Kerala Police Sports and Youth Welfare Society, it was being conducted by the Kerala Housing Co-operative Society. Third, instead of depositing the money with the treasury, it was being kept with a scheduled bank. And last, it said that Bhagyamala should be discontinued by March 31 because it had not only violated RBI guidelines but had already made profits of Rs 6.11 crore instead of its targeted Rs 2 crore.

A runaway success, the Bhagyamala Lottery has now brought bad luck to its organisers, the Kerala Police.

However, Inspector General of Police (IGP) T.V. Madhusoodanan, who is in charge of the lottery, says: "We have not violated any RBI guidelines. The government order says that we can charge anything from Rs 5 to Rs 10 for a ticket and can conduct it for 52 weeks." He also denied the Rs 6-crore profit saying that though the accounts have not been worked out, "it took us about five draws just to break even".

But after making a noise about the alleged violations by Bhagyamala, the Kerala State Lottery has turned weekly, and by hiking its own first prize to Rs 9 lakh, has laid itself open to the same charges of rules violation. Said a top Finance Department official: "The agents and the people want us to xerox the Bhagyamala success formula." While the fate of Bhagyamala is as yet undecided, its organisers have added a humorous twist to the inter-departmental wrangle by issuing an advertisement in the papers. It reads: "There is no cure for baldness and jealousy."

—SREEDHAR PILLAI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

akh.
l govern-rving. In gyamala monthly
February
5.1 lakh.
frustraer former rabhakacket. Beeport on regula-one, the excess of 1 lakh.
ad been orts and as being sing Co-stead of reasury,
ed bank.
a should ecause it lines but y made
Rs 6.11
ad of its 2 crore.
er, Ins-
neral of SP) T.V. odanan,
charge of y, says:
not vio-
ny RBI
he gov-that we ng from cket and for 52
nied the ving that nts have us about bout the ala, the weekly,

e to Rs 9
he same
d a top
: "The
to xerox rmula."
is as yet added a
-depart-dvertise-ere is no
"
R PILLAI

CC-0. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

10,00

Dunlop Radial Marutiyr

A classie of Mar

Dunlop is Dunlop Alwa

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

000 ut tyres on the road!

DUNLOP

Radial Class

A classier way to travel–say thousands of Maruti owners. How about you?

DUNLOP
Radial Car Tyre

lop Always ahead.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"One of the finest catches of my life"

"Mind you, I'm not talking about my wife! She's the best, of course. But there are also those sharp chances I picked up at cover point and the hauls I've made while fishing. Last but not least of my catches, there's Gwalior Suiting. Their range is international, their quality first-rate... That's one catch I'm really proud of!"

M.A.K. PATAUDI

Pataudi wears our latest fabric creation in polyester, cellulosic and silk. You too can choose from our wide range — LINSILK, LINFUR, LINTRON, RESHAM, SILVER SHEEN and AFTER-SIX.

GWALIOR SUITING

IN A CLASS OF ITS OWN

A PRODUCT OF GRASIM INDUSTRIES LTD.

MAPP-GR-97-06-288

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

MODERATE growth in industrial production and almost full-blown growth in infrastructure, a slight slow-down in the growth in money supply, and a substantial slow-down in the rate of inflation are the highlights of the economic scene.

All data are seasonally adjusted. Current trends are computed on the basis of six months (weekly data) or two years (monthly data) figures. The quarters referred to in the text are calendar year quarters.

A substantial slow-down in the inflation rate is indicated. In spite of the budget, prices are at the same level as in early January.

Data on industrial production, which is available only till October 1986, show a moderate growth of 6.4 per cent.

Manufacturing production, the chief component of industrial production, indicates a growth of about 6 per cent up to October.

The growth in money supply, though very high at 21.7 per cent per annum, has slowed down somewhat since end-January.

Growth in commercial bank credit to the private sector seems better. Yet, the trend rate—12.3 per cent per annum—is lower than last year.

The stock-market continued to be subdued till March-end. The budget has certainly served to dampen trading enthusiasm.

The performance of the infrastructure sector is commendable. An indication to this is the near double-digit growth in electricity generated.

After rising steadily till the third week of March, gold prices suddenly dipped in the closing week of the financial year.

INDUSTRIAL PRODUCTION

Growth of items in October, 1986

	% Growth
Sugar Machinery	65.40
Paper Machinery	53.67
Coffee Curing Works	41.32
Cement Machinery	33.37
Linolium & Similar Products	25.58
Electrical Motors	23.25
Earth-Moving Machinery	19.98
Air & Gas Compressors	19.73
Razor Blades	19.19
Matches	17.02
Drugs & Pharmaceuticals	16.93
Mining Machinery	16.66
Conveying Equipment	14.81
Generation & Transmission Equipment	14.02
Paints & Varnishes	13.34
Iron & Steel Structurals	13.08
Non-Ferrous Basic Metal Industries	11.96
Paper	11.62
Bolts & Nuts	11.62
Tyres & Tubes	11.17
Rubber Footwear	11.05
Textile Machinery	10.98
Paper Board & Straw Board	10.43
Dry Cells	10.41
Cosmetics	10.19
Cotton & Blended Yarn	9.78
Metallurgical Machinery	9.14
Newsprint	9.01
Ferro-Alloys	8.96
Typewriters & Duplicators	8.24
Electrical Lamps	7.99
Pens & Pencils	7.93
Dye Stuffs	7.91
Soap & Glycerine	7.05
Mining & Quarrying	6.05
Machine Tools	5.66
Iron & Steel Pipes	5.63
Buses, Trucks & Jeeps	5.48
Bakery Products	5.39
Cotton & Blended Mixed Fabrics	5.36
Hurricane Lanterns	5.28
Storage Batteries	4.81
Grain Mill Products	4.65
Artificial Leather & Oil Cloth	4.53
Beverage Industry	4.40
Organic Chemicals	3.83
Jute Textiles	3.73

Of the 86 series considered, 62 of them with a total weight of 61.58 had a positive growth and 24 of them with a total weight of 26.4 had a negative growth.

SELECTED INDICATORS

	1987	1986
Coal Thousand Tonnes, February	16,530	15,900
Saleable Steel Thousand Tonnes, February	776.8	692.0
Cement Thousand Tonnes, February	3,080	2,713
Fertilisers Thousand Tonnes, February	620.0	495.2
Thermal Plant Load Factor Per cent, February	58.0	57.4

Compiled by THE POLICY GROUP/ICIM

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THE MARKETS

Levering Up

HINDUSTAN Lever has done for the market what the budget failed to do. Almost overnight, there was new cheer in the trading ring last fortnight after the consumer products giant announced a handsome bonus issue plus an increased dividend. Lever's share spurted from Rs 176 to Rs 204 in a single day, and took a grateful market up with it. The Economic Times stock-market index, after sliding to a low point of 246 towards the end of March, recovered to 253.3 by April 6.

After a month of depression—reflected in the fate of the Unit Trust's Mastershares, which have been selling at a discount—there were other positive developments too. For last fortnight saw the announcement regarding the reduction in overall interest rates, there was institutional support for several shares, and the ban on short selling continued to put pressure on the bears. On top of all these, there were hopes that some of the negative measures announced in the budget would be modified.

Chart by B.K. SHARMA

Because of these and other factors, the gloom that prevailed on the market throughout March lifted and most scrips gained ground in the second half of last fortnight. Finolex Cables led the upsurge with a dramatic rise from Rs 127.50 to Rs 160, Jagatjit Cotton gained handsomely, as did Blow Plast and Mahindra & Mahindra. Tata Chemicals and Bajaj Tempo were also favoured by buyers.

Among the few companies that fared poorly were ITC (presumably because of the company's problems with the taxman), Orkay (which seems to remain in the dumps), and Peico and Associated Cement (both of which have announced poor half-year results). Several Birla companies too seemed to be continuing their slide, with Grasim, Hindustan Aluminium, Hindustan Motors and Indian Rayon all losing ground.

The next big event for the market might well be the 1986 results of Reliance Industries. This has been expected for some time, and speculation is rife as to what lies in store. The company's share dropped well below the Rs 200 mark, nearing the lowest point in the year, before attracting some buying support late in the fortnight. Investors may also have become nervous following the to-do in Parliament over the hiring of the American Fairfax Group to investigate some of the company's deals.

It also remains to be seen whether the recovery in the first week of April will be sustained in the coming weeks. A lifting of the ban on short selling, for instance, could still precipitate a slide. If the mood is to stay cheerful, what is probably needed is some more upbeat corporate announcements and the long-awaited modifications in the budget's provisions relating to minimum tax and tax deduction at source.

ACTIVE STOCKS

	1987 HIGH	1987 LOW	CLOSE 6.4.87	Change in Fortnight
Ashok Leyland	35.50	28.00	32.00	1.25 +
Associated Cement	241.50	191.00	196.00	14.00 –
Asian Paints	251.25	207.50	244.00	14.00 +
Atlas Copco	150.00	112.00	148.00	7.00 +
Avery India	169.00	150.00	159.00	6.00 +
Bajaj Auto	4925.00	3950.00	4760.00	325.00 +
Baroda Rayon	250.00	205.00	223.75	3.75 –
Bata India	160.00	128.50	143.00	9.50 –
Bayer	785.00	600.00	770.00	110.00 +
Bharat Forge	75.00	63.00	74.00	2.00 +
Birla Jute	50.75	47.00	48.00	1.25 –
Blow Plast	126.00	92.50	120.00	10.00 +
Bombay Dyeing	75.00	40.50	68.50	nil
Brooke Bond	101.00	77.00	99.50	4.00 +
Ceat Tyres	60.00	48.00	60.00	0.50 +
Century Spinning	810.00	670.00	715.00	6.00 +
Chloride India	148.00	89.00	96.00	1.50 +
Colgate	378.75	327.50	372.50	7.50 +
Eskayef	247.50	171.25	235.00	13.75 +
DCM	39.00	27.25	28.00	1.75 –
Dunlop	77.75	71.25	74.00	nil
Elecon	107.50	86.25	97.50	2.50 +
E.I.Hotels	56.00	44.00	44.50	1.25 –
Escorts	84.00	47.00	52.00	3.00 +
Finolex Cables	182.50	114.00	160.00	5.00 –
Food Specialities	188.50	164.00	171.00	0.50 +
Garware Polyester	97.00	69.50	81.00	1.00 –
G.E. Shipping	22.50	16.00	17.50	nil
Gujarat St Fertilisers	183.50	120.00	143.00	2.00 –
Grasim Ind.	95.00	80.00	87.00	2.00 –
Hind. Aluminium.	126.00	71.00	114.00	6.00 –
Hind. Cocoa	262.50	223.75	242.00	5.75 +
Hindustan Lever	212.00	165.00	207.00	23.00 +
Hindustan Motors	35.35	25.80	27.10	1.00 –
Hind. Dorr	390.00	295.00	385.00	30.00 +
IEL	61.50	50.50	51.50	2.50 –
Indian Organic	78.00	62.00	65.00	nil
Indian Rayon	76.50	60.00	61.00	2.50 –
Indrol	510.00	255.00	282.50	nil
Ingersoll-Rand	340.00	272.50	340.00	12 50 +
ITC	78.00	45.50	49.00	11.50 –
J.K. Synthetics	93.50	67.00	70.00	2.50 –
Kinetic Engineering	312.50	225.00	255.00	2.50 +
Kirloskar Cummins	87.50	67.00	87.50	7.50 +
KSB Pumps	355.00	220.00	355.00	25.00 +
Larson & Toubro	100.00	76.50	79.00	5.00 –
Lipton	79.50	60.00	78.50	4.00 +
Lohia Machines	32.00	20.00	23.00	nil
Madura Coats	73.00	66.00	72.00	2.00 +
Mahindra & Mahindra.	47.00	38.00	46.00	4.00 +
Motor Industries	390.00	342.50	365.00	15.00 +
Mukand Iron	80.50	63.50	76.50	0.50 +
National Organic	577.50	490.00	512.50	12.50 –
Nirlon	26.00	15.50	16.00	3.00 –
Orkay Silk Mills	115.00	73.00	76.00	7.00 –
Peico Electronics	57.25	36.00	39.75	5.75 –
Otis Elevator	200.00	155.00	199.00	7.75 +
Ponds	375.00	325.00	365.00	2.50 +
Premier Auto	30.00	21.00	28.25	3.25 +
Ranbaxy	135.00	111.00	123.00	5.50 –
Raymond	79.00	68.00	72.00	1.00 +
Reckitt & Colman	200.00	167.00	175.00	9.00 –
Reliance Industries	277.00	182.00	205.00	9.00 –
Sandoz	140.00	87.50	102.50	2.50 +
Shriram Fibres	36.00	25.50	26.00	2.50 –
Siemens India	144.50	90.00	95.00	42.00 –
SPIC	53.50	36.50	41.50	2.75 +
Tata Steel	1207.50	982.50	1060.00	27.50 +
Telco	665.00	550.00	585.00	5.00 –
Vulcan Laval	57.50	45.00	47.50	2.50 –

WORLD VALUE OF RUPEE

COUNTRY	CURRENCY	UNIT	Selling Rates Rs	TT Buying Rates Rs
Australia	Dollar	1	9.1435	9.0640
Austria	Schilling	100	100.6763	99.7259
Bahrain	Dinar	1	34.1664	34.1480
Bangladesh	Taka	100	42.3500	42.1600
Canada	Dollar	1	9.8864	9.8122
Denmark	Kroner	1	1.8774	1.8635
Egypt	Pound	1	9.7986	9.7332
France	Franc	1	2.1276	2.1074
Hong Kong	Dollar	1	1.6524	1.6410
Indonesia	Rupiah	100	0.0786	0.0699
Iran	Rial	100	17.8630	17.8229
Italy	Lira	100	1.0000	0.9900
Japan	Yen	100	8.90	8.10
Kenya	Shilling	1	0.8100	0.7998
Kuwait	Dinar	1	47.1256	47.0388
Malaysia	Dollar	1	5.1652	5.1210
Mauritius	Rupee	1	0.9988	0.9732
Nepal	Rupee	1	0.5732	0.5660
Netherlands	Guilder	1	6.2710	6.2253
Pakistan	Rupee	1	0.7490	0.7332
Singapore	Dollar	1	6.0346	5.9864
Spain	Peseta	1	0.1012	0.0982
Sri Lanka	Rupee	1	0.4432	0.4339
Sweden	Kroner	1	2.0335	2.0183
Switzerland	Franc	1	8.5288	8.4665
Tanzania	Shilling	1	0.2560	0.2500
Thailand	Baht	100	50.3000	50.0000
UK	Pound	1	20.8702	20.7430
USA	Dollar	1	12.9025	12.8125
UAE	Dirham	1	3.4976	3.4660
USSR	Rouble	1	20.0660	20.0000
W. Germany	Deutschmark	1	7.0671	7.0126

These rates were supplied by The Bank of Tokyo Limited, New Delhi and quoted between the banks on 8.4.87.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

You make me wonder Jacaranda

Jacaranda will grow on you ! And Shalimar Superlac has more in store. 46 designer shades to combine and contrast. Romantic Blue Moon. Blooming Wild Lilac. Fresh Light Cream.

Perfected by one of India's leading paint companies, Superlac Acrylic Emulsion will bring your walls to life. And so easy to maintain.

Superlac Acrylic Emulsion—the mix 'n' match collection for your walls.

SPL-6264

Shalimar Paints
Wall time favourites

SUPERLAC
The mix 'n' match collection

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

DENIM: HOW TO TELL THE GOOD GUYS FROM THE BAD 'UNS.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

It's easy for an expert. But the rest of us common folk might need a bit of training.

Because the bad guys aren't really all that bad.

They're just not quite as good as the real thing.

To recognise original denim, you've got to be familiar with two of its unique properties.

One, the yarn is first dyed indigo blue — then interwoven with white yarn.

So if you look closely at original denim (through a magnifying glass if possible) you'll always see both blue and white yarn.

Two, original denim retains its brightness as it fades (a special feature of indigo dye).

But that's something you'll need months to test.

So if you'd rather be on the safe side, here's an easy way out: just sneak a look for the Arvind symbol.

Because Arvind is now making the world's best denim.

Original denim, for the first time in India.

Good enough for Levi, Calvin Klein, Vanderbilt and Co.

Tough enough for Buffalo Bill and Co.

While this is sure to delight you, it shouldn't surprise you.

After all, don't the good guys always win?

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

ARVIND. THE LONE RANGER OF ORIGINAL DENIM.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THE New GENERATION SENSATION

Beauty. Accuracy.
Dependability.
A perfect blend created by the latest
Japanese technology.
In a wide winning range. Allwyn.

3-year guarantee

FOR THE NEW GENERATION

Time

THE BEST SELLER

ALLWYN
WATCHES
Manufactured under licence by
SEIKO
Handwound • Automatic • Qu

CC-0. In Public Domain. Panini Kanya Maha Vidyalaya Collection.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CENTRAL PROOF ESTABLISHMENT

Tribal Testing Range

LAKSHMI Korku and Lakshmi Katia did not return home on their own that evening. Their fathers brought back their badly dismembered bodies. Like hundreds of other tribals in Kesala area of Hoshangabad district, the two friends had gone to the Central Proof Establishment (CPE) range in search of their livelihood—scrap metal from exploded bombs—and discovered death, instantaneous and ghastly.

Katia, 20, was married only a few months ago. "His wife has come to our house for the first time, as a widow," said the bereaved father, Kinjulal, 55. The widow, Phoolkali, 16, was numb with sorrow. But the crowd of mourners at their home in Saheli village seemed almost unaffected. "Death in the range is so common in this area," said a relative.

Korku, 22, has left behind him a widow and a two-year-old daughter. "It is the greed for easy money that killed him," wailed his grandfather.

Some 20 km away from Saheli village, in Itarsi's government hospital lies Bikku Gond of Sula, swathed in bandages. Last fortnight, a shell hit him as he entered the forest near the range "in search of bamboos". Even if he gets well, he faces prosecution for entering the prohibited area.

Things would have been different had the Madhya Pradesh Government implemented even half the recommendations made by Hoshangabad division commissioner H.R. Obhrai in the wake of a public interest writ in the Supreme Court almost four years ago. But the Government has so far not implemented vital recommendations made by the inquiry, despite a Supreme Court directive to the Government to take measures designed to wean the tribals from their lemming-like way of life.

The skull and cross-bones signs that greet a visitor to the CPE have become symbolic of the 'death range'. Ever since the Rs 2.54-crore range was established 15 years ago, poor villagers, most of them tribals from surrounding villages, have been getting killed while picking scrap—their only means of livelihood.

While official figures put the death toll at a little over 100 during this period, unofficial sources say many more have perished. Hundreds of others, including children, have been maimed in the pursuit of this macabre business. Kesala police station records show that during the first three months of this year, six deaths have already taken place—a death every fortnight.

The tribals' troubles began in 1972 when the CPE established an ammunition testing range over 10,500 hectares of hilly and thickly-forested terrain near Itarsi to test bombs and shells produced in ordnance factories as well as imported weapons and ammunition. In the process, 23 villages, mostly tribal, were uprooted and got a pittance as compensation. "I was paid at the rate of Rs 100 per acre for my 70 acres of land," said Ramkishan Yadav, who got only five acres of land for his 70 acres and now lives in Chhindapani village.

But he was fortunate. Of the 1,085 families dispossessed from their lands, only 652 were given alternative land, most of it infertile rocky plots of five acres each. The rest have settled in other villages surrounding the range. In the wake of press reports on the 'death range', Obhrai sent a detailed report to the state Revenue Department on February 2, 1983, recommending rehabilitation of the 433 other families. The file is gathering dust in the state secretariat since then. And those who did get land have not got the transfer deeds even after 15 years, because they couldn't pay the premium for the land.

The villagers' lives have become cruelly intertwined with the range. Jham Singh, 25, of Chhindapani who lost a leg, is now a shepherd,

Notice at CPE range (left); and victim Jham Singh: unsafe

Photographs by PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

A maimed youth (left); and Bikku Gond in hospital: rising toll often taking the goats for grazing in the very range that maimed him. Says the 70-page 'confidential' report of the Hoshangabad commissioner: "The range seems to have affected the socio-economic structure in the area and vested interests have developed at various levels. The local inhabitants, petty traders, businessmen of Itarsi, politicians, some delinquent policemen and sometimes even army personnel join hands in the racket to derive benefits for themselves."

Not long ago, a jawan of the defence security corps died in the range while collecting scrap. "The scrap is often bought by the army jawans," said Preetam Singh, detained last fortnight by the police in connection with a theft.

With the entry of big sharks, who profit by purchasing scrap at throw-away prices, the operation has become quite organised, the scrap finding its way to the metal markets of Indore, Bombay, Moradabad, Aligarh and Bhandara. Because of the stiff competition, the tribals are forced to enter the unguarded range even when firing is on in full swing. Expert pickers hide near the target and run to put a mark of ownership, a piece of cloth, on the scrap before another bomb strikes. The report says that some of the scrap-gatherers have developed "expertise" in exploding projectiles which remain unexploded either on the surface or underground. They have developed a tool kit for the purpose. "Indirectly, they provide service to the range," says the report.

In his inquiry report, which the Government has conveniently forgotten, commissioner Obhrai had made several recommendations which, if implemented, can solve the problem to a large extent. These suggest that:

► scrap-collection be legalised and regularised under army supervision and a centralised agency created by the Government for buying scrap;

► an industrial unit using scrap as raw material as well as an industrial estate be established near the range itself, providing employment to some tribals;

► alternative jobs like employment in the Forest Department, self-employment by giving of bullock-carts, biogas plants, training in fishing and sericulture be provided, and displaced persons given priority in jobs in the defence establishments coming up in the area;

► displaced tribals be resettled, and the premium waived for those who have been allotted land, because of the area's rockiness, and land allotted to others;

► the police network be strengthened, the penalty for trespassing on the range be raised from the existing Rs 10, the possession of scrap belonging to the Defence Ministry made an offence and brought under the NSA.

After the Hoshangabad commissioner's report which indicted the police for inaction "because of possible connivance between the dealers and the lower functionaries of the police who get a share from the spoils", some of these influential traders in human misery were caught. Last year an imported car, used for carrying the scrap, was seized by the police.

Ironically, tribals agitating for proper rehabilitation of those displaced by the range have received lathis and jail terms instead of a sympathetic ear from the Government. In February, a group of tribals, including women, was lathi-charged and sent to jail when they tried to gherao a Hoshangabad district official to protest delays in opening relief-works in their area. The tribals have organised several 'long-marches' to Hoshangabad and Bhopal to voice their demands and received a number of promises which were never fulfilled. "The proof range and the Tawa irrigation project, instead of improving the lot of the tribals, have made them homeless and jobless," said Rajnarain, an activist in Saheli village.

Except erecting some biogas plants and providing loans for bullock-carts, no other recommendation has been implemented so far. At present, 90 per cent of the biogas plants have stopped functioning and the Government has received complaints of corruption in distribution of loans for bullock-carts. "I want to motivate them towards sericulture and fisheries," said present Commissioner Arun Gupta. If the relief measures are anything to go by, perhaps the tribals will prefer the range of death.

—N.K. SINGH in Itarsi

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

LINTAS VIP M 45 2741

V.I.P. It's part of the lifestyle of travellers the world over – an unmistakable symbol of international class.

V.I.P. Built tough to take the rigours of travel. In a fascinating panorama of designs, sizes, colours, each with the distinct stamp of V.I.P style. Now with new international features – a soft grip handle, autolock security chain, recessed wheels. For that special feel of luxury only a V.I.P. can give you.

Rediscover the romance of travel. Get a V.I.P. – and get away! The world is waiting for you ...

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"Around the world, you and me... and our V.I.P.!"

V.I.P.
LUGGAGE
Spells international class... anywhere

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

inStyle

The Most Fashionable Address in India
7, Napean Sea Road, Bombay-400 036;

Presents
Fashions For Party Wear

An Uttam Enterprise
Tel: 81-33-33, 81-6798

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CRIME

BOMBAY

Und

NOTO
the
at Hotel C
suburb. R
"disco" re
Dholakias
dirch mer easy virtu hoodlo a unwilling operation cate the tod the political c Bullas
lice raided up 28 pros
Arind Dh managers
March. Po
D.S. Som hotel's lic down the less than Dholakias
other Dholakia. of the two shot dead
tres from apartmen lings we for the Dh
The Mahesh D after he hand-new from his b
the hallm and slayi investigat
were wor cy that shot dead
traded Rashim's
hek-up e
The ci like murd apparent had recog and trad
he was g
the-drive where h shelter.
out of hi
Hingri o

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BOMBAY

Underworld Hit

NOTHING personified the power of the Dholakia brothers more than the throbbing, gyrating night life at Hotel Caesar's Palace in a Bombay suburb. For years the hotel, mainly its "disco" restaurant Cleo, owned by the Dholakias, was the favourite night spot of rich men looking for fun and women of easy virtue. It was a veritable high-class bordello and for years the police seemed unwilling or unable to take action. The operation was such that it did not implicate the hotel management directly. And the Dholakias maintained their political connections.

But last November the police raided the place, rounded up 28 prostitutes and arrested Arvind Dholakia and his two managers. And finally, in March, Police Commissioner D.S. Soman cancelled the hotel's licence and closed down the discotheque. In less than a month, the Dholakias suffered another blow—Mahesh Dholakia, 40, the younger of the two brothers, was shot dead barely 200 metres from his Peddar Road apartment. Suddenly, things were going wrong for the Dholakia clan.

The shooting of Mahesh Dholakia shortly after he emerged in a brand-new white Maruti from his building bore all the hallmarks of a gangland slaying. The police investigating the murder were working on the theory that Dholakia was shot dead in retaliation for dreaded gangster Babu Reshim's killing in a police lock-up earlier in March.

The circumstances of the murder made it seem apparent that Dholakia had recognised his killers and tried to escape before he was gunned down in the driveway of a building where he tried to take shelter. Dholakia drove out of his own building Himgiri on Peddar Road and was tailed by another car with six men inside. He turned into a side road, abandoned his car and ran into a building. But the killers shot him in the leg and, as he lay in front of a garage, pumped 10 bullets into his chest and head from pointblank range and fled.

But the family, which had branched off into hotels and construction after Mahesh and Arvind initially set up a thriving smuggling operation, deny that his death was a gangland slaying and insist that they are businessmen who have never been involved in any illegal activity. Mahesh was the youngest of five brothers. "He had no enemies, so we cannot say who could have killed him," said his elder brother Lalit Dholakia.

The Dholakia brothers' links with the Congress(I), BJP and the Shiv Sena were well-known, and though Lalit later denied it, Arvind even told an evening paper immediately after the killing that they had "spent Rs 7 lakh for the Congress(I) in the last assembly and Lok Sabha elections".

Hotel Caesar's Palace and; (inset) Mahesh: fatal blow

Photographs by MAHENDRA PARIKH

The police believe that Mahesh could have been shot dead in retaliation for Reshim's killing. Mahesh and Arvind were close to the Shetty gang, which has had a long standing feud with the gang controlled by Reshim and Ramakant Naik. The link with the gangs began for the Dholakias after they entered the lucrative smuggling trade while functioning as small-time traders in the Khetwadi area of the city. But of the two brothers, it was Arvind who was said to be more closely involved in underworld operations. "Mahesh was more the financial man, while Arvind was the more hot-headed boss, and it is even possible that Mahesh was killed when they could not get Arvind," said an investigating officer.

Arvind was arrested first on the charge of smuggling in 1974 alongwith more well-known figures like Haji Mastan and Yusuf Patel, and released along with the rest under Jayprakash Narayan's amnesty scheme for smugglers. It was then that the Dholakias got into the construction business, even putting up a colony named after them in the suburbs, and also acquired the hotel which made them famous. Arvind and Mahesh were arrested again in 1985 under NSA but were released after two months by the review board. Since 1979 Arvind has also been charged in seven cases of rioting and murder.

Though the Dholakias' names have been linked with the smuggling network, there were no charges against them of continuing with the illegal operations after the Emergency. But their notoriety in the media continued with the disco at Caesar's Palace and they had recently opened another set-up called The Fisherman's Wharf further downtown in Worli. With the Chicago-type slaying of Mahesh, the Dholakias are back in the headlines with a bang.

—M. RAHMAN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

PHOTO FEATURE BY BHAWAN SINGH

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

GANGA WHITE WATER FESTIVAL

Riding the Rapids

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THE Ganga White Water Festival inaugurated by Sir Edmund Hillary last month saw, for the first time, dozens of river runners negotiating their way through 70 km of the Ganga—from its origin at the confluence of the Alaknanda and the Bhagirathi rivers at Devprayag to Rishikesh—in rafts, canoes and kayaks. They included professionals and first-timers, 15-year-old students and 50-year-old mothers, enthusiasts from the National Cadet Corps, navy and sports schools as well as rafters from the US, Canada, UK and Denmark. Senior Correspondent TANIA MIDHA and Chief Photographer BHAWAN SINGH climbed aboard one of the rafts to experience this unique adventure sport carnival in India.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

FOR five magnified seconds all laughter stops and a chilling silence blots out the roar of the waves. Members of the NCC rafting team watch helplessly as young Vijay Mishra, 16, falls over the side of their raft and disappears into the frothing waters. The boys freeze in panic. Mishra is trapped under the raft buffeted by the waves crashing against jagged rocks. But a moment later, he bobs up beside the raft and is yanked in.

It is the first day of the Ganga White Water Festival and the message has come through loud and clear. White water rafting is fun, but in this sport safety is priority one. Mishra had flipped over in a small rapid—not a patch on the big monsters that lay in wait ahead. But not having secured himself well, even a small tilt had been enough. The mishap has made its point, but it does little to dampen the enthusiasm—not just among the participants in the expedition, but also among every resident of Devprayag.

Even the pandit had laughed as he blessed the expedition members. At sleepy little Devprayag any excitement in his life had always had religious connotations. And now his son wanted to become a river rafter.

The little boy had watched curiously as his father blessed Sir Edmund Hillary, Avinash Kohli, convenor of the festival, and Sunil Pant, grandson of Pandit Govind Ballabh Pant in whose name the festival had been organised. And sharing his curiosity were hundreds of amused Devprayagis gathered at the ghats to watch the whooping and yelling river runners boarding their rafts, canoes and kayaks to begin their run down to Rishikesh.

The participants came in all sizes. Nervous teenagers with butterflies in their tummies to greying grandparents trying to keep calm. Nobody wasted time after the prayers, making a beeline for the rafts as Hillary exhorted: "Let us sweep over the rapids and crash through the stopper waves. We will all get wet—that is for sure—but with stout hearts and strong arms we will hopefully reach our destination at Rishikesh." One by one, the eight rafts slid into the water with half-a-dozen kayaks and canoes wriggling along—the festival had begun.

The thrills come in small doses. Still water at first, the Ganga ambles along revealing little of the fury beneath, letting you enjoy its majestic setting in the Garhwal hills. But soon the raft leaders prepare their teams for the ordeal ahead. "Come on up everybody. Rapids ahead. Check your life-jackets. Hang on tight. If you fall into the water, don't panic. You'll be carried into the still waters and one of the rafts will pick you up." These are small rapids, so the old-timers are unruffled. But for the uninitiated, it is difficult to maintain the brave expressions of confidence for long as the rafts dip teasingly, allowing the waves to wash over the sides. Those indoctrinated by their first spray cannot contain their exhilaration at the experience. "I can't believe I am doing it myself. I had only seen it on TV so far," gushes 19-year-old Manish Joshi of Kumaon University. "I just love it," says Nanika Krishnatraye simply. A mother at 28, Nanika has already decided that she will train to be a professional river guide. "I'm feeling young again," exults Suman Narain, 51.

'Sir Ed' (as Hillary came to be called during the trip) is quiet and underplayed in his emotions, but completely at ease with the swirling waters. He fondly reminisces about the old days of scaling Mt Everest and running upstream on the Ganga in the Ocean to Sky Expedition, but seems to be having nearly as much fun with his latest

A short inauguration at Devprayag (below) and off for the big splash in a kayak: frothy fun

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

adventure sport—diplomacy—as New Zealand's high commissioner to India. "Meeting dignitaries, cocktail parties, trekking down the countryside and floating down the Ganga are all a part of this game," said Sir Ed.

A short stop for lunch and off again in search of the big splash. The first comes at the fag end of the day—Daniel's Dip, which got its name in rafting circles after Mark Daniel, a professional kayaker from Canada, took a dip while steering his kayak through it. The suspense begins to build up as the rafts stop before the rapid to take stock of the spray-spouting monster from the shore. The boulders look menacing, enhanced by the deafening roar of the waves breaking over them. Several jittery nerves contemplate the wisdom of walking to the night camp, just a few hundred metres beyond the rapid. Those who have done it before quietly reassure the uninitiated. Back onto the rafts, silent prayers quickly said, and then headlong into the roaring waves.

SPLUTTERING paddlers help the main oarsman steer the rafts out of the breakers, furiously fighting their fright as well as the current threatening to toss them onto the rocks. Some fling themselves on the nose of the raft to keep it down, others cling onto the lifelines struggling to stay aboard. A triumphant thrill is evident on each and every soaking face of the crew as the rafts emerge gradually through the waves. "Initially I was frightened," admits Satish Dahiya, 15, "but now, the bigger the rapid, the better the fun."

Feats and adventures during the day are discussed over dinner. Digs at goof-ups, though

Sir Edmund watches quietly (below); rafters crash through the waves: high excitement

Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

coated with humour, are delivered with an underlying warning for tomorrow is serious business. In a gradation of rapids from 1-to-6 (six being impossible to encounter like the Niagara Falls) most of those to be encountered the next day are grade 4. "So far you've only seen the tip of the iceberg," grins Ajay Mehra, a professional river navigator. "Just wait till you feel the adrenalin rush when you stare one of those rapids in the face," adds Yousuf Zaheer, river manager for Kohli's Wildlife Adventure Tours. "But you'll love every minute of it," assures Ajit 'Baggage' Bajaj who, at 21, has been training groups from the NCC and the Indo-Tibetan Border Police in river rafting for the last year. Manoj Kriplani and Jamy Dalton teach "rafters' concentration games" around the campfire. Others listen in awe to rafting tales.

The next morning brings a dip in the Ganga for everyone—the believers wash away their sins while the atheists call it a bath. A quick bite and everybody is ready to move, when suddenly there is a flutter of excitement among the organisers. The enthusiasm about the festival has spread wide. Skip Horner heard about it in California from Peter Hillary, Sir Ed's son, and flew halfway round the world to join the rafters midway down the stream. Horner, who has rafted in all the seven continents, wouldn't miss this chance for all the rushing around it entailed.

A quick reshuffle in raft leaders and the second day's journey begins. This time it doesn't take long to come to the first challenger—The Wall. The rapid has been appropriately named as the water drops at a near 90 degrees to crash into a narrow corridor of rocks before clearing out into a pool. A long survey, a deep breath, a tautening of muscles and in we go. Thunderous waves tilt the rafts mercilessly, tossing them towards the jagged teeth of the rocks. Each one tumbles out, ruffled but jubilant.

A small breather and then come the wilds—one on the heels of the other—each with its own special name: Return to Sender, threatening to fling you right back to its start; Roller Coaster, literally taking you for a ride; Golf Course, challenging you to avoid its nine hydraulic holes (Golf Course is appropriately encased by smaller rapids—Tee off to help you warm up and Club house to unwind). Rafts hang onto waves, balanced delicately, just waiting to be flipped over; others bump over "sleeping" boulders under the water. Baggage goes through Roller Coaster with just one oar, Skip Horner deviates from the tested path and carves out a new route through Golf Course. But each one comes through without a scar. The festival has been a runaway success—no accidents, no set-backs. "From now on there'll be laughter all the way," promises an excited Avinash Kohli for whom this festival has been a dream. "I'm exhausted through but I've done it," he says with a satisfied grin. "Now the tension moves to the kitchen," grins expedition leader Ben Webster, roasting scrumptious mutton chops at a barbecue on the campfire. Relief is evident on the organisers' faces as the toughest part of the journey is over. The halt is just 12 km from the destination, Rishikesh.

It is a boisterous party that moves on to complete the last short stretch to Rishikesh. But a quiet gloom creeps in with the approach of civilisation, which is evident in the changing colour of the water. Crystal blue gives way to a fudgy blue-green and finally a muddy black at the ghat where we disembark to a rousing welcome of garlands and prayers and the touchstone of civilised receptions—speechmaking. The resistance to return to worldly customs surfaces in intolerant restlessness and the bewildered welcome committee at Rishikesh cuts short its prepared speeches, beats a hasty retreat and leaves the rafters recoiling against human contact that threatens to blot out upstream memories of a clean, refreshingly dehumanised Ganga.

(Clockwise from top left) Enthusiastic waves for a kayaker; reaching calm waters and; the tossing and tumbling voyage ends at Rishikesh: spills and thrills

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

VAYUDOOT

Engine Trouble

ON March 9, Harsh Vardhan, the bespectacled, mild-mannered general manager of Vayudoot—India's fledgling commuter airline—sent the following SOS to the Dornier Company in West Germany, the Garrett Engine Co in the US, and Hindustan Aeronautics Ltd (HAL) in Bangalore: "We had one more Garrett Engine failure on March 5. Dornier aircraft had an in-flight shut-down of starboard engine (assembled by HAL) during cruise at 7,600 feet on operational schedule flight from Jaipur to Vishakhapatnam. The aircraft made safe single engine landing at Vizag. Preliminary investigation shows suspected cause to be torque sensor bearing failure. Engine had done 750 hours and had been snag free."

Four days later, another German-built Dornier 20-seat passenger plane, equipped with the Garrett turbo-prop engine and assembled at HAL, had an engine failure as it approached Calcutta. But the pilot was able to land the aircraft safely. Again, the preliminary inspection pointed to failure of the torque sensor bearing. Two weeks later, another engine failed in similar circumstances.

This was the sixth engine failure during flight of a Vayudoot plane within two years of the airline's inception. By year-end, Vayudoot will be flying in and out of 92 stations and an added 45 by the end of the seventh plan. But whether Vayudoot will be plying these routes with the HAL-assembled Dorniers is in serious doubt.

Last fortnight as word about Vayudoot's engine troubles spread among the public, airline managers hinted that they would ground the entire fleet of 10 planes until the mechanical defects—which Vayudoot blames squarely on the manufacturers—were sorted out and the airline compensated monetarily. Incensed by the growing insecurity, angry Congress(I) MPs moved a calling attention motion and one of them referred to Vayudoot as 'Yamdoot' (God of Death). The Government has now appointed a committee consisting of the director-general of airworthiness, and representatives of HAL, Vayudoot and the Ministry of Defence to examine the reasons for the engine failures which threaten to deliver a severe blow not only to popular confidence in the safety of India's third airline but also to the entire Rs 250-crore Light Transport Aircraft (LTA) project approved by the Cabinet Committee on Political Affairs in 1983. As part of the project, 150 Dorniers were to be assembled by HAL for the air force, navy, Coast Guard and Vayudoot under a tripartite arrangement between HAL, Dornier and Garrett.

So far, 10 aircrafts have been delivered to Vayudoot, two to the Coast Guard and two to the Oil and Natural Gas Commission. According to highly-placed sources in the Defence Ministry, the services are unlikely to jam HAL with orders in the light of Vayudoot's experience. The six in-flight failures are not the only reason that has caused Vayudoot and the Government to press the panic button. The three most recent failures in March were in addition to 16 others—many of them discovered on the ground during routine inspections—and followed an inspection by a team of Garrett representatives, who visited India during January-February following Vayudoot's complaints about the reliability of the engines.

All the failed engines have had to be repaired or replaced at a huge cost to the airline. Vayudoot is insisting that the manufacturers reimburse the costs incurred, provide spare engines and critical spare parts for free, and make up for the revenue losses suffered. The manufacturers have not agreed to do so. According to government reports, increased maintenance and repair costs, among other factors, have increased the Dornier operating cost from Rs 4,850 per hour to Rs 6,800 per hour. Also, the actual purchase price of a Dornier has risen astronomically from the original listed cost of Rs 1.2 crore to nearly Rs 6 crore. This increase reflects both the increase in the value of the Deutschmark (the foreign exchange financing component) against the rupee as well as some

HARI OM GULATI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ritical spare p for the reve nufacturers h ording to gov
maintenance,
her factors, h
perating cost s 6,800 per h
nase price of omically from 1.2 crore to n e reflects both the Deutsche inancing co
as well as so erhead costs charged by HAL, which ow amount to nearly Rs 50 lakh per lane. Vayudoot has already shelled out Rs 24 lakh for the repair of some of the led engines and is expected to cough up nother Rs 60 lakh for the rest. Moreover, loss of revenue due to the grounding of rt of its fleet for nearly 1,400 hours, is timated at over Rs 1 crore.

The engine failures are being described as "premature failures" by experts

Dornier engine (below); with damaged plenum chamber and turbine wheel (left): design defects

because none of those removed for repair had even performed for half the period recommended before overhaul. According to manufacturer specifications, each engine must be overhauled after functioning for 6,000 hours. And a detailed "hot section" inspection—examination of the three-stage turbines where fuel is converted into energy—is required after 3,000 hours have been logged. But the most one of the 19 failed engines had logged was 2,635 hours. And many of the engines failed or were damaged after working for only a few hundred hours.

And now, a bitter controversy has erupted between Vayudoot on one side, and HAL, Garrett and Dornier on the other, over the reasons for the failures. While HAL has sided with the foreign companies, Vayudoot blames the manufacturers for the engine malfunction. Of the 19 failures so far, 11 occurred within a six-month period—between October 1986 and March 1987. Vayudoot's analysis showed that 10 of them were due to basic engine defects, the most serious of them being a failure of the torque sensor bearings (rotating discs which propel fuel into the turbine—a malfunction can cut off fuel flow into the engine). Other causes identified included chipped and broken carbon seals, unexplained cracks in the second-stage turbines, and dangerously high oil consumption. A Garrett-Dornier inspection team that visited India in January—when 16 engines had been removed after suffering damage—agreed that six failures were due to basic design defects: two exhibited torque sensor bearing failure. Garrett has agreed to redesign the system. But it will be available only in 1989.

Since that visit there have been three more failures in engines which had been declared trouble-free by the inspection team. These three failures—bringing the total to 19—have also been attributed to faults in the torque sensor bearings. But the remaining cases, the manufacturers concluded, are due to other causes, including poor maintenance, improper engine rigging adjustments, damage from foreign objects like bird hits, and poor pilot performance, especially in starting procedures.

Several of the damaged engines, Garrett-Dornier representatives argue, were ruined because of "hot starts". They charged that the pilots were starting the engines at temperatures much higher than the maximum internal turbine temperatures permitted during start. But Vayudoot technicians argue that, in the light of Indian operating conditions, this is a design flaw. The margin between a "normal start" temperature and the maximum allowable is so low that it can be exceeded within seconds, especially in conditions where the outside temperature—often over 40 degrees celsius—influences the engine temperature, giving the pilot no more than a few seconds. In fact, Vayudoot representatives have asked Garrett to provide intermediary safeguards against this phenomenon, but Garrett has said that it is not possible to institute any immediate changes.

Three of the engines were removed during this two-year period because of bird hits. While repairing the external damage, Vayudoot stripped the engines to examine their interiors which should not have been affected. Even these engines, when dismantled, showed extensive "hot-section distress"—damage to combustion chamber and turbine parts. As an internal government inspection states: "Even engines that are removed for causes other than over-temperature/hot starts, or carbon seals damage,

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

have shown extensive damage including cracks of the turbine wheels. This only proves our conviction that the engine is prone to hot-section distress, irrespective of the primary cause of removal due to design deficiency and/or material failure."

But spokesmen for Dornier and Garrett maintain that their representatives had warned as early as 1985 that the Vayudoot operation was heading for trouble because of a lack of proper tooling facilities, absence of hangars, improper maintenance—such as the failure to check fuel nozzles periodically—inadequate pilot training, and virtually no planning for ordering and keeping spare parts. They also note that a total of 181 engines in service the world over have not run into the engine snags exhibited by the Vayudoot fleet.

Vayudoot managers bristle at these charges and point out that, in fact, the first batch of commanders and co-pilots were trained by Dornier. Even now, only pilots with several thousand hours of flying experience are hired by Vayudoot. And before they are given command they must complete a successful conversion course and then log in an extra 100 hours as co-pilot. Besides, Vayudoot now maintains full-fledged hangars at Delhi, Hyderabad and Calcutta and has spent Rs 85 lakh on workshops and hot-section inspection facilities.

But spares and replacements continue to be a problem. Engines sent to HAL for repairs have languished there for two months and two aircraft have been grounded without engines for two months. And in the last three years, even though Vayudoot has purchased nearly Rs 3 crore worth of spares from Garrett, inventories, spares and repair items worth Rs 90 lakh—many of them sent for replacement or repair under warranty—have been held up at the US company for as long as nine months.

In overall terms—taking into account only the engine shut-downs that occurred during flight—the premature engine removal rate for Vayudoot works out to 0.100 per thousand engine hours, far in excess of the world figure of 0.008 per thousand engine hours. A more accurate comparison would perhaps be with the US-based Precision Airlines, the second largest operator of the Dornier after Vayudoot. Vayudoot's Dornier fleet, which has clocked a total of about 50,000 flying hours, averages an engine removal rate—for all causes—of 0.355 per thousand engine hours. Precision, with 22,500 hours, averages an engine removal rate of 0.359 per thousand hours, a statistic that appears to indicate that Vayudoot is not the only operator facing problems with the same aircraft.

Vardhan says his airline has now redoubled its efforts to keep the planes flying safely against tremendous odds. The manufacturers, he said, "rather than showing a helpful attitude have preferred to get involved in technical bickering. In similar situations, other engine and aircraft manufacturers have shown quick responses, rushed spare engines and absorbed a lot of the costs". But in this case, Vardhan pointed out angrily: "We are saddled with failure after failure. We have to keep sending them messages for months to visit India while simultaneously paying through our noses for buying new engines and spares at premium prices."

This merely highlights the trouble for the entire LTA project. Its cost is expected to quadruple from the original Rs 250 crore. If the project is abandoned it will be one more blow to the concept of indigenisation visualised by the technical committee which recommended the deal.

The high-powered government committee now investigating the issue has a tough row to hoe. It must examine not only the engine failures but also the circumstances under which the government committee approved the purchase of an aircraft which is beginning to show early design defects and probable unsuitability to operating in Indian conditions. After hectic lobbying, the Dornier was picked over the Spanish-built CASA-212 and the Canadian-built DC-6 Twin Otter. And now, senior aviation officials have once again begun to look favourably at the Otter which has been around for two decades and proved itself a dependable work-horse. But whatever decision the Government takes, there is no immediate solution to Vayudoot's Dornier nightmare and the continuing concern for the flying commuter's safety.

—INDERJIT BADHWAR and PRABHU CHAWLA

FAILED PART : Failure of Torque Sensor results in cut-off of fuel supply

Diagram by B.K. SHARMA

"Rather than showing a helpful attitude, the manufacturers have preferred to get involved in technical bickering. In similar situations, other engine and aircraft manufacturers have shown quick responses."

HARSH VARDHAN
chairman, Vayudoot

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

It's not just our flights that are non-stop to Europe.

From the moment you settle into the comfort of your seat on Thai, the service and the entertainment...

the drinks and the food and all those little things that help you to enjoy your flight come non-stop...

(though we wouldn't dream of waking you up) so, when your non-stop flight arrives in Europe you'll be almost wishing it wouldn't stop.

Thai flies you non-stop with non-stop entertainment and service from Delhi twice a week to Amsterdam and three times a week to London.

Thai
Smooth as silk.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Checks... perfect body language

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Raymond's
Shirting Fabrics
Checks. Stripes. Plains.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

FILMS

The New Breed

IN the dog-eat-dog world of the Hindi film industry, there is rarely any unanimity when it comes to praising a star. Except, it appears, when the star stands just over two feet tall, sports a tail, and has four legs. His name is Brownie, a friendly brown labrador who is rapidly becoming something of a legend in Indian cinema. Brownie has not only starred in several Hindi, Tamil, Telugu, Kannada, Bengali and Malayalam films but has just returned from Bangkok after a shooting assignment for a Thai film.

Brownie, or Moti as he is called on the screen, is four-and-a-half year old but already commands a fee of between Rs 1 lakh to Rs 2 lakh per film, and as is to be expected for a performer who charges such high fees, travels by air and lives only in air-conditioned hotel rooms. Brownie's success has come at a time when the Hindi film industry, reeling under the combined effect of several major flops, has been desperate to try any formula to produce a box-office hit. "Just now Hindi cinema seems to be going through yet another cycle of films featuring animals," says producer Amit Khanna. "We have seen in the past, as far back as Gemini's Insaniyat in the '50s which had Dilip Kumar, Dev Anand and a chimpanzee. Then of course there was Haathi Mere Saathi in the '70s."

Director Shashilal Nair is busy completing the shooting of his latest film Parivar which features, besides Mithun Chakraborty and Meenakshi Sheshadri, a monkey called Savitri and Johnny, a German shepherd from the late Chinappa Devar's famous (Clockwise from right) Mithun with Savitri; Sahdevan with lion and N. James with his dog Brownie: pet play

SHYAM TEKWANI

NAMAS BHOJANI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

menagerie of film animals in Madras. Savitri is another star brought up by Brownie's owner, N. James, and she made her debut in the Gemini film Do Phool nearly 15 years ago. She was paid Rs 500 for the film but today, after featuring in nearly 150 films, can reportedly fetch as much as Rs 1 lakh for a major role. Named after a famous Tamil actress, she is also something of an international star, having featured both in David Lean's Passage to India and Kabir Bedi's Sandokan series. In those days when I bought Savitri for Rs 50, animals were not paid well," recalls James. "But now they are paid much better since many films with animals have been successful."

In fact, not only are animals being paid better but have also become a part of the star system. Brownie had to be ruled out for the film Parivar as the producers could not afford too many stars. "I haven't taken Brownie because it was also a problem getting his dates," says Nair. But Brownie, as his trainer Nazeer points out, is an accomplished performer also, jumping through fire, smashing his way through glass windows, saving the heroine from a bunch of villains. He even carries a permanent mark of his daredevilry; both his ears were cut some years ago while jumping through glass.

But clearly Brownie's phenomenal success is the high point of the latest animal trend. "I bought him in Kodaikanal for Rs 3,000," says James. "I trained him even as he performed in the original Malayalam version of the film Teri Meherbaniyan three years ago. He featured in all the language remakes of the film, and became a national star with the Hindi version. Now he is so good in front of the camera that he rarely has to give a second take."

Such high praise for Brownie is not just an owner's pride in his dog. Those who have worked with Brownie remain dumbfounded by his uncanny talent. "The way he performed in my film I felt convinced he was a great artiste in his last birth," says K.C. Bokadia, producer of Teri Meherbaniyan. "The dog acted as if there is an atma in him."

EVEN a seasoned director like Manmohan Desai was bowled over by Brownie's exceptional abilities in front of the camera. Desai cast him in Mard, giving him a pivotal role along with a horse as the constant companions of the hero Amitabh Bachchan. The film was a bigger hit than Teri Meherbaniyan. "He is the most fantastic dog I have ever seen," says Desai. "It is unbelievable the way he does exactly what you want without any retakes. The dog has an uncanny sense of what to do before a camera."

Brownie has brought success and wealth to his owner James, 38, a self-made man who ran away from home in Kanyakumari as a kid to make his fortune in Madras. James now insists on a air-conditioned room for Brownie whenever he travels ever since the dog developed a rash while shooting in the Calcutta heat two years ago and had to be hospitalised. "Dogs like to stay cool, and after he rests in an AC room Brownie is in better shape for another day's shooting," he says.

Traditionally, the other animals much in demand with producers are horses, elephants and tigers and maybe snakes as well after the runaway success of Nagin, the Sridevi-starrer. "Most films featuring animals in a major way are shot in the south, as that's where most of the animals are," says Jagdish Sahdevan, owner of Apollo Circus whose animals feature in Bombay's most recent remake of Tarzan. Sahdevan, who made the serial Appu Aur Pappu for TV featuring elephants, and now plans to make it into a feature film, adds: "In India the elephant is the most popular animal on the screen because of the link with Lord Ganesh."

The advantage with most animals is that more than one animal can be used to portray the same creature in a film. It is for this reason that a well-trained dog is in greater demand, as it is far more difficult to find a double. And other animals can be difficult to direct for extended periods. "Monkeys are the trickiest as they love to play pranks and you have to constantly manipulate them," says James.

Jackie Shroff, who has starred both with Brownie in Teri Meherbaniyan and with Savitri in Bokadia's Jawab Hum Denge finds the experience of working with animals similar to working with infants. "You need a lot of patience or you begin to tear your hair off," he says. "But, of course, Brownie was amazing even down to the glycerine tears he sheds on his master's grave."

But whatever the animal, they are a big hit in Indian cinema. As Screen Editor B.K. Karanjia says: "In fact, animals have turned out to be the stars in these films, really catching the public's imagination." And till the audiences tire of their antics, Brownie and company can be expected to keep the circus going on the screen.

—M.RAHMAN

Scene from Tarzan: animal fun

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Metalcraft magic... Allwyn Style

Allwyn Furniture Systems.
Your key to a readymade office.
Executive Tables, Chairs, Filing Cabinets,
Almirahs. And a host of other
office accessories.

Allwyn. The metalcraft legend
that put its expertise to work.
And created office furniture
that's guaranteed to outlast lifetimes.

Allwyn. Designed for today's corporate needs. And destined to match tomorrow's.

ALLWYN

Sleek. And tough

Hyderabad Allwyn Limited
Corporate Marketing Division
Allwyn Bhavan, Erragadda, HYDERABAD-500 018.

Allwyn Furniture Systems ★ Executive Tables ★ Chairs
★ Filing Cabinets ★ Almirahs ★ Office Accessories

Hyderabad Allwyn Area Offices: Ahmedabad Ph. 413941, Bangalore Ph. 228885, Bhopal Ph. 65986/ 62979 Bhubaneswar Ph. 52271, Bombay Ph. 4927575/ 4927586, Calcutta Ph. 446853/ 433576, Chandigarh Ph 41941, Cochin Ph. 368002, Gauhati Ph. 32691, Ghaziabad Ph. 843204, Hyderabad Ph. 552308/ 43407, Jabalpur Ph. 22665, Jaipur Ph. 65726 Kanpur Ph. 245249, Karnal. Madras Ph. 77177/ 811401, Nagpur. New Delhi Ph. 734740/ 730715, Patna Ph. 32745, Pune Ph. 66166 (PP), Vijayawada Ph. 62544, Visakhapatnam Ph. 61652.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

The little master

Claims Big

Get this compact little master to work for your industry. And watch it perform all the big tasks you thought only a bigger machine could tackle.

Quality Components

All critical parts of these sophisticated machines such as Recirculating Ball screws, DC Servo Drives, CNC systems (Anilam Crusader II) and bearings are imported and assembled in India to exacting international quality standards.

Matchless Benefits

- Higher productivity. Rigid Construction enables utilisation of full power. Quick positioning of slides resulting in higher utilisation of machine.
- As the system is capable of repeating the programme 999 times, with use of multicomponent loading fixture continuous production can be achieved.
- CNC System used on the machine – Anilam Crusader II is a manual data input system which enables the operator to directly input the programme from drawing sheet.
- Programme storage facility enables retention of part programme in cassettes for later use.
- Ensures consistent machining accuracy and long term precision. Rejection of components minimised.
- Feedback system used is linear glass scale which enables production of accurate components.
- Wide range of accessories.

BMC 2000/3000 series CNC Boring and Milling Center from Bharat Fritz Werner

- Better productivity.
- Better accuracy.
- Better reliability.

For more information/demonstration, please write to:

BFW

Bharat Fritz Werner Private Limited
Peenya, Yeshwantpur P.O. Bangalore 560 022.
Telephone: 385745-8 Telex: (845) 346 ACME IN Grams: BHARAFRITZ

Regional Offices • BOMBAY Phone: 4945471 & 4942630 • CALCUTTA Phone: 269334 • HYDERABAD Phone: 222552 • MADRAS Phone: 452899 • NEW DELHI Phone: 3315131/32/33 • PUNE Phone: 447132.

Does Big

High – profile clientele

BFW's Boring and Milling Center has proved itself in well known establishments like BEML, JYOTI, KEC, LOHIA, MICO, TALBROS, TEXMO, WIDIA.

Wide – ranging applications

Just consider the versatility of its applications:

- In prototype development.
- Machining components for two wheeler industries.
- Specific die making (plastic, die casting, forging).
- Development of various tool holders.
- Machining various key ways.
- For batch production of precision components.
- Training Centres.

Highly versatile

Available in 2 sizes and three versions

Table size
BMC 2000 1350 × 315
BMC 3000 1630 × 355

- It has 3 axes fitted with DC Servo motors and ball screws.
- 3 axes linear interpolation and any 2 axes circular interpolation possible – this facility enables machining of any contour which can be defined by co-ordinates.

Typical components machined on the Boring and Milling Center with CNC Contouring Control.

ASP-BFW-8701

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri
CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

LEUCODERMA

Cuban Cure

FOR those 20 million Indians who suffer from vitiligo (leucoderma)—those nasty white patches which denude the skin's natural pigmentation—there is hope at last. Cuban scientists and doctors now have a cure which has a recovery rate of 85 per cent, with even higher estimates among people with darker skins.

The antidote is an extract of placenta, which when applied to the defiguring patches and then exposed to ultra-violet rays, results in the visible darkening of the skin within seven days. So successful is the treatment that the Cuban Government is converting a major hotel into a clinic to house the hundreds of worldwide sufferers who are lining up to visit the country.

The cure for vitiligo was discovered by accident more than a decade ago. Dr Carlos Miyares Cao, a gynaecologist specialising in premature deliveries at the Havana School of Medicine, was in the process of a laboratory analysis of frozen placenta in an attempt to understand the effects of stress on the metabolism of the placenta. Miyares believed that stress wrought negative and toxicological changes in the placenta, which in turn resulted in premature and high-risk deliveries. One fall-out of the study: Miyares noted that when the liquid in which the placenta was maintained was injected into the nipples of guinea pigs, there was a rapid increase in melanin production in the area, and this in turn stimulated pigmentation. The pigmentation process almost tripled when the injected area was exposed to sunlight.

In conjunction with dermatologists at the University of Havana, Miyares continued his probes into lipo-protein substance which encouraged melanin; a toxicological survey concluded that the lipo-protein was neither harmful to humans nor cancerous. Soon a lotion, under the brand name Melagenina, was ready for use among sufferers of vitiligo. Tests conducted on 732 Cuban patients between the ages of two and 64 resulted in complete cures for 640 of them during a period which varied from a few months to a few years. More important, once cured, the disease never returned to plague them. These findings will be presented at medical conferences in Spain and in Berlin in May 1987. The progress has already been reported in several medical journals and conferences. Though many doctors elsewhere claim they have been using placental extracts with rays for years, not one of them has been able to register a success rate as high as 85 per cent over a large number of patients.

Operating out of the Cira Garcia clinic in Havana, the soft-spoken bespectacled Miyares, who is a zealous devotee of yoga, admits that the cause of the disease is unknown. He believes it is psychosomatic, linked to a neurosystem under stress. That stress could be triggered by a variety of traumatic events: a death in the family, an accident, illness or divorce. And because it is aesthetically unpleasant, it leads to social withdrawal, depression and isolation in sufferers.

The wonder drug (above) and (below) a leucoderma patient's legs before and after treatment: new hope

The treatment devised by Miyares is simple. The lotion is applied to all patches thrice daily with a 15-minute exposure to ultra-violet rays once a day. The lotion is sold in 240 ml-sized bottles for $3 (Rs 39) apiece. Depending on the extent of the patches, a patient could use a bottle a week or one per day. The objective must be to attack all patches at the same time since tests have shown that only concerted action produces a high rate of success. Patents on the lotion have been applied for in Canada, the UK, USA, USSR and France.

The cost, when compared with medical treatment in the West, is nominal: the first consultation is $35 (Rs 455), the following are $25 (Rs 325) each. A patient who cannot afford a long stay in Cuba can be taught how to treat himself at home. And after he returns to his own country, Cuban doctors keep in touch with him directly or through doctors serving local chapters of Vitiligo Societies—as is the case with patients from Brazil, Venezuela, Canada and the United Kingdom.

As regards its applicability to Indian skins, the best-known case is that of a Sri Lankan woman living in London who arrived severely scarred all over, especially on her face. Within three months of treatment, her face has been fully restored. Miyares says that the tone and elasticity of dark-skinned people encourage and have shown an even faster and higher cure rate.

A little more than a year ago, Indian doctors requested and received through Indian embassy officials in Havana, the product and information of Melagenina. There the matter rests—though they will soon be applying for an Indian patent. The Cubans are eagerly awaiting progress on the matter since they realise that the problem is serious in India. Cuba has at last offered hope to sufferers of a cruel and disfiguring ailment. —PATRICIA J. SEYBOLD

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Your painter will tell you that different parts of your home need different paints

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

You can sum up all your painting needs with just two words: Asian Paints

When you're getting ready to paint your home, you'll find that you need more than just one type of paint.

An emulsion or a distemper for walls. An enamel for doors, windows and metal. A wood finish for furniture.

And primers and undercoats for each finish. Put together that makes for quite a variety of paints.

But, if you know your budget and the shades you want, just tell your painter, "Asian Paints", and relax.

Because, Asian Paints has a quality paint for every need.

There's Apcolite 100% acrylic emulsion and Tractor distemper for your walls. Apcolite synthetic enamel for doors, windows and metal. And TouchWood clear wood finish for your furniture.

Each one designed to give each part of your home a look of lasting freshness.

A paint in any shade, for every budget

No matter which paint you choose, Asian Paints offers you the shade you want.

You'll also find a paint that makes the most of your budget. Giving you exceptional quality at affordable prices.

Which is why more homes have been decorated with Asian Paints than with any other paint.

Because, each of those home-owners knew, that with Asian Paints, they were getting more for their money.

Money well spent

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

OBM/9796

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Top class engines approve Gulf
The world's first choice.

Today's automotive engines are a special breed. They are high performance, high efficiency types that need better protection. GULF oils, specially blended to meet modern engine requirements, have today become synonymous with engine oil perfection.

GULF engine oils, manufactured by Petrosil in India, offer you top class performance, complete engine protection, longer life, more engine power and high fuel efficiency. Petrosil – the pioneers of Genuine high-technology oils. Also chosen by Honda of Japan to blend and market the most superior 2T oil in India, "KINETIC-HONDA GENUINE 2T OIL". Now you can stop worrying about that investment in your precious vehicle.

Insist on GULF's genuine engine protection – your engine deserves a top class oil.

Gulf

Engine Oils

Petrosil Oil Co. Ltd. Licensees of Gulf Oil Corpn., U.S.A.
Apeejay House, 3, Dinsha Wacha Road, Bombay 400 020.
Area Offices: New Delhi • Ahmedabad • Calcutta • Madras

Petrosil has depots, distributors and stockists all over India. Gulf lubricants are also available with leading Auto spare parts dealers.

World's First Choice.
Make it yours.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The Language of Dance

CREATIONS
by MRINALINI SARABHAI
Mapin, Ahmedabad
Pages: 98; Price: Rs 225

TODAY, the dance scene in India is teeming with hundreds of educated aspirants and established artistes, and there is a general awareness of the fact that the Indian classical arts have had an unbroken tradition of over 3,000 years. But rare indeed are those accomplished dancers who are involved deeply enough to delve into the religiosity and philosophy underlying the magnificent dance traditions of India. Fewer still are those who are gifted with the ability to explain these to lay audiences through lecture-demonstrations or writings.

Abundantly accomplished and world-renowned dancer, choreographer, guru, scholar, poetess and writer, Mrinalini Sarabhai has been hailed as the current high priestess of Indian classical dancing. Although she is firmly rooted in the rich traditions imbibed from her celebrated gurus in the dance-forms of Bharatnatyam and Kathakali, the creative urge in her prompted her to choreograph fresh items reflecting the contemporary values and conflicts of our age. As Mrinalini says: "Our civilisation has a basic philosophy. Yet, none of us artistes can escape our century and its implications." A true dancer is not one who unquestioningly copies her guru's style, but one who evaluates each movement, finds its essence ('sat'), and integrates each movement with an intellectual, physical and emotional response. What the intellect contemplates, the body expresses through dance. Through Creations, Mrinalini makes her own statement on life as an artiste committed to making the world a better place.

Beginning with Vasanta Vijayam in 1949, Mrinalini has choreographed nearly 50 dance-dramas covering a wide variety of themes, mythological, eternal, contemporary and abstract. Ecology and environment, pollution of the Ganges waters, the threat of nuclear warfare, the alienation of man in an increasingly modern and urban society, the tyrannical excesses perpetrated on the minorities by the affluent and powerful ruling class, are some of the problems that she has highlighted through her creations. All these she sees through the sensitive eyes of a dancer gifted with a highly intellectual and aesthetic temperament, and therefore, very few have understood what it is all about.

Through Creations, she describes in lucid language and eloquent photographs, what she has created through the alphabet of dance. In her words: "Creative activity is a presentation in understandable terms of what we are, a picture of man's inner aspirations, joys, and sorrows." Her dance-drama Manushya, for instance, was inspired by a great event in her life—the birth of her first child, Kartikeya. "Maya and the Disciple is the affirmation of life in Tantra. The disciple is the 'atma' searching for the source, and 'maya' the goddess ... unveiling the mysteries of existence through the positive recognition of love in all its aspects."

In her impassioned creation Ganga, the dancer-writer sings a dirge for the sullied mother river, and sends up a cry of pain and anguish: "Oh radiant Ganga! White as the scared hamsa flowing through the heavens... your forgiveness we seek, for spreading our pollution in the clarity of thy streams...that evil can be cleansed by none but our own selves...in the purification of our hearts."

Besides the 13 chapters written by Mrinalini, there is a foreword and introduction by internationally renowned modern dancer Merce Cunningham and Buckminster Fuller. The book is richly illustrated with 80 exquisite photographs of Mrinalini, her equally beautiful and famous daughter Mallika Sarabhai and the other dancers of the Darpan group. The impressive cover and well-planned layout, the colourful photographs, and the superb printing (done in Singapore) are all of the highest quality. Mrinalini's Creations will be a coveted addition for every good library of art-books.

—SUSHEELA MISRA

Mrinalini and Mallika: creative work

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

For the price of two cigarettes you can buy two healthy eggs.

Eggs are health. Eggs are strength.

They are simply loaded with proteins of the highest quality.

And almost all the vitamins. Even thirteen important minerals. Like calcium for your bones and teeth. Iron for your blood.

Eggs make you feel good. Because they are good for you.

Eggs are so tasty too. Such fun to make. Just fry them. Poach them. Scramble or bake them. Whip them into puddings. Or any other way you like them.

So don't waste your money on things that can injure your health. Like tobacco.

Spend it wisely on eggs. Eggs are health. Eggs are health. Eat them every day.

Nutrition Content

1 Egg	Cigarettes	Pan Masala
13 Minerals (including iron, calcium, iodine, zinc, sodium etc.)	Minerals— None.	Minerals— None.
6.65 gms of Protein	Proteins— None.	Proteins— None.
All the Vitamins except Vitamin 'C'.	Vitamins— None.	Vitamins— None.

Issued in the consumer's interest by the National Egg Co-ordination Committee
13/6 Milestone, Panshet Road, P.O. Girinagar, Pune 411 025

You can't buy healthier food for the price of eggs.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ASTROLOGY

Computer Kundlis

PANDIT Bhairavi Tantrik of Meerut is a man of strange contradictions. At one end of his poky first floor flat is a cavernous, red-painted room where he keeps a human skull and other instruments of his dark art. At the other end, a comparatively dust free room houses a computer terminal and printer which churns out kundlis (horoscopes). A businessman pure and simple, Bhairavi Tantrik has acquired the wherewithal to satisfy all kinds of clients. Those who come looking for witch-doctor potions or to get curses lifted are led into the first room. Educated clients seeking horoscopes and fortune predictions are treated to the sight of a precisely calculated horoscope chart emerging from the computer's printer.

Bhairavi Tantrik is not an unusual astrologer, nor is Meerut the only place where computer horoscopes are becoming popular. The computer kundli is revolutionising the astrological business all over the country. Delhi alone has half a dozen "astro shops" now and the number is increasing in major cities around the country.

Horoscopes have always been big business in India. Astrology has been sanctified in the Hindu scriptures and even today, three out of four Hindu families get horoscopes prepared for their children. The planetary positions charted by the pandit are supposed to act as an astral time-clock to guide all major events in life. Calculating the position of the planets at the time of birth was always the most tiresome part of preparing a kundli. That task has now been simplified by the computer.

The economics of the operation is responsible for making computer horoscopes a big hit. The basic horoscope produced by a computer costs only Rs 40 whereas a pandit could charge several hundred rupees for the same job. But the pandits are not protesting. The arrival of computer kundlis has more than doubled the business of five-star astrologer Pandit R.N. Sharma who sits in Delhi's Hyatt Regency hotel. "First we used to spend most of our time preparing kundlis. Now people bring us computer printed horoscopes and we can take our time interpreting them and making predictions." Sharma and other astrologers agree that the calculations of the computer kundlis are very precise. But the computer's predictions about the future are very general and most people still turn to traditional astrologers to interpret their horoscopes and forecast their future.

More than anything else, computer-astro shops are proliferating because the horoscope machines can be operated with childish ease. One does not have to be an astrologer or even a good typist to key in the four basic items of information needed. Once the name, date and place of birth and the longitude and latitude of the place of birth have been keyed in, the printer starts churning out the horoscope. "Only five out of the 32 people who have bought our Bhrigu II (computer horoscope) system are astrologers. For the rest it's just a good business," says Rahul Gupta, 26, of the All India Computer Astrology Foundation (AICAF) which markets the astrological software under the brand name Bhrigu II. "We have calculated that even if a Bhrigu unit makes five horoscopes of Rs 100 every day, the unit will recover its cost in seven or eight months," adds Sarvesh Goorha, managing director of Cal Systems, which supplies the hardware with the Bhrigu system. Bhairavi Tantrik claims he is already earning up to Rs 10,000 a month. Kundan Lal, a garments dealer in New Delhi's Defence Colony, installed a Bhrigu system "as a sideline" a month ago, and has already had 250 customers. He now plans to start a match-making service.

The software programme for the Bhrigu II, Gupta claims, was written by his elder brother Pradeep, an electronics engineer from the Indian Institute of Technology, who runs his own com-

Pandit Bhairavi Tantrik: mix and match

Photographs by PRASHANT PANJIAR

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

puter company. They pooled the astrological knowledge of half a dozen leading pandits. The same software is now used by Foresight Ltd, the other major company in the horoscope and future forecasting business. AICAF sells the basic software (just horoscope making) for Rs 8,000. The larger package, including the capability to make yearly predictions, ranges from Rs 26,000 to the biggest which has the capability to match horoscopes of prospective marriage partners at Rs 55,000.

The rates charged by Foresight in Delhi offer an indication of the money-spinner the computer horoscope machine is proving to be. Suman Tagra, Foresight manager in Delhi's Connaught Place and the company's oldest employee, says her firm charges Rs 100 for a detailed horoscope, Rs 200 for an "exhaustive" one and an additional Rs 100 for predicting one year's major events. A complete horoscope with 20 years predictions costs Rs 500.

Foresight's Connaught Place outlet alone earns Rs 8,000 on an average day. But that is nothing compared to the business the company did when it opened its Bombay office in September 1984: it prepared 600 horoscopes a day for the first three months, pulling in Rs 29,000 a day, says Tagra. Between November 1986 and January 1987, the company prepared horoscopes for about 9,000 followers of Maharishi Mahesh Yogi who were staying at the Yogi's Noida camp. Foresight now gets dozens of requests every month from the US for the largest predictive horoscopes.

Some horoscope requests that come in are strange. One person wrote in for the horoscope of America:

Date of birth: 4th July 1776

Time of birth: 2.13 a.m.

Place: Philadelphia.

Another wanted the horoscope along with 20 years predictions for the future of Dollaro, born at midnight, on April 2, 1792 at New York. Yet another wanted predictions about the behaviour of the New York Stock Exchange—which would determine the fortunes of millions—born at 8.38 a.m. on 17th May, 1792 in New York City.

There are similar requests for major currencies and the world's busiest bourses. Not surprisingly, in recent months there have been as many as 150 requests for a computer print out on the future of Rajiv Gandhi. The request comes not only from the Opposition but, more surprisingly, from ambitious and worried members of the Congress(I). And all the predictions point to one thing: that the going will become increasingly tough for the prime minister between April 1987 and August 1988.

Goorha says Foresight is "minting money". Tagra reveals that the company is opening 16 new centres around the country by the end of this year followed by offices in New York, Los Angeles and probably in London and Singapore. Not surprisingly, one of the biggest markets these days is Punjab. Foresight took a horoscope computer down to Ludhiana for a trial run and was besieged by "mad crowds". Businessmen came in hordes from Amritsar, Gurdaspur and Jalandhar to inquire from the electronic star-gazer "business challayga ki nahin", "rahen ke na rahen". And everyone wanted a horoscope of Punjab to see what it predicted for the troubled state.

People in trouble, or under stress or mental tension are the ones who most often look for guidance to astrologers and horoscopes. Others come to fix auspicious times to start a new business or to make a major investment decision. People planning to get married make it a point to get their horoscopes matched and now they flock to astro-computers to match the characteristics of the partners. "There are 36 gunas (personal attributes) in Hindu astrology and at least 18 of these have to match for a match to be considered workable," says Gupta. Whether that happens or not, it is sure that computers and horoscopes have come together in India to make a perfect, profitable match.

—RAMINDAR SINGH

Cartoon by AJIT NINAN

Match-making at Foresight: popular

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Mudra A:RIL:3477

Digitized by Arya Sa... ...nd eGangotri

STYLE CHANGES FOR THE BETTER

The colonial look.
That's the shape of things to come in '87. Pleats, baggies T-shirts and a relaxed confident air are all part of the new style scene.

Here, jacket is single breasted with notched lapels. No back vent. Trousers have double outward pleats on either side of fork. Single pleats at the back add to comfort.

Silk-printed tie is worn with a T-shirt in keeping with the break-away from convention.

A lot of course depends on the fabric. Choose only the best. Only Vimal Suitings. The season's hottest fashion news.

VIMAL
A RELIANCE PRODUCT

POLYRICH
Suitings

MENSATIONS

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Govil and Dipika: familiar ic

RAMAYAN

Divine Sensation

AT first glance everything seems to be wrong with Ramayan, Ramanand Sagar's TV serial that started late January. Deities float around the sets flashing laser beams, Ram and Sita fall in love around a bush, Ram is always having his feet pressed by Lakshman, the Sita swayamvar goes on forever, Raja Janak's palace looks like it's been painted with cheap lurex paint and the clothes look like they've been dug out of some musty trunk in Chandni Chowk's costume rental shops. Ramanand Sagar's Ramayan has all the finesse of a high school function.

And yet seldom has a television serial aroused such a phenomenal response. In Meerut, where load-shedding was timed for Sunday mornings during Ramayan's transmission time, residents complained to the authorities and got their power back. In Umbergaon, where the serial is being shot, villagers drop down on their knees when they see hero Arun Govil because they feel Ram has come back. And paanwallas everywhere have started pulling down pictures of young starlets and pinning up those of Arun Govil—who plays Ram—with his beatific half smile.

In Bombay, the Sagars have been deluged with fan mail. One man sent Sagar a cheque for Rs 5,000 for the videotapes of the serial to give to his daughter as dowry. A woman w say that she makes her blind son t television set every time Rama because she thinks he will get his back. And another man said th seeing the serial his son had begun his legs just as Ram does his Whatever its merits, Sagar's morning epic is being awarded th tity of the original.

As television rating points h climbing steadily upward—acco the Indian Market Research Bure has been a sharp upward tre

A scene from the serial: tacky sets

CC-0. In Public

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ership has doubled since the serial ed, even in metros like Madras— ne has got more fame than he ever has his hit films before. He is also going to e a lot of money. Although he refuses talk about it, he is reported to charge und Rs 3 to 4 lakh per episode, which es by the time Ram comes back to dhya after 52 episodes. Sagar should e billed over Rs 1.5 crore. But as he says: "The commercial aspect is not portant to me. This is my mission." He s sold rights of Ramayan to Mauritius d is negotiating with both the US and Soviet Union. He will also put video- es of Ramayan on the market, at a ping Rs 5,000 a set, and as he says dsay: "Then we will make money."

Ramayan has always been special to ner. For 25 years he has met with a up of friends for weekly readings of the but he never dreamt he could actually it. "It's like cupping your palms and g to drink up the ocean," he said. Till ision opened up exciting new pos- ities. He had seen on balmy autumn ings the crowds that the Ramlilas w and he knew he had a hit on his ds. On TV he got the power to use Ram he had never been used before. Al- seen before from a distance, Sagar gs us close up: we see the half-smile on n's face, his clothes, his living quar- Shivanandan Foundation's Swami devanand told Ravivar: "Ramayan es my soul, my heart cries with it d I feel as if I am participating in it." ayan is not a religious serial at all. It is ality play, a love story, a soap opera wrapped in godliness. Whichever y, Ram is a best seller.

The story has perennial appeal. Sanjiv a, a viewer from Agra whose family s off its shoes and folds its hands when serial comes on, says: "You know the y, you know that Ram is going to pick the dhanush but still you wait. The pense is retained." And Sagar has ally read his Ramayan, 14 different sions of it. He brings to the serial resting and little known details about work: that Lakshman is really quite a ky little thing, that Kekayi was a good man who was initially overjoyed to t of Ram's marriage, that Sita falls into dilemma when she first spots Ram about ther to go along with her father's tic idea of the swayamvar. Ashok mar as the sutradhaar ties the whole g in a pink bow when he steps in at the dark glasses and all, and relates the with the present. It is to Sagar's credit many good values—obedience, disci- e, loyalty—do come through. He also uses his poetic licence to champion social evils like dowry. So Dashrath tells Janak: "You are greater than I am. I am only a beggar standing at your door asking for your daughter." Says Sangeeta Mathur, 28, from Delhi: "This moralising could get on people's nerves, but it doesn't. You wait and see, it will change our whole generation."

Another thing that has appealed to viewers everywhere is the music. "The chaupaiyans are so beautiful, so melodious, the stanzas are perfectly balanced," says Vijay Kaushish, who like many good Brahmin boys grew up singing the same tunes in his aangan. "Ram is a Hindu concept simply because we've claimed him. For Ram himself there was no religion." The serial should sell the world over because it is a milestone of Indian culture. These are also sensitive times when the country is perturbed about Ramjanmabhoomi and is especially responsive to Ram. So remarkable, indeed, has been the reaction to mythology—there are over 500 Ramayan clubs in the US and Canada—that, according to Kaushish, it won't be surprising if even conservative European TV companies buy the serial. As Sagar says: "I may die but your children will be watching my cassette."

Now that he's sitting pretty, Sagar can smile. But he's had his problems. Like most religious serials, Ramayan has had its share of controversy too. There have been complaints about its poor production qualities—the papier mache pillars, the cheap sets, the miracle-a-minute, low grade stars and Dipika, who plays Sita—the most sacred woman in Hindu mythology—had been seen before in a bath-tub. It is said that Sita's skimpy attire was even discussed in Parliament. The serial was dismissed as filmi, sacrilegious, and fostering blind faith. But as one viewer said: "Being a film man Sagar can hardly help his filminess. But he is certainly entertaining." For Doordarshan itself, the argument is simple. "We've got a good programme and we are getting good revenues," says B.L. Khurana, director audience research. And Madhumalati, controller of sales admits: "Advertisers are vying with each other to get a spot on the Ramayan time."

Life has changed for Ramanand Sagar. He will not touch meat or liquor for the entire duration of the serial. He has transported 10 cooks to Umbergaon to prepare vegetarian food for the 150 crew members who are stationed in this tiny hamlet for the first 15 days of every month and who must also abstain. Life has also changed for the villagers since Ram came to Umbergaon. Said Govil: "I never thought I'd become a cult figure in rural areas. I feel embarrassed when old folks fall at my feet." They keep pictures of Govil and Dipika—who incidentally wears high heels under her Sita's robes—in their houses and religiously garland them.

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

Sagar directing: sanctified mission

Encouraged by this response to mythology, the Sagars are now preparing to do a quickie on Hanuman called Jai Hanuman also to be shot in Umbergaon, Ram-rejanmabhoomi, and released later this year. Meanwhile, there is another film messiah waiting in the wings to move in as soon as Sagar exits from Doordarshan—B.R.Chopra with Mahabharata.

—SIMRAN BHARGAVA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

GUJARAT

Red Curse

THE town of Jetpur in Rajkot district is seeing red—literally. Tube wells dug in the area spew out red coloured water which contains harmful chemicals. The nearby puddles and ponds look like they have been fed from a river of blood. Jetpur is paying the price many other cities may have to pay someday. Nature is finally taking revenge on the town for having dumped effluents in all the available open spaces, oblivious to the possible consequences.

Photographs by RAMESH MENON

Polluted Bhadar river (top) and freshly printed sarees

The effluents are the dark coloured dyes used to print designs on sarees, a principal industry of the town. Laments Dharamsi Megabhai, a saree printer: "We treated Jetpur as a garbage can pouring coloured effluent into the open. Today, we are paying the price of playing with nature." The blood red effluents have been absorbed into the area's water table over the last 25-30 years.

Jetpur has more than 1,100 units which print around four lakh sarees a day. The units use about 80 lakh gallons of water daily in the dyeing and printing process. At the end of the day, the water is allowed to flow out of the unit to accumulate in low lying areas or flow into the Bhadar river. In summer, when most of the river is dry, the water is streaked with a stark red colour. Residents say that it is a reminder that the town is bleeding.

It was only in the late '70s that the people of Jetpur realised the seriousness of the problem when even the well water turned red. In the last few years, it has played havoc with the health of people living in the area. Skin diseases are rampant in the villages around Jetpur. Skin specialists in the area point out that most patients suffer from allergic contact dermatitis, leucoderma, loss of hair and fungus infections. More than 60 per cent of the patients who visit the government hospital at Jetpur suffer from ailments caused by water pollution: gastro-enteritis, diarrhoea, vomiting, and liver disease.

A study carried out by the Environmental Engineering Department of L.D. Engineering College found that the water in Bhadar river had become so toxic that 400 cubic metres of clean water would have to be poured into the river every second to dilute the pollutants to a permissible level for fish to survive. But Mohan Jethabhai, chairman of the health committee of the Jetpur Municipality asserts that the dye is harmless and insists that the effluents have done no harm to Jetpur. The owner of three printing units, he dismisses the dangers as "figments of imagination".

What is worrying the district administration is that the dyes now use silicate which is very harmful for agriculture. When silicate effluent is let out in the fields, a white powdery film forms on the surface which destroys all vegetation. Now, with the water shortage in Jetpur, printers travel around within a 30 km radius to get the sarees washed in fields rented from farmers. Warns Rajkot Collector Rajiv Takru: "The destruction of land is not a one day affair. If farmers do not become pollution conscious today, they will pay heavily tomorrow."

An attempt was made in 1982, when industry representatives and the Government decided to build an effluent treatment plant to service all the printing units. The units were asked to contribute Rs 45 lakh and the Government pooled in a similar amount. The Gujarat Water Supply and Sewerage Board was asked to put up an effluent treatment and disposal system. But the board delayed doing so, resulting in an escalation of costs. By the time it had spent Rs 90 lakh, it had only built a gutter and a cement well to collect the effluent and a pumping system to discharge it about 1 km from Jetpur. It was a ludicrous scheme since it attempted to stop pollution in one area and start it in another.

Early this year, the Government asked the industry to cough up another Rs 25 lakh in view of the increased costs of the project. The industry has agreed to pay if the Government ensures that a treatment plant is put up.

Meanwhile, the Jetpur tragedy is being repeated in other nearby areas like Ranchhodnagar where a parallel saree printing industry has started. Predictably, the sub soil water there has also gone red. Warns Municipal Commissioner S. Jagdishan: "Unless effective pollution control measures are adopted, parts of Rajkot will soon start getting polluted coloured water. There is no easy way out. These units have to be strictly dealt with." And unless they are, and soon, the dyeing industry could well have a deadly connotation.

—RAMESH MENON in Jetpur

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

However busy he is in the office, my husband keeps his appointment with Amul Cheese.

Heat 2 tbsp vanaspati in heavy pan. Put in cummin and mustard seeds, add all other spices and salt. Fry for a few seconds and add chopped vegetables and peas. Add enough water to cook the mixture well. Remove from fire and add grated cheese. Keep this filling aside. Mix salt, lemon, coriander and green chillies to mashed potatoes. Divide potato mixture into lemon-sized balls. Flatten each ball on palm of hand like a puri and place vegetable cheese mixture, cover with another flattened potato puri and close edges by pressing. Pat cutlets in bread crumb mixture to flatten and shape. Shallow fry on tava using ghee. Turn until both sides are crisp and brown. Serve with chutney or tomato sauce.

Write in for an Amul Cheese Book with 120 mouth-watering cheese recipes,to: P.O. Box 10124, Bombay, along with P.O. of Rs. 15/- in favour of Gujarat Co-op Milk Marketing Federation Ltd., with your complete address.

Amul cheese

Perks up meals with zest and taste.

Marketed by:
Gujarat Co-operative Milk Marketing Federation Limited, Anand 388 001, Gujarat.

OPERATION FLOOD

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

It's here! The TV event you were waiting for.

THE UPTRON AWARDS FOR GREAT TELEVISION PERFORMANCES

JOY
LAUGHTER
SORROW

ANGER FEAR ADVENTURE

FANTASY REALITY VISION

HISTORY
EDUCATION
INFORMATION

VICTORY
DEFEAT PROTEST

BEAUTY
MYSTERY
SUSPENSE

They gave us over 1500 hours of entertainment in 1986 on National Network. Now you are the judge. Tell us what you want to see more of. Tell us what you liked watching. Tell us who deserves an award in 8 categories.

Switch on your pens and tune your memories.

You've discussed them at home, at work, at school... You've made time to watch them. Now tell us who you liked the best.

All you have to do is tick one numbered box in each list. That's your favourite. The lists have been prepared after viewer research in eight cities all over India. Only performances telecast in 1986, on National Network, are eligible.

Remember, your votes will be counted as soon as you have selected your eight favourites.

The winners you choose will receive an award at a razzmatazz ceremony in New Delhi.

Now, if you want to win a prize, give us a name for a new Uptron TV that's way ahead of the others in styling and technology.

So, for the price of a postage stamp, you are the judge. Let's start with your Favourite Serial.....

• Only programmes telecast on National Network in 1986 are eligible • No entry fee • Only one entry per person • Incomplete forms will be rejected • Last date for entries: April 30th 1987 • The decision of the judges is final • Employees of Uptron India Limited, its sister companies and its Advertising Agencies cannot participate • No correspondence will be entertained • Entry forms available with Uptron TV dealers also.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

MY FAVOURITE TV SERIAL

- Buniyaad 1
- Dada Dadi Ki Kahaniyan 2
- Karamchand 3
- Khandan 4
- Nukkad 5
- Rajni 6
- Srikant 7
- Vikram aur Betal 8
- Yatra 9
- Yeh Jo Hai Zindagi 10

MY FAVOURITE ACTOR

- Dadaji Dada Dadi Ki Kahaniyan 1
- Guru Nukkad 2
- Karamchand Karamchand 3
- Khopri Nukkad 4
- Masterji Buniyaad 5
- Mr. Mehra Ghar Jamai 6
- Raja Yeh Jo Hai Zindagi 7
- Ranjit Yeh Jo Hai Zindagi 8
- Srikant Srikant 9
- Vikram Vikram aur Betal 10

MY FAVOURITE ACTRESS

- Dadi Dada Dadi Ki Kahaniyan 1
- Ketaki Khandan 2
- Lajoji Buniyaad 3
- Mrs. Mehra Ghar Jamai 4
- Radha Nukkad 5
- Rajlakshmi Srikant 6
- Rajni Rajni 7
- Renu Yeh Jo Hai Zindagi 8
- Ritu Air Hostess 9
- Veerawali Buniyaad 10

MY FAVOURITE COMEDIAN

- Havaldar Nukkad 1
- Khopri Nukkad 2
- Kitty Karamchand 3
- Mamaji Choti Badi Baten 4
- Mr. Mehra Ghar Jamai 5
- Raja Yeh Jo Hai Zindagi 6
- Raja's father-in-law Yeh Jo Hai Zindagi 7
- Roshan Lal Buniyaad 8
- Satish Shah Yeh Jo Hai Zindagi 9
- Subbu Ghar Jamai 10

MY FAVOURITE HISTORICAL SERIAL

- Asman Kaise Kaise 1
- Jaane-Alam 2
- Kahan Gaye Woh Log 3
- Raj Se Swaraj 4
- Terah Panne 5

MY FAVOURITE CHILDREN'S SERIAL

- Appu aur Pappu 1
- Dada Dadi Ki Kahaniyan 2
- Ek Do Teen Char 3
- Kachchi Dhoop 4
- Khel Khel Mein 5
- Vikram aur Betal 6

MY FAVOURITE EDUCATIONAL SERIAL

- Apne Aap 1
- Cosmos 2
- Economics Made Easy 3
- Krishi Darshan 4
- News Line 5
- Quiz Time 6
- Science Quiz 7
- Wonders of the Sea 8

MY FAVOURITE TITLE SONG

- Buniyaad 1
- Dada Dadi Ki Kahaniyan 2
- Ek Do Teen Char 3
- Ghar Jamai 4
- Karamchand 5
- Khandan 6
- Nukkad 7
- Rajni 8
- Vikram aur Betal 9
- Yeh Jo Hai Zindagi 10

Prizes If you want to be eligible for a prize, here's something exciting. Give us a name for a new Uptron Television that's way ahead of competition in styling and technology. The name should not have more than 10 alphabets. Print it in block letters below.

_____

1st Prize: Uptron colour TV or Rs. 8,000/- 20 Consolation Prizes: Uptron 2 band transistor

Name _____
Age _____
Address _____
_____

It's on It's Uptron!

UPTRON TELEVISIONS

Entries should be mailed to Post Bag No. 4, Patel Nagar P.O.,
New Delhi 110 008.
Envelopes should be marked "UPTRON AWARD" in the top right hand corner.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

◆ Sheikh Rasool, he rode out of the West. Through all the wide state, his dress was the best. And when the show was over, they found he had won. And then and only then did they know that the inscrutable Sheikh of Araby—"His Royal Highness Sheikh Rasool Ahmed Al Riaz of Sirsi", as Karnataka Governor A.N. Banerjee introduced him at the annual Karnataka Legislators' Day function—was no other than that man of many guises, Chief Minister Ramakrishna Hegde. So complete was the charade that even his wife, Shakuntala Hegde who collected the first prize for him was fooled. Gloated a beaming Hegde: "Even my wife doesn't know what I am going to come as each time."

Hegde: surprise guise

◆ All the field was a stage, and the players actors. The multi-starrer had skippers Madhavrao Scindia and Kapil Dev in the lead, with Amitabh Bachchan and Margaret Alva as guest stars for the Carnival Cricket match organised by the Railway Women's Central organisation in New Delhi. The biggest hit was commentator Asrani making sidecracks like: "Chali chali meri ball" when Deepti Naval ran slow motion behind it. It was a good busman's holiday for Azharuddin, Madan Lal, Bedi, Roger Binny, Vishwanath and new roles for Raj Babbar,

PRASHANT PANJIAR

Dimple at the pitch: field day

Mazhar Khan, Karan Kapoor and Zeenat Aman. But the crowning glory was Dimple Kapadia. All she had to do was bat an eyelid—never mind the ball—and the fielders were bowled over.

◆ The kamal is in for a second blossoming—back where it all began 14 years ago. Kamalahasan has come full circle to Kerala and Her Nights' I.V. Sasi. Sasi zoomed him into the male sex symbol of the south and will now resurrect him with Vritam. Turning his back on the north, after his floppy honeymoon, Kamal says: "I will only act in south Indian movies. For me everything is a brief flirtation." He will now make "India's first silent movie" Pushpa Vimanam, with southern stars including Khopdi, Nukkad's lovable drunkard.

Azmi and Akhtar: torrid suit

Kamalahasan: second coming

◆ Stardust called them The Queer Quartet. But now three quarters of the quartet: Shabana Azmi, husband Javed Akhtar and Shekhar Kapoor's wife, Medha are out to queer the magazine's pitch. Shabana has finally picked up the gauntlet, crossing over, from reel to real life and sued Stardust for writing that she and former fiance Shekhar were having a "torrid" affair. It promises to be a fight to the finish. Spewed the angry actress: "I am not going to withdraw the case because I want to teach the erring yellow press a lesson."

SIGNPOST

■ Died: Sachchidanand H[illegible] ranand Vatsyayan Agye[illegible] 76, of cardiac arrest in [illegible] Delhi. The grand old ma[illegible] Hindi literature, Agyeya l[illegible] up to his name—meaning 'i[illegible] inscrutable'. His poetry a[illegible] fiction were only the log[illegible] culmination of a multi-face[illegible] career whose first seeds ger[illegible] nated with his birth at [illegible] excavation site in Kasia, [illegible] Deoria district of Uttar Pr[illegible] desh, where his archaeolog[illegible] father was posted.

The major milestones [illegible] route included jail terms a[illegible] revolutionary, a stint in [illegible]

SIDDHARTH [illegible]

Agyeya: rich life

army as Captain Agye[illegible] path-breaking tenures as e[illegible] tor of Navbharat Times a[illegible] Dinman, besides the Jnanp[illegible] the Sahitya Akademi a[illegible] other awards conferred [illegible] him for such epical works [illegible] prose and poetry as Shekha[illegible] Ek Jeevni, Kitni Navon M[illegible] Kitni Baar, Nadi Ke Dweep [illegible] Apne Apne Ajnabi. Agyeya w[illegible] passionate about his pastim[illegible] as well, from photography [illegible] gardening to pottery and c[illegible] pentry. The day he died, [illegible] was to inaugurate a 'mach[illegible] study—a labour of love—[illegible] a neem tree at his New De[illegible] bungalow. But, as he him[illegible] wrote once: "It is immate[illegible] whether my house has [illegible] inside it or not. I am looking [illegible] a house which is surrou[illegible] by light from all sides."

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

NPOST

chchidanand H yayan Agye arrest in N and old mar
re, Agyeya li —meaning
His poetry a only the log of a multi-face
first seeds germ his birth at ite in Kasia, ct of Uttar Pr
his archaeolog osted.
r milestones
d jail terms as
, a stint in th

SIDDHARTH MI

: rich life

aptain Agye
g tenures as e arat Times a es the Jnanp Akademi a s conferred epical works
try as Shekha
tni Navon M
di Ke Dweep
abi. Agyeya w out his pastim photography pottery and day he died
rate a 'mach
ur of love—
t his New De
t, as he him
It is immate house has b
I am looking h is surrou
all sides"

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

13012
13011
13010
13009

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Bofors and After

The Bofors howitzer fired away in unexpected directions last fortnight as allegations of illegal pay-offs on a Rs 1,500-crore deal rocked the Government and Parliament, and spotlighted the role of slush funds and shadowy middlemen in arms deals.

COVER STORY 30

Paranoia in the Party

In the grip of a siege mentality as crisis followed crisis, the Congress(I) was in a state of paranoia as fears spread of the President dismissing the Government. Partymen rallied around Rajiv, but there was subterranean dissidence too.

COVER STORY 46

The Palace of Intrigue

The Krishna Consciousness cult's New Vrindavan commune in West Virginia is at the centre of a raging controversy, following charges of murder, child molestation, kidnapping, copyright violations and tax evasion. A report.

GLOBE-TROTTING 96

"No Chance of Success"

After a long and laudable innings as India's most celebrated policeman, Julio Francis Ribeiro will leave a controversial trail when he lays down office next month. Alongside appeals to stay on, he also faces charges of 'police terrorism'.

INTERVIEW OF THE FORTNIGHT 126

The New Offensive

A massive bomb blast in Colombo and five days of insensate violence that followed, sparked off a major political crisis in Sri Lanka, with anti-government and anti-Indian feelings running high, pushing back hopes of a peace initiative.

SPECIAL REPORT 134

Death on the Roads

Sudden and gruesome death has become a chilling phenomenon on overcrowded Indian roads. With over 40,000 people killed last year in road accidents, and another 1.75 lakh injured, Indians on the road now run more risks than before.

SPECIAL FEATURE 142

CONTENTS

COMMENT 11
VOICES 14
INDIANOTES 19
CAPITALOOK 22
THE FORTNIGHT THAT WAS 27
COVER STORY
Defence Deals: Bofors and After 30
Congress (I):
Paranoia in the Party 46
GUEST COLUMN
Credibility Crunch 53
CURRENT EVENTS
Darjeeling Stir:
Militants to the Fore 54
Opposition Conclave: Cautious Start 56
Kerala: Mixed Moves 58
Uttar Pradesh:
Communal Flashpoint 65
Tamil Nadu: Above the Law 71
Bihar: Raising a Storm 77
Karnataka: Tape Scrape 78
Karnataka: Expansion Ills 83
Haryana: Dramatic Shift 84
STATENOTES 93
GLOBE-TROTTING
ISKCON: The Palace of Intrigue 96
TRADE WINDS 105
BUSINESS
Leather Industry:
Spiralling Exports 106
Bombay: Building Row 109
Processed Foods: Quick Fix 112
Home Computers: Key Success 114
Public Units: Unholy Mess 119
THE ECONOMY MONITOR 121
The Markets: Bear Hug 123
INTERVIEW OF THE FORTNIGHT
Julio Francis Ribeiro:
"No Chance of Success" 126
DIPLOMACY
Sino-Indian Relations:
Escalating Tension 130
SPECIAL REPORT
Sri Lanka: The New Offensive 134
SPECIAL FEATURE
Traffic: Death on the Roads 142
GUEST COLUMN
The Path to Peace 150
MEDIA
The Press: Joining the Battle 155
LABOUR
Salt Production: The Pans of Misery 158
LIVING
Ahmedabad: The Endless Wait 166
LAW
IPS: Historic Win 171
TELEVISION
Late Night Films: Midnight Feast 172
EYE-CATCHERS 176

Cover Illustration by A. JAGANATHAN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Punwire in Police

Spearheading communications

Come within touching distance of a Police Patrol jeep or a vanload of CRPF on duty, and you'll experience a unique feeling.

A feeling of tough, tense authority. Of caution. Alertness. And minute-to-minute surveillance of the surroundings.

You'll also notice another unmistakable feature — the crackling of the PUNWIRE wireless set, inside the vehicle.

Punwire : the widest range of wireless radio equipment.

From the most-modern Walkie-Talkie, 'TACPHONE' —which weighs less than 600 gms and offers handsfree operation—to the sophisticated synthesised car or jeep mounted wireless set; and from a custom-designed VHF wireless communication network covering short range (30-50 Kms) to a nationwide HF wireless system for voice, telex and fax communication; Punwire offers the widest range of HF, VHF, and UHF communication equipment for the premier sentinel forces in the country.

Over 25,000 wireless sets, nationwide!

In a short span of 7 years, PUNWIRE has supplied over 25,000 wireless sets to various customers throughout the country. Which includes the Police departments of 24 states, the Traffic Patrol units in 12 major cities, the CRPF, BSF, ITBP, SPG, CISF, Coast Guards and the RPF—all to ensure efficiency and reliability in communications. Round-the-clock.

The wide range of Punwire equipment in use with the Police and Para Military includes:

- PR10-8: VHF hand-held Walkie-Talkie set with modular construction for ease of maintenance and repair.
- TACPHONE: The compact light-weight, high-performance Walkie-Talkie offering handsfree operation as option.
- CHALLENGER: Synthesised programmable mobile/static 25 Watt state-of-the-art Transreceiver.
- MP 10-10: Motorcyle mounted Radio.
- RMX Series Automatic 35 Watt Repeater.
- PSB-53: 10/50 Watt HF-SSB Transreceiver.
- JSB-161: 100 Watt HF-SSB Transreceiver.
- RF-230: 125 Watt HF-SSB Transreceiver.
- NRD-93 Digitally Sythesised Communication Receiver.

You're right.

When it comes to round-the-clock reliability and efficiency in communication, the Police and Para Military know, it pays to depend on Punwire.

Red-alerts or all-clear!

PUNWIRE

Punjab Wireless Systems Limited

(A State Government Undertaking)
SCO 165-166, Sector 8-C, Chandigarh-160008
Tel: 23337, Telex: 0395-321 PSDL—IN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai

Ahmedabad riots unabated

Hindustan Times Correspondent

GANDHINAGAR, Jan. 31 — Following five stabbing incidents which took place in the not-affected Bapunagar area today with one proving fatal, the police reimposed curfew from 7.00 p.m. today till 7.00 a.m. tomorrow.

Police sources said that the curfew imposed on the adjoining Haridas Nagar and Chorasia police stations apart from the areas coming within Bapunagar as a precautionary measure.

At all the sensitive points in the Bapunagar colony, which had been the scene of riots last year too, armed police contingents were posted. Armed policemen were also seen on road kept.

The general opinion in the area was that the attack on the victory procession of the Bharatiya Janata Party-supported independent candidate and his supporters was pre-planned.

As the candidate and his supporters were passing by they came under heavy stoning and within minutes all hell broke loose.

In all, a dozen people got stab wounds yesterday four of which proved fatal. While one person died in police firing one was killed by private firing, according to these eyewitnesses.

With the death of one more person today the death toll has now risen to seven. The number of those injured since yesterday has crossed the 20 mark.

PTI adds: Mr Pradip Sharma, a BJP-supported independent winner in recent elections has been detained by the police for allegedly inciting people in his ward, Bapunagar.

Burglary gang busted presented a memorandum requesting for an early settlement of their outstanding demands.

Religious intolerance: Former Vice-President M. Hidayatullah said that different religious bodies of the world were becoming less tolerant of other faiths and a strong antagonism of one the world evil

Ameri... testifies

...ing has improved: Marwah

Murder mystery solved, 2 held

By A Staff Reporter

NEW DELHI, March 8

This crime branch of Delhi police has arrested two persons in connection with the murder of Mr Tata

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Cathay Pacific. Your business connection to the world.

The kind of connection you dream of each time you embark on a business trip. Fly any of our 4 flights a week from Bombay to Hong Kong and make convenient connections to over 400 Cathay Pacific flights worldwide, including major destinations in Japan, Korea, North America and Australia.

Add to that computerised reservations and smooth ground handling, with in-flight service provided by our flight attendants who combine the grace and beauty of 10 Asian lands. All this and more — designed to help you arrive in better shape.

Call your travel agent or Cathay Pacific at Bombay 2029112/9113, Bangalore 29130/29745, Calcutta 447238/239, Delhi 351286/343818, Madras 89372/87694.

Arrive in better shape

CATHAY PACIFIC

The Swire Group

CX/5427R

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

INDIA TODAY
THE COMPLETE NEWSMAGAZINE
VOLUME XII NUMBER 9
FOR THE FORTNIGHT MAY 1-15, 1987

EDITOR
ARUN PURIE

EXECUTIVE EDITOR T.N. NINAN
PICTURE EDITOR RAGHU RAI
FEATURES EDITOR INDERJIT BADHWAR
DEPUTY EDITOR DILIP BOBB
SENIOR EDITOR PRABHU CHAWLA

CORRESPONDENTS

CENTRAL CORRESPONDENTS RAMINDAR SINGH
SHEKHAR GUPTA
NEW DELHI PALAKUNNATHU G. MATHAI
RAJ CHENGAPPA
MADHU JAIN
JAGANNATH DUBASHI
SREEKANT KHANDEKAR
TANIA MIDHA
AHMEDABAD RAMESH MENON
BHOPAL N.K. SINGH
BOMBAY M. RAHMAN
PARTHASARATHI SWAMI
CALCUTTA INDRANIL BANERJIE
HYDERABAD AMARNATH K. MENON
LUCKNOW DILIP AWASTHI
MADRAS S.H. VENKATRAMANI
PATNA FARZAND AHMED
TRIVANDRUM SREEDHAR PILLAI

LONDON RAMESH CHANDRAN

NEWS COORDINATOR RADHIKA ROY

ART DIRECTOR M.G. MOINUDDIN

CHIEF OF PRODUCTION SHIRLEY JOSHUA
ANURADHA KAPOOR

COPY DESK SIMRAN BHARGAVA
ANN NINAN
MOHAMMED ASLAM

CHIEF PHOTOGRAPHER BHAWAN SINGH
PHOTOGRAPHERS PRAMOD PUSHKARNA
PRASHANT PANJIAR
NAMAS BHOJANI

CARTOONIST AJIT NINAN MATHEW
CARTOGRAPHER B.K. SHARMA
LAYOUT ARTISTS ANUP GUPTA
PEALI DUTTA GUPTA

MARKETING DIRECTOR MOHINI BHULLAR

ADVERTISING MANAGERS

BOMBAY ANOOP ZUTSHI
DELHI NAGINDER RISHI
CALCUTTA MEERA PAUL
MADRAS R. ANAND
BANGALORE S.J. NAIDU

GENERAL MANAGER CHANDER RAI

• EDITORIAL OFFICE LIVING MEDIA INDIA PVT LTD. F-14/15, CONNAUGHT PLACE NEW DELHI 110001. PHONE: 3315801-4, TELEX: 31-61245 INTO IN CABLE: LIVMEDIA. NEW DELHI • SUBSCRIPTIONS: INDIA TODAY SUBSCRIPTION DEPARTMENT. POST BOX 69, FARIDABAD HARYANA • TRADE CIRCULATION: INDIA TODAY CIRCULATION MANAGER, F-14 CONNAUGHT PLACE, MIDDLE CIRCLE, NEW DELHI. PHONE: 3313076-8, TELEX: 31-62634 INTO IN • ADVERTISING OFFICES: 24 A&B JOLLY MAKER CHAMBER II, NARIMAN POINT, BOMBAY-400021. PHONE: 2026152, 2029326, 2029327, TELEX: 11-5373 THOM IN. CABLE: LIVMEDIA, BOMBAY • 4/9 CONNAUGHT CIRCUS, NEW DELHI-110001. PHONE: 352378, 351273 AND 351323. TELEX: 31-2651 THOM IN. CABLES: LIVMEDIA NEW DELHI • FAGUN CHAMBERS, 26 COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF ROAD, MADRAS-600105. PHONE: 477188, 477770, 479163. CABLE: LIVMEDIA MADRAS • 24/1ST MARKS ROAD, BANGALORE-560001. PHONE: 566448, 579037, 579089. CABLE: LIVMEDIA, BANGALORE • 12C EVEREST 46C CHOWRINGHEE ROAD, CALCUTTA-700071. PHONE: 445598, 447726. CABLE: LIVINMEDIA, CALCUTTA • COPYRIGHT 1987 LIVING MEDIA INDIA PVT LTD. ALL RIGHTS RESERVED THROUGHOUT THE WORLD. REPRODUCTION IN ANY MANNER IS PROHIBITED. PUBLISHED BY CHANDER RAI FOR LIVING MEDIA INDIA PVT LTD. NEW DELHI AND PRINTED AT THOMSON PRESS INDIA LTD. FARIDABAD HARYANA • INDIA TODAY DOES NOT TAKE RESPONSIBILITY FOR RETURNING UNSOLICITED PUBLICATION MATERIAL •

LETTER FROM THE EDITOR

WOMEN used to be a rarity in journalism till as recently as the late 1960s. Even now, they tend to congregate nearer the bottom of the ladder than the top, and more often than not tend to focus on the 'women's issues'—like rape—while the men go after the 'real' journalism.

But there is little doubt that things are changing—for the better. Increasingly, women reporters are sent to trouble spots, asked to cover the Government and Parliament, or assigned fancied political beats. And women have begun to move up the hierarchy too, though women editors are still rare outside of women's magazines.

Several women have won journalism awards too, and one of them last fortnight was INDIA TODAY Principal Correspondent MADHU JAIN, who bagged the Eve's Weekly award for her path-breaking story on divorce (December 31, 1986) and how this was becoming an increasingly common phenomenon up and down the social scale. In the year that she has been with INDIA TODAY (after successful stints in The Statesman and Sunday*), she has also written extensively on films, television and culture. Said Madhu while accepting the award in Bombay from Ram Meghe, Maharashtra's education minister: "Such awards help focus attention on women's issues. But the time should come when awards are given to men too for writing on these issues, because this is as important as political reporting."*

Madhu Jain receiving the award

LETTERS

UNFORTUNATE EXIT

Your cover story ("The Taming of V.P. Singh", April 30) signifies the eclipse of values and efficiency in the Indian polity. There is no place for a crusade against corruption. When in an indefensible spot, the Government appoints dubious commissions or conjures up the spectre of the 'foreign hand'. Our prime minister (Mr Clean) has earned yet another colourful epithet for himself with his continuous bungling: Mr Incredible. Our democracy is better described as a democrazy now.

Bangalore VINOD KUMAR B.

■ V.P. Singh has not been tamed. He has stormed out of office with the image of those left behind in disarray. Ask any man on the road and he will confirm this view without hesitation.

New Delhi ANOOP SETH

■ With reference to your cover story, it is perhaps to the credit of V.P. Singh that he failed to drum up support for his crusade against corruption. It shows beyond doubt that he has no vested interests—except the ultimate public good.

Bangalore DR G.I. D'SOUZA

■ The hounding of V.P. Singh is a classic example which throws light on the values of our political system. Sycophancy, demagoguery, self-preservation and corruption are the hallmarks of the present system. Virtues like honesty, integrity and dignity are rarely to be found, and if present, meet the same fate as illustrated in this episode.

New Delhi SAURABH KUMAR

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

■ A leader who cannot retain honest and efficient persons is bound to face political turbulence. By accepting the permanent exit of a person of such high political calibre from public office, the prime minister has lowered his own image as Mr Clean.

Ambala — R.M. MITTAL

REVEALING VERDICT

Your cover story ("Congress-I: Crumbling Citadel", April 15) elaborately elucidated the nosedive of the Congress(I) in the recently-held Assembly elections. Its electoral setback underscores the fact that personal charisma and claptrap slogans will no longer cut ice with the electorate. This was especially demonstrated in West Bengal where Rajiv Gandhi's ambiguous utterances could not dent Jyoti Basu's fortress.

Ahmedabad — M. V. RAVINDRAN

